The delicate tones between highlight and shadow that skillful exposure has secured in the negative, are reproduced in their full values on Eastman Positive Film. It carries the quality of the negative through to the screen.

Eastman Film, both regular and tinted base—now available in nine colors, is identified throughout its length by the words "Eastman" "Kodak" stenciled in black letters in the transparent margin.

Simplified Electricity for Projectionists

The force on the crank is the circuit current, and the weight of the gears, shutter, etc., is the induced current. The weight of these parts hinders you from cranking when starting; when running speed has been reached they offer no resistance; when the crank is let go they keep the crank turning for a short while.

Self-induction is particularly in evidence in the case of alternating currents where the current is continually changing its direction back and forth. Indeed, its effects are so strong in this kind of current that it offers a special kind of resistance to the current known as reactance. This will be explained later in Alternating Current Circuits.

Mutual Induction

It is also possible for one wire to induce a current in another neighboring wire. This is called mutual induction. In this case the magnetic field, or flux, set up by one wire, cuts across, or threads, the other wire and induces in it a voltage which, if the circuit is closed, drives a current through the second wire.

In Fig. 16 is shown a coil of wire, A, which has been cut in half in order to show the currents in the wire. In the center of this coil is placed an iron core C, which also passes through another coil of wire B, also cut in half. If current is now passed through coil A, a flux will be set up in core C, as shown by the arrows, because it offers a better path than the surrounding air (see Permeability, Lesson II, Part II). If, now, the current in coil A is increasing and going in the direction indicated by the black dots in the center of the wires, a current will be induced in coil B, and this current will then flow in such a direction that its magnetic field will oppose, or buck, the field of coil A. The dotted line shows the flux due to the induced current. If the current in coil A is reversed, that in coil B will also be reversed. This applies only while the current is changing.

If two wires are placed side by side and current is then passed through both, the magnetic field of each will induce a current in the other. This is also an example of mutual induction and, as stated before, the effect is as if the resistance of the wires has been increased. It is also a fact that the closer the wires are brought together the smaller will be the inductance. It is for this reason that the Fire Underwriters specify that all the wires of an alternating current circuit must be placed in the same conduit. If this rule were not obeyed the current carrying capacity of the wires, due to apparent high resistance, would be reduced, and if a high current were forced through the circuit the wires would be burned out.

Suggestions for Ventilating the Film Cabinets

Along with the return to warm weather suggestions are beginning to come in concerning the cooling and drying of films. Some are good and others are not. One, which contained the germ of the right idea, emanates from the brain of our old friend, W. L. Strawn, N. A. M. L. No. 1895. He writes as follows:

Dear Editor:

It has been two or three weeks since I wrote to the Forum, so I thought I would drop you a few lines and give you another one of my ideas. This time it concerns keeping the film dry and cool at the same time. I hope you will test this idea out yourself and see how well it works, as I have tried it and find it works very well.

I have tried to work for the benefit of the film, machine and public at large and I hope that my "bit" has been of help to someone in this big field of ours.

I am enclosing a drawing of my projection room and it will give some idea as to how the cooling and drying system is used and also how it is driven. This is a floor plan, and as I am not an architect I will say that it is pretty poor.

The key to the drawing is as follows: A, projection openings; B, lookout windows; R, rheostat; P, machines; F, film cabinet; M, machine motor; H, drive shaft of motor; I, cross-drive on automatic speed control of machine; J, fan fastened to floor; K, 1½-inch pipe from fan box to film cabinet; L, outlets in pipe (one-half inch hole).

This is very inexpensive to make and can be made out of an ordinary wall fan with a tin box large enough to cover the fan propeller. It can be driven from the machine motor by adding another pulley to the shaft of the control apparatus. The pipe may be made out of tin.

Hoping that you won't get tired of my worrying you so often and that you will let me know what you think of this, I am,

Yours for better projection,

W. L. Strawn.

Send in Questions on these Articles

There are several points where Brother Strawn's idea can be improved upon. We object strenuously to using the machine motor for any other work except that of driving the machine which it was designed for. The rating of this motor is only sufficient to take care of the ordinary load, and if outside loads are put on it overheating will result, to the damage of not only the motor but also the projection.

It would be far better to use a small 6 or 9-inch fan and place it near the film cabinet. The pipe and fan box can be made out of cardboard, as shown in the sketch. Make the funnel large enough for the propeller and its guard to fit in the mouth of the funnel. The pipe can be made from 2 or 3-inch cardboard tubes. If bends must be made the tube can be cut as shown in the sketch and then glued together, using strips of cardboard bent into the corners for reinforcement and then taped. In the sketch, 1 is the motor; 2, the funnel; 3 and 4, the tubes; 5 and 6, the cardboard strips; 7, the fan guard; 8, the tube in the cabinet; 9 the one-half inch holes in the tube to let the air into the cabinet. A cap, 10, should be placed on the end of the tube to prevent the air from escaping at this point.

Dear Editor:

I am in receipt of my N. A. M. L. membership button with which I am very pleased.

Hoping to see, in the near future, the projectionists on the isthmus all wearing N. A. M. L. buttons so as to show their good faith for better projection, I remain image depending upon the refraction of light. But before taking up the consideration of this important piece of apparatus for photographic work it will be necessary to explain what we mean by the "Optics of Photography" as distinguished from the optics of other sciences, such as those of the telescope and the microscope.

Very truly yours,

Fig. 20—A cross section of a photographic objective, one of the combinations consisting of uncemented elements and the other of cemented lenses

The chief distinctions are of two kinds: 1st, in photographic optics the lens must be capable of transmitting and bringing to a focus in the same plane oblique and axial rays of light, as shown in Fig. 20.

The principal lens or objective of the telescope will not give a sharp image of an object if removed a slight degree from the axis or perfect squareness of position in relation to the line of light. Hence, the sharpness of the image produced by the objective of the telescope is confined to a small area close to the axis. The photographic lens, on the other hand, must be so constructed that it will give a sharp image of objects in front of the center of the lens and also of those that are situated to a certain extent on each side of the center.

2d. The photographic lens must also be so constructed that it will bring to a focus at the same spot the chemical and visual rays of light. If not corrected, the lens will act as a prism and separate the light into its component parts and produce the spectral or rainbow fringe around the edges of the image.

The violet or active end of the spectrum is brought to a focus close to the lens and the red at the greatest distance. The yellow, which is brightest visually, is also further from the lens than the active violet. In focusing visually, the plane of the yellow would be sharp, but in photographing the sensitive surface would have to occupy the plane of the violet. The result would be that the image of the object focused by the eye would be a blur in the photograph. The photographic lens must be so constructed that the image of the object will appear sharp and clearly defined to the eye, and be equally sharp as a result of the chemical rays, when it is developed upon the photographic plate. Such a coincidence of the chemical and visual rays does not exist in the telescope or the microscope, but only in the photographic lens. In the telescope and the microscope, which are constructed for visual work, it is not necessary.

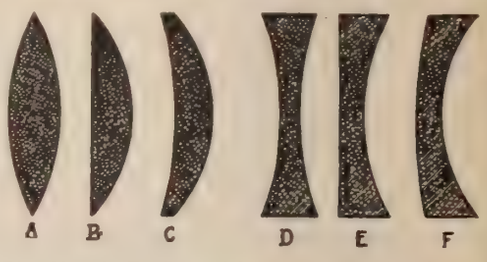

Fig. 21—A. B. C. positive or converging lenses. D. E. F. negative or diverging lenses. A, double convex; B, plano-convex; C, convexo-concave or meniscus; D, double concave; E, plano-concave; F, concave-convex

To sum up these remarks it can be stated briefly that photographic lenses transmit oblique as well as axial rays and bring them to a focus in the same plane; and also to bring the chemical and visual rays of light to a focus at the same spot.

This brings us to the consideration of the photographic lens and the principles which underlie its construction. By a lens is understood a piece of clear glass bounded by polished curved surfaces. The various forms of simple lenses are divided into two general classes:

Fig. 24—Conjugate foci

Positive or Converging
1st. Double Convex.
2nd. Plano Convex.
3rd. Convexo-Concave.
Negative or Diverging
1st. Double Concave.
2nd. Plano Concave.
3rd. Concavo-Convex.

The first are thickest in the center, while the second are thinnest in the center.

These simple forms may be made up of one single piece of glass or they may be composed of several cemented together, as will be seen later. Diagram 21 illustrates these forms of lenses.

All lenses, whether considered singly or in combination, have the following properties:

1. Principal axis.
2. Optical center.
3. Principal and conjugate foci.
4. Nodal points.

1st. Principal axis of a lens is a line passing through the thickest part of positive lenses and thinnest part of negative lenses, perpendicular to the surfaces of the lens, as in diagrams No. 22 and No. 23.

2nd. The optical center of a lens is the point from which focal measurements are made. This does not refer to a photographic objective which (in other than single view lenses) is a combination of lenses and quite another matter for the reason that a combination may have its optical center at a number of places according to the circumstances under which it is employed. The positive optical center of a lens is determined by its form as follows and shown in diagrams No. 22 and No. 23.

Draw two parallel radii AB and ab one from each center of curvature, and both inclined to principal axis; then connect the two points B and b at which they touch the curved surfaces of lens. The point O, at which the line connecting B and b cuts the principal axis, is the optical center. In most cases the optical center is within the lens itself but in some cases, as with telephoto combinations and single meniscus lenses, it may be some distance outside the lens. Such an example is shown in Fig. 23.

3d. Conjugate foci. If a lens which has been carefully focused upon a distant object be then directed toward one comparatively near at hand, the nearer object will be found to be out of focus, necessitating the withdrawal of the ground glass from the lens before the image will assume its maximum sharpness. This establishes the fact that there exists a relation between the object that is focused, as regards its distance from the camera, and the focus of the lens. This relation is termed "conjugate foci." Foci is the plural of focus; conjugate means combined in pairs; kindred in meaning and origin. Conjugate foci are then the distances from the lens to the image and from the lens to the object. Hereafter we will speak of the distance between the lens and the object as the anterior or major conjugate, and that existing between the lens and the ground glass of the camera, as the posterior or minor conjugate focus. Parallel rays aa—that is, rays from a great distance—falling upon a lens come to a focus at f; but those from b, which may serve to represent any object ten or twenty yards distant, have their focus at c (Fig. 24). Then fo is the solar focus, bo and co are conjugate foci. The former of these is the anterior, and the latter the posterior conjugate. To facilitate reference, the lines indicating the conjugate foci are solid, while those relating to the solar focus are dotted. The points b and c are interchangeable; an object placed at either is sharp at the other.

Rule for Conjugate Foci. Now for every position of the object there is a certain position of the camera, and these two distances, the distance of the object from the lens and of the lens from the plate, are called conjugate foci.

A very simple mathematical rule connects the distance from lens to object (D) the distance from lens to plate (d) and the enlargement or reduction of the object (i.e., the number of times a given line in the object is larger or smaller in the image). Note the word line, because some prefer to calculate reduction and enlargement on the basis of area, which introduces different conditions.

Let F be the focal length of the lens and r the ratios of enlargement or reduction.

Then the distance d is equal to F plus F divided by r. Expressed more shortly:

$$d = F \text{ plus } \frac{F}{r}.$$

On the other hand, D equals F plus F multiplied by r, or

$$D = F \text{ plus } F \times r.$$

An example will show how simple this rule is. Suppose one wants to reduce a picture so that a twelve-inch line becomes three inches—i.e., $r = 4$.

If a six-inch lens is being used, d (camera extension) $= 6$ plus $6/4 = 6$ plus $1\frac{1}{2} = 7\frac{1}{2}$ inches, and $D = 6$ plus $6 \times 4 = 6$ plus $24 = 30$ inches.

Bear two other things in mind which will help to use this formula: (1) Positions of image and object are reversible. If we were enlarging 3 inches to 12 with a 6-inch lens we should place the lens and negative $7\frac{1}{2}$ inches apart and the paper 30 inches apart. (2) The smaller conjugate is just r times the larger, e.g., $7\frac{1}{2} \times 4 = 30$. This is always the case, and is useful as a check on calculation.

LITTLE STORIES ABOUT PEOPLE ON THE LOT

On the Goldwyn Lot

A partial cast for Von Stroheim's "Greed" originally titled "McTeague" has been engaged. It includes Gibson Gowland, Zazu Pitts, Dale Fuller, Ceasare Gravina, Chester Conklin, Sylvia Ashton, Frank Hayes.

Ouida Bergere has completed a script for Elinor Glynn's "Six Days" to be directed by Charles Brabin. It will star Corinne Griffith. Claude King has been selected for an important part. Miss Bergere is leaving for New York and Europe.

Sam DeGrasse has been added to the cast of "The Spoilers" in the role of Judge Stillman.

Charles H. West has been added to the cast of the Clarence Badger directed subject "Red Lights."

Lucien Littlefield has been added to the cast of the King Vidor directed production "Three Wise Fools."

The Goldwyn studios have been equipped with a monster wireless device for directors to use in the making of mob scenes. It was installed by the Western Electric company and the device will eliminate call boys and numerous assistant directors.

Carey Wilson, who has been an associate editor in the Goldwyn scenario department for nearly two years, has signed a new contract by the terms of which he remains with the Goldwyn organization as associate editor for another year.

Here and There

Irving Cummings has completed "East Side West Side," which is now being edited for distribution by Principal Pictures.

William P. S. Earle has engaged Carmel Myers for the lead, Malcolm McGregor and Sam DeGrasse for important roles in "King Tutankhamen."

William Duncan is completing his work for Vitagraph this week under his former contract, when feature productions will be finished. He takes up a new contract with Universal immediately.

Lee Moran, directed by Arvid Gillstrom, has completed the first "You Know Me, Al" comedy, with the exception of scenes to be made at New Orleans with the Yankees, Marlin, Texas, with the Giants and San Antonio with the White Sox. Moran and Gillstrom are leaving Saturday for the east, and will take scenes with the professionals en route to New York.

Creighton Hale has been engaged by Richard Walton Tully to take the role of "Little Billy" in "Trilby." Edmund Lowe will play the role of Svengali.

Tom Forman has completed filming "April Showers" and has gone to New Mexico to select locations for "The Broken Wing," from a play by Paul Dickey and Charles Goddard.

When L. J. Gasnier completes "Daughters of the Rich," he will film "Daughters of the Poor," an original story being prepared by B. P. Schulberg scenario staff making the fourth of the Gasnier series of this class of production.

Conway Tearle and Wallace Beery have been engaged for "Ashes of Vengeance," starring Norma Talmadge, under the direction of Frank Lloyd from a novel by H. B. Somerville. Work begins within two or three weeks.

Eddie Cline has completed the Buster Keaton production titled "Three Ages."

On April 15th another troupe of C. C. Burr's All-Star comedy players will leave for Bermuda to film special exteriors for the next All-Star comedy, featuring Kathlene Martyn, Charlie Murray and Ray McKee.

Earl Hurd is putting the finishing touches to his new cartoon comedy for C. C. Burr. No name has been chosen for it yet. It will follow "Chicken Dressing" and "Railroading."

Raymond McKee, featured player in C. C. Burr's All-Star comedies, has announced his engagement and coming marriage to Marguerite Courtot, well known actress. McKee will spend his honeymoon in Bermuda, when he goes there with other All-Star Comedy players the 15th of next month.

Cleo Madison is the third player to be chosen by E. deB. Newman and Director Robert Thornby for the stellar support of Guy Bates Post, in the production of "The Man From Ten Strike."

Jimmy Aubrey, whose current release by Vitagraph is "Forward March" has begun work on another comedy, "The Detective."

Allen Holubar's "Slander the Woman," starring Dorothy Phillips, which is a First National release, is in its final stages of cutting and editing.

Benny Alexander has been selected to play the role of Penrod in First National's production of "Penrod and Sam," which is to be made at the Hollywood studio. William Beaudine will direct.

"Wandering Daughters," a First National picture now being made by James Young, will contain one of the most extravagant ball room scenes in the history of motion pictures.

Eleanor Coffee and John Goodrich, who have been engaged by Principal Pictures Corporation to adapt the series of Harold Bell Wright stories for the screen, are preparing for a novel trip in quest of data pertaining to the first of the Wright series, "The Winning of Barbara Worth."

John Robertson is completing arrangements for starting "The Fighting Blade," a Cromwellian romance by Beulah Marie Dix in which Richard Barthelmess will star. At first it was planned to photograph the exterior scenes in England, but later this plan had to be abandoned. Most of the interiors, it is announced, will be made in Fort Lee, New Jersey.

George Hackathorne is about half through his work in "The Atonement," his first picture in many months in which he has not appeared as a cripple.

Gustav Seyffertitz is now in Banff, Canada, appearing in exterior scenes of a Cosmopolitan production.

Hedda Hopper returned to New York last Saturday on the Paris from a European tour which embraced London, Paris, Nice, St. Moritz, Monte Carlo and the Riviera. She expects to leave within a few days for Hollywood to commence an engagement under a new contract.

Hugo and Mabel Ballin were practically ready to leave for New York a couple of weeks ago, but now word comes from Hollywood that it is probable that they will produce another picture in California before coming East.

With Paramount Units

George Melford will next film "Salomy Jane," for which Waldemar Young is now completing the film version of the Bret Harte story. Melford is now finishing up on "You Can't Fool Your Wife," in which cast are Leatrice Joy, Nita Naldi and Pauline Garon.

Joseph Henabery has made the final scenes for "Sixty Cents an Hour," starring Walter Hiers, who has left on a personal appearance tour.

Tom Geraghty is completing the continuity of the Walter Woods story, "Fair Week," to be Walter Hier's next vehicle, directed by Robert Wagner.

William DeMille has started filming "Only 38," with a cast including Elliott Dexter, May MacAvoy, George Fawcett, Lois Wilson and others.

Herbert Brenon next week begins "The Woman with Four Faces," starring Betty Compson.

James Cruze is expected from New York next week to complete "Hollywood," Frank Condon's story adapted by Tom Geraghty.

In production is "The Cheat," starring Pola Negri, under the direction of George Fitzmaurice.

East and West with Fox

Tom Mix and company are home from Truckee, where exteriors were made for "The Journey of Death," under the direction of Jack Ford. Katherine Key plays the feminine lead.

The Scott Dunlap directed company is back from the north, where scenes were made for "The Snow Drift," which features Charles Jones with Irene Rich, lead. Additional care is being given to the making of this picture, which is scheduled to be a special production.

Henry Otto has been engaged to direct Shirley Mason in "Balance Due," by George Scarborough. Albert Roscoe is playing opposite, in the leading male role.

William Russell has completed work in "Alias, the Night Wind," under direction of Joseph Franz, with Maud Wayne lead.

Lynn Reynolds has begun filming "The Gun Fighter," starring William Farnum, with Doris May, opposite.

Around Metro Studios

Renee Adoree has been placed under a five-year contract by Louis B. Mayer, her first work as lead for Reginald Barker in the adapted version of "The Law Bringers."

Huntley Gordon, who has been placed under contract, will play his first role in John Stahl's next production.

Paul Bern has been added to the Mayer scenario staff. He is now preparing a continuity for the next John Stahl production.

Reginald Barker and company have returned from ten days in northern California, where snow scenes were made. The company will later go to Wainwright, Canada, to make scenes in the Canadian National Park.

Barbara LaMarr has been engaged for the lead in "Captain Applejack."

Garvillas, France, a town of supposed four thousand population, requiring sets covering sixty acres, has been built at the Lasky Ranch for use by Rex Ingram, who, this week starts production of "Scaramouche."

"Poor Men's Wives"

STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES congratulate B. P. Schulberg upon the excellence of the Al Lichtman attraction, "Poor Men's Wives". The photographic artistry of Karl Struss and the directorial genius of Gasnier are combined in this picture to exemplify the higher ideals for which the motion picture industry is striving. It is a worthy companion to "Thorns and Orange Blossoms", "The Hero", and other recent Schulberg-Lichtman productions.

PICTURES of this character raise the whole standard of the screen. It has been both a pleasure and a privilege for STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES to co-operate with Mr. Struss in interpreting photographically Gasnier's conception of his theme in "Poor Men's Wives". It is also gratifying to have Mr. Schulberg's complete confidence in our work of carrying all his productions from camera to screen.

"The COVERED WAGON"

A JAMES CRUZE PRODUCTION

"THE Covered Wagon" marks a new epoch in motion picture history. It is great in theme, gigantic in production, and in popular appeal it will prove the most stupendous success ever released.

Neither time nor money was spared to make it the world's greatest show.

THIS IS No. 3 of a Series

"The Covered Wagon"

The Prairie Fire

One of the many thrills in "The Covered Wagon."

NINE square miles of waste territory were burned up for the prairie fire scenes. You will see men, women and horses menaced by the devouring flames—fleeing for their lives; you will see thrilling rescues in the very midst of the roaring fire. Like all the scenes in "The Covered Wagon", this is REAL. For the first—and last—time, a genuine prairie fire will be shown on the screen.

Adapted by Jack Cunningham from the novel by Emerson Hough

This is one of the things which make "The Covered Wagon" the greatest theatrical attraction in all history.

A Producer Who Makes, Then Sells His Picture

Mack Sennett and the Mack Sennett brand of comedy are so well known to the motion picture public everywhere that he has come to be known among exhibitors as a producer who sells his own pictures to the public.

"Suzanna" has in it all that Mack Sennett or anybody else can put into any comedy drama. It has been called a "typical Sennett" feature. It has Sennett situations; it has a gorgeous love story; tense dramatic moments.

One Reason WHY
Educational Pictures are Better Entertainment
Educational Pictures are never "padded". Whether it is a comedy, a scenic drama, a special production of timely interest, a news reel or a novelty, every Educational Picture takes only the time actually required to tell its story well, and is, therefore, jammed with fast, entertaining action.
Theatres that show these pictures regularly do not offer one extra-long "padded" picture and call it an evening's entertainment. They give a diversified program that will please all the family.

"Success"

Metro's Murray Garsson Special Is a Huge Box Office Bet With Surefire Angles.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

The public that this production is destined to please to the superlative degree is the same public that furnishes the foundation on with "Success," Murray Garsson's independent special which Metro will distrib, has been constructed. It's a huge, spectacular human-interest structure built on a solid foundation that will carry any house through a week or more of financial profit. Here's a production that is greater in human—genuine interest—than "Humoresque"; a production of the theatre—of its folks, of life behind the scenes, life at home, of life itself. You've been raving for mother pictures. Here's an artistically clever production that dwells on the masculine head of the family. It is a masterpiece in its line. Ralph Ince never did anything quite so human. This picture has a soul—a soul that will spell big money for the wise exhibitors.

Give the industry more pictures like "Success" and Lent and Christmas week will mean nothing in the show business. Here's a picture every reformer, every clergyman, every man, and woman—everybody—should see. This writer can't say too much for this production. It represents our model of picture the showmen and the public want. There is nothing superfluous. Everything is logical. It's a sweet story, a story of temperaments, a story of daddy who erred in his youth, only to lose wife, daughter—everything—and suddenly finding himself at the threshold of happiness only to find that his past was a drawback.

And climax! Nothing we have seen in a D. W. Griffith production stirred us so strongly, so effectively as the climax in "Success," genially worked up with a punch that hits straight between the eyes. The characters are humanly interesting. You recognize each and every one. They typify characters that are common. Their behavior is logic—but the story, ah, that's the big drag that will drag them into your theatre and hold them in their seats satisfied they have got their money's worth.

Our regret is that we can not go into details concerning the many, many features embodied in this production that make it as big as anything this writer has ever seen. As a production it is flawless.

Insofar as cast is concerned one couldn't

Berlin Confers With Italy on Reparations

BERLIN, March 5.—Germany has begun direct negotiations with Italy regarding deliveries of nitrates on the reparation account, according to official announcement. A statement to this effect has been sent to the Reparation Commission in reply to an invitation that Germany enter into conference on such deliveries to France, Belgium and Italy."

The reply says that because of the Ruhr occupation the government is not in a position to make deliveries to France and Belgium, and therefore could not send representatives to the contemplated conference, which was fixed for to-day.

Glengarry"

With an ALL STAR cast composed of: Warner Richmond, Pauline Garon, Anders Randolph, Harlan Knight, Marian Swayne, E. L. Fernandez and William Colvin.

From the Novel by Ralph Connor

"The Man from Glengarry" is the one type of picture that goes well anywhere!

A good out-door production, such as "The Man from Glengarry," casts its spell of the romance of the timberlands, of its thrills and adventures, of its great rivers and lakes and wonderful natural scenery, into the very hearts of all who see it.

"The Man from Glengarry" is the sort of picture that could never have been made on any "lot." It was filmed in the recesses of the Dominion's wilds, by men who know the woodsman's ways and have lived his life.

The great battle between the rival logging crews on one of the biggest log jams that ever choked the Ottawa, and the thrilling rescue over bounding timbers as the boom swings back and sets them on their mad rush through swirling waters are only two of the many reasons why "The Man from Glengarry" is sure to be a great box-office success. With such a picture, such a cast and the name of RALPH CONNOR to advertise you have a production that will show a big profit in any theatre.

DAVID BELASCO'S
Great Epic of the West
Coming With a Rush!

The whole world knows and loves it—one of the greatest stage successes ever produced.

A tale of the roaring days of the Forty Niners—the boom days of the gold fields of Sonora—of nuggets gleaming in the gravel beds—of hairy, two-fisted men panning the streams by day and roaring out their drinking songs to the thrill of love or fight by the flicker of camp fires by night. The world turns back at the Movies' will—and the smile of "The Girl of the Golden West."

On the actual locale of David Belasco's famous stage success, Edwin Carewe is recreating the glories of the old days, now but a memory. And once again will live the color, the grip, the thrill of the goldfields, the life wild and free.

The year's greatest novelty!

THRILL AFTER THRILL!

The strangest love story ever told—the tale of the outlaws' floating island in the mysterious Sargasso Sea—the weird, whirling pool in the North Atlantic, whose deadly currents drag ships and men into its maw, imprisoning them in a living death.

They'll thrill to—

The chase and capture of an escaped convict.

The wrecking of a ship in a terrific storm and the overturning of life boats. The daring rescue of a girl from the waves.

Imprisonment of two men and a girl on a doomed ship.

Marooned on the isle from which ships never return.

The battle of two mighty men, with a girl as the prize.

The tolling of the bells that summon a woman to wed a new husband.

The plot to flee and the battle with the outlaws.

A man's high plunge into the sea from a rotting hulk.

Fugitives, escaping in submarine, buried alive under water, caught under a mass of seaweed.

And—the shooting of a man from the submarine's torpedo tube to risk death from sharks and drowning to cut away the weeds.

Your Job

PETER J. BRADY, labor leader, is out with a printed broadside, directed to the "Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State." And it's about as virile and true-blue a statement as has ever been made on the censorship situation in New York State.

We subscribe to it just 100%.

And also to this appeal to New York State exhibitors:

It was fully demonstrated that all of the reform forces and Blue Law advocates are well organized and doing effective work to keep this iniquitous and un-American law upon the statute books.

As this is a fight for freedom and justice, especially to the people who patronize your theatre, it is up to you to do your part in helping to abolish censorship which does not, and never can, censor.

Therefore, write letters and interview your Assemblymen and Senators and point out to them the great burden this law is to the industry, and how this additional expense must be passed on to your patrons.

The bill for censorship in New York State originated with a Brooklyn newspaper, a Brooklyn assemblyman and a Brooklyn woman. To say that the latter two persons didn't know and do not know what it was all about is expressing it mildly.

The bill, of course, got the usual hysterical support of the Blue Law folks—this new order of legislative lobbyists, well-organized, daring to an extreme, and blinded by their own abnormal ambitions to the very principles of human welfare and progress. Save for the masterly plea of Judge Jenks, a pitifully weak defense was made for the motion picture and Governor Miller signed a bill that had been easily passed by a strictly political majority.

Governor Smith was elected by an overwhelming majority of the voters of New York State on a platform which branded the act as "an arbitrary and tyrannical law" and which stated: "We believe that a free press, untrammeled public criticism, the unfettered expression of moral and religious opinions and the adequate enforcement of the police power by local officials, are the remedies for any abuses that may exist in the exhibition of motion pictures."

Plenty plain is that.

And plenty plain was Governor Smith's inaugural address in which at length he defined personal liberty as expressed by the Constitution and the kind of "tyrannical government" that is trying to undermine "the freedom of a people." And plenty plain was the response of the people of New York State the unerring proof that at least the basis of popular government still exists with us.

Exhibitors of New York State—the issue is as clear as daylight.

The censorship law of New York State is in politics and it's your job to take it out.

Go, as Mr. Brady urges, to your Senator, Assemblyman, County Chairmen—of both parties, and to all other local statesmen and tell them the truth about censorship, about the censorship law and about the eternal rights of your audiences.

Go and fight. Not as the blue law lobbyists fight because they fight like crazed women, with slander and downright lies. Go and fight earnestly—with facts. You never had a greater nor a more solemn cause.

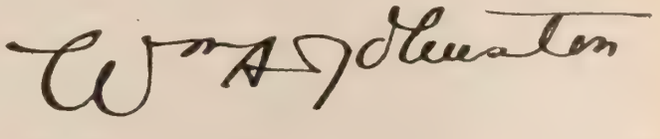
We say it is your job.

It is—but not merely as a motion picture man. It is your job as a citizen of the United States and for the sake of your government. And that, too, is the solemn duty of every man in the industry and especially the duty of its leaders.



PICTURES AND PEOPLE

BANKERS who believe that a released negative has no asset value will find a lot of solid food for thought in a report of the Triangle Film Corporation to be published in April.

Five years ago, in April, 1918, this concern was in the hands of its creditors. Triangle owed around three million dollars and the Government was about to auction it off in a vain endeavor to collect a few hundred thousand.

Today, after five years of quiet, steady, sane management, Triangle has paid off nearly four million dollars, and is back in the hands of its stockholders free and clear of all debt and with a tidy cash balance in the bank.

Moreover—this has all been done without the sale of a single negative. A number have recently been leased to the Tri-Stone Pictures Corporation, a deal which was most favorable to Triangle and will undoubtedly prove very advantageous to Oscar Price, H. G. Aitken and the Tri-Stone Pictures Corporation. These pictures, featuring Chaplin and Fairbanks and including also some of the best comedies of the past are to be re-titled and generally modernized before release.

But the point is that Triangle still has all its 4000 negatives with still a considerable potential value, for re-release or reproduction. Who knows, in fact, just what value?

Of course, the bankers will say, a good manager did this. Perfectly true and the credit goes to a man who never asks for credit—Percy L. Waters, a pioneer and one of the solid men of the industry. He did it.

"WEDDING BELLS AND ORANGE BLOSSOMS" might well be the title of the picture which Marguerite Courtot and Raymond McKee will enact in the very near future. The picture is a romance with but a single setting—the happy ending. This is our way of announcing the forthcoming marriage of the two stars whose romance began in a childhood friendship and which reached its happy conclusion during the filming of "Down to the Sea in Ships."

Miss Courtot and Mr. McKee were cast in the principal roles, portraying the parts of devoted lovers. It is believed that this close association of some fourteen or fifteen months in the making of the whaling story was instrumental in the happy couple walking over to Tiffany's to look at the sparklers. The marriage is expected to take place during the latter part of April.

KEEP your eyes on Dorothy Mackaill who is showing an art for pantomime which will not be denied. There is something of Lillian Gish's wistfulness about her which makes her personality thoroughly appealing. Her performance in "Mighty Lak' a Rose," is a fragrant breath of sentiment and charm. It should carry her far along the high road to stardom.

"THE COVERED WAGON" is making just as big history in the film industry as the pioneers did in their hazardous journey over the Oregon Trail in the days of '48. Here is a screen epic for you! It exudes romance, generates suspense, stimulates patriotism, furnishes adventure and carries one along with a majestic sweep of dramatic movement. The very title is fascinating. And once the curtains part on the hardy pioneers assembled at Westport Landing awaiting the bugle call which will send them forth upon their perilous journey, the spectator is in for two hours of the most stirring kind of drama. History is being recorded—not the dull, dry printed words of a text-book, but vivid and vital episodes of one of the most romantic and adventurous periods in the building of this mighty country.

The picture is carrying a seat sale eight weeks ahead and from our line of vision it appears to be selling out. The fortunates who attended the premiere at the New York Criterion pioneered their way through a blinding rain-storm. The feature, heavily advertised weeks in advance, made the patrons look forward to seeing a great achievement. Certainly the gorgeous sign which decorates the upper part of the theatre is an eye-opener of what the spectator may expect when he is ushered to his seat. It shows a huge covered wagon fording a stream, painted in a color scheme of brown and sky blue—a sign which stands forth like a beacon surrounded as it is by the incandescents. In a small parking place in front of the theatre two studio sun-lights shot a rich coloring of yellow over the sign and suggesting to the passing pedestrians that "The Covered Wagon" had arrived.

And having arrived it is destined to stay for weeks to come. Certainly it carves a milestone in its record of a bygone people. Here is the motion picture at its best. No society drama here; no triangle situations; no play carried along by dialogue, but a reproduction of the big outdoors of '48 when men took up their plows and cried "Westward Ho!" The vast panorama of scenes makes history vivid and stirring. It is as much an epic in its way as "The Birth of a Nation."

PETE SMITH, the demon press agent and exploiteer, who has just returned to Los Angeles, has opened offices to handle publicity and exploitation for independent producers and stars. Arrangements have been closed with M. C. Levee, President of the United Studios, whereby Mr. Smith will make his offices at this studio and handle the publicity of United, Maurice Tourneur Productions, and other independent producers.

Mr. Smith, who for the past three years has directed the publicity of Marshall Neilan Productions, continues with Mr. Neilan in handling that producer's publicity and will also look to the publicity of Miss Blanche Sweet.

LEAH BAIRD is leaving Los Angeles for a visit in New York, timing her departure with the release of her latest picture, "Is Divorce a Failure?"—but not caring to answer the vital question since she is certain that married life is successful. Arthur Beck, who is the star's husband, producer of her films, will accompany her East.

ERNEST TORRENCE dons the royal purple again! The screen benefited greatly when this able pantomimist left the stage to display his talents under the Kliegs. Gifted as he is with an exceptionally mobile countenance it is no difficulty for him to enact faithfully, and colorfully any role with which he is assigned. "Tol'able David" found him playing a graphic study of an abysmal brute—a study which he also rendered in "Broken Chains." Then along comes "The Covered Wagon" and he contributes the finest performance of the year—one of the finest performances for that matter in the history of the screen. He shows his humorous side—and this big Scot has one if you have ever witnessed him in several of his stage interpretations.

As Jackson, the scout, the camera catches every gesture, every movement of his hands, every shadow which flits across his face. He is real and human—and, seemingly, a character out of the period which he so ably represents. Follow him in his desire to punish the villainous rival of his champion, Banion, and enjoy some of the richest scenes of this picture. He stalks through the story, unmindful of death, giving advice when it is sought and offering it when it is scorned. A happy-go-lucky playboy.

A finely executed scene, rich in mirth, shows him in a shooting contest with another picturesque guide played with fine feeling and understanding by Tully Marshall. They become gloriously drunk, so much so, that they are scarcely able to walk. One asks the other to keep up the old friendship and show their sincerity by aiming at a target placed William Tell fashion on their respective heads. The rifles waver for an instant. The vision is cloudy. But once they take aim the bullets reach their mark—and the adventurous scouts don't bat an eye-lash. Watch Torrence close his eye and sight his target and enjoy the laugh of the season. Watch Marshall endeavor to remember an important message which he cannot do unless he has more "likker"—and try and keep a straight face. You cannot do it.

Such intimate cameos help in making this picture the vital canvas it is. They help mightily in adding an eloquent human touch.

DAVID BELASCO, Leonore Ulric and Hope Hampton sponsored by the Warner Brothers, were presented to the camera, the newspaper people and the trade press last Wednesday afternoon at the Warner Brothers offices. Will H. Hays and Courtlandt Smith were present. Miss Ulric is to play in "The Tiger Rose" and Miss Hampton in "The Golddiggers," both to be filmed by Warner Brothers and supervised in the making by David Belasco. "These boys," said Mr. Hays, referring to the Warners, "are doing fine and progressive things." And so they are.

After the brief reception, some Eastman color films of Hope Hampton were shown in the Warner projection room, causing David Belasco to remark: "Wonderful! Wonderful!"

THE National Board of Review would have you know that Paramount's "Bella Donna," First National's "The Isle of Lost Ships," and Goldwyn's "Vanity Fair" win the asterisks for the current week. We agree with the Board that they have chosen wisely—and well.

WE are giving you this story as it was given to us with emphasis on the statement that it didn't spring from the fertile brain of the press agent. The Bangor, Me. Commercial is authority for the yarn concerning Harold Lloyd's "Grandma's Boy," which created a strange experience with a woman spectator. Listen boys! "When the employees were cleaning the Opera House Tuesday forenoon, they found a plate of false teeth, and a little later a Bangor woman called at the box-office and received her property, stating that she laughed so heartily at Lloyd's antics in the picture that she ejected her teeth and did not miss them until she reached home." Manager Greely and the Commercial vouch for its truth.

IT looks as if Harry Reichenbach was at it again. A letter was delivered Tuesday bearing a stamp of Egypt, with the name of Tut-Ankh-Amen written upon it. The contents informed us that the site of Sodom and Gomorrah, on the rim of the Dead Sea, has been found—and will be given the world to view on March 26, also the tomb of the "Queen of Sin." The letter was signed Nicholas Hood, archaeologist. This looks like a bit of exploitation concerning the Ben Blumenthal attraction which moves into the Lyric on the above-mentioned date.

AN electric piano which automatically began playing the scales when the Heckley motion picture theatre in Duncannon, Pa., caught fire after the final show on the night of March 15, sounded its own alarm of fire when no one was in the theatre, and prevented the destruction of the building. When the firemen broke in the doors the piano was playing its last scale in double quick time. Firemen believe the fire started from a short circuit in the piano.

After the theatre had been closed for the night a passerby heard the piano playing in the empty building. He looked in the window and saw flames and then sounded the alarm. Before the firemen arrived the screen and stage were afire. The piano, recently installed at a cost of three thousand dollars was ruined and there was an additional loss of two thousand to the building and equipment.

PICTURE plays and picture companies may come and go, but the South Sea Island picture play will always be with us. Just at present there is an epidemic of dramas carrying the background of the South Seas, most of which have probably been inspired by the tremendous success of the stage attraction, "Rain." The Isles have charmed screen spectators and fiction readers for years. Frederick O'Brien's travel books are selling in one edition after another. Now comes the Wide World Photoplays, Inc., who have organized to make South Sea Island dramas for the screen in a locale hitherto unexplored by white men. The party will sail about the first of May and on reaching Hawaii a physician will be taken along who is said to be the only white man that ever set foot on the island where the picture is to be produced. Success to the venture.

Legitimate Theatre for Hollywood

Film Celebrities Backing Enterprise to Bring B'way Plays to Film Center

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS and Mary Pickford have taken on the mantle of theatre-builders and owners by joining forces with Sol Lesser, Sid Grauman, Joseph M. Schenck and West Coast Theatres, Inc., officials, including Adolph Remish, A. L. and M. Gore.

This group will immediately erect a new and beautiful theatre in the heart of Hollywood, costing approximately $1,000,000. It will be located on Hollywood Boulevard, and plans are now being drawn. It is said the new footlight temple will be ready for opening within eight months.

The theatre is to be devoted to the spoken drama exclusively, with only on rare occasions film presentations being given. It is the thought of the theatre organization to bring to the Coast and the center of the film industry well-known Brooadway stage successes. Negotiations are now under way with Messrs. Klaw and Erlanger, Shuberts, Selwyns and David Belasco, it is stated.

Sol Lesser, vice-president of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., will leave for New York early in April, and will confer with these producers regarding the first series of plays to be sent to the coast.

It is the intention of those interested in the new playhouse to give the leading roles in these Broadway hits to artists now appearing in the silent drama.

Following is a statement in part received from the offices of Principal Pictures Corporation on the Coast announcing the new project:

"That the new Hollywood theatre will be the showplace of the world is assured by all interested in the project. Both Miss Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are devoted to art in the highest sphere, and they are keenly excited over their new association in theatre building and owning. Grauman is regarded as the master showman of the West and will devote all of his time in the new edifice. Schenck is a fifth owner of the West Coast Theatres chain. The theatre will contain many new and unique innovations and will grace one of the choicest spots in all Hollywood."

N. Y. Senate Passes Censorship Repeal Measure

THE Walker Bill, providing for the repeal of motion-picture censorship in New York State, passed the Senate by a vote of 27 to 22 shortly after midnight on Tuesday of this week. The voting was marked by the dissolution of party lines, Senators Dick and Whitley (Republicans) voting with the Democrats in favor of the repeal and Senator Love (Democrat) voting against the measure with the majority of the Republican Senators. This came as a surprise as forecasts pointed to a solid Democratic vote in favor of the repeal owing to Governor Smith's frequently reiterated opposition to censorship.

The breaking down of party lines in the Senate and the winning of two Republican votes for the proposal is considered by observers as a prediction of similar action in the Assembly, which is Republican only by a majority of six. Up to the present it has been generally conceded that the bill would meet with certain defeat in the lower house.

The Senate voting was preceded by some little debate with Senator Clayton R. Lusk, minority leader, opposing the passage of the bill on the grounds that the recent hearing showed public opinion to be for a continuance of censorship.

New Colorado Exhibitors' Body in Meeting

State exhibitors of Colorado recently banded as an association known as the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Colorado and affiliated with exhibitors in the Intermountain Receiving Service, met at a general State meeting in Denver last Wednesday.

High lights of the meeting was the general participation in discussions relating to the working in unison on subjects affecting the box office receipts, bank balances and general standing of the theatre owner in his community.

The subject of non-theatrical showings occasioned considerable comment. The owners say that in all fairness to their business, their rights as legitimate film exhibitors should not be encroached on by church and school organizations showing commercial pictures. Religious and educational pictures received the stamp of "O. K.," but the owners declared that the showing of commercial film should be banned.

The meeting wound up with a discussion on the alleged unfair demands and tactics of union operators. An adjusting committee consisting of Messrs. Shubach, Eppler and Hefferman was appointed as an adjustment committee for the exhibitors.

"Bring your troubles with you and let's have 'em out," is the aim of the organization, President Huffman said.

S. Barret McCormick Honor Guest at Luncheon

Trade press representatives and members of First National's advertising, publicity and exploitation staffs attended an informal luncheon at the Hotel Astor, March 17, in honor of S. Barrett McCormick, who left Saturday night for Oakland, Cal., where he will manage the new Fox theatre, soon to be opened.

Among those who paid tribute to Mr. McCormick's personality and ability were William A. Johnson, editor and publisher MOTION PICTURE NEWS; L. W. Boynton, editor and publisher Exhibitors Trade Review; John Spargo, New York representative Exhibitors Herald; Jack Alicoate, treasurer and business manager Film Daily; C. L. Yearsley, director of advertising and publicity First National, and Horace Judge, Ned Holmes and Bob Dexter, also of First National.

Kansas Equalization Bill in Committee

The equalization bill introduced at the Kansas legislature last week, a measure which would compel all theatres to admit negroes upon the same basis as white persons, still is being considered in committee. Public sentiment is strongly against the measure.

The Welfare bill, which would create a welfare board in each county of Kansas to issue licenses to theatres, still is pending in committee. The measure was introduced two weeks ago.

Knickerbocker Trustees Ask Suit Dismissal

THE National Savings and Trust Company, Charles T. Tittman, Reeves T. Strickland, trustees, named as defendants in a suit to set aside last April's sale of the Knickerbocker theatre site and property on Eighteenth Street at Columbia Road, Washington, D. C., to Harry M. Crandall, asked the District Supreme Court, Thursday last, to dismiss the suit.

A categorical denial was entered of any fraud or fraudulent intention in the dissolution of the Knickerbocker Theatre and appointment of receivers for it, in the Delaware courts.

New York's F.I.L.M. Club Holds Dance March 17

The F. I. L. M. Club of New York gave their St. Patrick's Day party at the Automobile Club on Saturday, March 17. Over two hundred people attended.

One of the big surprise hits which Bill Raynor, chairman of the Entertainment Committee, gave was Bobby Clark's presentation of Dorothy Palmer's Kiddie Revue of 1923.

The affair was in charge of W. E. Raynor, assisted by Tom Murray, A. M. Weinberger, George Dillon and William Marsh.

A buffet luncheon was served by Billy Flynn, steward of the Automobile Club. The dancing was enjoyed until the wee hours of the morning. Dentzig's Society Orchestra furnished the music.

Albany F.I.L.M. Club to Be Revived

Efforts will be made in the near future to revive the F. I. L. M. Club in Albany, N. Y. This is in line with a request which has been made by Joseph Unger, president of the F. I. L. M. Club of New York City, who will probably come to Albany to assist in the reorganization. The F. I. L. M. Club of New York and the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce have started to function once more on the basis of the new uniform contract.

The Albany F. I. L. M. Club was organized about four years ago, but became inactive about nine or ten months ago. C. R. Halligan was the first president. Later the club became the Film Board of Trade of Albany. It is believed that the reorganization will be effected within the next two or three weeks, as practically all managers of film exchanges in Albany are in favor of the procedure.

Theatre Head Found Guilty on Sunday Opening Charge

While Common Pleas Judge Walter J. Wright declared permanent the temporary injunction granted four weeks ago, restraining the city administration of Bucyrus from interfering with Sunday operations of the Bucyrus Theatre Company, the Mayor's Court found G. R. Moore, of Bellevue, President of the company, guilty of having operated a picture show on Sunday, February 4, sentence being deferred.

Herman Seckel, motion picture machine operator, was found to be guilty of having violated the Sunday law. He was fined $25 and costs but will appeal the case.

The case against R. L. Hertzer, manager and part owner of the show, was thrown out because the date on the warrant had been altered after the arrest had been made.

N. Y. Lawmakers Cut Commission's Budget

N. Y. Legislators Decree Against Unnecessary Secretaries and Other Items

THERE isn't going to be any secretary to the laborer at the New York State Motion Picture Commission. And there isn't going to be any assistant secretary to a secretary. Nor will there be another deputy commissioner receiving $4,000 a year. Not that the commission specifically stated that the laborer was to receive a secretary, but with the request for money to meet the expenses of the commimssion, and, incidentally, this or that secretary, it is no wonder that those who made up the annual budget to meet the expenses of running New York State, including the Motion Picture Commission, wondered where under the sun all the secretaries were to be employed, and if by chance one was not to be allotted to the laborer.

The Budget Committee examined the requests of the Motion Picture Commission with an eye to practical requirements and rejected such applications for additional assistance as it felt could be dispensed with without materially detracting from the effectiveness of the Board's allotted tasks as prescribed by law. Despite the arguments advanced by some observers that the Commission would shortly be disbanding under provisions of the Walker repeal measure, already adopted by the Senate and awaiting action by the Assembly, the Budget Committee pursued its examination of the Commission's requests for additional help with the same thoroughness and dispatch as would be expected if no point had been raised as to the certainty of the Commission's continuance as a bureau of the State's governmental machinery. Provisions for increased reviewing service were allowed by the Budget Committee, but the requests for additional secretarial help were ruled out.

For instance, when the Commission presented its request for the year's appropriation it carried this item:

"We ask for another deputy at a salary of $4,000 to have charge of the inspection of theatres and prosecutions for violations of the law. This is an important and essential part of the work, and there is no one who can do this at the present time."

The Budget Committee failed to recognize the "importance" or essential features and drew its pencil through the request.

And then there is another explanation which reads as follows:

"Mrs. Hosmer needs a much more competent person, and we have asked that the salary be increased to $2,500. It is necessary."

And then there is another request, relative to an assistant secretary. This reads as follows:

"We are endeavoring to secure an assistant secretary from the civil service list."

The actual amounts that have been allowed the Commission for the year beginning July 1, should it be in existence at that time, follow, and give a very comprehensive idea of what censorship is costing New York State at the present time:

Commissioners, three at $7,500	$22,500
Deputies, two at $4,000	8,000
Deputy	3,500
Financial Deputy	3,500
Secretaries to Commissioners, two at $2,500	5,000

The few requests allowed by the Budget Commmittee indicate, however, that there will be additional reviewers named by the Commission in the near future. Two of these are to receive $2,500, one to be located in Buffalo and one in New York, while two, receiving $1,800 apiece, will be so stationed that one will cover New York City and the other up-State, while four others, receiving $1,600 each, will probably travel over the State.

Federal Agencies Would Improve Industry

IT is learned that more than one Government agency is interested in the action the Federal Trade Commission has taken against the so-called moving picture trust. It is said that the Department of Commerce, displeased at the type of films that have been sent to some foreign countries by some American agencies and also disapproving highly of some of the domestic practices of some producers and distributors, is backing the Federal Trade Commission.

Exhibitors' Herald Files Suit Against Rembusch

THE Exhibitors' Herald of Chicago has filed suit in the Marion County Circuit Court, Illinois, against Frank Rembusch for the sum of one hundred eighty dollars for advertising.

Mr. Rembusch maintains that the debt incurred is not one collectible from him but from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The following explanation is advanced for this stand: The advertising in dispute was part of the expense incurred during the organizing of exhibitors on a national scale just before the founding of the M. P. T. O. of A. in Cleveland in June of 1920. Rembusch was then president of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America and was also chairman of the Committee of Seventeen, who had the national promotion work among exhibitors in hand. The Cleveland Convention, which resulted in bringing together the various exhibitor factions, including the I. M. P. E. of A., gave rise to the present M. P. T. O. of A. The Cleveland Convention, it is explained, adopted a resolution providing that all expenses of the Committee of Seventeen be paid by the M. P. T. O. of A. An expense bill later presented by Mr. Rembusch to the M. P. T. O. of A. was rejected, it is stated. The question at issue in the Exhibitors' Herald suit is whether or not Rembusch as president of the I. M. P. E. of A. is responsible for the debts of that organization.

Lawmakers Hear Plea to Amend State Tax

One leading motion picture house at Bridgeport, Conn., has been compelled to close and another has been sold at a loss of $12,000 to the owner, members of the Finance Committee of the Connecticut Legislature were last week informed at a largely attended hearing at Hartford on the proposed bill to repeal the State amusement tax. More than 30 exhibitors of motion pictures from all parts of the State attended, urging repeal of the law on the ground that the theatre industry is already overtaxed and that in some instances the levies amount to as much as 30 per cent of the gross receipts.

Proposed repeal of the amusement tax was opposed by State Tax Commissioner William H. Blodgett, County Commissioners Frank E. Ballard and Charles P. Hart of Bridgeport, and by commissioners of every other county in the State. Tax Commissioner Blodgett informed the committee that the amusement or admissions tax is economically sound, that the State needs the revenue and that there is no program providing for new revenue or any other means of providing a substitute for the revenue obtained by taxing admissions.

He said that the repeal of the tax would mean a loss to the State of approximately $250,000 a year, and a loss of the same amount in the aggregate to the several counties, which now get half the tax money collected in their respective territory.

He emphasized the fact that motion picture exhibitors throughout Connecticut are now paying 14 distinct and different kinds of taxes and licenses.

Buffalo or N. Y. to Get Annual Convention

Either Buffalo or New York City will be selected as the place of the next annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre owners of New York State, which will be held on May 8, 9, and 10.

While the date of the convention was fixed by the board of directors meeting in executive session at the Hotel Ten Eyck at Albany, Wednesday afternoon, four hours of discussion failed to bring the members to a selection of the city in which the convention will be held. The board of directors has empowered President Charles L. O'Reilly to meet with two committees, one representing each of the cities bidding for the convention, within the next week. Following this meeting, President O'Reilly will announce his selection.

N. Y. Deal Under Way for Allen Assets

A further step was taken in the sale of the assets of Allen Theatres, Limited, Toronto, affecting 36 theatres in Canada, when G. T. Clarkson, trustee and liquidator of the circuit, visited New York on March 16 in order to negotiate with prospective purchasers there.

Peter Brady Condemns Censorship

Allied Printing Trades Council Sends Broadside to M.P.T.O. of N. Y. Members

PETER J. BRADY, president of the Allied Printing Trades Council of New York State, has sent a broadside to the members of the M. P. T. O. of New York on the subject of the legislative hearing on the Walker-O'Connor bill to abolish motion picture State censorship held at Albany on March 6.

The broadside is being given editorial attention in this week's issue and in addition we are appending herewith the concluding sentences of Mr. Brady's appeal as of particular interest to every exhibitor:

"At the hearings and with letters and interviews the labor organizations of this State are doing all they can to have the law repealed, but your co-operation and active assistance is needed, so you are urged to get busy immediately and keep at it from now on until your legislative representatives vote to abolish the commission.

"Don't overlook a visit to the County Chairmen or other statesmen of influence in your district. In fact, let no person who may in any way help to repeal this law escape an interview; they were all anxious for your personal aid and the assistance of your screen during the campaign, and now is their time for reciprocity.

"Concentrate on the Republicans, both members of the Legislature and county leaders, but do not overlook the Democrats.

"The motion picture film is a publication and subject to the law of libel. It publishes drama, literature, scientific, religious, political, economic, and other ideas, sentiments and opinions. Any attempt to abridge or restrain such publication in any degree is a violation of our constitutional rights. If it becomes an indecent publication it can be suppressed by proper statute. The license of the exhibition place can be revoked, the place closed, and all connected with the indecent publication prosecuted—but the publication must take place before the law is invoked.

"Remind them that Article 8, Section 1, of the Constitution of the State of New York, contains the following provision:

"'Every citizen may freely speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right, and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press.'

"It further says that in a prosecution for libel based on abuse of this right:

"'If it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends the party shall be acquitted.'

"That is the basis of our liberty and under that provision the jury, not the court or judge, shall have the right to determine the law and the facts.

"Organized labor of this State condemns the motion picture censorship law. That law clothes two individuals with the power to approve or disapprove and thus publish or suppress, in whole or in part, any motion picture film and to delegate that tyrannical power to any subordinate.

"We are in this fight to secure for the people all of their constitutional rights, and ask you to join with us as a duty you owe to your patrons and to your fellow citizens. Therefore interview and write to your legislative representatives and all other men of influence in your city so that we may be free from this vicious, tyrannical and offensive legislation."

Governor Bans Bootleggers in Penn. Pictures

GOVERNOR PINCHOT, of Pennsylvania, has served notice on Harry Knapp, chairman of the Pennsylvania Board of Motion Picture censors, that the censors must eliminate from pictures all references throwing light on the successful methods of bootleggers and also that they must rule out all slurs or ridicule directed at Prohibition enforcement authorities.

Governor Pinchot's action in this respect was in line with his expressed determination to enforce strictly the federal and state prohibition laws in Pennsylvania.

First National Club to Hold Annual Dinner Dance

With a bevy of First National stars as the guests of honor, the First National Club annual dance will be held at the Hotel Commodore Wednesday, April 4th. Richard Barthelmess and Dorothy Gish have promised to be present, also Dorothy MacKaill, Mary Astor and a score more screen celebrities. The committee in charge has received acceptances from practically all of the prominent players located in the East.

Robert Lieber, president of Associated First National, will attend, as will other executives of the home office.

The dance will mark the first anniversary of the formation of the club, and is receiving the enthusiastic support of all First National employees. William P. Kroll's Souciant Syncopators will furnish the music.

The committees are—Entertainment: C. R. Waxman, Margaret Hughes, Mildred Kroll; publicity: Abbott Oberndorfer, W. Pierresport, B. Krewer, L. Bilson. Requests for tickets, which cost $1.50 per person, should be addressed to Mr. Waxman or Mr. Oberndorfer at the First National offices.

Sunday Closing Issue in Colorado Elections

Spring elections in many of the cities and towns of Colorado which now have Sunday closing ordinances will be featured by efforts of the liberal element of the citizenry to remove the ban, so they may enjoy motion pictures, baseball and other forms of amusement on the Sabbath.

The first battle on this issue will come on April 3 at Greeley, third largest city in Colorado, where, for the first time in six years, two tickets have been put in the field for the municipal election. Charles D. Todd, the present Mayor and advocate of Sunday closing, wants to keep the lid on. Walter S. Hayden, candidate of the liberal element, would like to see the ban removed.

Motion picture interests throughout the State are eagerly awaiting the result of the election, because of a feeling that if the ban is removed in Greeley it would encourage residents of many smaller communities to follow suit.

Late News Notes from the West Coast by Wire

Kansas Exhibitors Plan for Convention

President R. G. Liggett of the M. P. T. O. Kansas has announced the tentative date and place of the semi-annual Kansas exhibitor convention April 9 and 10 at Wichita, Kan.

For several years the Kansas organization has looked forward to the attendance of officers of the national organization at Kansas gatherings, but apparently the convention next month will be the first time that Sydney Cohen and associates will attend in the Sunflower state. A letter received Wednesday by R. G. Liggett, president of the M. P. T. O. K., from Mr. Cohen, assured Kansas exhibitors of the presence of Mr. Cohen and Michael O'Toole, member of the national board of directors in charge of the public service department. William True, president of the Connecticut exhibitors, and William Burford, president of the M. P. T. O. Illinois, also will attend the convention. The uniform contract and the Cohen distribution plan will be among the principal matters for consideration. Mr. Cohen and Mr. O'Toole also will attend the Arkansas and Nebraska conventions, April 3 and 5, respectively.

Paramount Settles with F. Wehrenberg for $5,000

Fred Wehrenberg, owner of the Cherokee theatres, St. Louis, has received a check for $5,000 from the Famous Players-Lasky Missouri Corporation in full settlement of his suit against that organization growing out of the deal entered into in 1919 when the Famous Players local theatre organization sought to purchase the Cherokee. Wehrenberg in his suit alleged that Harry Koplar had delivered the Cherokee to the defendants without his consent. His claim represented receipts of the theatre while the defendants were in possession. The case was set for trial in the Circuit Court on February 28, but was discontinued when attorneys stated the matter would be settled out of court.

"The Covered Wagon"—An Epic of Screen

By Laurence Reid

AFTER one of the most stupendous advertising campaigns in the history of the screen conducted by Paramount in behalf of its magnificent achievement, "The Covered Wagon"—a campaign suggesting a lavish expenditure of money inspired by the producers' belief that they had an exceptional treasure to give to the world and posterity—this gorgeous canvas was displayed on the silver sheet at the Criterion theatre, New York, last Friday night. Every line, every paragraph, every exploitation scheme which has been employed to advertise this rich and vital tapestry has been substantiated. Paramount has kept faith with the public. And the public, in turn—to voice the collective opinion of the lucky spectators—has tremendous faith in this stirring epic of a nation in the making—of a nation of hardy settlers who faced the setting sun in '48 with their courageous women, their children, their prairie schooners, their plows, their livestock and household goods—with a cry of "Westward Ho!"

What a romantic, glorious period in the making of America—history being recorded with every mile of the long, arduous and dangerous journey over the Oregon Trail—when a good day's travel was considered fortunate if ten miles were covered!

John C. Flinn, the ambassador extraordinary of this eloquent photoplay, brought out admirably in a telegram campaign the marked contrasts of the present day with those of that far distant day when the pioneers headed for the West. He returned East over the very trail which marked the course of these dauntless and daring people—the Union Pacific. The vast prairie land is cultivated, towns and cities have risen from the plains and from the slopes of the Rockies, railroads take the present-day travelers with quickness and despatch. Yet one may look out of the window while riding in comfort and safety and conjure up the stirring period of the Roaring Forties—when Indians lurked in ambush with death cries on their lips, when courageous scouts carried the mail via pony express, when the nearly extinct bison roamed the plains in countless thousands.

It is a fancy which makes better Americans of us all. It compels us to pause and marvel over the making of a mighty nation. It stirs us with romance and adventure. We would like to be transported—to live over the vivid adventures which featured the westward journey of the pioneers. John Flinn brought "The Covered Wagon" in on time, and, through one of the most violent storms which ever lashed New York with its pent-up fury, we plodded to the Criterion and found refuge, awaiting eagerly the parting of the curtains, awaiting eagerly to be transported. An atmospheric prologue entitled "Songs of 1849" was presented by Hugo Reisenfeld, with the Criterion Ensemble attired appropriately in the costumes of the period. And the old songs, especially "Oh, Susanna!" placed the spectators in a receptive frame of mind for the picture which was to hold them in a tight embrace for eleven reels.

The curtains parted and the pioneers lived again—lived over their mighty struggle to found a kingdom in the West. The vital stimulus to American patriotism was inspired the moment that a foreword announced the picture dedicated to the memory of Theodore Roosevelt, an American who would have gloried in it had he been among those present on the eventful night. Although an Easterner by birth and education, his soul was of the West. And this patriotic fervor mounted the moment the perilous journey started westward from Westport Landing, now Kansas City, Mo. One caught the romantic and adventurous glamour of those stirring days; one caught the terrific suspense of these hardy pioneers as they faced the unknown country, mindful of the dangers, yet facing them with a true, unbounded courage. The bugle sounded and the wagon train started over the Oregon Trail. There were happy people, vagabonds, adventurers and rough tillers of the soil—a motley throng, but with few exceptions they remained steadfast in their devotion to found an empire in the West.

Here was no trifling adventure. One had but to follow the long, winding train of the covered wagons—a train which stretched as far as the eye could reach—to discover the immensity of the production. History was being re-enacted before our very eyes. The thought lingered that these people were carving an imperishable record of adventure. One felt proud of them; one saw them as red-blooded Americans—the stock from which we sprung. It was a gigantic task for James Cruze, the guiding genius of this epic, to bring out the spirit of Emerson Hough's vital story in such an eloquent manner that made the picture a living, throbbing heart-drama. He must have had a corps of assistants, because no single man could fashion the work and make it so vivid and human. There was confusion in handling the vast detail. This suggested an authenticity which no orderly routine could ever indicate. Some might say that it lacks dramatic foundation—that it is a surface story of a picturesque journey through which pulsates a romance. They will have missed its vital conception reasoning from such viewpoint, for these pioneers were involved in a mighty drama bounded by nature, the theme of which was a will to gain sanctuary and soil in far-off Oregon. One has but to catch the meaning of the perilous journey to appreciate that it has nothing to do with the technique of drama as it is ladled out by playwrights, past and present.

So we hop aboard Ogle's wagon or sit astride Kerrigan's horse. We are carried away on a fascinating yet dangerous adventure. Cruze's wonder shots are ever before us. The far reaches of the prairies stretch out in an endless pattern of acreage. The wagons stop for the night and music lightens the awful tensity. It is a graphic depiction of the colonization of America. Thrills it has in abundance and a stirring romance, and highly exciting incident enliven the westward march. The Platte River is reached, bringing with it the first obstacle. And the fording of the stream is one of the most inspiring scenes which ever embraced the imagination with its dramatic force and sweep. The soldier Banion, played with good romantic fervor by J. Warren Kerrigan, finds a way to overcome the barrier. The cattle and oxen are herded together and driven into the rushing river. The wagons are kept afloat by mammoth logs.

This is the outstanding high light in a picture of many high lights. No barriers can stop these sons of the soil—not even the Indians who are bewildered over the eternal progress of the far-flung train and jealous that the white man's plow will soon rob them of their land. The pioneers are ambushed by the red men in one of the biggest individual thrills ever recorded. Thousands of them in full war regalia encircle the train, but even with serious losses their plucky determination to carry on keeps them to their purpose. We catch the privations they suffer, the treachery of the bad men, the courage of the heroes, the menace of the vast reaches of snow—and watching these stirring scenes, time and environment are forgotten. The bison hunt is like an animated Remington—a scene charged with genuine adventure.

All these dramatic episodes are deftly woven together by Jack Cunningham who adapted the story. And James Cruze has brought them forth so that they fairly leap across the screen—mounting, as they do, with a crescendo of action and suspense. The vast scenes which stretch out before the eye are gigantic in conception and execution. The plains are crossed, the mountains are reached and the more greedy of the pioneers toss aside their plows, pick up their shovels and head for Californy—for gold has been discovered. Never once does the spectator lose contact with this richly fascinating canvas. The imagination soars, the pulse quickens from the moment that the bugle sounded in Westport Landing until the young romancers embrace each other in Oregon.

The picture is interpreted by a cast of players who have genuinely caught the spirit which guided the pioneers. Theirs was as much a labor of love and enthusiasm as that of Mr. Cruze and his cameramen. Exceptionally fine is the study of the scout by Ernest Torrence—a study the sheer understanding and feeling of which has never been surpassed on the screen. It is one of the finest expressions of character acting that has ever been portrayed. A marvel for pantomime, Torrence can play comedy as well as tragedy. His mobile countenance, his eloquent hands and shoulders work in perfect co-ordination to provide a human and outstanding characterization. The scene when he meets another scout, as picturesquely played by Tully Marshall, and they carry on a William Tell act,furnishes a rich and highly amusing scene which not only gives balance to the picture, but which is one of the conspicuous high lights present. They become so drunk that they are hardly able to walk. Yet when it comes to shootin' straight the deadly liquor has no effect. There are other cameo touches nearly as vital.

These actors always seem real. There is nothing of the studio stamped upon their talents or personalities. Lois Wilson is a charming heroine. J. Warren Kerrigan is gallant enough for the heroic role—a role which comes the closest to theatric dimensions. Alan Hale is properly villainous. A well-balanced cast that seemingly step from the days of '48.

"The Covered Wagon" is a magnificent achievement — monumental in conception, sweeping in its power to stimulate patriotism and heighten the imagination. It is a work which is accurate, which carries superb coloring and vital action, which is a living, throbbing page from history. It is Paramount's biggest and best document, which ranks with "The Birth of a Nation" in its epochal record of America in the making.

Penn. in Hot Daylight Saving Fight

Picture Interests Gain Advantage with Favorable Report Against Measure

A DISTINCT advantage was gained by the motion picture interests of Pennsylvania in their spirited fight against daylight saving when the Judicial General Committee of the State Senate on March 14th reported with a favorable recommendation, and without amendment, the Derrick bill, which would prohibit any city, county, borough or other municipality of the State from passing local ordinances prescribing other than Standard time in their respective localities.

The most spirited fight that the Pennsylvania picture interests have yet made in the present session of the legislature has been in support of the Derrick measure which, if enacted, would prevent daylight saving being put in force in any community.

On March 13, the day before the committee made its favorable report, there was a hearing on the Derrick bill before the committee in the Senate caucus room, and it proved one of the most lively debates held during the present session.

Powerful interests appeared before the committee to argue in favor of defeating the bill or amending it in a way that would exempt first and second class cities of the state from being bound by the provisions of the proposed measure. Philadelphia is the one first class city of the state and the second class cities are Pittsburgh and Scranton.

Delegations from Philadelphia city council, headed by Richard Weglein, president of that body, appeared at the hearing and brought all the pressure at their command to induce the committee to adopt the first and second class city exemption clause, which would have given Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Scranton the right to adopt daylight saving laws for their local use.

Powerful banking interests of Philadelphia also favored the proposed amendment, contending that because New York has daylight saving the financial institutions of the two cities should be on the same basis to avoid a conflict of banking hours in Philadelphia with those in Wall Street.

The motion picture interests were strongly represented before the committee, in their fight for the Derrick bill unamended. The picture interests agreed to permit M. J. O'Toole, a Scranton exhibitor, to plead their cause as their sole spokesman, and he made a forceful plea against daylight saving.

He declared that it was all wrong to try to alter divine laws and declared that would be the effect of changing the hands of the clock from Standard time. He pointed to the fact that daylight saving imposes a hardship upon parents, and especially mothers, because it requires them to get up an hour earlier in the mornings to send the children to school, and they do not regain this hour of rest in the evening because the children do not go to bed until the sun goes down, regardless of what the clock may show.

Though Mr. O'Toole, by reason of the limited time at the hearing, was the only picture man to speak, the industry was represented by many other prominent figures who were present at the committee session.

Screen Writers Lay Plans for Revue of 1923

THE Writers' Revue of 1923 will be given at the Auditorium, Hollywood on April 27th and 28th, it was announced this week. The book is being written by Frank Condon and Thomas J. Geraghty, lyrics by Aubrey Stauffer. Milton Schwartz is chairman of the entertainment committee. Walter Wills will be in charge of the production, assisted by Jefferson Moffatt and Frank R. Adams, and Harry Caulfield is the business manager.

Suit Filed Against F. P.-Lasky-Missouri Branch

William Goldman has filed suit in the St. Louis Circuit Court to compel the Famous Players-Lasky Missouri Corporation to turn over to him the Kings theatre, Kingshighway boulevard near Delmar boulevard. Goldman was formerly managing director of the Famous Players' local organization but sold his stock in that corporation last June.

In his petition he states that he entered into an agreement with the defendants on February 12, last, giving him an option to purchase the Kings for $116,000. He was to assume a mortgage for $96,000, it is declared, pay $5,000 cash and the balance in three annual installments of $5,000 each.

Goldman had announced that he would open the Kings on Easter Sunday, at the same time declaring he would build a $1,000,000 theatre at Grand boulevard and Morgan street, according to his statement.

He charges he attempted to carry out his part of the deal for the Kings but that the Famous Players on March 5 notified him that it intended to cancel the agreement. He said he then offered a new bond, but all overtures were rejected. He then filed his suit.

Jerome Storm Will Direct "Children of Jazz"

Jerome Storm, who directed most of Charles Ray's pictures for Thomas H. Ince, has been engaged to direct "Children of Jazz" for Paramount. The production will be made at the Lasky studio and among those who will have leading roles are Theodore Kosloff, Estelle Taylor, Eileen Percy, Ricardo Cortez and Robert Cain.

The Paramount production department also announces that Leatrice Joy and Owen Moore will appear in a special production directed by Charles Maigne, adapted by Sada M. Cowan from Maximilian Foster's story, "The Silent Partner."

"Girl of the Golden West" Nearing Completion

With the completion of the exterior scenes, Edwin Carewe is nearing the half-way mark in the production of "The Girl of the Golden West," a First National attraction. The location was at Sonora, the heart of the gold rush in '49 and the actual locale of the David Belasco stage success. The company is now at the United studios shooting the interiors. It will be several weeks before the picture is finished.

"Souls for Sale" to Have Trade Showing 27th

RUPERT HUGHES' latest production for Goldwyn, "Souls for Sale," is to have its premiere trade showing at the Capitol theatre, New York, at 10:15 a. m. on Tuesday, March 27th, it was announced this week.

"Souls for Sale" was directed by Rupert Hughes from his magazine story of the same name which ran serially in the Red Book. It tells the story of a girl's rise from a screen extra and will include many interesting scenes about the studios as well as famous places and persons of Hollywood. The cast embraces many stellar names.

Exhibitors from the territory in and around New York, members of the nearby Goldwyn exchanges and representatives of the press have been invited to the showing.

F. B. O. Purchases Rights to Popular Novel

In line with its policy of acquiring big stories for its next year's product, Film Booking Offices of America this week announces that it has purchased the screen rights to "Druscilla with a Million," a novel by Elizabeth G. Cooper. This story was published by Frederick A. Stokes and Company, and to date has enjoyed a tremendous sale.

With the purchase of "Druscilla with a Million," F. B. O. now has a well-stocked library of successful novels and plays, all of which are scheduled to be put into production in the near future, in order to assure a steady supply of high-grade features for the coming season.

First National Purchases Rights to "Black Oxen"

First National has purchased the motion picture rights to Gertrude Atherton's novel, "Black Oxen." As a picture Mrs. Atherton's story will be unique in its appeal, it is claimed by First National. It will present a middle-aged woman, who looks, acts and feels like a woman of twenty-five. Moreover, it will show how, through a seeming miracle of science, this defeat of age may become possible for all humanity.

"Fools and Riches" Goes Into Production

"Fools and Riches," Herbert Rawlinson's latest starring vehicle, has been put into production at Universal City under the direction of Herbert Blache.

Chief among the supporting players is Tully Marshall, veteran stage and screen actor. The feminine leads in the picture are taken by Katherine Perry and Doris Pawn. Other well-known characters in the cast are John Cosser, Roy Laidlaw and Arthur Stuart Hull.

Emmett J. Flynn to Direct "In Palace of the King"

The first picture which Emmett J. Flynn will direct under Goldwyn auspices will be an adaptation of Marion Crawford's novel, "In the Palace of the King." Casting for the subject is to be started shortly.

Boston Exhibs. Told to Increase Fire Precautions

Managers of more than 30 second-class motion picture theatres in Boston were summoned to the City Hall last week for a conference with Mayor Curley, Fire Commissioner Glynn and Building Commissioner Mahoney relative to fire protection in their theatres, this despite the fact that there has not been a single life lost in theatre fires in Boston in 40 years. The first class theatres were excused as having obeyed all rules.

Glynn and Mahoney have acquainted the Mayor with what they term the seriousness of the situation. After personal canvasses in their territories district chiefs have reported to Commissioner Glynn that of 40 houses inspected there are 28 that have no fire patrol, eight that have the required patrol of one apiece, and four that have the patrol of two men.

Building Commissioner Mahoney told the managers they were running riot in the matter of overcrowding the patrons of their houses, and he scored them for their alleged failure to remove snow from roofs, side-door emergency exits and fire escapes. He told them to go the limit in safeguarding children in their keeping while attending the shows.

New Concerns in Industry File in Albany

Motion picture companies incorporating in New York State during the past week showed the following capitalization and directors, according to the charters granted by the Secretary of State at Albany: Goodstraus Amusement Company, Inc., Mineola, $100,000, M. and D. Goodman, S. Strausberg, Brooklyn; Sylvia Playhouse, Inc., $4,000, B. L. Price, M. Grossman, M. F. Berman, Brooklyn; The Campro Corporation, $500,000, J. L. E. Pell, William Mattheys, J. J. Hegt, New York; Van-Schenck Enterprises, Inc., $10,000, Joseph Schenck, William G. Lovatt, G. Van, New York; Errol Enterprises, Inc., $10,000, Leon Errol, H. C. Bannister, William G. Lovatt, New York; Foren Film Sales, Inc., $10,000, A. M. Landau, B. H. Bernstein, D. Adler, New York.

Federal Chiefs to Attend Chicago Convention

The Departments of Labor, Commerce, Agriculture and Interior will have official representation at the Motion Picture Palace of Progress to be held under the direction of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America during their annual national convention at the Coliseum in Chicago from May 19 to 26, inclusive. The co-operation and support of secretaries of Labor Davis, Agriculture Wallace, Interior Work and Commerce Hoover have been assured.

Prominent N. Y. Exhibitor Passes Away

Following a four days' illness, John Hogan of Elizabeth, N. J., formerly the manager of Proctor's Leland theatre in Albany, N. Y., and who was lately named as manager of the Palace, in Troy, died in a hospital Sunday afternoon in the city of Troy. His wife reached his bedside before the end came.

The remains were shipped to Elizabeth Monday and burial will be made there. He was widely known in motion picture circles in central New York.

Friday Set Aside as "Family Night" in St. Louis

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of St. Louis and Eastern Missouri has entered into an agreement with the St. Louis Council on Motion Pictures whereby Fridays will be set aside as "Family Night," when only films approved by the council will be shown. About seventy-five St. Louis theatres are members of the league.

The objects of the council is to obtain better films for children, and a voluntary reviewing board of twelve will pass on films, approving those of highest moral and artistic value.

Mrs. Ira L. Bretzfelder, president of the council, said that in no sense was it a censorship proposition, but that the body merely sought to recommend certain pictures, forgetting about the others that do not come up to the standards sought. The body has approved more than 1,000 films.

Joseph Mogler, president of the exhibitors' league, said that his organization would not only declare Fridays "Family Night" but that special matinees would be given every Saturday morning for school children. "We believe the movement toward better films will benefit both the public and the exhibitors," Mogler said.

Creditors Will Continue Chaplin Classics

The creditors of Chaplin Classics, Inc., and Clark-Cornelius met informally on March 14 for the purpose of investigating the condition of the company, which is now in the hands of receivers appointed by the United States Court. It was agreed that the affairs of the company should be taken out of the receivership if possible, and run by the creditors, and a committee was appointed to work toward the accomplishment of this purpose. The committee consists of James V. Ritchey, of Ritchey Litho Corp.; William Hedwig, of Rex Laboratories, Inc., and Mark M. Dintenfass, of National Film Laboratories. Edward Petigor has been retained as their counsel.

Closed by Law on Sunday He Gives Show Free

The Ohio State Blue Laws state that no theatrical or dramatic performances may be given on Sunday for pay. It doesn't say anything about giving a free performance. And that's where George Moore of Bellevue and Bucyrus comes in. Moore has been operating under difficulties on Sunday for the past two years. He has been arrested so many times that he has lost count. The last time he was arrested the police put his patrons out of the house and placed a padlock on the door. And now Moore is showing motion pictures at his house on Sunday free.

Moore has placed a contribution box in the foyer. Anyone who wants to may drop a coin into it. A coin of any dimension. It is unsolicited. Nobody asks for a cent. Sometimes Moore collects enough to pay for his show. But most times there's not enough in the box to cover expenses. But even so, it's a paying proposition in the end, because it is good advertising. It keeps the movie patrons in the movie habit, he says, and it keeps his patrons into the way of going to his theatres for entertainment instead of finding new avenues of amusement.

Soviet Russia Coming Into Film Field on Big Scale

An International News Service dispatch from Moscow, dated March 30th, advises that the Soviet Government of Russia intends to enter the motion picture field on a large scale. The dispatch reads:

"The Proletarian Kinogram Co-operative, backed by big labor and communist organizations, both Russian and foreign, has accumulated 2,600,000 gold rubles as capital," said Joseph Malkin, director, "for the manufacture of the raw film and the production of proletarian pictures for Russia and for export.

"All motion picture production to-day is for the bourgeois. All of our pictures—romance, drama and science—will have the proletarian touch.

"A movie house for every Russian village is our aim."

Canadian Famous Players Acquire New House

With startling regularity the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, Toronto, Ontario, has been acquiring one after another of the leading downtown theatres of Toronto. The latest move along this line is indicated in the announcement that the Famous Players Corporation has secured Shea's theatre, Victoria and Richmond streets, which has been conducted for years as the home of Keith big-time vaudeville by Jerry Shea, famous showman.

Famous Players will take possession of Shea's theatre on August 1, after which it will be renovated and remodeled in time for the opening of the season on Sept. 1. Announcement is made that Jerry Shea will continue to manage the theatre.

Only a few months ago the Famous Players Canadian Corp. acquired Shea's Hippodrome, one of the largest theatres in Canada, and this has since become the parent theatre of the corporation's chain of houses across Canada. The company now operates the Hippodrome, Pantages, Regent, Strand and other smaller houses, and to these is now being added Shea's theatre. The policy of the latter theatre will undergo some change it is understood.

Select Will Expand Distribution

L. J. Selznick Withdraws from Active Interest in Reorganized Company

W. C. J. Doolittle, active member of the reorganization committee of five which is in control of the destinies and policies of the associated Selznick motion picture corporations, this week issued the following important statement, which is of paramount interest in view of various conflicting rumors in circulation regarding the future of these concerns:

"The committee has decided that, because of the excellent manner in which the affairs of the companies are shaping themselves, there is no move that could seriously be considered but the continuance in very active business of the various Selznick corporations and the development along greatly enlarged lines of what we are convinced is one of the finest selling machines in the industry—the Select Pictures Corporation.

"Select in the past has confined itself to the distribution of Selznick pictures. We have decided to take on for distribution all meritorious independent product available. I may say in this connection that we have several deals pending, and that there are three in particular—each for a series of from four to eight specials yearly—which will probably be closed within the course of a week or ten days.

"The entire Select exchange system remains intact. The personnel remained loyal and undisturbed throughout the recent crisis, which has been passed so successfully. Due principally to the ability, the confidence, the loyalty of our sales staff, I expect extremely big things from Select during the coming year.

"Lewis J. Selznick will not be actively interested in the administration of the reorganized company. General Manager John S. Woody, whom I believe to be one of the most capable and brilliant men in the industry today, continues in complete charge of distribution.

"Mr. Woody will be aided and abetted by a reorganized home office staff. I am holding daily conferences with Mr. Woody and the department heads. This group of men, which I term our 'Cabinet,' includes J. E. McDermott, Treasurer; E. J. Doolittle, Export Manager; David R. Blyth, Assistant General Manager; C. C. Ryan, Purchasing Agent; M. J. Walsh, Manager of the Film Department, and L. F. Guimond, Director of Advertising and Publicity.

"There can be no doubt whatever but that the business today needs a well-organized channel of distribution for those many independent producers who certain concerns are attempting to force to the wall. The new and greater Select, with its twenty-five live-wire exchanges, will fill that need.

"The decks are cleared for action. Watch Select forge ahead."

Metro to Distribute Ince Film "Soul of the Beast"

Metro Pictures Corporation announces the completion of arrangements with Thomas H. Ince to distribute the latter's recent production, "Soul of the Beast," based on a circus story by C. Gardner Sullivan, with Madge Bellamy and Cullen Landis in the featured roles. John Griffith Wray directed the production.

One of the features of the picture is said to be the work of a trained elephant, "Oscar," which plays a prominent role in the dramatic action of the story, which is built up around circus life. Noah Beery, Lincoln Stedman and Viola Vale are also cast in prominent roles.

Harold Lloyd Wins Popularity Contest

Harold Lloyd, first; Rodolph Valentino, second; Douglas Fairbanks, third. That is the result of completed returns in the film fan voting contest conducted by the Milwaukee Sentinel to determine who is the favorite screen star. In its summary of the contest the Sentinel report says:

"Harold Lloyd, he of the large glasses and the perpetual smile, came from behind with a rush, and won by a good margin over all the other good looking actor men. Rodolph Valentino, the great sheik, who had been hanging onto the lead like a bulldog to a tramp, could not stand Harold's pace in the last days, and fell to second place. Douglas Fairbanks held onto third place grimly."

A list of fifty-seven male stars received votes; women stars, forty-four, with Priscilla Dean winning, Norma Talmadge, second, and Katherine MacDonald, third.

Burr Loans Johnny Hines to Warner Brothers

By a special arrangement with C. C. Burr, president of the Mastodon Films, Inc., Johnny Hines will make one picture for Warner Brothers. This is to be filmed during the period between the making of the Hines melocomedy features for the Mr. Burr.

"Little Johnny Jones" is to be the feature in which Hines will star and which is to be made by the Warner Brothers.

Hines has just completed his latest melocomedy feature "Luck" and was contemplating a rest of several weeks before starting work on his next feature for Mastodon. Within two weeks Hines will pack up and leave for the Warner Brothers' Coast studios.

Three Cosmopolitan Films on B'way Easter Week

THE COSMOPOLITAN CORPORATION will be well represented on Broadway East Week. Easter Sunday, April 1, will mark the opening of three screen productions made under the Cosmopolitan banner in leading houses along the Rialto.

The three Cosmopolitan productions which will make their Broadway bow on Easter Sunday are: "Enemies of Women," which will be presented as a super special for an indefinite run at the Central theatre; "The Go Getter," which will have its premiere at the Rialto, and "The Nth Commandment," which will be presented at the Rivoli theatre.

The showing of "Enemies of Women" at the Central on Eastern Sunday will be the nature of a special invitation presentation. The world's premier for the public will be staged on Monday, April 2. The interior of the house is to be redecorated on a lavish scale by Joseph Urban for the engagement of the picture.

Ziegfeld Beauty Signs Long Burr Contract

Kathlyn Martyn, one of the acknowledged beauties of the "Ziegfeld Follies," has been signed to a long-term contract by C. C. Burr. Miss Martyn was given a thorough try-out recently in two of the All-Star Comedies, produced by Mr. Burr for the W. W. Hodkinson company, and proved herself such a capable screen actress that she was immediately signed and will continue with Mr. Burr's organization.

With the news of the signing of Miss Martyn comes word that Mr. Burr is now forming a permanent stock company. Miss Martyn, Charlie Murray, Raymond McKee and little Russell Griffin will form the nucleus of this Company and, when Mr. Burr returns from the South where he is gaining strength after a severe illness, several other names of all-star calibre will be added to the list of players. Headquarters will be at the Glendale, Long Island studios of Mastodon Films, Inc.

This stock company is being organized to produce at least six feature pictures for release on the independent market during the coming season. Each of these films will be adaptions of well known novels.

F.B.O. Home-Office Stages Birthday Party

Employees of the home office of the Film Booking Offices of America celebrated the first birthday of their company on March 17, when they adjourned en masse to the Leslie Rooms on Eighty-third street and Broadway for a dance that lasted till the wee small hours. More than 150 attended, and, as Harry Berman remarked, the crowded entrance reminded one of the box office of a theatre showing "The Third Alarm."

Nat G. Rothstein is president of the F. B. O. club and Miss Betty Bennett secretary.

Paul Panzer Is Engaged for "Snowblind" Role

Paul Panzer has been engaged by Cosmopolitan for an important role in a picturization of Arthur Stringer's story, "Snowblind," which is now in production under the direction of E. H. Griffith. Panzer returns to the screen in "Enemies of Women" after a long absence.

A group of scenes from "Crashin' Through," the most recent F. B. O. photoplay starring Harry Carey.

Five Universal Features for April

Release Schedule Also Includes Adaptation of Jack London's "Abysmal Brute"

UNIVERSAL announces the release of five five-reel features during the month of April. These will be addition to the April Jewel release, which is scheduled as "The Abysmal Brute," a film drama of the prize ring, adapted from Jack London's famous novel. "The Abysmal Brute" is a Hobart Henley production and has Reginald Denny, star of "The Leather Pushers," as star, supported by Mabel Julienne Scott and a strong cast.

The first release will be "Nobody's Bride," starring Herbert Rawlinson, directed by Herbert Blache. This is Blache's first picture under his recent Universal engagement. It is adapted from a magazine story by Evelyn Campbell. Alice Lake is Rawlinson's chief support in this picture. Edna Murphy also plays a prominent supporting role. Others in the cast are Harry Van Meter, Frank Brownlee, Lillian Langdon, Sidney Bracy and Robert Dudley. The story was adapted for the screen by Albert Kenyon, a brother of Charles Kenyon. "Nobody's Bride" will be released April 2nd.

"Trimmed in Scarlet" will be Universal's second April release. It is a screen version of William Hurlbut's popular play, in which Maxine Elliott starred so successfully several seasons ago. Jack Conway directed it. E. T. Lowe, Jr., adapted the play for the screen.

The principal role is taken by Kathlyn Williams. Lucille Ricksen plays the leading romantic role. Opposite her is Robert Agnew, a popular juvenile, and Roy Stewart. David Torrance also takes an important role. Others in the cast are Gerrard Alexander (Mrs. Bertram Grassby), Phillip Smalley, Philo McCullogh, Bert Sproute, Eva Sothern, Grace Carlyle and Raymond Hatten.

The mid-April release will be a new Gladys Walton picture, "The Town Scandal," adapted from Frederick Arnold Kummer's Cosmopolitan story.

King Baggot directed "The Town Scandal."

The fourth April release will be on April 23rd and will be "Dead Game," a new Hoot Gibson comedy drama.

It is from an original story written especially for Gibson for Edward Sedgwick, who also directed it.

Laura LePlante has her first leading woman role in a five-reel feature in this picture. Others in the cast are Robert McKim, Harry Carter, William Welsh, Tony West and William Steele.

The final April release will be "What Wives Want," from the original story by Edward T. Lowe, Jr., and Perry N. Vekroff. In the cast are Ethel Grey Terry, Vernon Steele, Ramsey Wallace, Niles Welsh, Margaret Landis, Lila Leslie and Harry A. Barrows.

James Kirkwood Signed by Goldwyn for Long Term

James Kirkwood is returning to motion pictures after another big success on the speaking stage in Channing Pollock's "The Fool," in which he has been appearing on Broadway since last October. He has just signed a long-term contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to appear in featured roles in big productions.

Kirkwood left for the Coast on Tuesday of this week, where he will play the lead in Mrs. Wallace Reid's anti-narcotic film, "The Living Dead," before beginning work under his Goldwyn contract.

Hays Welcomes Belasco to Industry

Extends Thanks to Warner Brothers for Achievement in New Affiliation

DAVID BELASCO, the theatrical producer, was officially extended the greetings of the entire industry by Will H. Hays, following his affiliation with the Warner Brothers in the production of a number of his notable stage successes, at a conference held last Wednesday at the Warner offices.

Considerable interest is attached to Mr. Belasco's arrangement with the Warner organization, in that the theatrical producer for the first time in his career has become personally identified with the industry and will undertake the general supervision on the filming of his stage plays.

In extending the industry's welcome to Mr. Belasco, Mr. Hays said: "It is indeed a great source of gratification to have Mr. Belasco identified with our wonderful industry. And I am sure that every member of the industry is proud to have him with us. In this respect thanks are due to the Warner Brothers for their splendid achievement in having Mr. Belasco join our great medium for the enlightenment and entertainment of humanity."

Mr. Belasco, when asked about his new affiliation, said: "The motion picture is a new art, and I realize that I shall have to start at the bottom to fully comprehend its marvelous possibilities. Its scope is unbounded, and it holds a great fascination and interest for me. I look forward with keen anticipation to my visit to the Warner Brothers' studio."

According to the announced partnership arrangement between Mr. Belasco and the Warner Brothers, the latter will film "The Gold Diggers," "Daddies," "Deburau," and "Tiger Rose," which will star Lenore Ulric, while the former will personally supervise the making of the productions.

Mr. Belasco has chosen Sidney Franklin to direct Miss Ulric in "Tiger Rose,' and Edmund Goulding was chosen to write the continuity. Preparations for the filming of this picture are reported under way at the Warner studios. Miss Ulric will leave for the coast the latter part of May, following the consummation of a two-year run on Broadway, in the Belasco stage play, "Kiki." With the completion of the picture she will return East to resume her interrupted performance of the play.

From Harry M. Warner came the statement that Mr. Belasco will leave for the west coast on or about June 1.

At the conference were present, in addition to Messrs. Belasco and Hays and Miss Ulric, Hope Hampton, Jules Brulator, B. F. Roeder, general manager for Mr. Belasco, Courtland Smith and members of the trade press.

Will Hays and David Belasco, who met at Warner Brothers' in connection with Mr. Belasco's entry into the motion picture field.

Sixty Features Is First National Schedule

It was learned yesterday that First National will release approximately sixty pictures next season. This information came from a First National executive, who stated that contracts already negotiated assured that number of feature pictures. It is possible that there will be more.

Following First National's annual meeting in April, it is expected that an announcement giving next season's plans in detail will be issued.

The new contract with Thomas H. Ince assures from six to eight pictures from that producer. Then there will be the Joseph M. Schenck productions, starring Norma and Constance Talmadge; the Inspiration pictures, starring Richard Barthelmess; the John Stahl productions, and the product of First National units, including those headed by Richard Walton Tully, James Young, Maurice Tourneur, Edwin Carewe and other prominent producers with whom negotiations are now under way.

Action scenes from Harold Lloyd's latest, "Safety Last," for Pathe release.

Branham Directs Canadian Famous Houses

Charles G. Branham of Toronto, Ontario, is director of theatres for the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, Toronto, having general supervision over the many theatres of this company in cities from Montreal to Vancouver.

This post was held until recently by H. M. Thomas, who has returned to Des Moines, Iowa, where he has become identified with the A. H. Blank Theatre Enterprises once more. Mr. Branham has been with the Canadian corporation for four or five years, originally having charge of publicity and picture exploitation.

Metro Adds to Foreign Distribution Arrangements

An important contract closed this week provides for the distribution of Metro's product in New Zealand and Australia through Famous Players' branch in those territories.

The occasion is taken by Metro to review its foreign expansion under the supervision of Arthur Loew. A little more than a year ago Marcus Loew arranged with Sir William Jury, in London, for the disposition of the Metro product in Great Britain. The Palace theatre in London was leased at the same time, and since then Metro's bigger productions have received their initial British presentations at this house. Distribution arrangements have also been closed during the past year for the Metro productions in the Argentine, Porto Rico, San Domingo, Brazil and Japan.

Ernest C. Warde Signed to Direct by F.B.O.

The Film Booking Offices of America has just placed under contract as a director Ernest C. Warde, a son of the late Frederick Warde, and long identified with affairs of the theatre and motion pictures.

His early experience in production was with the "Thanhouser" company in New York, and as a producer he has to his credit such productions as "Silas Marner," "The Man Without a Country" and "The Vicar of Wakefield." Also he wielded the megaphone for "The Bells" with Frank Keenan, "The Midnight Stage," "Gates of Brass" and "The World Aflame."

Elaine Hammerstein Signs Long Term Contract

IMMEDIATELY after the arrival of M. H. Hoffman in Los Angeles, advice was received at the New York headquarters of the Truart Film Corporation, that Elaine Hammerstein had been signed to a long term contract.

The arrangements call for four big pictures a year, which are to be directed and supervised by Edward Dillon, who is now completing "Broadway Gold," in which Miss Hammerstein appears, together with Elliot Dexter and Kathlyn Williams.

The Hammerstein-Dillon productions will be distributed under Mr. Hoffman's direction by the Truart Film Corporation, as independent state-rights offerings.

The Renown Exchanges will release the Elaine Hammerstein pictures in the New York, Buffalo, Northern New Jersey and Chicago territories, while the arrangements are now pending with the leading independent exchanges throughout the country whereby a full one hundred per cent distribution will be assured the new Hammerstein-Dillon series.

Famous Sends "Nanook" Producer to South Seas

To do for the natives of the South Seas what he did for the Eskimo in his film, "Nanook of the North," Robert J. Flaherty, F.R.G.S., will sail next month at the head of an expedition to Savaii, westernmost of the Samoan group of islands in the Southern Pacific, according to an announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, under whose auspices the expedition is being undertaken.

Mr. Flaherty, whose picture, "Nanook of the North," was hailed last year as one of the most unusual films ever made, will leave New York April 12 and will sail from San Francisco on the steamship Sonoma April 24. He will remain in the South Seas for at least a year.

"This is the most ambitious project of its kind ever attempted in motion pictures," said Mr. Lasky, in making the announcement. "Mr. Flaherty will take with him a complete technical equipment for the making of motion pictures, so that when he returns from Savaii next year his picture will be practically finished.

"The Paramount-Flaherty expedition to the South Seas is the first in a series of expeditions which we plan to have him make for us. Although these pictures cannot help being educational, our primary purpose is entertainment, and we expect that the Flaherty South Sea picture will combine education with entertainment, just as was done in 'Nanook of the North.'"

F.B.O. Signs Tom Wilson for Long Term

Tom Wilson has been signed by Film Booking Offices of America under a long-term contract. Wilson has won notice on both stage and screen as a character actor. He will appear in "The Remittance Woman" with Ethel Clayton, awaiting release by F. B. O., and he also has an important part in the forthcoming F. B. O. attraction, "Now You See It."

Inspiration Pictures present Richard Barthelmess with Dorothy Gish in "The Bright Shawl," a First National attraction.

Book for the Women, Says Saxe

Contends That Feminine Patronage Makes or Breaks Picture Theatres

THE hand that rocks the cradle tilts the box office, according to Thomas Saxe of Milwaukee, Secretary-Treasurer of the Saxe Amusement Enterprises and First National franchise holder for Wisconsin. The Milwaukee theatre owner, who is spending two weeks in New York as a member of First National's Rotating Committee, is emphatic in his statement that as far as the week in and week out attendance is concerned, feminine patronage either makes or breaks a motion picture house today, and that the really successful picture owner is going to book his attractions from the point of view of the women among his fans.

Mere man never before received such a resounding slap as he does from Mr. Saxe, who says:

"It is the women and young girls who are supporting the theatres today. Get them in and your success is assured. The men follow as a matter of course. Consequently, the thing for the vigilant theatre owner to do, as we are finding it in our experience, is to look at the booking of pictures from a woman's point of view.

"We have been noting quite a few points of interest in our theatres this last year. Business is considerably better than a year ago. So are the pictures. Patrons are commencing to weary of the costume pictures that had a vogue for a while. They want love stories, with heart interest. Above everything else they want a strong society drama with formal clothes and elaborate functions.

"The big productions are the ones that are getting the business. By that I do not necessarily mean the long ones. Six reels is long enough for any picture. Drawn beyond that length, it is too long for the fans to follow, and it doesn't give the small town theatre the chance for a proper turnover. Six reels meet all requirements, including the possibility of making a really big production; and a picture limited to that length gives a manager a chance to round out his program with a news reel, scenic and comedy and to make a really satisfactory and varied evening's entertainment.

"An attractive prologue and ingenious presentation may help; but there has been a tendency to exaggerate their value. After all, it is the feature that counts. That is what the majority of patrons have come to see, and it will determine in their minds whether or not the afternoon or evening has been satisfactory entertainment."

Mr. Saxe, who is rounding out his eighteenth year in the business, is optimistic over future conditions. To demonstrate this belief he mentioned casually that despite the fact that there are five first run houses in Milwaukee now, the Saxe Amusement Enterprises would open the finest and largest one of all on January 1. This will be the Wisconsin, a 3,300 house, in a six-story building at the corner of Grand and Sixth streets, Milwaukee.

Schertzinger Will Direct "The Man Next Door"

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, upon his return to New York City last week from Hollywood announced that he had engaged Victor L. Schertzinger to direct the forthcoming special, "The Man Next Door," by Emerson Hough, the author of "The Covered Wagon."

"Jacqueline" Is Given Premiere

Pine Tree-Arrow Special Has First Showing at U. S. Theatre, Paterson

THE U. S. theatre, Paterson, N. J., was the scene of the world premiere of "Jacqueline; Or, Blazing Barriers," on Monday night, March 19, when the Arrow Film Corporation launched the Pine Tree Special on its career with an elaborate showing.

Those who know Paterson will remember that at the foot of Main Street is a high elevation known as Garret Mountain, and it was decided to reproduce a forest fire on this mountain. Permission was secured and an official permit issued. The Pain Fireworks Company was engaged to handle this. In spite of the fact that a tremendously high wind was blowing, with frequent squalls of snow, the result was all that could be desired. Well advertised and given plenty of publicity, the street in front of the U. S. theatre was jammed.

After the showing of the picture, which was attended by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation; W. Ray Johnston, vice-president; H. H. Thomas, manager of Arrow exchanges; Governor Carl E. Milliken, of Pine Tree Pictures; Director Dell Henderson, Sheldon Lewis, Lew Cody, Russell Griffin of the "Jacqueline" company (who made personal appearances), Ray Gallagher and Larry Moen of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Larry Urbach of the Motion Picture Journal, George Blaisdell of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, Roger Ferri of the Moving Picture World, Paul Swift of the A. B. C. Corporation, Mayer Goldberg of the Mayer & Schneider Circuit, Maurice Krause, J. W. Van Zile, J. S. Jossey of Progress Pictures, Cleveland; H. Hirsch of Lightning Photoplays, Boston; John Lowell, Mrs. L. Case Russell, Miss Evangeline Russell, the editors and a number of special writers and cartoonists from the Paterson newspapers, and many others, a buffet supper was given at the U. S. Hotel by the Arrow Film Corporation and a most enjoyable time was had.

Earlier in the day Governor Milliken was officially welcomed to the city.

Kathleen Key Is Signed by Goldwyn to Play Leads

Kathleen Key has been engaged under a long-term contract by Goldwyn to play feminine leads. Her engagement makes her a permanent member of the Goldwyn stock company.

Miss Key first played "atmosphere" for Ince three years ago. Later she appeared opposite Snowy Baker in a series of Australian pictures, and more recently was leading woman for Tom Mix. Miss Key is reputed to be a lineal descendant of the author of "The Star Spangled Banner," Francis Scott Key.

Mahlon Hamilton Cast for Leads by Paramount

Mahlon Hamilton has been engaged to play opposite Agnes Ayres in "The Heart Raider," an adaptation of Harry Durant's play, "Arms and the Girl," which will be started at a Florida location this week under the direction of Wesley Ruggles. Following that picture he will play opposite Bebe Daniels in "Bluff," also under Ruggles's direction.

Scenes from the Larry Semon comedy for Vitagraph, "The Midnight Cabaret."

C. B. C. Has Ambitious Plans for Future

Some ambitious plans for the coming year are announced by C. B. C. Sales Corporation. Eighteen productions will be released by C. B. C., according to the announcement by Jack Cohn and Joe Brandt. Each feature will be filmed with all-star casts.

C. B. C. will release six of these pictures under its own trademark. Six pictures will be produced by Belasco Productions, Inc. Six more will be issued bearing the brand Columbia Pictures.

"Temptation" and "Her Accidental Husband," two of the eighteen, have been completed and are now ready. Production on three others is about to be started. These are "Pal of Mine," "Forgive and Forget" and "The Lure of Broadway." The casts are now being assembled and the names of the stars featured in them as well as the directors intrusted with the task of transferring the stories to the screen will be announced shortly.

As evidence of the demand for big pictures on the part of state right buyers, Mr. Cohn stated that seventy-five per cent of the territorial rights available on both "Temptation" and "Her Accidental Husband" were sold before either of these productions were completed.

Cast Complete for "Daughters of the Rich"

B. P. Schulberg has completed the cast for Edgar Saltus' novel, "Daughters of the Rich," with the signing of Joseph Swickard and J. Gunnis Davis to be added to the other featured players—Gaston Glass, Ruth Clifford, Ethel Shannon, Marjorie Daw and Stuart Holmes.

Gasnier, who is directing the picture, has it well on toward completion. Prints will be in Lichtman exchanges by April 10th, ready for exhibition, it is expected.

United Signs Contract for Clune Studio

The latest development in the enlarged producing schedule under way at the United studios was evidenced during the week when M. C. Levee, president of the studio company, signed contracts whereby the W. H. Clune studio, across the street from United, becomes part of the Levee studio facilities.

Additional interest in the forthcoming activities at United is had from the fact that Louis B. Mayer and Sol Lesser, two of the leading independent producers, will come into the fold. Arrangements were closed whereby Mr. Mayer will move the Fred Niblo company over to the United lot within the next few days, for the production of "Captain Applejack."

Sol Lesser will start to move his producing organization from the Santa Monica studio over to United immediately and within the next few days will commence work on "The Meanest Man in Town," with Bert Lytell, Blanche Sweet and other notables.

Paramount Players Making Florida Scenes

Wesley Ruggles and a company of Paramount players headed by Agnes Ayres as star have gone to Florida to film the exterior scenes for "The Heart Raider," a love comedy-drama adapted by Jack Cunningham from Harry Durant's story, "Arms and the Girl." In the supporting cast are Mahlon Hamilton, Charles Ruggles, Marie Burke, Charles Riegel, William Nally, Marie Olivet, Frances Greenleaf and Pauline LeGros.

Scenes from "Public Opinion," Charles Chaplin's first venture as a director, in which Edna Purviance is starred; a United Artists release.

Independents Plan Big Activity

Seven Million Dollar Producing Schedule Arranged for United Studios

THAT the independent producers will soon stage a strong comeback in West Coast producing circles is indicated by the activities shortly to start at the United Studios, where contracts have been signed by M. C. Levee, President, involving the greatest producing activities at the plant since its inception.

A producing schedule to take care of the independents at this studio during the next twelve months involves a total production outlay of $7,000,000 and includes the activities of the foremost independent producers on the Pacific Coast.

To take care of this increased activity Mr. Levee has just completed plans for the erection of new buildings, enlargements and improvements said to call for the expenditure of $800,000. Ground has already been broken for new administration and technical buildings and the entire property will be laid out in new streets with concrete roads throughout.

In anticipation of the forthcoming activities at the studio Mr. Levee has sent Thomas Little, head of the property department, abroad to purchase $30,000 worth of props. Mr. Little will visit all parts of Europe in his quest for new properties to be used in future productions, and will remain abroad several months.

Associated First National Pictures and Joseph Schenck will play an important part in the increased producing activities at the United studios during the coming months. Mr. Schenck's "Ashes of Vengeance," starring Norma Talmadge, will, it is said, prove one of the most gigantic productions yet staged. Other big films to be started soon are Constance Talmadge in "Dulcy," Maurice Tourneur's "The Brass Bottle," Richard Watson Tully's "Trilby," Sam Rork and Arthur Jacobs' productions and other producers to be announced in the near future.

Plans for new equipment in this studio call for the largest electric power plant ever built in a motion picture studio. The erection of this plant will be in charge of Walter Strohm, electrical director for Mr. Levee.

The future producing activities at the United will be in charge of the following personnel: M. C. Levee, President; F. E. Pelton, general manager; Jack Okey, manager planning department; M. S. Epstein, manager service department; Thomas Little, manager property department; Walter Strohm, electrical engineer; Pete Smith, in charge of publicity; F. C. Washburn, purchasing agent, and E. Scrogan, in charge of materials.

In addition to his studio activities, Mr. Levee plans several producing companies of his own, the first of which is the Maurice Tourneur Company.

"Bell Boy 13" Due Soon at New York Strand

Thomas H. Ince's production, "Bellboy 13," starring Douglas MacLean, will be shown at the Strand theatre, New York, the week beginning March 25.

In the cast supporting Mr. MacLean are Margaret Loomis, John Steppling, Jean Walsh and Eugene Burr.

Paul Bern to Write Continuity for Stahl

Paul Bern has joined the John M. Stahl unit at the Louis B. Mayer studio to prepare the continuity for Stahl's next First National attraction and supply an original story for future production by the director.

Lever of Stoll Company Here

"Prodigal Son" and Other British Made Productions Ready for American Market

ENGLISH productions of magnitude will figure prominently in the industry in America if the ambitious program of the Stoll Film Company, Ltd., of London, is carried to a successful conclusion. Alfred Lever, general manager of the London concern, is in New York at present to conclude arrangements for the distribution of a number of screen classics already produced or in process of production.

Primarily Mr. Lever is here in the interest of the screen production of "The Prodigal Son," an adaptation from the widely known novel of Sir Hall Caine, prints of which he has with him. The production was directed by A. E. Colby, considered among the first rank of British directors. It is in reality two pictures in one, being both "The Prodigal Son" and "The Return of the Prodigal Son."

Mr. Lever is opposed to the general usage of the term super-special, but declares "The Prodigal Son" is the most pretentious production ever filmed by an English producing concern. In the cast are Stewart Rome, Victor Herbert, Flora Brettel, Edith Bishop, and Mrs. Haydn-Coffin.

In a letter A. E. Colby, the producer of the picture, Sir Hall Caine highly commended the entire production.

"The Prodigal Son" was produced in Iceland, England, France and Monte Carlo and was seven months in the making.

According to Mr. Lever, the Stoll Film Company, Ltd., is getting away from the program pictures, of which an average of fifteen a year have been produced in the past. In the future there are to be about ten productions made a year and they will be made from the very best material available.

Among other productions of the Stoll Company which will be available in America in the very near future, according to Mr. Lever, are "The Wandering Jew," "The Sign of Four," by Conan Doyle; "The Tower of London," by Harrison Ainsworth, and "The Guy Fawkes," an original scenario.

Product of the Stoll Company is by no means unknown in America, as they were the producers of "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" and "The Further Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" which met with splendid receptions by motion picture patrons in all parts of the country.

Coincidental with the announcement of the releasing of these Stoll features is the statement from the New York offices of the concern that Mr. Paul Seligman is retiring as manager in New York and will return to England in the near future. His retirement here is occasioned because of the condition of his health.

Inflammable Film Uses Up at Hearing

The use of inflammable film outside of theatres came in for considerable discussion at a hearing last week before the Connecticut Legislative Committee on Public Health and Safety. The relative hazards of nitrate cellulose and acetate cellulose film and the merits of 28 and 35 millimeter films were debated at length.

This was the result of the bill introduced by Representative Arthur J. Vinton, which provides that the acetate film may be used in the wider machines. The present law provides that only the narrow safety film may be used in any exhibition other than in theatres. Arguments for the bill were that country towns were limited to the narrow film and could get no modern dramas. Against the bill were arrayed those who feared for public safety as a result of fires caused by the general use of inflammable film.

Scenes from "Souls for Sale," the latest Rupert Hughes production for Goldwyn release.

Here are some of "Our Gang," who play in the Pathe series of two reelers, this one entitled "Giants vs. Yanks."

Gladys Brockwell Added to "Hunchback" Cast

Gladys Brockwell has been added to the cast supporting Lon Chaney in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the Super-Jewel being made from Victor Hugo's novel at Universal City.

Wallace Worsley, the director, aided by Perley Poore Shehan and E. T. Lowe, Jr., the adapters, as well as by Chaney, are taking extraordinary measures to assure that every character of the fifteenth century classic will be reproduced faithfully in the screen version of Hugo's book.

Forman to Start Work on "Broken Wing" Shortly

Tom Forman will begin production at once on his next Preferred Picture for B. P. Schulberg, "The Broken Wing," a film version of the play by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard, which played two seasons ago at the Forty-eighth street theatre. The cast includes Miriam Cooper, Kenneth Harlan, Walter Long, Betty Francisco, Evelyn Selbie, Edwin Brady, Ferdinand Munier and Richard Tucker.

Olga Printzlau has recently completed the adaptation.

Schertzinger on Location with Vitagraph Company

Victor Schertzinger, who is directing "The Man Next Door" for Vitagraph, is on "location" with his company at Victorville, Cal. This story by Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon," is laid on a ranch, Palo Verdi in the West, and Director Schertzinger has taken over 3,800 acres upon which are grazing 5,000 head of cattle.

The cast in "The Man Next Door" will have among its features players Alice Calhoun, James Morrison, Frank Sheridan, David Torrence, John Steppling, Adele Farrington, Mary Culver, Bruce Boteler and Harry Todd.

Mary Pickford Planning Her New Production

The plans of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, according to West Coast information, are reaching final form. They provide that the first Lubitsch directed Pickford subject will be the most expensive of her career and the castle sets being erected are larger and more expensive than those used in "Robin Hood" at the same studio. The locale is in Toledo, Spain, at the beginning of the Empire period, early in the nineteenth century. The cast includes George Walsh, Holbrook Blinn, Clare Eames, Mathilde Comont, George Periolat, Snitz Edwards, Charles Belcher, Bert Sprotte, Madame de Bodamar, and three children, Doreen Turner, Donald McAlpine and Philipe de Lacey. Mary Pickford appears as a street singer named Rosita, and becomes enmeshed in intrigue when the King falls in love with her.

New Lichtman Exchanges in Albany and Buffalo, N. Y.

George S. Jeffrey, special representative for the Al Lichtman Corp., has left for Canada after establishing two new Lichtman exchanges in Buffalo and Albany. James G. Fater, formerly of Famous Players-Lasky and Hodkinson, is the new manager of the Buffalo exchange.

Robert Harris, formerly of Pathe, is managing the Albany exchange.

Mr. Jeffrey will make a thorough investigation of the Canadian distributing situation and will report back to Mr. Lichtman on the latter's return from his European trip.

Extending B'way Run on "Down to Sea in Ships"

"Down to the Sea in Ships," which has been playing at the Cameo theatre, New York, for the past five weeks, will be held at this theatre for an additional three weeks. "Down to the Sea in Ships" was produced by Elmer Clifton and appears on the Hodkinson schedule. News of its extended engagement at the Broadway house is accompanied by the announcement of other engagements in different parts of the country, beginning April 1.

Hodkinson Schedules Two Releases for March 25

TWO productions are scheduled for release on the Hodkinson program for March 25th. Thev are "The Man from Glengarry" and "The Lion's Mouse." This makes four feature releases for the month of March.

"The Man from Glengarry" is a filmization of the novel by Ralph Connor dealing with the life of the lumberjacks on the upper Ottawa River. It was produced by Ernest Shipment and the Dominion Films, Inc., and made upon the exact location as called for by the book. The production was directed by Henry McRae with Warner Richmond, Anders Randolph, Marion Swayne, Pauline Garon, and E. L. Hernandez in the cast.

"The Lion's Mouse" is a mystery melodrama produced by the Hollandia Film Corporation, presented by the Producers Security Corporation and distributed by Hodkinson. This production was directed by Oscar Apfel and features Wyndham Standing and Marguerite Marsh in the cast.

Scenes from "Nobody's Bride," a Universal picture, starring Herbert Rawlinson.

"Main Street" Completed; Released Next Month

"MAIN STREET," the Warner Brothers' seventh and last classic of the screen to be produced for this season, has been completed at the West Coast studios.. It is expected that the picture will be released next month.

Bert Millhauser Signed by Universal to Direct

Bertram Millhauser has been engaged by Universal Pictures Corporation to direct forthcoming Universal chapter pictures. Mr. Millhauser is leaving for Universal City this week.

Millhauser has had an extensive career in the serial field. Some of the screen serials with which he has been associated include "The Fatal Ring," "The House of Hate," "The Lightning Raider" and "The Black Secret." For the past year he has been directing for George B. Seitz, Inc., "Plunder," starring Pearl White, being his latest work under the Seitz banner.

Cosmopolitan Signs Lytell to Year's Contract

Under the conditions of a year's contract signed by Bert Lytell with Cosmopolitan, the star will probably appear in four pictures during that period. The new contract will not interfere with arrangements previously made with Principal Pictures, according to Irving Lesser.

Support Named for Edward Horton in "The Crash"

The completed cast which will support Edward Horton in "The Crash" is announced by Vitagraph as follows:

Barbara Bedford, Zazu Pitts, Tom Ricketts, Carl Stockdale, Tom Murray, James Kelly and Stanley Taylor.

"Ragged Edge" to Be Completed by April 1st

Shooting of the final scenes of "The Ragged Edge," second of Distinctive's big features for 1923, will be finished at Miami, Fla., before April 1st. The cutting and titling will then be started immediately.

Alfred Lunt has the leading male role. Opposite him is Miss Mimi Palmeri.

Others in the cast are: Charles Fang, Wallace Erskine, Geo. MacQuarrie, Chas. Slatterly, Christian Frank, Grace Griswold, Alice May, Charles Kent, Percy Carr, Sydney Dean, Hattie Delaro and Marie L. Day.

"The Ragged Edge" has been adapted to the screen by Forrest Halsey from Harold MacGrath's novel of the same name. It is being directed by Harmon Weight. Harry Fischbeck is the cameraman.

Shirley Mason Starts on New Production

Shirley Mason, whose latest released picture was "Pawn Ticket 210," has begun work on a new production at the William Fox West Coast studios, "Balance Due," under the direction of Henry Otto. Supporting Miss Mason are Albert Roscoe, leading man; Richard Tucker, heavy; Joseph Girard, Edward Martindale and Fred Kelcey.

Gus Muller Special Representative for Warners

Gus Miller, well-known exchange manager, has been engaged by the Warner Brothers as special representative, and left last week on a trip which will cover the entire country. He has planned to visit the leading theatres and the exchanges handling the Warner product.

Fox Announces Release of Four Features in April

FOUR feature-length productions and two two-reel comedies comprise the release program scheduled for April by Fox Film Corporation.

John Gilbert will have as his April vehicle the George F. Worts story, "The Madness of Youth," directed by Jerome Storm. The picture, which will be ready for release on the 8th, finds Gilbert supported by Billie Dove, Wilton Taylor, George K. Arthur, Ruth Boyd, Julianne Johnston, Donald Hatswell and Luke Lucas. The scenario is by Joseph Franklin Poland.

Charles Jones will be seen in "Snowdrift" on the 22nd of the new month. It is a story by the novelist, James B. Hendryx, and deals with the romance and hazards of the gold fields of the Yukon. Scott Dunlap directed and Jack Strumwasser adapted the story for the screen.

"Bucking the Barrier," produced under the working title of "Klondike Kit," is the Dustin Farnum offering and is scheduled for April 1. Colin Campbell directed. George Goodchild wrote the story and Jack Strumwasser the scenario.

A Shirley Mason feature, the release title for which has not yet been selected will be placed on the distribution shelf April 15. The story is by George Scarborough and the adaptation by Josephine Quirk and Jules Furthman. Albert Roscoe appears opposite Miss Mason.

The two Sunshine Comedies are "The Mummy," April 1, and "The Three-Gun Man" April 29.

WHAT SHOWMEN THINK OF CURRENT RELEASES

Exhibitors' Box-Office Reports

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

FAMOUS PLAYERS

When Knighthood Was in Flower—
Finished nearly two weeks' run with satisfactory average, though other attractions offered keen competition. Some thought it marvelous, others complained that there was too much happened indoors. (Middle West.)

Racing Hearts—
Well liked and a good drawer. A happy combination of Agnes Ayres and Theodore Roberts. (East.)

Just a fair picture. Only went over to fair business. (East.)

Nobody's Money—
Well liked and generously patronized. Women especially like Jack Holt. (East.)

Not terribly strong as a comedy, but well acted and well liked, here. (East.)

Dark Secrets—
Business was fair considering most severe storm of the year. Those who saw the picture liked it real well. (Middle West.)

The White Flower—
Rather far fetched, but pleasing. Didn't hear any knocks. Neither did we hear any extravagant praise. Fair business for the week. (Middle West.)

This one went over good, playing to large attendance. (Middle West.)

Shows Betty Compson at her best. The Hawaiian shots are hard to beat. Drew splendidly. (Middle West.)

My American Wife—
Gloria Swanson is good in this one and it is a good business getter. (Middle West.)

Mr. Billings Spends His Dime—
Clever, clean comedy drama which Hiers puts over in good shape. Pleased our patrons and did good business. (Middle West.)

Went over in fine shape. (West.)

Bella Donna—
Attendance, big; entertainment value, fair. (West.)

Making a Man—
Jack Holt popular here. Did well with it. (West.)

Adam and Eva—
Patrons thought Marion Davies better than in old pictures, but not up to her standard set by "When Knighthood Was in Flower." Only do fair with her pictures, anyway. (West.)

Kick In—
Good picture of its kind; business average. (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Bell Boy 13—
Rattling comedy, which played to big business. (Middle West.)

Lorna Doone—

Mighty Lak' a Rose—
Wonderful audience picture. It pulls at the heart strings and everyone feels better for having seen it. Did splendidly. (Middle West.)

The Shriek of Araby—
This one is well named. Brings shrieks of laughter. Business good. (Middle West.)

What a Wife Learned—
Interesting, up-to-date and well presented. People liked the theme, the cast and the entire production. Good week's business. (Middle West.)

TODAY AND TONIGHT "The Beautiful and Damned"
California THEATRE

Effective five-column ad for "Lost and Found on a South Sea Island" used for the run at the California theatre, Los Angeles

The Pilgrim—
Opening on Saturday for eight day run, the report was lockouts all during the first day and it looks like it is going to pull strong. (Middle West.)

Did not set the world on fire. Not liked as well as "The Kid." (East.)

Charles Chaplin continued to amuse his followers, according to the very good business his latest picture brought; grown-ups as well as kiddies liked this picture very much.

Fairly good picture. Business good, considering weather.

White Shoulders—
Not very good picture. Business bad.

Smudge—
A good drawing card. Lively attendance all week. (Middle West.)

The Woman Conquers—
Had otherwise strong bill and did good week, so do not know whether the picture or the added attractions were responsible. Consider the picture worth while. (West.)

UNIVERSAL

Driven—
Not a big card. Too sordid and lacks humor. (East.)

Not what we hoped for. Patrons disappointed, likewise. (West.)

Cannot recommend this picture as it did not draw for me. (West.)

The Flame of Life—
One of the best pictures that we have had this year. Great audience film. Excellent business. (East.)

The Ghost Patrol—
Not liked and did not draw well for us. (West.)

Single Handed—
Opened to an unusually big Sunday and kept up the standard all week. Gibson pictures go well at our house, and each one goes better than the one before. (Middle West.)

The Flirt—
Best attraction of the season. Went wonderfully in its second week. (Middle West.)

A good all-round attraction which ought to go well in any house. (West.)

GOLDWYN

The Christian—
Finely done picturization of famous novel, but failed to pull. Did not appeal to general public. Business not up to usual standard. (Middle West.)

Gimme—
A mediocre picture, and business the same.

The Strangers' Banquet—
Disappointing, after advance reports, both as a picture and in the amount of business, which was poor. (East.)

METRO

Jazzmania—
Mae Murray always draws well here. This one did a good week's business, although the picture was not up to standard. (Middle West.)

Great box office value. Mae Murray better in this than in preceding pictures. Holding it over the second week. (Middle West.)

Well liked and made a good hit with big houses. (East.)

Where the Pavement Ends—
A really beautiful film, both in acting, story and photography. Went big. Excellent business. (East.)

The Famous Mrs. Fair—
Excellent picture. Drew well. (Middle West.)

All the Brothers Were Valiant—
A corking sea story, with real interest. Very good business. (East.)

Drew well and made a big hit. (East.)

Quincy Adams Sawyer—
Picture drew well and pleased the audience. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

A Doll's House—
Those who liked it couldn't see why anyone else didn't, but most of them thought Nazimova was crazy and that was all there was to it. On for a half-week run, but taken off. (Middle West.)

One Exciting Night—
Griffith certainly had the right idea. People do like this. More excitement than in "The Bat," though Griffith does make his people jump around idiotically. Ought to take anywhere. (Middle West.)

Picture that brought very good business. People liked it because it was something new. (Middle West.)

The Girl I Loved—
Not much of a picture, either artistically or dramatically. It just managed to pull through the week. (Middle West.)

Fairly good picture; average box office value. (Middle West.)

FOX

Brass Commandments—
William Farnum back in his old role with plenty of pep. Liked and well patronized. (East.)

Who Are My Parents?—
Picture not suited to the house where shown. Business bad. (East.)

Catch My Smoke—
One of the best Mix pictures and a good crowd drawer. (East.)

VITAGRAPH

The Ninety and Nine—
Out and out melodrama, good of its kind. Well suited to house where shown and did good business. (East.)

F. B. O.

Canyon of the Fools—
A very good picture. Good receipts. (Middle West.)

WARNER BROTHERS

The Little Church Around the Corner—
One of those pictures in which everyone in the cast does something fine. The women liked this very much. Not a picture so strong in action, but with a philosophy that seemed to make a hit. Satisfactory business. (Middle West.)

The Beautiful and Damned—
Not a howling success. (East.)

AMERICAN RELEASING

The Sign of the Rose—
Nothing like it on the screen. Packed 'em in. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

School Days
Good; youngsters seem to take well, and comedies also seem in favor. Did pleasant business for more than half week after being called in to finish out for a weak sister. (Middle West.)

Fabiola—
Nothing out of the ordinary. Good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

A Darling of the Rich—
Capacity business. (East.)

The Wrong Woman—
Will fit into any program. Patrons liked it and cannot complain of receipts. (Middle West.)

The World's a Stage—
Against easy competition, did not hold up for us. (West.)

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 725 S. WABASH AVE.

Around the Trade

BLAIR COAN has returned from Los Angeles and "The Little Girl Next Door," the first picture of any pretensions to be filmed in Chicago in several years and produced by Blair Coan Productions, Inc., is being given its first exhibitor's showings in Chicago, with the probability that it will have its public premiere in a loop theatre in April. The production was filmed entirely in Chicago at the old Essanay studios, but the cutting and other mechanical touches were completed in Los Angeles a few days ago. At its first private showing at the Hotel Ambassador, Los Angeles, the seven-reeler was afforded very favorable comment in the newspapers. Pauline Starke enacts the title role in a drama that depends much on a strong element of mystery to carry it to an unusual denouement. The cast also includes Carmel Myers, Mitchell Lewis, James Morrison, Ed Kennedy and others.

Ascher Brothers have taken over the Vista theatre, a twelve hundred seat house, and will operate it as part of their circuit. They have, at the same time, let go of their Kenwood theatre, which will be taken over by Leo Salkin on May 1st.

Lubliner & Trinz have closed a ten year lease for the Lakeside thetre, at 4730 Sheridan road, including the entire building containing four stores and second floor offices. The new lease starts on May 1st, 1924, the present one, which is also held by Lubliner & Trinz, expiring on April 30th, 1924.

Glen Reynolds, of De Kalb, has been appointed chairman of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners' national convention committee and will co-operate with the national organization in all matters pertaining to the forthcoming Chicago gathering. The various sub-committees will be appointed this week and will start work lining up entertainment and other features for the convention.

Harold Lloyd in "Dr. Jack" is still running merrily along at the Orpheum, where it is in its fourth week of big business and, according to General Representative Ralph Kettering, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, it has broken all past records for attendance at his firm's State street playhouse.

"The Christian" did a big business in its week's run at the Blackstone, South Bend, despite the bad weather. It opened in a raging blizzard and did more than eighteen hundred dollars gross on Sunday, which was hardly expected, considering this handicap. Publicity Director Nealand, of Goldwyn's Distributing Corporation Chicago office, co-operated with Manager Ezra Rhodes in the exploitation and advertising campaign, features of which were the beaver board flags which were attached to the trolley company's span wires on the main streets, and the bargain day on Friday, for which coupons were run in two daily papers, which said: "Bring this coupon and one dollar and your entire family can see the winner picture, 'The Christian.'"

The appearance of Miss Nora Bayes at Jones, Linick & Schaefer's new McVicker's this week marks a new development in the policy of this theatre and it is understood that a number of other internationally famous stars of the speaking and opera stages will follow her at McVicker's theatre.

Roderick Ross is back in the city after a winter spent in Cuba, where he is interested in a large dairy corporation. Mr. Ross may get into the film business actively and is considering a film project which may take him to New York.

The Paris theatre at Decatur is scheduled to reopen immediately, following a shut-down of about three months.

W. T. Pierce, of the Peerless theatre, Kewanee, is making an extended business and pleasure trip throughout the Central West and expects to be away from his headquarters for several days.

Charles Lamb, of Rockford, one of the best known exhibitors in the state, was in the city this week on a booking trip, and reports business good, although the blizzard of the past week put a crimp in it for the time being.

Louis Murphy, of Spring Valley, has broken ground for a five hundred seat house to replace the theatre which was destroyed by fire some time ago.

Charles E. Morton, owner of the Family theatre at Mount Carroll, took over the Grand at Galena, Ill., this week and will, hereafter, operate both houses.

H. A. Spanuth has taken over the thousand seat Peerless theatre, at 3955 Grand boulevard, from Ascher Brothers, and the house opened up under its new management on March 17th. Ascher Brothers had operated the Peerless for the past five years.

Chicago's income tax payments of this month exceeded those of a year ago by a large margin. It is based on the sworn schedules of increased incomes and is incontrovertible proof of returning prosperity, which none can question. The record is one that is of vital interest to Chicago motion picture men,

Illinois M.P.T.O. to Hold Convention at Hotel Sherman, Chicago, April 18, 19

THE State Convention of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners will be held at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, April 18th-19th, and Messrs. Siegel, Silha and Dernbach have been appointed on the convention and entertainment committee which will have charge of this event.

The election of officers for the ensuing year and of delegates to the National Convention, which is of unusual interest to the Illinois organization, as it will be held in Chicago during May, will be important events of the state meeting.

The convention and entertainment committee already are making arrangements for a big get-together banquet on the first night of the State Convention, April 18th, in which all branches of the industry will participate and to which will be invited, a number of leaders in political, business and financial circles.

The banquet is intended not only to afford members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, exchange men and others opportunity to get acquainted, but is also planned to impress the political powers of Illinois with the size, strength and solidarity of the motion picture theatre interests of the state.

In addition to the addresses at the dinner, some fine entertainment is promised those who attend, by Messrs. Siegel, Silha and Dernbach.

Among the Exchanges

BOB SCHULER, special representative of Famous Players-Lasky accessory department, was called from Chicago to Bellevue, Ky., to attend the funeral of his father.

The first print of "Grumpy," the picture starring Theodore Roberts, arrived at Paramount's Chicago headquarters last week and those who witnessed its screening are sold on Theodore as a star. "Grumpy," while not an elaborate production in the sense of great sets or use of large crowds, is said to be as full of entertainment value as an egg is of meat.

Joe Campbell, of Goldwyn Pictures' sales organization, is back on the job this week after being confined to his home for several days with a touch of pneumonia. Manager Ben Reingold was absent from the office this week, suffering with a heavy cold, but expected to be cured up in quick order.

Manager of Distribution F. M. Brockell, of First National, was in the city last week conferring with District Manager Seery and Exchange Manager Bond on sales plans. Mr. Seery, immediately after the conference, left for Biloxi, Miss., where he will put in a fortnight playing golf and resting up.

Herman Stern, assistant general manager of Universal Film Company, already is in training for the opening of the golf season, and boys, you ought to see the little ball hit the bull's eye up in Leiter's winter practice course. Country Sales Manager I. L. Leserman is also exercising, but in a different way. He is out in the state lining up the live ones for Universal jewels.

Manager Martin has put Ray Nolan in charge of the Pathe complaint and adjustment bureau, and exhibitors can feel assured of a square deal from the efficient and genial Ray.

Louis Laemmle, of Universal, is making plans for a European trip for his family and during their absence Louis will be found on the bachelor's list for a few months.

E. J. Timponi is a new Metro salesman and has been assigned to the Wisconsin territory by Manager Rozelle. Mr. Timponi is a veteran showman and has had considerable experience managing moving picture road shows. He is a brother of Manager Timponi, of the Colonial theatre.

Assistant General Sales Manager T. J. Connors, of Metro, spent the last two weeks in Chicago territory, making the rounds with District Manager Shirley. He found conditions satisfactory and is optimistic, as all signs point to continual improvement in the picture business. Paul Mooney, representative of the L. B. Mayer Productions, releasing through Metro, and W. E. Bachmeyer, Metro district manager, with headquarters in Cincinnati, came into Chicago last week for a conference with Messrs. Connors and Shirley.

J. C. JESSEN'S PRODUCTION NOTES BY WIRE

Studio and Player Brevities

LITTLE STORIES ABOUT PEOPLE ON THE LOT

Here and There

The titles for "The Common Law" have been completed by Edward J. Montagne.

The Max Miller Productions of San Francisco are engaged in making a series of pictures co-starring Patricia Palmer and Ranger Bill Miller from stories by Stewart Woodhouse.

The H. & B. Film company has leased the Bronx studio on Glendale Boulevard and is making a series of eight five-reel subjects featuring Cliff Smith, who directs, also.

The first original story by Eugene Vogt, title "Scarred Hands," is now being completed. The cast is composed of Eileen Sedgwick, Myles McCarthy, Lew Meechan, Eugene McKay, Ben Corbett, and Ada Pope.

The Rockett Lincoln company, under the direction of Philip Rosen, has gone to the snow country in northern California to make exteriors of Lincoln's birthplace. The principal players in this sequence are James Gordon and James Clarke.

The Blair Coan production, "The Little Girl Next Door," from an original by Louis Weadock, with Carmel Myers, Pauline Starke, James Morrison, Mitchell Lewis and directed by W. S. Van Dyke has been completed and was shown at the Ambassador theatre on the sixteenth. Coan is leaving for the east with negative and print, and will later produce "Graustark," "The Blindness of Virtue" and three others. The picture "The Little Girl Next Door" is an exposé of spiritualism.

M. C. Levee has shipped the First National's complete negative and prints of "The Isle of Lost Ships," produced by Maurice Tourneur.

Director Maurice Tourneur has selected the following cast for "The Brass Bottle": Harry Myers, Ernest Torrance, Tully Marshall, Clarissa Selwyn, Ford Sterling, Aggie Herring, Charlotte Merriam and Ed Jobson.

Frank Borzage's production from the story "Terwilliger," will, in all probability be titled "Children of the Dust." Pauline Garon is beginning work in this picture this week.

Allen Holubar's subject "Slander the Woman" has been shipped. This is Holubar's last for First National under his present contract. Dorothy Philips is reported to have made a contract for appearance in other First National productions.

Gladys Brockwell has been engaged to play in "Penrod and Sam" from the Booth Tarkington story, to be directed by William Beaudine, a J. K. McDonald production.

Richard Walton Tully has signed Maurice Canonge and Max Constant, French actors, for important roles in "Trilby," to be directed by James Young.

Sid Franklyn is back from New York and is casting "Dulcy," starring Constance Talmadge.

Norma Talmadge's "Ashes of Vengeance" is promised to be the most elaborate of her career. It is a costume subject, laid in the period of King Charles the Ninth. Three hundred extras' costumes are being made and gigantic sets erected. Frank Lloyd is the director.

Tom Forman and company, now on the Rio Grande river, are engaged in making exteriors for "The Broken Wing" and using twenty-five hundred people.

In production is L. J. Gasnier's "Daughters of the Rich."

William Duncan and Edith Johnson are finishing their coming special at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood. The story is a drama in which the hero straightens out the political troubles of a typical western town.

Arthur H. Jacobs, one of the newest producers in the coast film colony, who is making the Frank Borzage productions, has just signed Lloyd Hughes to play one of the star parts in his initial picture which Mr. Borzage is starting to direct at the United studios.

Paul Bern has joined the John M. Stahl unit at the Louis B. Mayer studio to prepare the continuity for Mr. Stahl's next First National attraction, a society drama, and supply an original story for future production by the director.

John Griffith Wray, director for Thomas H. Ince, who has just returned from a month's visit in New York City, will begin work shortly on a new Ince production at the studios at Culver City.

Dustin Farnum has begun work at the William Fox Hollywood studios on a new picture, "The Grail," direction of Colin Campbell. The supporting cast includes, Peggy Shaw, lead; Alma Bennett, Leon Barry, Virginia Warwick, little Richard Headrick, Carl Stockdale, Frances Raymond and others.

William Russell is hard at work on a new picture temporarily called "Alias, the Night Wind." Joseph Franz, directing Bill's last Fox picture, "Good-Bye, Girls," showed him in a comedy-melodramatic role, whereas, in his new picture, according to reports, he is depicted in an entirely different character. Maude Wayne, a newcomer to the Fox lot, is his leading lady.

At Universal City

Edward Sedgwick is directing Hoot Gibson in "Blinky," with Esther Ralston, appearing opposite in the story by Gene Markey Gibson. He appears as "Mama's Boy," named Geoffrey Arbuthnot Islit.

The all-star production, originally titled "His Good Name," directed by Harry Pollard, with Rockliffe Fellowes, Buddy Messinger, Fritzi Brunette in the cast, has been given the title of "Your Good Name" and will be released in seven reels as a Jewel production.

Edward T. Lowe, Jr., has completed the continuity for "The Self-Made Wife," by Elizabeth Alexander, which will have an all-star cast and will probably be directed by Jack Conway.

Century Cut-Backs

Stern Brothers have engaged a vaudeville troupe named Gorham Follies to make a series of six two-reel specials under the direction of Archie Mayo.

Alf Goulding has completed "The Orphan," featuring Baby Peggy.

"Gasoline Love," featuring Fred Spencer has been completed.

Al Spencer has completed "Fare Enough" and is now directing Jack Cooper, Margery Marcelle and Jack Earle in "Sky High."

F. B. O. Production Notes

The Harry Carey company, under the direction of Val Paul, has gone to Truckee for exteriors in "The Miracle Baby" by Frank Pierce. The continuity was prepared by Isadore Bernstein and Jacques Jaccard. The cast includes Margaret Landis, Hedda Nova, Charles J. LaMoyne, Edward Hearne, Edmund Cobb, Alfred Allen, and Bert Sprotte. The picture required northwestern atmosphere and snow background.

With Paramount Units

Richard Dix has been selected as leading man for Betty Compson in "The Woman With Four Faces," under the direction of Herbert Brenon.

William DeMille is beginning work on "Only Thirty-Eight," adapted by Clara Baranger from the play.

Jacqueline Logan, Maurice Flynn and William Davidson have been engaged as principals for the George Melford production of "Salomy Jane," on which production starts next Monday.

In production are "The Cheat," Pola Negri; "Blue Beard's Eighth Wife," Gloria Swanson; "Fair Week," Walter Hiers, the last under direction of Robert Wagner.

Jerome Storm will begin production of "Children of Jazz," with a cast including Theodore Kosloff, Richard Cortez, Estelle Taylor and Robert Cain.

Charles Maigne is to direct "The Silent Partner," with Leatrice Joy and Owen Moore.

Around Metro Studios

Haryy Garson announces "Larubia," a Spanish play as the next starring vehicle for Clara Kimball Young. Thomas C. Heffron will direct. The continuity is being prepared by Frank Beresford and the supporting cast made up of Al Roscoe, Lewis Dayton and Louise Bates.

The complete cast for Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche," in addition to Alice Terry, Ramon Navarro and Lewis Stone, includes Lloyd Ingraham, Edith Allen, Lionel Belmore, Julia Smythe Gordon, Broadwitch Turner, Otto Mattieson, Edward Connelly, John George, George Seligman and Kala Pasha.

Harold Shaw has been engaged to direct Viola Dana in "Rouged Lips," by Rita Weiman. Production goes under way on April 9th.

The Hunt Stromberg-Bull Montana comedy, "One Wild Day," has been completed and Stromberg is beginning on "Hard Boiled," under the direction of Chuck Reisner. While at Truckee Stromberg completed "Snowed Under," starring Montana and in the cast will appear Chuch Reisner, Florence Gubert, Douglas Carter and Val Harris.

The Sennett-Ben Turpin comedy, titled "Pitfalls of a Big City," being made under the direction of Hampton Del Ruth includes the following players: James Finlayson, Priscilla Bonner, Dot Farley, Madeline Hurlock, and Dog Teddy.

Mason Litson, business manager for the Reginald Barker Company has gone to Wainright, Canada, to arrange for the use of locations in Canadian National Park and along the Athabse River for "The Law Bringers." Robert Anderson and Edward J. Brady have been added to Barker's cast.

On the Goldwyn Lot

The Marshall Neilan company has been sent to Mexico to make scenes for "The Eternal Three," under the direction of Frank Urson.

Maude George and Charles Clary have been added to the cast of "Six Days," to be directed by Charles Brabin.

Carmelita Geraghty, Rhea LaForte and Jean Haskell have been added to the cast of Neilan's "The Eternal Three."

Hughie Mack has been engaged by Von Stroheim to appear as "Heise, the Harness Maker."

Emmett Flynn's first production will be from F. Marion Crawford's story, "In the Palace of the King."

John Charles Thomas, the noted American singer, made his last appearance on the concert stage at Aeolian Hall, New York, last Sunday prior to entering the field of the silent drama. Mr. Thomas has cancelled the remainder of his concert tour and will not be heard in a song recital until he finishes his work on "Under the Red Robe," which the Cosmopoliton corporation is picturizing from the story by Stanley Weyman.

Phonograph window tie-up on "When Knighthood was in Flower" at Homer Ellison's Princess theatre, Denver

Brass Band Furnished in "Lorna Doone" Tie-Up

NEWARK, N. J.—Obtaining a whole brass band through a mercantile tie-up is a new high mark in link-ups, it would seem. The Branford theatre, in presenting "Lorna Doone," obtained the band from the National Biscuit Company, which has tied up with this picture throughout the country.

The "Lorna Doone" band, it was called, and it presented a handsome appearance in big blue coats, military hats and its swaggering bandmaster. The band paraded to the theatre and always brought with it a large number of followers.

A stage setting, reminiscent of the "Smilin' Through" layout, with a brick house and white portico, was used for the prologue. A soloist singer gave the act.

Exploitation Used in Mexico City for "Manslaughter"

Mexico City, Mex.—William C. Winship, manager of Paramount's Mexico City office, reports a successful exploitation stunt which was used for "Manslaughter" recently.

In cooperation with the management of the Teatro Olimpia, Paramount's first run house in Mexico City, a battered automobile was installed in the theatre lobby with appropriate signs calling attention to the showing of the picture. Shortly afterward, a squadron of police appeared on the run and demanded information as to how the wrecked car had got into the lobby. They were acting under the impression that efforts were being made to conceal a street accident and were not appeased until they were given insight into the new departure in picture exploitation.

But this was not all! Peons for miles around heard of the novelty and brought in their pesos in an effort to buy chances on what they supposed was a public raffle. They, too, were disappointed, but some remained for the show.

Newspapers Tie-Up on Serial of "Beautiful and Damned"

New York, N. Y.—Large numbers of newspapers throughout the country are running the fiction version of "The Beautiful and Damned," by F. Scott Fitzgerald, according to reports being received in New York.

Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, publishers of the novel, concede the book to be the greatest selling literary work that has been published by them in many years. Realizing the tremendous vogue of the picture, and in response to newspaper demands for the serialization rights, Scribner's immediately acceded to the requests. As a consequence, the New York Daily News and other leading newspapers in America are printing the story of "The Beautiful and Damned," giving exhibitors excellent tie-up opportunities.

Novelty Herald Made Up on "Brothers Under The Skin"

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Manager H. C. Farley of the Empire theatre, had 2,000 inexpensive novelty heralds made up on "Brothers Under the Skin" that created a great deal of interest. They were three by six inches in size, folded once. The front cover read: "Everyone Should Get Married—But—;" and on the inside was: "They Should See —'Brothers Under the Skin' First." The play dates followed.

Prince of Wales Angle Aids "Knighthood" Contest

LONDON, Ont.—T. W. Logan of the Allen theatre and George A. Smith, Paramount exploiteer, capitalized on the popularity of the Prince of Wales since his American tour, in exploiting "When Knighthood was in Flower." They staged a beauty contest for "When Knighthood was in Flower," they announced that the prize would be a cabinet photograph of the winner which would be posted forthright to H. R. H. the Prince of Wales. This was enough to bring out nearly 1,000 contestants.

Messrs. Logan and Smith also obtained plentiful publicity for "The Pride of Palomar," by staging a great indoor fair. The news was heralded through a special six-page supplement with "Pride of Palomar" publicity on every page, and a big three-deck box-car streamer on the front page. On each page was a two-column box, prominently displayed, reading: "Go to the Allen Theatre."

The local hydro company attended to the special lighting of the lobby and the booths taken by the merchants. Festival was opened by the mayor and a committee of representative citizens, with a regimental band furnishing the music.

Manager Ray Beall, of the Rex theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., prepared this lobby for "Tess of the Storm Country"

Manager Ross D. Rogers of the Mission theatre, Amarillo, Texas, arrang ed this lobby display on "Dr. Jack," giving strong prominence to the star

Combines "Robin Hood" and "Christian" in Stunt

Brooklyn, N. Y.—When Managing Director Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre had "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" and "The Christian" booked for consecutive showings, Publicity Director Lee S. Ferguson took advantage of the fact that both stories were in book form, and fortunately enough both were published by Grosset & Dunlap. This permitted a book tie-up for two weeks in succession, taking in some of the best windows in Brooklyn, a large space in Abraham & Straus' being included. The "Robin Hood" book is the special motion picture version from Douglas Fairbanks' picturization, and that of "The Christian" is the novel by Sir Hall Caine. In some instances both books were shown in the same display, thus accenting the two weeks' bookings at the Mark Strand more strongly. With the display were shown scenes from the pictures and announcement cards.

As "Robin Hood" was booked for only one week, the campaign centered in an effort to get the crowds into the house at the early performances, starting at 11:45 daily. On the closing day a special morning show was given for pupils of two of Brooklyn's high schools.

Tie-up with New Car Made on "Rich Men's Wives"

SUMTER, S. C.—When exploiting "Rich Men's Wives," Manager Oscar White of the Rex theatre decided to capitalize on the interest in a new automobile, the Star, that had been extensively advertised in Sumter recently. He borrowed a new Sedan from the local dealer and used this copy on the sides:

"Rich Men's Wives use this car but you don't have to be a rich man's wife to own one."

The car was driven about the streets two days in advance and then placed in the lobby for the engagement. Hanging over the car in the center of the lobby was a banner giving the title of the picture and the names of the featured players.

Jolly Junior Club Matinee is "Oliver Twist" Tie-Up

Buffalo, N. Y.—When Manager Vincent McFaul presented Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist" at Shea's Hippodrome he laid down an exploitation barrage that reached virtually every resident of Buffalo. One of the big features of the campaign was the party arranged with the Buffalo Courier for the entertainment of that paper's Jolly Junior Club, which was in the form of a special screening for the children in the Hippodrome Saturday morning at 8:45 o'clock, at which time some 3,000 youngsters were at the doors seeking admittance.

Gus Edwards was at hand to read a telegram from Jackie expressing his disappointment at not being able to attend. There was also a special prologue for the kids, in which a soloist sang "Oliver Twist," to a child dressed as Oliver. The party made a big hit and brought columns of publicity in the Courier.

Two ballyhoos were put on the street in the form of large books carried on men. The books were suitably lettered with the Hipp advertising. There were two large cutouts of Oliver atop the marque.

"Dangerous Age" Given Tie-Up with Traffic Regulations

Columbia, Ga.—As a special exploitation measure on "The Dangerous Age," Manager I. C. Holloway of the Grand theatre got out some stickers carrying a warning for motorists and giving them the proper regulations for signalling turns, stops, etc. The Motor Club cooperated by mailing 200 of these to their members and requesting them to post the stickers on their windshields where they would serve as a constant reminder. Others were stuck on the cars of Mr. Holloway's friends and acquaintances—people he knew would not raise a howl about getting their windshields messed up.

One hundred cards, 11x14, were printed to read: "This is the Dangerous Age—Drive Slow." These were posted in garages and service stations several days in advance. At the same time, a series of teaser ads were being run on the screen and in the papers.

New Teaser Angle Given Ads "One Exciting Night"

Indianapolis, Ind.—Advance teaser campaigns are not new, but the usual practice of opening them with only the title was reversed in the campaign for "One Exciting Night" at the Circle theatre, in which the title was kept a secret until the very last.

A representative of United Artists Corporation mapped out a campaign along the lines mentioned, which consisted of a display ad run one week before the opening date and announcing that D. W. Griffith has produced an innovation in motion pictures, describing some of the unusual phases of the production, but not giving the title.

With this display ad there was issued for newspaper use a publicity story that went more into detail regarding the new and surprising elements in the Griffith picture; the difference in this photoplay and other Griffith screen features; spoke of the various players in the cast, but did not give the title of the coming attraction.

Then followed a display ad for the day of the opening which played the title of the picture up big and pointed out that the feature was brimful of love, laughter and sensations, with a frantic search for half a million dollars; with stealthy figures and peering eyes; the funniest black-faced comedian possible, and a tremendous storm scene as the Griffith climax.

This display was followed by another on the second day of the run, which stated that thousands of Indianapolis people are guarding the secret; they have seen "One Exciting Night" and know who murdered Johnson; know what the jungle footsteps meant; know who owned the mysterious $500,000; know why the mother sacrificed the girl; know the identity of the elusive cloaked figure; know the secrets of the House of Danger. But they won't tell, for they want you to enjoy the mystery for yourself.

Grocers Furnish Lobby For "Strangers' Banquet"

ALTOONA, Pa.—Manager F. K. O'Kelly of the Strand theatre utilized a new idea that gave him an excellent lobby display for "The Strangers' Banquet" at almost no cost.

He got various merchants to donate articles that would be used at a banquet; such as boxes of oranges, apples, potatoes, celery, tomatoes, various grocery articles and these he displayed with credit cards showing the grocer who loaned them.

The merchants were glad to cooperate for the publicity they received and these articles gave Manager O'Kelly plenty of material from which he was able to dress up a most unusual and attractive lobby.

Florists Voluntarily Give Aid to "Mighty Lak' a Rose"

Milwaukee, Wis.—Manager Ed Weisfeldt of the Strand theatre has the solid support of Milwaukee merchants in exploiting pictures, as was demonstrated by the tie-up obtained on "Mighty Lak' a Rose."

The campaign was featured by the distribution of fifty 22x28's in the windows of local florists, reading:

"Don't you think she is 'Mighty Lak' a Rose'? Why not tell her? Say it with flowers and take her to see 'Mighty Lak' a Rose' at the Strand."

The point is, that this angle of the campaign was suggested voluntarily by W. E. MacDonald, president of the local florists' association, and it was twice as effective, coming this way, than if Manager Weisfeldt had had to go around himself asking for cooperation.

Manager F. J. Miller of the Rialto theatre, Augusta, Ga., utilized accessory material and special art work for this display on "Youth Must Have Love"

The White House theatre, Milwaukee, exploits its serials heavily. This shows the lobby arranged by Manager Meister for Chapter One of "The Oregon Trail"

Real "Stranger's Banquet" Is Given As Stunt on Picture

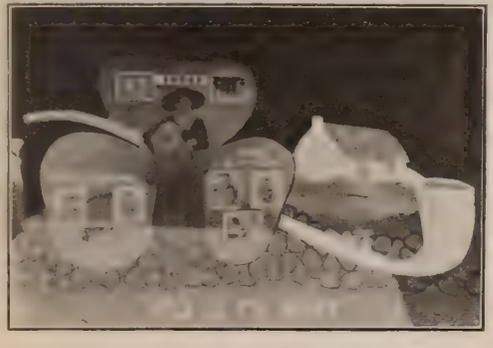
Pittsburgh, Pa.—Goldwynner William N. Robson attracted wide attention to the showing of "The Strangers' Banquet" at the State theatre through a special exploitation stunt which he employed.

It was a "strangers' banquet" given at Kramer's restaurant at which were many of the stage stars at that time appearing in various Pittsburgh theatres. At one table were twenty-three well-known stars, and the other tables were occupied by patrons of the restaurant.

This banquet exploitation feature was well published in the daily papers and at the theatre, and became a topic of conversation throughout Pittsburgh.

A book of toasts which was prepared by the Goldwyn Exploitation Department for use with "The Strangers' Banquet" was distributed at several of the leading hotels of the city and aroused a good deal of attention. These booklets were also distributed at the various club and banquet events of the week, so that altogether more than twenty thousand copies of the booklet were sent out.

A street stunt used for "The Strangers' Banquet" before its first screening was to send a number of men dressed as chefs through the city streets. They wore white caps, jackets and aprons. Pinned to their coats was a sign reading: "I am going to 'The Strangers' Banquet' at the State theatre, week commencing February 5th."



Manager F. J. Miller of the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga., arranged this compo board display on "Peg o' My Heart"

Space Is Sold on Heralds Used for "Pink Gods"

FORT WORTH, Texas—Since the publication recently in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the story of how E. C. Marquard of the Isis theatre, Longmont, Colo., sold the blank space on his stock herald on "The Valley of Silent Men," many exhibitors have utilized the idea.

The latest is the Hippodrome, Fort Worth, where the Southern Enterprises manager sold the space on the "Pink Gods" herald to a local jewelry firm. The tie-up is logical since the picture deals with a South African Diamond mine and the local jeweler loaned $50,000 worth of jewelry to the theatre for a lobby display.

Newspaper Tie-Up Great Aid to "Message of Emile Coue"

Milwaukee, Wis.—A newspaper tie-up made by Manager Ed. Weisfeldt of the Strand theatre on "The Message of Emile Coué," with the State Journal, resulted in excellent publicity for the picture.

The State Journal devoted many columns to advance publicity on Coué and his methods, and followed this by an announcement that the showing at the Strand would be under the auspices of the newspaper. Experiments by university men were conducted in an endeavor to ascertain the psychological effect of the picture on the normal and on the afflicted mind, and the results of these investigations, printed in the State Journal, led to several interesting news stories.

When interest was fully aroused the State Journal announced that everyone in the city would have the opportunity of witnessing the picture. Arrangements were made for ambulances to call for the more seriously afflicted and for special morning showings to be held for the benefit of those who were unable to attend a crowded theatre. Arrangements were also made with the local traction company, and street car tickets were provided those who were unable to make the trip comfortably otherwise.

Trolley Span Wires Obtained for "Christian" Signs

South Bend, Ind.—Goldwynner Walter D. Nealand, for the showing of "The Christian" at the Blackstone theatre, obtained the display of 166 signs suspended from overhead trolley wires of the Chicago, South Bend and Northern Indiana Railroad. This was a flash which attracted the attention of the entire city as it was something new in South Bend.

Permission was obtained from D. Southworth, superintendent of overhead for the railroad, to string these signs for the distance of six blocks on both Michigan and Washington avenues, two main thoroughfares, running from LaSalle street to the Grand Trunk station. At each junction point or intersection of tracks, Mr. Nealand had suspended a large triangular beaver board, three feet wide and five feet high, in the middle of the span wire. Six of these boards were used. They were hand-painted on both sides with the name of the theatre, date of showing and the title of the picture.

On both sides of the span wires he suspended the regular one-sheet block "Christian" cards, double faced.

'A Front Page Story" Tied Up with Mayor of City

San Francisco, Cal.—Several tie-ups with newspapers have been made on "A Front Page Story," but it remained for J. A. Partington of the Granada theatre to hook it up with Mayor Rolph of San Francisco.

One of the most important parts of the plot of the picture is the full page announcement in the hero's paper that he would print the truth about John Gorham in its next issue, and John Gorham is the mayor who is seeking to wreck the newspaper. Mr. Partington conceived the idea that if the 24-sheet poster provided by Vitagraph, which consisted of three lines in block type, "Watch Out for a Front Page Story. The Truth About Gorham," could be made to read, "The Truth About the Mayor," San Francisco would sit up and take notice. Before going ahead, of course, the picture was screened for the mayor and his official family at his private office, and it received his sanction.

Mayor Rolph said: "The whole city ought to see it and laugh the way the whole town laughed when the truth about the mayor in the picture was printed." This statement of the mayor's was subsequently used in the newspaper advertisements.

Mr. Partington put out fifty of the special 24-sheet posters containing the lines, "The Truth About the Mayor" a week earlier than its regular run. A week previous to the showing he also distributed 20,000 dodgers reading with the same text matter but signed by Edward Horton, 1066 Market street, that being the address of the Granada theatre, and Horton plays the leading role.

"Strangers' Banquet" window tie-up in cigar store during the run at the Rialto theatre, Tacoma, arranged by Chas. F. McManus, exploitation manager for Jensen & Von Herberg

"Kick In" Ballyhooed with Sleighful of Youngsters

IDAHO FALLS, Ida.—A noisy ballyhoo for "Kick In" that went all over town and cost little was gotten by Manager Otto E. Schmidt of the Colonial theatre and Rick Ricketson, Paramount exploiteer.

The streets were sheeted with ice, so they got a big sleigh, with banners for the picture stuck up on sticks, and drove it around town.

Every time they found a kid walking on the street they nabbed him and gave him a ride. Soon they had a dozen youngsters all lustily yelling "Kick In," "Kick In," as they progressed through every street in the town.

"Voice from the Minaret" Gets Phonograph Window Tie-Up

Bridgeport, Conn.—When Dawe's theatre played "The Voice From the Minaret," the Wissner Piano Co., on Main street, erected a small minaret that fitted over the top of a Victrola, leaving the doors of the talking machine visible through the open doors at the bottom of the minaret. When the muezzin called the faithful to prayer in Bridgeport it was "his master's voice" that summoned them.

The window hook-up was part of a Norma Talmadge resemblance stunt, worked by Manager Dawe to arouse interest in the picture. The fact that the talking machine company came in on it gave an opportunity for added exploitation angles.

A record was made of the Mohammedan prayer and was connected with a magnavox, so that the strange summons was shouted out on Main street during the noon hour. Those who couldn't guess what it meant followed the voice to the window and saw the display on "The Voice From the Minaret."

Heavy Exploitation Put Back of "Driven" Showing

New York, N. Y.—When "Driven" opened at the Criterion theatre, it was given the benefit of an unusually extensive publicity campaign.

To start the ball rolling a special presentation of the picture was given at the Town Hall one week prior to the Criterion opening for the National Board of Review, who placed the attraction in their list of Exceptional Pictures following this showing. The word-of-mouth advertising created by this showing proved most valuable.

A special letter was sent to every civic, social and woman's club in New York City inviting members to attend the showing, with the story of the picture included in the letter.

The "smallest automobile in the world" was used as a street ballyhoo with the slogan, "Every Car in the City Will be Driven to the Criterion Sunday to See 'Driven,' the Picture Sensation of the Year." This car would stop on every street corner.

Many windows were landed along Broadway and the main streets, where portraits or scenes of the picture were planted. Special two-sheets with the word "Driven" were posted all over town.

Many Window Displays Used to Boost "Poor Men's Wives"

New York, N. Y.—An extensive exploitation campaign, with generous use of window displays, was put over by the B. F. Keith organization for the showing of "Poor Men's Wives" at the New York houses of the chain.

The title of the picture offered itself to tie-ups through neighborhood stores. Window displays reading "'Poor Men's Wives' as well as 'Rich Men's Wives' can enjoy our quality goods. See 'Poor Men's Wives' at the ..... theatre, March .." were used in many instances.

A lobby display employed was a poster drawn along the following lines: On one side there is a picture of a baby and on the other a small lapdog. Copy above read: "Which Do You Want?" Below were the lines: "See 'Poor Men's Wives.' A dramatic smash, with Barbara La Marr, David Butler, Richard Tucker, Betty Francisco and Zasu Pitts."

Another successful display was a washtub and washboard accompanied by the copy, "Are Poor Men's Wives Tied to These? If You Believe They Are, See Poor Men's Wives,' a Picture About You and Your Neighbor."

Again, a cut-out at the entrance to the lobby was used. This was made from the regulation 24-sheet.

German Marks Displayed on "Nobody's Money" Board

LANSING, Mich.—A three-sheet stand in the center of town with a quantity of German marks, surmounted by a caption "Nobody's Money," was used by Manager Claud Gady of the Gladmer theatre as an advance teaser stunt on the picture of that name.

This lasted as an advance display for a week and then it was sniped for the date. This stunt was done with the cooperation of John D. Howard, Paramount exploiteer from Detroit.

Howard also tied up a leading cleaning establishment to insert an envelope in each package reading: This Money does not belong to us.

Inside were additional German marks and printing tying up with the picture.

"The Christian" Screened for Ford as Publicity Stunt

Detroit, Mich.—In connection with the showing of "The Christian" at the Strand theatre, the management, in conjunction with Eddie Bonns, exploitation manager for Goldwyn, and Harry L. Snowden, the local exploiteer, staged a private screening of the film for Henry Ford at his home, among other features, prying loose big chunks of publicity from the Detroit newspapers.

A special feature was planted in the Detroit Free Press on "The Future of the Motion Picture as it Appears to Maurice Tourneur, Director of 'The Christian.'" The Times, in its issue of Sunday, March 11th, devoted nearly half a page to pictures of the cast appearing in this film with a seven-column streamer calling attention the showing of "The Christian" across page two of its motion picture section. The News also carried a feature story on photographing "The Christian" in its original locales. The Evening Times also gave a seven-column streamer, clear across a page, three days before the opening for the first screening.

The principal book stores gave big window displays of Hall Caine's books, with "The Christian" prodominating, and the use of stills, posters and special cards.

"Gimme" Proves Excellent for Co-operative Page Ad

Salina, Kans.—The management of the Strand theatre, to exploit "Gimme," used a tie-up page of advertising to good advantage.

In the theatre ad both on this page and the regular ad was a picture of Helene Chadwick, arm extended in the attitude of saying, "Gimme." She was called the "Gimme girl."

The ad of nearly every merchant on the page mentioned the Gimme girl. For example, Riodan's grocery store advertisement read: "The Gimme girl always buys her groceries at the little store by the Journal office." The phrase, "Gimme girl," served to attract attention to the page.

The theatre's own ad started out, "When you say 'Gimme' at the box office you can depend on one thing—you'll be investing in entertainment PLUS, for here is the most chipper comedy of wedded life ever created for your delight."

Newspapermen's Showing of "The Christian" Aids Run

Springfield, Ill.—"The Christian" was screened for the editors of Illinois newspapers who attended the convention of the Illinois Press Association at Springfield by W. W. Watts, manager of the theatre, and Goldwynner Walter D. Nealand as an exploitation stunt for showing at the Princess theatre. Nealand was well acquainted with Jack Sheehan, city editor of the Illinois State Journal, published in Springfield, and arranged for the screening as a courtesy from the Journal to the visiting editors.

The newspaper advertising rates are high in Springfield, even the reading notices must be paid for at a flat rate, but the tie-up with the Journal resulted in a two-column head on the front page of the Journal, with a story which gave the plot of the picture, and a box containing an invitation to the editors in the city to visit the Princess theatre as guests of the Journal and see the film which had not been screened elsewhere in the state—not even in Chicago at that ime.

One hundred and twenty-six editors, their wives and families, attended the special screening of "The Christian" held at 12:30 noon before the first regular showing for the day. The Illinois State Journal boasts the largest circulation in Illinois, outside of the Chicago dailies, and this front-page story called the picture to the attention of practically every family in Springfield.

"Adam's Rib" Candy Given Away to Aid Picture

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—"Adam's Rib" Candy was one of the most effective stunts used by Tom Schrader of the Olympic theatre and A-Mike Vogel, Paramount exploiteer, on "Adam's Rib."

Mr. Schrader found a chocolate covered fig which marketed for thirty-five cents a pound. One piece was enclosed in an envelope imprinted to advertise the run.

The candy was given to cigar stores, restaurants and confectioneries and obtained a circulation unavailable through any other kind of advertising.

Newspaper Herald Issued on "Lost in a Big City"

PATERSON, N. J.—An effective herald was used in connection with the showing of "Lost in a Big City" at the U. S. theatre, of which Peter Adams is manager.

It was issued in regulation newspaper style, but was devoted entirely to "Lost in a Big City" stories. The lead story was based on statistics on the number of missing persons in various cities throughout the country, gathered by the Arrow Film Corporation. The newspaper was prepared by Arrow and is available to any exhibitor, a blank space being left for the theatre's ad on the picture.

ST. PAUL, Minn.—A page ad of unusual type was used to good effect by the Tower theatre to advertise the "Fighting Blood" series.

Artistic Prologue Is Staged at "Adam's Rib" Showing

Buffalo, N. Y.—The prologue staged at Shea's Hippodrome for "Adam's Rib" was one of the most artistic ever seen at this house. It was entitled "The Dance of the Nymphs," and was scenically created by Robert Karkanuff. The prologue opened with a large painting of a dinosaur being thrown on a transparent screen. When the lighting was changed, a woodland scene was disclosed, depicting two dancers garbed in Stone Age style prancing about. George Stearns was "Our Male Ancestor" and Margarette Brooks, "Woman Most Beautiful."

The background was strikingly colored and lighted and the dancing accompanied by the Hippodrome symphony orchestra under the direction of Harry Wallace.

In connection with "Adam's Rib," Mr. McFaul also arranged with the Hengerer department store to stage a fashion review. This tie-up brought a vast amount of publicity. The store gave over one of its Main street windows to a display on the picture, using the artistic blueprints showing scenes from the picture. At the theatre live models displayed the latest modes for milady.

Navy Tie-Up Made to Exploit "Omar the Tentmaker"

Seattle, Wash.—A tie-up with the United States Navy recruiting service advertising department was one of the stunts used by Manager H. B. Wright, of the Strand theatre, here recently when he played "Omar the Tentmaker."

The Navy maintains many A-board stands on the streets of Seattle, containing recruiting information and photographs, which are changed about every two weeks. When the run of "Omar" was about to begin at the Strand, special posters were put up on all the navy stands.

The posters bore the words, "Beautiful Persia, as pictured in 'Omar the Tentmaker,' is just as glorious today. See Persia and all the world with the United States Navy, and see 'Omar the Tentmaker' at the Strand now." To finish up the poster a large reproduction of a scene from the photoplay was carried at the bottom of the stand. The name of the picture and the name of the theatre were printed in especially large type, so that it stood out above the rest of the reading matter, and was easily read from a distance. Tie-ups with cigar stores featuring Omar cigarettes were also used to good advantage.

During the "Omar the Tentmaker" engagement, Manager Wright also had his ushers attired in Turkish harem costumes. The theatre was decorated with Turkish rugs and lamps, and the lobby display was made in the guise of a Turkish castle. An atmospheric prologue, with a man in the guise of Omar Khayyam, reciting a specially written poem, which introduced two girls in an Oriental dance, was also part of the Strand's presentation.

Teaser Envelopes Given Out on "Fighting Streak"

TORONTO, Ont.—The management of the Strand theatre used a teaser envelope to excellent advantage in exploiting "The Fighting Streak," 5,000 of these being passed out.

On a small envelope was printed in blue letters the following legend: "Are You A Quitter? or Have You Got The Fighting Streak—See Inside."

Opening the envelope one found a card on which was: "They Asked Tom Mix the Same Question! See How He Answered Them At The Strand Theatre."

Anti-Flirt Crusade Given Good Break by Washington Papers

Washington, D. C.—The Anti-Flirt crusade, inaugurated as an exploitation measure on "The Flirt," by Marc Lachmann, Universal home office exploiteer, was put over to excellent effect in Washington.

Front page stories, cartoons and a picture were in every one of the Washington papers, the Washington Times, Washington Post, Washington Herald and The Evening Star, The News, etc.

This campaign, which was handled in Washington by Miss Hattie K. Merrill, the Universal exploiteer, covers all the theatres in the Washington territory, and the tie-up opened the campaign on "The Flirt," the Universal-Jewel production for the theatres that are to play it. These theatres are: The Rialto, the Dunbar, and the Circle theatres in Washington; in addition to these theatres the bookings on "The Flirt" for the whole territory covered by the Washington Exchange came in for this campaign.

New York Covered with Window Cards for "Mad Love" Run

New York, N. Y.—Although "Mad Love" went into the Capitol theatre on the crest of a tremendous wave of publicity for Pola Negri, through the Chaplin engagement, a strong exploitation campaign was used by Manager Rothafel, in co-operation with Eddie Bonns and W. R. Ferguson of the Goldwyn exploitation department.

Broadway has probably never seen such a splash of window cards for a motion picture in the history of films. The card was one that stood out vividly in any surroundings. It was such a good attention getter that merchants were glad to have it in their windows. Broadway and the entire "white light" district was plastered with these cards, about 2,000 of which were used.

The billboards of the city were well covered with 24-sheet posters, showing Pola as Liane standing indifferently above the mass of men struggling for her favor. The original painting of the one-sheet was framed and placed in the lobby of the Capitol theatre, where it attracted crowds of observers. Other oil paintings and photographic enlargements were used in the lobby.

Novel Lobby Display Effective as "Nobody's Money" Aid

Columbia, S. C.—In exploiting "Nobody's Money," Manager C. W. Irvin of the Imperial theatre got a suggestion for his lobby display from the one-column ad mat in the press book. On a sheet of compo board, Mr. Irvin pasted a one-sheet cut-out of Holt and Hawley and had a large dollar mark painted around it. Then the title and name of star were painted on in display letters and a number of the money heralds were pasted around. Mr. Irvin says he had to renew the money heralds several times, for people would "swipe" them at every opportunity. This showed that the display was an attention getter.

As an advance stunt Mr. Irvin had his doorman visit the various banks several times and drop two or three of the money heralds as though by accident. Nearly every time someone called him back and told him he had dropped some money. He always told the person calling him that he could have the money.

Gets Patrons to Contribute to Theatre Publication

JAMAICA, L. I.—Fred V. Greene, Jr., managing director of the Rialto theatre, in connection with the showing of "My American Wife" began a new stunt that started a number of fans contributing to his house-organ, "The Rialto Theatre News," thereby enhancing the value of such exploitation.

On the last page he runs a joke column and Fred claimed that first-class humor was getting scarce. Anybody sending in a respectable and acceptable joke would receive a free ticket.

The former Paramount exploiteer has his patrons eating out of his hand, for he is receiving contributions by the hundreds. With each joke published is the name of the contributor. Greene does not shie at giving away free tickets. They always come back and usually with a paid admission in tow.

Exploiteer Makes Own Airplane Flight on "Skin Deep"

Tonowanda, N. Y.—After Manager Harry Ross of the Flash theatre had announced a tie-up with the American Legion on "Skin Deep," and an airplane trip, he found one important link missing—there was no one to go up with the pilot to drop the circulars. Several candidates offered themselves, but for one reason of another, none was suitable.

In this emergency the exploitation man who was in the city made the trip himself. He dropped 10,000 circulars, one side of which advertised the attraction at the Flash and the other side the Legion's membership drive.

A display of German war trophies that Manager Ross assembled in front of the theatre helped the campaign, while the Legion, and consequently "Skin Deep," had the cooperation of leading citizens who made speeches advocating Legion membership and attendance at the picture.

For a street ballyhoo Manager Ross engaged a local character and dressed him up to represent "Bud Doyle."

"Strangers' Banquet" Is Given Many Tie-Ups in Campaign

San Diego, Cal.—When "The Strangers' Banquet" showed at the Pickwick theatre, Richard A. Addison, advertising and publicity director for the house, arranged tie-ups which resulted in extensive publicity.

Two hundred and fifty dealers carried special window cards for a week; all the trucks of the Superior Baking Company carried similar cards, the the concern's newspaper advertising carried a four-inch double-column announcement of the showing of "The Strangers' Banquet" at the Pickwick theatre.

In addition, every loaf of bread put out during the week carried with it a herald on the picture.

The Waldorf hotel in its lunch room put a "Strangers' Banquet" on each day instead of its regular Merchants' Lunch, carrying the picture's announcement on all menus daily.

Ten thousand napkins carrying the theatre's advertising were distributed through the Waldorf and other restaurants and fountain lunches in the city. Goldwynner L. W. Barclay, of Los Angeles, co-operated with Addison in putting the picture across.

Brief but Extensive Campaign Put Over on "Robin Hood"

Philadelphia, Pa.—There was a period of but nine days between the signing of the contract for Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood," and the opening date at the Stanton theatre, so quick work was necessary in exploiting it.

Immediately underlines appeared in the Stanley newspaper advertisements announcing Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood" as a coming attraction. In two days sixty 24-sheets had been placed, thirty-five on regular stands and twenty-five on extra space, and all in first-class locations. One hundred 6-sheets and 100 3-sheets, also were placed in regular Stanley locations. Seventy-five 1-sheets were posted in subway locations and 300 special 1-sheets "sniped." In addition nine painted signs in fancy locations had been started.

During the following week 1,000 window cards were placed, besides special window display co-operation accounting for 300 surprinted cards which were arranged with dealers in talking machines throughout Philadelphia. This co-operation was obtained through jobbers in records and the local dealers, representing three different manufacturers of records. A dozen different records representing as many different selections from the light opera, "Robin Hood," provided the tie-up.

At the Stanton theatre an advance lobby display was installed almost overnight with specially designed and painted panels, with also an elaborate scenic effect portraying a perspective scene—the meeting of the hero and the heroine in the forest. This was lighted within the set by bluish incandescents and the figures brought out in warm tones by an amber baby spotlight from the ceiling.

"Skin Deep" Prologue Put Over Inexpensively

CUMBERLAND, Md. — A prologue need not always be expensive and elaborate to be effective, as was shown when Crandall's Strand theatre staged "Skin Deep" in a manner that can be duplicated by the financial appropriation of almost every house in the country.

Against a stock painted back drop, two flags and a "pup tent" provided the whole equipment. One was the American flag and the other the emblem of the local legion post.

The entertainment is optional with the exhibitor, the choice ranging from an appropriate solo to a one act musical sketch or a dramatic "bit." The experience of the Strand simply illustrates that with the proper American Legion co-operation no theatre need be afraid of the expense involved in making a little extra effort on "Skin Deep."

Extensive Campaign Used for Manhattan "Brass" Run

New York, N. Y.—The management of the New York Mark Strand theatre, of which Joseph Plunkett is managing director, put over an extensive publicity and exploitation campaign for the run of "Brass" at that theatre.

One of the big features of the campaign was the showing of the film before an audience of prospective divorcees in the chambers of Judge Weil, Domestic Relations Court of New York, several days preceding the engagement at the Strand. As a result of this showing the New York newspapers carried stories about the affair, and a comment from Judge Weil to the effect that the film was used as an object lesson for troubled couples.

A book tie-up was secured with E. P. Dutton, the publishers of Charles G. Norris' novel. A large papier mache wedding ring, illuminated by a flasher socket, surrounded by copies of the book, was used as a display at the publishers' offices on Fifth avenue.

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

"Giants vs. Yanks"

("Our Gang" Comedy-Roach-Pathe—Two Reels)

THE "Our Gang" series of kid comedies have been casting a bright glow against the film horizon, so real, so natural and so logical are the actions of these talented youngsters, who have been picked by Hal Roach with rare discrimination. But then it was up to his director, Robert McGowan, to fashion them into intimate slices of juvenile high jinks. And he has done an exceptionally clever job of it. There's Mildred Davis' brother, and Sunshine Sammy, and a three-year-old ebony filly named Farina—to say nothing of Mickey Daniels, whose face is his fortune with those countless freckles. Several others complete the gang, one of which is the inevitable fat boy.

What impresses us is the naturalness of the youngsters, none of them being camera conscious. As a result there is an absence of any suggestion of precocity. And what is more irritating than a precocious kid obeying the gags of a director? If McGowan directed these kids without having his camera hidden he is a wonder. At the same time he deserves credit for catching the true psychology of these terrible infants—products of the neighborhood who cut up capers as you find them on the funny sheets and the sidewalks of our large cities or the banks of a village creek.

Here they take off the World's Series, leaving their various menial duties to indulge in the national pastime. The scenes are highly amusing and each kid has his opportunity to put over his or her stuff. Farina's crying spell and her walk will bring a hearty laugh. The comedy finishes with the gang quarantined in a respectable home, the occupants of which are up against it and trying to maintain order. The kids turn the place upside down before their parents come after them and guide them to their own homes—to receive the w. k. razor strop or a stormy lecture.

Get this comedy—get them all. Your crowd won't be disappointed.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Extra Seven"

(Range Rider Series-Pathe—Two Reels)

IT has a good plot to begin with, and one that develops with unusual interest for a two-reeler. Leo Maloney is suitor for the hand of Polly, daughter of mother Martin who owns Double D Ranch where the "puncher" is employed. There is also a brother, with the gambling habit, whose welfare the prospective brother in-law takes seriously. He watches a game from a bunk and sees a card shark (Bud Osborne) fiill a poker hand by drawing an extra card to make a "straight flush" from his pistol pouch. But that shows up two sevens of the same suit. When it comes to cashing the chips, there ensues a fight, in the midst of which Polly appears and mistakes her fiance's part in the argument, whereupon she accuses him of encouraging her brother's gambling habit. There follows another fight in which the brother is seemingly killed and the partners in the game plan to throw the guilt upon the innocent puncher. Rapid and interesting action develops, embracing some hard riding by all and quick thinking on the part of Polly. However, she learns the truth about the situation in time to stop a proposed lynching and identifies the guilty ones by most convincing evidence. It ends happily, but up until the very finish there is held splendid suspense, making the two-reeler one of the most entertaining of the series.—LILLIAN GALE.

Lloyd Hamilton in a scene from "Uneasy Feet," the Educational-Hamilton two reel comedy

"Where Am I?"

(Roach-Pathe—Two Reels)

AN animated case of "mother-in-law" which begins when the mother of a young wife arrives for a visit, contrary to the wishes and comfort of the youthful husband (Snub Pollard). At breakfast the morning after the arrival of "mother," the husband reads about a case of "lost memory," so when in the midst of an argument he is hit on the head with one of wifey's biscuits, he feigns a loss of memory and rushes from the scene of domestic upheaval.

He secures a job as second "checkman" in the check-room of a fashionable hotel. His superior is hard hearted and tricks the new employee out of all the tips he should get, until it occurs to the head checkman that "hubby" might answer his family's problem, that of marrying off the spinster member—so plans are laid to bring this about.

Just as the wedding is about to take place, the wife arrives, having seen record of the occasion in a newspaper and rather than go ahead with a marriage to the spinster, "hubby" finds his memory and goes back home, to wife and mother-in-law. Good action, rapid comedy, numerous laughs.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Get Your Man"

(Roach-Pathe—One Reel)

PAUL PARROTT assumes the role of a "boob" member of the Canadian Mounted Police, who thinks more about how cold he is than the duties to which he is assigned. There comes a call to capture, dead or alive, "Howling Hank," a cattle rustler who values no man's life but his own when the Superior Officer assigns two of his men to the task of "getting the man," one of the two is Parrott.

The pursuit begins and most of the action takes place "North of 57" where, as the subtitle states, icicles grow so big they use them for fence posts. But there is sufficient action to warm things up and after ten days the mild hero returns with "his man," reporting that the only State the chase did not lead him through was Rhode Island, and exhibiting his shoes, worn through to the bare foot to prove the exent of the "chase."

An amusing travesty on the Northwest dramas is "Get Your Man," and it has an unusual attribute, that of splendid photography, remarkably clear and having noticeable scenic value.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Family Troubles"

(Educational—One Reel)

"FORD STORIES" have been in vogue since "flivvers" first made it necessary to provide traffic police in small towns. And, when well told, they are usually good for a laugh, regardless of their being numerous. So it is with "Family Troubles," a comedy featuring Eddie Barry, but with a Ford touring car in the principal role.

Barry represents the head of a family, who claims eight dependents, a wife and seven children, when reporting his income tax. In "papa's" enthusiasm about purchasing an automobile, he forces sixty dollars on a mechanic engaged in "fixing" one, whom "papa" mistakes for the owner. Before the dumfounded "fixer" can protest or explain, "papa" drives the flivver through somebody's back yard, en route for his home.

The children are delighted and while their mother prepares for the first country drive, they nearly wreck the "lizzie." Finally, all are safely "in" and a drive in the country begins. So does the trouble.

Meantime, a tribe of policemen pursue what they believe to be a thief. Their pursuit is interrupted repeatedly by laughable and gymnastic accidents. Eventually, "papa" comes to a closed bridge, decides to drive through the stream, but the bottom is quicksand. It is then a case of "women and children first" and with no help available, the family sees the newly acquired luxury sink out of sight. Every cloud has its silver lining, so when the police arrive, there being no evidence against the fugitive, he is allowed to go in peace, walking the family home—with mother.

An even tempo of inoffensive comedy is held with good results and there's a laugh in this one for all ages, sizes and varieties of comedy fans.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Kick Out"

(Educational—Two Reels)

THERE is a certain type of writer who describes himself as an "author," one who writes stories—the kind that editors have the habit of sending back. Such is the principal character in the comedy, "Kick Out," impersonated by Lige Conley.

His domicile is in the process of being "wrecked" by furniture men in search of payments on the installments past due. The author resorts to strategy and endeavors to pacify the "rough necks" by a phoney 'phone conversation, which, from his end of the line, sounds as if he had just sold a story for forty thousand dollars. However, it fails to work, so it behooves the author to walk the streets in search of new material, or a new home. Luck is with him to the extent that he gets hits by an automobile and it develops the sole occupant is none other than a motion picture star. She gives him her card and asks him to look her up.

"Our hero" loses no time in calling at the studio and from then on the comedy centers about how difficult his entrance therein was made by the gateman, and how many different ways the author devised to gain entrance. Finally, having succeeded, he encounters such unfriendly members of the cast as the lions, a crocodile and the leading man. The incidents afford good comedy, frequent laughs and the action, being very fast, prevents there being a dull moment.—LILLIAN GALE.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

"The Spider and the Rose"

Zeidman-Principal—6800 Feet

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

THE effects of Benny Zeidman's association with Douglas Fairbanks show plainly throughout "The Spider and the Rose." Zeidman has built a production on the type of those Fairbanks made a few years ago—a romantic, devil-may-care sort of melodrama, crammed with action, and with an athletic and intrepid hero who fights his way through all manner of hazards and handicaps for the sake of an oppressed people and the girl he loves.

It is laid in one of the most colorful and romantic settings and periods in American history—in California in the days of Emperor Maximilian I. Against this magnificent background is enacted a lively tale of intrigue and revolution.

Zeidman has assembled a truly steller cast for the production. Alice Lake, Gaston Glass, Joseph J. Dowling, Noah Beery, Alec Francis, Louise Fazenda, Frank Campeau, Robert McKim, Richard Headrick, Otis Harlan, Andrew Arbuckle, Edwin Stevens—here are names to conjure with!

Gaston Glass is not, to our mind, ideally cast as the strenuously athletic type of hero, but this is more than atoned for by the excellent types in the various character roles. Noah Beery as the Maitre, a French soldier of fortune, is a vivid and picturesque figure. Robert McKim is a smilingly unscrupulous villain, who almost compels admiration for his finesse and his suave villainy. Alice Lake is a charming senorita—the "rose" of the story, McKim being the "spider." The cast, as a whole, performs capably and provides a wide assortment of interesting portrayals.

Once it gets under way, the story moves swiftly, and there is ample incident and action, finishing in a whirlwind of riding and fighting. Interest holds up well for the most part, and the pictures strikes us as excellent audience material.

The Cast

Paula.....Alice Lake
Don Marcello, a child.....Richard Headrick
Don Marcello.....Gaston Glass
The Governor.....Joseph J. Dowling
Mendozza.....Robert McKim
Maitre Renaud.....Noah Beery
The Secretary.....Otis Harlan
Don Fernando.....Frank Campeau
The Priest.....Andrew Arbuckle
Good Padre.....Alec Francis
Bishop Oliveros.....Edwin Stevens
Dolores.....Louise Fazenda

Adapted from a story by Gerald C. Duffy. Directed by Jack McDermott.

The Story—Son of Governor of California, in early days, joins revolutionists to oust scheming secretary, who deceives Governor and oppresses people. His sweetheart, thinking to save him, inadvertently betrays him to authorities, and revolutionists are imprisoned, believing hero a traitor. He is thrown into the sea, but is saved. He effects the escape of his comrades and in a thrilling finish ousts secretary, who has usurped governorship, and returns his father to office, winning the girl.

Classification—Romantic melodrama of early California.

Production Highlights—The colorful atmosphere. The beautiful garden scenes. The firing squad sequence. The uprising. The rapid finish. The work of Noah Beery and Robert McKim.

Exploitation Angles—The outstanding exploitation feature is the strong cast, with many names familiar to every picturegoer. Other exploitation stunts, in the way of street stunts, lobby displays and prologues may be built up around the Spanish atmosphere of early California.

Drawing Power—Should appeal to practically any type of audience.

"The Lion's Mouse"

Hollandia-Hodkinson—5200 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY'VE attempted to show a mystery melodrama here, but have only succeeded in showing a crazy-quilt the action of which is at odds and ends, so much so, that we defy any spectator to know what it's all about. The continuity is choppy and the direction is bad, consequently the players are up against it in trying to be convincing. The picture was made in Holland and it bears all the earmarks of being a shoddy foreign production.

The plot has to do with the persecution of a girl and the attempt to blackmail her and her brother. In fact the latter doesn't make an appearance until the happy ending when his name, Stephen, proves to be the magic word which solves this puzzle. If the director intended to mystify an audience he has succeeded admirably, for with the opening shot we discover a girl bounding into a man's compartment in an English train, pleading for protection of herself and her valuable package which looks as if it might contain the fatal papers. Incidentally these papers are never disclosed. It takes two weeks to get these perfect strangers married after which the husband gets suspicious of his wife's action.

Several characters are introduced in a haphazard fashion, one of whom carries the plot along in her attempt to deliver the package or get it or recover the jewels or deliver them. She picks a man's pocket to get the keys to his private safe. Watching her work, one would believe that they are deadly enemies. Yet when she has a distressing moment, trapped by some arch criminals, she telephones for him, pleading that he is the only man she can trust. And a romance blooms for her. The incident is topsy-turvy throughout. The picture is badly edited and poorly titled. To find out what it all means we are forced to read the synopsis.

The Cast

Roger Sands.....Wyndham Standing
Beverly White.....Marguerite Marsh
Clo Riley.....Mary Odette
Justin O'Riley.....Rex Davis

Directed by Oscar Apfel. Photographed by Peiko Boorsman, Mack Van Lior and Jan Smit.

The Story—Girl is forced to use extreme measures in protecting her brother. She rushes into matrimony, but her package of letters are stolen as well as the jeweled necklace her husband gives her. Eventually the criminals are captured and all ends well.

Classification—Mystery melodrama.

Production Highlights—The efforts of the players to appear convincing.

Exploitation Angles—Picture carries snappy title. Use it for a teaser campaign.

Drawing Power—Only suitable for double feature day in second class downtown houses.

"The Fourth Musketeer"

F. B. O.—5500 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

H. C. WITWER, the author of the several series of pugilistic stories which have made rattling good two-reelers, has come forth sponsoring a feature length picture, "The Fourth Musketeer," which also recounts the adventures of a prize-fighter. For two or three reels it carries the spontaneity and verve of the short pieces, then it sags in interest because it appears padded and some incident is introduced which seems forced and arbitrary.

After the pugilist has climbed the ladder to success by knocking out his rival, he is all set to retire through the wishes of his wife and take over a country garage. But his opponent in the ring has an invalid mother whose health demands that she take up her abode in California. He pleads to have the boy with the knock-out punch throw the fight. But the latter shows his generous nature by loaning him the money, thus sacrificing his opportunity to engage in business.

Up to this point the picture carries a good atmosphere, generating a wholesome human interest as well as some snappy incident. But after the sequence is over the story loses its sustaining quality because the plot develops a triteness which weakens it. The owner of the garage kindly takes the young man's note and he opens his shop. Which is the opportunity to stir up some conflict in the home. The socially ambitious wife who has been a "square shooter" steps out of character and hobnobs around with a young bounder of the jazzy set and she feels ashamed that she's married to a pugilist. We cannot reconcile ourselves to society people accepting the wife of a pugilist into their inner circles. The story is sketchy here and finishes with the wife appreciating her husband after he has saved a social dowager's jewels from being stolen.

William Scott makes a more convincing prize fighter than Johnnie Walker, whose features are a trifle too refined. The others in the cast haven't many opportunities to do anything except pose. An obvious little story which is good for three reels.

The Cast

Brian O'Brien.....Johnnie Walker
Mrs. Brian O'Brien.....Eileen Percy
Joe Tracy.....William Scott
Mrs. Tracy.....Edith Yorke
Jimmy Tracy.....Georgie Stone
Dan O'Reilly.....James McElhern
Mike Donovan.....Eddie Gribbon
Gerald Van Sicklen.....Philo McCullough
Mrs. Rector.....Kate Lester

By H. C. Witwer. Adapted by Paul Schofield. Directed by Wm. Kerrigan Howard. Photographed by Wm. O'Connell. Produced by F. B. O.

The Story—Pugilist is successful in ring encounter and retires. He loans his winnings to rival and gives his note to garage owner, thus providing opportunity to engage in the garage business. His wife neglects him to take up with social activities but she learns to appreciate him when he recovers some stolen jewels and shows his courage.

Classification—Drama of prize-ring balanced with heart interest.

Production Highlights—The prize-ring scenes. The scene when pugilist loans money to his rival. The climax when hero recovers jewels.

Exploitation Angles—Best angle is to exploit author, featuring his two-reelers, "The Leather Pushers." If the star has a following, play him up. Title suggests a teaser campaign.

Drawing Power—Should prove suitable for small downtown and neighborhood houses.

"Grumpy"

Paramount—6587 Feet

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

A DELIGHTFUL characterization by Theodore Roberts, some more of William de Mille's fine direction, a good cast and a different sort of story. These are the main ingredients of this entertaining picturization of Cyril Maude's great New York and London stage hit. We all know that Mr. Roberts is an artist to the tips of his fingers, but he simply outdoes himself in stepping into the character of "Grumpy." The role seems to have been made for this veteran star. He lives the part and everyone will enjoy his work immensely.

Mr. Roberts has been given a supporting cast that will help bring in business. May McAvoy gets a real chance in this picture and takes full advantage of it to put over a convincing bit of work. Conrad Nagel puts over some natural acting, while Casson Ferguson does well as the crook. Such names as Charles Ogle, Charles French and Bertram and Bernice Frank complete the personnel.

The story is a mystery-love tale that is always a sure bet when picking box office attractions. In this case the plot deals with pursuit of a diamond thief, with Mr. Roberts in the role of Grumpy putting over the Sherlock Holmes stuff.

While there are several thrilling situations in the picture, there is also a lot of laughs, most of which are supplied by the star himself. The costumes and makeup of this screen Grumpy are great. We did not believe it possible for Mr. Roberts to make himself look so old.

The settings, photography, camera work and lighting are all A No. 1 as is to be expected in a de Mille production.

The story works up to a gripping climax in which Grumpy, who, it is explained, formerly a noted criminal lawyer, runs down the gem thief, finding the stolen diamond in the heel of the crook's shoe, just as everyone else is about to give up in despair. "Grumpy" is Theodore Roberts' screen chef d'ouvre.

The Cast

Old Bullivant (Grumpy).....Theodore Roberts
Virginia Bullivant .....May McAvoy
Ernest Heron .....Conrad Nagel
Chamberlain Jarvis .....Casson Ferguson
Mark Stone .....Charles French
Virginia's Maid .....Bernice Frank
Jarvis' Valet .....Bertram Frank
Ruddock .....Charles Ogle

Adapted from the play by Horace Hodges and Wigney Percyval. Scenario by Clara Beranger. Directed by William de Mille. Photographed by L. Guy Wilky.

The Story—Deals with the efforts of Grumpy, an irascible, but big hearted old man, to run down the crook who robbed his nephew of a valuable diamond which he has been charged with delivering for a South African firm to a London customer. Having once been a noted criminal lawyer, Grumpy calls into play his powers of deduction and through a gardenia clue proves that Jarvis ,a "gentleman-crook," who while pretending to woo Grumpy's granddaughter, got wise to the lay of the land and held up and robbed Ernest of the gem.

Classification—A mystery story made notable by a wonderful Roberts' characterization.

Production Highlights—The star's interpretation of the role of Grumpy. The fine support. Mr. de Mille's direction. The artistic interiors. The methods used by Grumpy to run down the crook. The thrilling climax in which Grumpy finds the diamond in the heel of a shoe.

Exploitation Angles—Everyone has heard of the play, therefore play up the name in all your advertising. Then give Theodore Roberts prominence in the publicity. Also Nagel and May McAvoy and Casson Ferguson. The diamond theme suggests jewelry window displays. Mention the fact that this is the screen version of Cyril Maude's stage hit.

Drawing Power—This one will grace the screen of any house. It should please every one. That means business will be good.

Some of "Our Gang," who appear in the Pathe two reel comedy, "The Big Show."

"Single Handed"

Universal—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

THE unusual element is in the role assumed by Hoot Gibson, cast as a rural "boob," who is ably described by the subtitle which announces the star and states that "he played not wisely, but too well." Treated with contempt by the natives, "Goofy" is plainly looked upon as a village "pest" and the way the populace avoid listening to to strains from the boy's violin would indicate that they are not exactly educated up to his style of "fiddling" in Goober City, Kansas.

There is an abundance of action, in fact the picture borders upon those which come under the head of "westerns" although it is essentially comedy-drama. Nevertheless, it is equipped with certain gripping qualities and is likely to be reasonably well received by audiences for it includes a realistic cyclone, and is relatively interesting during the scenes which depict happenings on a circus lot, for it would appear that a genuine circus has been employed.

Taking advantage of the country boy's seeming inability to think as well as he can play a violin, the keeper of a rendezvous involves him into a heap of trouble, which puts the sheriff on "Goofy's" trail. He then proves he can move quickly, in any event, and think fast enough to make some clever get-aways, which keeps the action going, all of which he does "single handed."

There is only a thread of love interest.

The Cast

"Goofy".....Hoot Gibson
The Girl.....Elinor Field

Story by Edward Sedgwick. Directed by Edward Sedgwick. Scenario by George C. Hull. Photographed by Virgil Miller.

The Story—"Goofy," a native of Goober City, Kans., believed that he could play a violin, in spite of the combined opposite opinions of the natives. Being a harmless sort of "boob," but regarded as honest in the extreme, "Goofy" is tricked into a plot to rob a player in a "fixed" poker game. A general fight brings the Sheriff, who is led to believe "Goofy" guilty of taking the spoils. This starts "Goofy" on the run, the Sheriff after him, and before the chase is finished and "Goofy" cleared, he becomes instrumental in saving an heiress from the plot of two city "slickers" to relieve her of an inheritance.

Classification—Comedy-drama of Kansas locale.

Production Highlights — Realistic cyclone. Scenes on circus grounds.

Exploitation Angles—State a "fiddler's" contest and use violin recital as prologue. The use of a "street fiddler" should be effective. Tie up with music stores.

Drawing Power—Play upon popularity of star.

"The Covered Wagon"

Paramount—Eleven Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WE came, we saw and "The Covered Wagon" conquered us. This rich narrative by Emerson Hough which James Cruze has made into stirring epic of the screen is capable of taking rank with the handful of pictures such as "The Birth of a Nation," "The Four Horsemen," and "Robin Hood." While not founded upon the dramatic structure of these masterpieces, it nevertheless tells a mighty drama of America in the making—the perilous journey westward of the pioneers of '48. This epochal period in the history of our country is just far enough removed in the background to cast an irresistible glamour of romance and adventure over its reproduction on the screen. What a vital, absorbing, thrilling, colorful canvas it is!

The spectator is truly transported as he follows with breathless interest the unfolding of panoramic and intimate scenes. It is kaleidoscopic in its sweep. It moves with vigorous action carrying the onlooker along through episodes which are as picturesque as they are dramatic. The story contains a romance which provides the backbone of the picture. Yet we are enthralled as we follow the crescendo of events, which record the pioneers starting forth with a cry of "Westward Ho!"—as they leave Westport Landing, Mo., now Kansas City, and face the setting sun. The far-flung wagon trains furnish a grand vista. One is mightily impressed with the courage of these people and the hardships they faced to reach Oregon and "Californy."

Cruze takes us on a highly colorful journey, showing us thrill after thrill, incident after incident. For instance there is the fording of the Platte, the first obstacle of the pioneers. To watch the execution of this vital episode is enough to make you marvel over the accuracy of the director and the seemingly unsurmountable task of making it appear real. This is one of many outstanding highlights which include a bison hunt as the pioneers are brought up sharp with starvation. Again the compelling action presents the Indians and their "circle of death" as they strike the covered wagons and the undaunted pioneers. For sheer enjoyment follow the scenes between Ernest Torrence and Tully Marshall who, as two scouts, put on a "William Tell" shooting act. It is a bright cameo—this highly amusing bit. The acting is superb as rendered by these gifted character actors. Torrence, in particular, gives one of the most impressive portrayals ever recorded by a camera.

The Cast

Will Banion.....J. Warren Kerrigan
Molly Wingate.....Lois Wilson
Sam Woodhull.....Alan Hale
Mr. Wingate.....Charles Ogle
Mrs. Wingate.....Ethel Wales
Jackson.....Ernest Torrence
Bridger.....Tully Marshall
Kit Carson.....Guy Oliver
Jed Wingate.....John Fox

By Emerson Hough. Scenario by Jack Cunningham. Directed by James Cruze. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—Records the perilous journey of the pioneers of '48 who took the overland route —the Oregon Trail for the West. Wagon trains in charge of Wingate whose daughter has a romance with Will Banion, a leader of the Missouri pioneers. He is discredited in her eyes for a time but succeeds in squaring himself. Love comes to both of them.

Classification—Richly melodramatic adventures of pioneers who traveled Oregon Trail.

Production Highlights—The marvelous shots. The bison hunt. The fording of the river. The Indian massacre. The humorous scenes between Torrence and Mashall. The fine photography. The color and movement.

Exploitation Angles—Go the limit from every angle.

Drawing Power—Big enough for extended runs.

"The Trail of the Lonesome Pine"

Paramount—5500 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS, the last of Mary Miles Minter's Paramount expressions, is a reproduction of a picture which was made by Cecil De Mille back in 1916—a picture in which Charlotte Walker was the star and Tom Meighan and Theodore Roberts provided the chief support. Miss Walker, incidentally starred in the play, written by Eugene Walter. And now it comes forth again as a Charles Maigne production with Miss Minter as June Tolliver and Ernest Torrence and Antonio Moreno succeeding Messrs. Roberts and Meighan.

Everyone is more or less familiar with John Fox's story. It has served as a pattern for all scripts dealing with feuds and moonshine in "them thar hills." And being such an often told tale one's only recourse is to sit back and see if Director Maigne has made it as vital as the book. Its familiarity, however, is against it in so far as inviting any suspense. One knows just what will happen from the moment when the barefooted wildflower encounters the young "furriner." The romance is nowhere near as interesting as the incident and there isn't much of that until the finish when the warring clans invade the valley town and "Devil" Judd Tolliver is killed by a bullet fired from one of his own kin to keep him from a hanging. Otherwise it presents a few arguments between a jealous cousin of the girl and the stranger with whom she has fallen in love.

Its outstanding values are the settings and atmosphere which are picturesque and colorful. The mountain maid is sent North to be "eddicated" and returns after a lapse of time ashamed of her kin. There is nothing to do but wait for the climax when the men from the hills are confronted by deputies. And it is rather disappointing.

Miss Minter does nothing except pose, so the acting falls upon the shoulders of Ernest Torrence who is as lifelke as usual. His comedy scenes with the demijohn of "cawn" whiskey furnish some bright moments. Antonio Moreno is satisfactory as the hero. Call it fair and let it go at that.

The Cast

June Tolliver.....Mary Miles Minter
John Hale.....Antonio Moreno
"Devil" Judd Tolliver.....Ernest Torrence
"Bad" Rufe Tolliver.....Edwin Brady
Ann.....Frances Warner
Buck Fain.....J. S. Stembridge
Dave Tolliver.....Cullen Tate

By John Fox, Jr. Play by Eugene Walter. Scenario by Will M. Ritchey. Directed by Charles Maigne. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—Girl, member of mountaineer family, meets young "furriner" from city and falls in love with him. This arouses the envy of her relatives. But the young man sends her away to be educated. She returns to act as peacemaker in settling the feud between her people and a rival clan.

Classification—Adaptation of the story by John Fox, Jr., and the play by Eugene Walter. Melodrama and romance of life among the Kentucky mountaineers—featuring feuds, moonshine activities, etc.

Production Highlights—The appropriate settings and the first rate atmosphere. The good camera work. The splendid portrayal of Judd Tolliver by Ernest Torrence. Scene when clans gather and surround the courthouse. Scene when prisoner is shot.

Exploitation Angles—Feature the author and the playwright, telling that the picture is founded upon one of the most popular books and which created a big hit on the stage. Use song based upon title for a musical setting—employing a vocalist to put it over. Use an atmospheric lobby display. Feature Ernest Torrence in all your copy. Use stills of Mary Miles Minter.

Drawing Power—Suitable for any downtown house. Also suitable for neighborhood theatres and small towns. Those having seen play or read the book will want to see the picture.

"The Tie That Binds"

Jacob Wilk—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A REGULAR Charles K. Harris sob story, characteristic of the songs which made him famous, is offered in "The Tie That Binds." The picture patron who is not too critical will possibly accept it as average entertainment. It should make a suitable attraction for audiences that are not too discriminate in their tastes.

Not enough incident is involved in the issue whereby the heroine, married to an ambitious inventor, runs off to indulge in riotous gaiety. Certainly, there can be no sympathy for a woman who deliberately leaves her home and child simply because her husband cannot afford to give her the necessary luxuries of life. This, especially after she marries him knowing full well his impoverished circumstances. Weak motivation there.

The central figure in the story is David Winthrop, a designer of mechanical toys. His employer dismisses him when he finds him kissing his confidential secretary. The girl spurns her employer and marries the youth. He labors hard to perfect his invention and the bride begins to play fast and loose. Result? A murder is introduced to give the story a punch. The young husband is accused of killing the designing employer, but further developments reveal the fact that the night watchman of the factory put his boss out of the way for a wrong perpetrated upon his daughter.

"The Tie That Binds" contains very little suspense, and it runs along conventional lines. There are very few exteriors, most of the action taking place in the home of the inventor and the offices of the toy factory. The cast is adequate with none of the players contributing any noteworthv performances, although Barbara Bedford and Walter Miller manage to be sincere.

The Cast

Mary Ellen Gray.....Barbara Bedford
David Winthrop.....Walter Miller
Hiram Foster.....Raymond Hatton
Daniel Kenyon.....William P. Carleton
Charles Dodge.....Robert Edeson
Leila Brant.....Julia Swayne Gordon
Flora Foster.....Marian Swayne
Mrs. Mills.....Effie Shannon
The Baby.....Mary Louise

Written by Charles K. Harris. Adapted by Pearl Keating. Directed by Joseph Levering. Produced by Ben Goetz. Photographed by James A. Robertson.

The Story—A young wife neglects her home and child for the bright lights of New York, but later finds that the love of her husband is far better than all the artificial gaiety offered by a designing toy manufacturer.

Classification—Comedy-drama.

Production Highlights—Cabaret scenes. The murder.

Exploitation Angles—Play up the angle of the neglected husband. The query: What is "The Tie That Binds?" gives a teaser slant that can be used to advantage.

Drawing Power—Suitable for small town and second class houses. An average program offering.

"The Man from Glengarry"

Ernest Shipman-Hodkinson—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A GRAPHIC account of life among the lumberjacks in the reaches of the upper Ottawa River, which while of a familiar design, manages to sustain the interest in Ralph Connor's story, "The Man from Glengarry." It is easy to forsee the development of the story, but because of the vivid action which follows through for four reels and some exceptional backgrounds the picture is certain to be accepted as something worth while, notwithstanding its ancient vintage.

Connor wrote his story many years ago. From the day that it reached the public to the present time, his idea has become one of the favorite formulas of the screen. So it isn't so novel. If the director has missed some of its spiritual significance he has compensated by giving us a he-picture which concerns a burly boss of the timberlands who, having absorbed religion, has a continual conflict with his better nature. He is provoked time and again into giving battle to a vicious Canuck from a rival camp. But he stays his fist and is killed. Thereupon his primitive son vows vengeance.

The picture releases some first rate incident—much of which is positively startling when it shows the lumberjacks piloting the logs down the river and hopping about from log to log with the agility of jack-rabbits. When the story stays out in the open it fascinates the eye and invites considerable suspense, but when it plunges into a society ball room and clears up the complications developing from the rival camps, it often appears confusing and hurried. The romantic interest seems extraneous as the girls who are introduced do nothing of consequence except provide a sentimental balance for the picturesque incident. One of them loses her footing on the logs and the boss' son rescues her from the river. The contlict of the superintendent's daughter to intrigue the hero never rings genuine.

But taken as a whole the picture travels at a good pace, is well constructed up to its final reel, exudes volumes of atmosphere and is staged amid awe-inspiring backgrounds. Most of its characters look genuine, which means that the interpretation is satisfactory. The feature will be remembered for its local color, incident, and exteriors.

The Cast

Big MacDonald.....Anders Randolph
Ronald MacDonald.....Warner P. Richmond
Rev. Alexander Murray.....Harlan Knight
Kate Murray (his daughter).....Marion Swayne
Louis Lenoir.....E. L. Fernandez

Maimie St. Clair.....Pauline Garon
Frank De Lacey.....Frank Badgley
Colonel Thorpe.....William Colvin
Kerstin McLeod.....Marion Lloyd

By Ralph Connor. Scenario by Kenneth O'Hara. Directed by Henry McRae. Produced by Ernest Shipman.

The Story—Glengarry, boss of the lumberjacks, takes up with religion and promises not to fight. Rival leader provokes him into a fight and the latter is killed. His son vows vengeance, but the rival repents and seeks forgiveness. The son is given a fine job at another camp and finds happiness with his sweetheart.

Classification — Melodrama of timberlands carrying usual adventures, action and romance.

Production Highlights—The fine atmosphere. The exceptional backgrounds. The thrills attending the log incidents. The first rate acting contributed by Anders Randolf and Warner Richmond. The scene when the boss is knocked down.

Exploitation Angles—Presents opportunities to tie-up with bookdealers on a campaign of Connor's novels. An atmospheric lobby would stimulate patronage. Ballyhoo the picture with plenty of copy and employ men to advertise it.

Drawing Power—Good for the average public. Suitable for downtown houses, neighborhood houses and throughout small towns.

"Your Friend and Mine"

S-L Metro Special—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

PURE unadulterated hokum. It's a pity to see such a charming and talented actress as Enid Bennett wasting her time and effort on such a picture as this, the only saving grace of which is its cast and some artistic interiors. The story runs according to the usual eternal triangle formula and has been done a million times before and many times better than in this case.

There is nothing new in seeking to sermonize on the naughtiness of wives running around with lounge lizards in the guise of artists who wear silk robes, who dope the wine given their fair guests in island retreats, and whose "ulterior motives" are seen in every glance of their wicked eyes. We've all viewed this stuff time and time again. Ninety-nine per cent of motion picture audiences are getting tired of it. This one won't help one iota in efforts bein- made to improve the screen.

In order to stretch the picture to regular feature length, there is inserted much material having nothing whatever to do with the plot, such as Tableau Vivants, dark persons shooting dice with large square pillow-like "bones" and the reading of a sketch, all told on the screen, of a plot running parallel to the story itself. All this registers tedium.

We've got to hand it to J. H. Frank, however. He sure does his work realistically. He is an ideal selection for the vilainous artist who craves the women. Miss Bennett is always attractive. Willard Mack and Rosemary Theby have minor roles which call for little acting. The situation in which lightning strikes the island retreat of the artist is reminiscent of the early days of picture making. There is another aside story. The artist has tampered with the daughter of another old artist and the girl gradually wastes away pining for her lover. At the close of the picture, this lover walks into his home and finds the girl laid out dead on a bier. How she got there is a mystery. This is not a picture for select audiences.

The Cast

Hugh Stanton.....Huntly Gordon
Patricia Stanton.....Enid Bennett
The Ted Masons.....{Rosemary Theby / Willard Mack}
Victor Reymier.....J. H. Frank
Andrew Martens.....Otto Lederer
Marie.....Allene Ray

Based on the sketch by Willard Mack. Directed by Clarence G. Badger. Scenario by Winifred Dunn. Photographed by R. J. Bergquist.

The Story—Finding her husband more interested in his oil deals than in her, Patricia Stanton listens to the wooings of an "artist." She is lured to his retreat on an island. The Ted Masons hear of it and rush to the rescue Arriving at the place Ted reads his sketch, a new play, which is so closely related to the doings of Patricia that she sees the great light and rushes home with the Masons. She is cured.

Classification—Just another eternal triangle picture.

Production Highlights—Some artistic interiors. The Tableau Vivant staged in the artist's studio. The rushing of the Ted Masons through the storm. Bennett's attractive screen personality. The first rate acting contributed by J. H. Frank.

Exploitation Angles—Play up the names of the cast which contains several favorites. They are all well known. The Tableau Vivant suggests several dance prologues for the picture. The feature should have colorful presentation.

Drawing Power—This picture is suitable for second class downtown first run theatres. Should collect a crowd in small cities. Properly exploited it should get over.

"The Web of the Law"

American Releasing Corp.—4900 Feet

(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

DEVOID of anything original, other than that of casting a real Texas Ranger for the principal role, "The Web of the Law" is another western—just another western. However, it has its merits as well as sad defects. Where westerns are popular the production no doubt would pass muster, despite the fact that the story is woefully weak, possessing the poorest sort of foundation.

Like most pictures of its type, there is the presumably "wealthy" rancher who owes a note to a villainous neighbor; a beautiful daughter, a heroic Texas Ranger who saves the old man's cattle—in fact saves almost everything but the picture—and marries the daughter, after dealing out just dues to the plotting neighbor, who is caught in the act of driving the father's cattle over the Mexican border.

But for physical thrills, exterior shots, et al., that go to make up a western, the production is well fortified. "Ranger Bill" Miller, who is heralded as anything but a screen star, executes the character of a Texas Ranger to perfection. Naturally, as it is first nature with him.

The minute the hero applies at the ranch of the heroine's father for a job, disclosing the fact that he is a Texas Ranger, the climax of the production is evident, although the picture scarcely has more than started. Under the circumstances, as long as such a threadbare story had to be used, the directing is about as well as could be expected.

The Cast

Bill Barton.....Ranger Bill" Miller
Mollie Barbee.....Patricia Palmer
"Wolf" Blake.....George Sherwood
Buck Barbee.....Harry Belmour
Jasper Leveen.....Alfred Heuston
"Slim" Easton.....Jean Walsh
"Sundown" Brown.....Barry Jackson
"Squint" Castile.....Frank Cutter

By Victor Gibson. Directed by Tom Bibson. Produced by American Releasing Corporation. Photographed by Elmer G. Dyer.

The Story—A Texas Ranger suspects foul play is being done to father of heroine. He confides his identity to the father and poses as an employee. A villainous neighbor, to whom the father owes a note, plots to steal his cattle. Before starting on a trip to borrow money, the father's saddle is tampered with, causing his death, but the hero saves the cattle, saves the daughter from villainous hands, and she becomes his wife.

Classification—A western drama and love story of average merit.

Production Highlights—Physical thrills; exterior shots; scene where Texas Ranger rescues heroine.

Exploitation Angles—Why not decorate the lobby with a bit of corral fence and a saddle or so, playing up the fact that a real Texas Ranger plays the leading male role?

Drawing Power—Small town or neighborhood theatre only. No chance in the larger first runs.

"Nobody's Bride"

Universal—4861 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IF you can overlook the far-fetched plot of this melodrama and can forgive the gaps in it, just accepting it as sheer fiction far removed from life, you will doubtless find moments of interest in it. It features the activities of a gang of crooks who kidnap a bride, and also treats of a disappointed suitor of the girl who is picked up from the gutter by a feminine accomplice of the thugs, and who through the medium of coincidence reenters the life of the fair heroine, finds regeneration and aids in capturing the lawbreakers.

Rawlinson is not so awkward in this feature since he is called upon to appear subdued in most of his scenes. Why not considering that he topples over from starvation and is wounded by a bullet which should have made him battle for life, but only leaves a tiny puncture and considerable powder marks upon his brow. The bride is the victim of mercenary relatives who would marry her off to the highest bidder. But she escapes in her wedding finery, taking a bag which the crooked butler has filled with the wedding gifts. She carries it as lightly as if it contained nothing heavier than a piece of lingerie. A crude scene. And the discarded sweetheart, an innocent employee of the thugs, takes her to their quarters not knowing that he is entering the lion's den. A few fights take place there, and then the two sweethearts are locked up pending a settlement with the rich relatives. A newspaper scarehead features the kidnapping of the girl, but the police are strangely absent from any investigation. It culminates in the fair accomplice double-crossing her partners and sending for the officers. A bit of gun-play between the minions of the law and the crooks finishes the climax. Nothing is explained about the bag. The thugs had ample time to cash in on the loot. But they are a stupid lot.

The picture is awkwardly developed but furnishes some suspense and a thrill or two. Frank Brownlee does the best work as one of the crooks—all of whom are theatric with their loud ties and trick clothes. A fair picture for an average audience.

The Cast

Jimmy Nevin.....Herbert Rawlinson
Doris Standish.....Edna Murphy
Mary Butler.....Alice Lake
Morgan.....Harry Van Meter
Vesher Charley.....Frank Brownlee
Smithy, the dip.....Sidney Bracey
Cyrus W. Hopkins.....Phillips Smalley
Uncle Peter Standish.....Robert Dudley
Mrs. Myrtle Standish.....Lillian Langdon

By Evelyn Campbell. Scenario by Albert Kenyon. Directed by Herbert Blache. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Disappointed suitor becomes down and out but is rescued from gutter by girl crook. He is employed to drive a car carrying thieves with their loot from his erstwhile sweetheart's wedding. But the bride runs away and accidentally meets him. Thereupon he acts as her protector and gets back on his feet when he realizes that she still loves him. Girl and youth are held prisoners by kidnappers but are rescued.

Classification—Crook melodrama featuring a kidnapped bride and the "highest bidder" formula.

Production Highlights—The suspense in the concluding reels. Scene when hero is introduced to crooks. The adequate acting by Frank Brownlee.

Exploitation Angles—Cast comprises some well known players. Play them up. Feature it as lively crook melodrama. Use title for a teaser campaign treating upon the girl who is sold to the highest bidder.

Drawing Power—This one is suitable for second class downtown neighborhood houses.

"Has the World Gone Mad!"

Goodman-Equity—6500 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

DANIEL CARSON GOODMAN has written a sort of sequel to his "What's "Wrong With the Women?" with his latest entry, "Has the World Gone Mad?" Here he takes up in dramatic fashion the evil effects of too much jazz and cabaret life as they interfere in preserving the sanctity of the home. The author has not indulged in a preachment, yet what he tells here should have its value in pointing good, sound advice and a healthy moral.

He has employed a quadrangle situation to force home the logic of his argument—showing the hectic career of a wife and mother who refuses to stay around home, once the duty of bringing up her son is completed. Her husband pleads and threatens—but to no avail. She is bent upon following the primrose path. The apartment parties which have featured her week-ends are not so far wrong if one is in the know concerning these wild affairs as they flourish in the metropolis at the present time. Her son has grown to manhood and loves a girl whose father is cut from the same cloth as the boy's mother. So the author plunges into his conflict showing the girl's father and the youth's mother carrying on an adventure which threatens to destroy two homes, until the daughter discovers her gay dad in her sweetheart's mother's apartment.

The climax is reached in a dramatic manner when the mother realizes how she has sinned against her husband, her son and the latter's fiancee. She deliberately invites a scene before a group of her parasitical friends. And a reconciliation is effected in the two homes.

The author deserves as much credit for what he has wisely left out as for what he has introduced. There is no ripe melodrama and yet the opportunity offered itself to inject a volume of hokum. There is a fire but the engines are not called. There is a sumptuous cabaret scene when the erring father is surprised by his wife and daughter, but no melodramatic fireworks are exploded for the sake of adding a punch. The philanderer leaves the place quietly, thinking himself unobserved.

The picture is constructed logically and is genuine in its treatment. All the scenes are in place and most of them are lavishly mounted—particularly the cabaret set. It stimulates interest all the way and is capitally acted by Charles Richman as the gay adventurer. His subtleties of expression are finely executed. Mary Alden makes the wife a pitiful figure and Hedda Hopper as the giddy spouse gives a vivid portrayal of the modern woman who worships at the shrine of Jazz. A highly enjoyable audience picture.

The Cast

Mr. Adams.....Robert Edeson
Mrs. Adams.....Hedda Hopper
Their Son.....Vincent Coleman
Mrs. Bell.....Mary Alden
Mr. Bell.....Charles Richman
Their Daughter.....Elinor Fair
Cabaret Dancer.....Lyda Lola

By Daniel Carson Goodman. Directed by J. Searle Dawley.

The Story—Prosperous husband and father has giddy wife who does not believe in the sanctity of the home. She is firm disciple of the jazz age. After a quarrel she leaves the home and maintains herself in apartment where comes the father of her son's sweetheart to pay her ardent courtship. The girl discovers her father and pleads with the woman to give him up. Finally she learns to appreciate the marriage vows and the sanctity of the home.

Classification—Domestic triangle, or rather quadrangle conflict between the home and the cabaret.

"The Nth Commandment"

Cosmopolitan—Eight Reels

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

HERE'S another "Humoresque." Just as human, just as true to life, just as finely acted. In fact everyone is going to talk about the work of Colleen Moore as the brave little wife in this story of New York's upper and under worlds. And inasmuch as we all expect lavishness in Cosmopolitan productions, no one will be disappointed in this one on that score. Fannie Hurst's works are always worth while and this one is a treat for a public jaded with a tidal wave of film slush.

The same trio that made "Humoresque" corroborated on this classic in film form. Frank Borzage directed, Frances Marion prepared the script for the screen and Miss Hurst supplied the tale. A triumverate inimitable when you want to get away from the beaten path of things. "The Nth Commandment" is a page from life. The same story is being lived every day not only in New York, but in most of the other large cities of these United States. Its human interest moments will strum at the heart strings of the stone faced folk.

Miss Moore's portrayal of the role of Sara Juke is a living, breathing thing. It's one of the best bits of acting this star has ever contributed to screen literature.

One of the highlights of the picture are the subtitles. They are well written and are filled with Gotham atmosphere. The scenes in lavish hotel set, which by the way is one of the most sumptuous cabaret scenes ever staged, are filled with humor as well as tender appeal. There is a full quota of dramatic situations. The skating rink scenes are well done. The photography and lighting are unusually artistic. The plot takes you up to a climax filled with suspense. "The Nth Commandment" is one of the best things of the season to date.

The Cast

Sara Juke.....Colleen Moore
Harry Smith.....James Morrison
Max Plute.....George Cooper
Angie Sprint.....Charlotte Meriam
Jimmy Fitzgibbons.....Edward Phillips

By Fannie Hurst. Directed by Frank Borzage. Scenario by Frances Marion. Photographed by Chester Lyons.

The Story.—Sara Juke, a department store girl, in love with Harry Smith, is vamped by Jimmy Fitzgibbons, who rises in to the world as Harry slips. Eventually, however, Sara and Harry wed, but the latter becomes seriously ill and is ordered South before the snow flies. The little family gets deeply into debt. Sara, desperate, wins $300 by dancing. The little family end up in California.

Classification—An absorbing tale of life in New York's maelstrom.

Production Highlights—The work of Colleen Moore as Sara. The fine supporting cast. The lavish cabaret scene. The artistic lighting and camera effects.

Exploitation Angles—Boost this as another "Humoresque," by the same trio that made that famous picture. Play up the names of the fine cast. The title offers suggestions for tieups with the church folk.

Drawing Power—Suitable for presentation in the largest first run houses. It should be a box office winner anywhere.

"Jacqueline or Blazing Barriers"

Pine Tree-Arrow—6400 Feet

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

THERE is an awe-inspiring impressiveness about the sweep of a great forest fire that is undeniable, and in "Jacqueline or Blazing Barriers." Director Dell Henderson has succeeded in producing a raging conflagration that is all the most jaded movie fan could ask.

When you add to such a holocaust a hero and a heroine in peril, with the hero rescuing the scoundrel whom he believes the heroine loves, you have melodrama at its best.

Even this, however, is not the high spot of the picture, in the way of thrills. To our mind, the sequence in which a flimsy canoe is piloted through Devil's Gorge, buffeted and tossed about by the swirling waters, barely escaping the jagged rocks and in momentary danger of upsetting its two occupants into the angry stream, is a distinct picture achievement. It is the sort of thing which is properly the province of the screen—the sort of thing the stage can never do and which fiction can only faintly mirror.

The cast is an excellent one, embracing many familiar names. Lew Cody, a sterling actor, is cast as the male lead, and proves as capable a hero as he once was villain. As Raoul Radon, a son of the forest, he is a virile and pleasing figure. Opposite him is Marguerite Courtot, a demure and charming feminine lead. Sheldon Lewis contributes a picturesque "heavy" characterization. Three clever youngsters are in the cast—Russell Griffin, Joseph Depew and Baby Helen Rowland—and a goodly share of the picture's appeal must be credited to their work. Excellent character work is contributed by other members of the cast, including Charlie Fang, Edmund Breese, Gus Weinburg, Effie Shannon, J. Barney Sherry, Paul Panzer, and Edria Fisk, a beauty contest newcomer to the screen.

"Jacqueline" is good melodrama, with heart interest and romance, and should be a successful audience picture.

"Taxie".....By Himself

Directed by Dell Henderson. Story by James Oliver Curwood. Adapted by Thomas F. Fallon and Dorothy Farnum. Photographed by George Peters, Charles Downs and Dan Maher. Pine Tree Production.

The Story—Raoul Radon is in love with Jacqueline Roland, whom he has loved since childhood. She goes to the city on a visit and meets Henri Dubois. Dubois comes to the lumber camp as boss. For his cruelty to a child, Radon beats up Dubois, who has him jailed. Through deception, Dubois convinces Radon that Jacqueline is in love with himself and not Radon. Radon wanders away. A forest fire starts, and he saves Dubois for Jacqueline's sake. After a thrilling canoe ride, a bridge is dynamited to check the spread of the fire. Jacqueline and Radon are reunited, and the truth comes out, all ending happily.

Classification—North Woods melodrama.

Production Highlights. — The canoe ride through Devil's Gorge. The forest fire. The dynamiting of the bridge. The excellent work of the cast. The capable production.

Exploitation Angles—The cast of well known names. The spectacular fire scenes. James Oliver Curwood. Lobby might be decorated with rough hewn log slabs. Shadow-box with fire effect.

Drawing Power—Suitable for second class downtown and neighborhood houses.

"You Are Guilty"

Edgar Lewis-C. C. Burr—5000 Feet

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

EXCELLENCE of cast and some splendid direction on the part of Edgar Lewis are the outstanding features of "You are Guilty." The story material is not especially new, but some excellent characterizations and directorial touches in a large measure redeem this.

The honors of the picture are in a large measure stolen by little Russell Griffin, who reveals here a winning personality and a great histrionic gift. Totally without camera consciousness, he enters thoroughly into the spirit of the piece and enlivens it materially.

It would not be fair, however, to overlook James Kirkwood's sincere portrayal of the down-and-outer. Kirkwood, who has astonished Broadway in "The Fool," appears here as a self-sacrificing stepson, and plays it in convincing and workmanlike fashion. Mary Carr, too, is in the cast, as a loveable old mother, and contributes a sympathetic note to the story. Doris Kenyon is in the leading feminine role, and good character portrayals are given by Robert Edeson, Edmund Breeze, Carleton Brickert and William Riley Hatch.

Mention must be made of the titling of this picture, done by Gerald C. Duffy, the fictionist. These possess far more of imagination and punch than the common run, and contribute much to the sum total effect.

The story material is conventional, on the whole, centering about a man who assumes the guilt for his step-brother's crime, for the sake of the mother, and the real interest of the story, to us, at least, lay in the incidents in which Master Griffin and Kirkwood appear—such as the soldier scenes and the courtroom sequence. In these, the young player's exuberance and childish appeal show at their best.

An incident in the picture, trivial in itself, perhaps, but which is likely to register a hit wth the audience, is the introduction of a dog that wags his tail in time with a drum, as beaten by Master Griffin. This incident, apparently genuine, is one of those little touches that save many a picture.

The courtroom scene, too, is given a most amusing twist when the youngster, his dog having been taken to the pound, enters the courtroom and announces to "Uncle Judge" that he wants his dog back. When the judge orders him put out, he runs to the witness stand, and remembering a game they have played, cries, "Now you can't touch me!"

On the whole, this may be classed as a trite story which has been well produced and enlivened with interesting incident and some excellent acting.

The Cast

Stephen Martin.....James Kirkwood
Alice Farrell.....Doris Kenyon
Theodore Tennent.....Robert Edeson
Mrs. Grantwood.....Mary Carr
"Buddy" Tennent.....Russell Griffin
Judge Elkins.....Edmund Breese
Joseph D. Grantwood.....Carleton Brickert
Murphy.....William Riley Hatch

Story by Roy Middleton. Directed by Edgar Lewis. Produced by Mastodon Films, Inc.

The Story—Steve Grantwood assumes the guilt of embezzlement by Joseph, his step-brother, for the sake of the mother. He goes away and becomes a wanderer, leaving those behind, including his fiancee, believing him guilty. After a time, the girl marries another. Steve returns, but is unable to prove his innocence. The girl is now a widow. He saves her son from a fire. Joseph is murdered, and circumstances point to Steve, but his presence at the fire furnishes an alibi and he is freed, and, through the child, reunited with the girl.

Classification—Heart interest drama.

Production Highlights—The work of Russell Griffin and James Kirkwood. The direction. The fire scenes.

Exploitation Angles—Play up the cast. Use the title strongly, possibly as the basis of a teaser campaign. Essay contest on whether it is ever right for one man to assume another's guilt.

Drawing Power—Suitable for second-class downtown and for neighborhood houses.

"The Tiger's Claw"

Paramount—5700 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A TRITE story on the racial barrier theme and lacking any ingenuity whatsoever is "The Tiger's Claw," which presents Jack Holt against an Indian background, where he is successful in rescuing a half-caste girl from Bengal tigers. He becomes so badly wounded that she is forced to act as his nurse. Old stuff, you say? But wait. He marries this delectable creature and then the expected happens. His former sweetheart, who he has left back home, comes on the scene to stir up the familiar conflict. They had separated over some trivial misunderstanding.

Just one moment of novelty shows itself. The American remains steadfast in his devotion to his Hindu bride. Then it's up to the author to employ the expedient of getting rid of the pretty half-caste by painting her as faithless. Yes, she returns to Raj Singh, a man of her own race.

It's an old story, isn't it? And it never leaves its familiar groove. Any one who has been attending picture entertainment the past ten years can spot every situation the very moment the first subtitle is flashed. The sponsors don't show anything new even in the finish. To eliminate any complications after the white girl has drifted to India they resort to the simple convenience of killing off the half-caste. So the eternal triangle is never once suggested.

The story is unconvincing which of course makes its characters unreal. In its favor are some appropriate locations carrying an atmospheric flavor. And a thrill over the dynamiting of a dam. Aileen Pringle makes the Hindu girl a colorful maid, and Jack Holt is as romantic as the story allows.

The Cast

Sam Sandell, an American engineer.....Jack Holt
Harriet Halehurst.....Eva Novak
Henry Frazer Halehurst.....Periolat
Raj Singh.....Bertram Grassby
Chameli Brentwood, a half caste.....Aileen Pringle
Sathoo, a Thug chief.....Karl Stockdale
George Malvin, an Inspector.....Frank Butler
Prince.....George Field
Azun, Chameli's mother.....Evelyn Selbie
Col. Byng.....Frederick Vroom
Goyrem.....Lucien Littlefield
Sothern.....Robert Cain

Scenario by Jack Cunningham. Directed by Joseph Henebery. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—American engineer gets a job in India where after rescuing half-caste girl from a tiger he marries her. His old sweetheart happens on the scene which arouses envy of the Indian maid. She turns to a man of her own race and after her death the American marries the English girl.

Classification—Romance featuring the racial barrier.

Production Highlights—The appealing performance of Aileen Pringle. The well developed scenario. The dynamiting of the dam. The atmosphere.

Exploitation Angles—East Indian dances in your prologue would help. Employ someone made up similar to Miss Pringle to execute the dances. Feature it as romantic drama of the East.

Drawing Power—Suitable for neighborhood and downtown houses.

"Bella Donna"

Paramount—7895 Feet

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

AFTER one has gasped at the unusually elaborate settings with which Paramount has provided this sure fire box office attraction and after making a mental note of the staggering figure which must have been reached in putting "Bella Donna" on the shadow stage in its present form, we find that the most interesting feature is to study the difference in the Pola Negri that we have known in the foreign films and the distinctly new Pola as revealed in this picture, which we predict is about to knock all attendance records into oblivion.

"Bella Donna" brings to the screen a new star; it is almost impossible to compare Miss Negri's work here with former vehicles from overseas. Under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, with the support of a real cast, gowned in some of the most gorgeous garments that have ever been seen on the screen and photographed in American style, Miss Negri will astonish her hosts of admirers on this side of the big pond. Her work is a justification of any expense to which Paramount may have gone to bring her to Yankeeland.

"Bella Donna" is a revelation from a scenic viewpoint. It is astonishing in its realism. It is almost impossible to believe that the "Egypt," the "London," the "Venice," we see in this picture are manufactured. All credit to the master hands that have built these massive and beautiful sets. The masquerade ball which starts the picture unreeling in its continued brilliance, the ruins of old Egypt, the scenes along the Nile, on the houseboat, in the hasheesh den, in befogged London, in Baroudi's tent, in the vast stretches of the desert—all are marvels of screencraft.

The acting is flawless as contributed by the star, Conway Tearle, Conrad Nagel, Claude Kind, Lois Wilson, Macey Harlem and Adolphe Menjou. The screen story is one of unusual interest. It grips from beginning to end and is one possessing a steady flow of dramatic situations in many of which Miss Negri rises to ethereal heights of emotional acting.

The Cast

Ruby Chepstow, later Bella Donna.....Pola Negri
Wodehouse Chepstow.....Adolphe Menjou
Mahamoud Baroudi.....Conway Tearle
Nigel Armine.....Conrad Nagel
Dr. Meyer Isaacson.....Claude King
Patrician Ames.....Lois Wilson
Ibrahim.....Macey Harlem

By Robert Hichens. Scenario by Ouida Bergere. Directed by George FitzMaurice.

The Story—Ruby Chepstow craving love, beauty and power finds herself alone and miserable after her husband is jailed for throwing one of her ardent suitors in a Venetian canal. Discouraged she is about to take her life, but a maid saves her. Nigel Armine, an engineer, hears the shot and rushes to her room. Ruby has taken the name of Bella Donna. Nigel is infatuated with her. She sees her long sought power waning in Egypt and goes to Baroudi, who persuades her to poison her husband. Nigel is told of his wife's plot, and Bella, discarded by Baroudi for another, walks into the barren wastes of the desert.

Classification—A colorful and passionate tale of the desert, Venice and London, with a remarkable background and the magnetic Pola in the star role.

Production Highlights—The wonderful Venetian and Egyptian settings and elaborate carnival scenes. The thrilling sand storm.

Exploitation Angles—Be sure and emphasize that this is Pola's first American picemphasize that this is Pola's first American picture. The Egyptian theme suggests an Oriental dance prologue. The rage of King Tut-Ankh-Amen will help you in your tieups with merchants, etc.

Drawing Power—A sure fire box office attraction anywhere at anytime.

Regional News From Correspondents

Seattle Bulletins and News of Northwest

G. G. MAXEY, formerly manager of the Associated First National Exhibitors' exchange is now key representative for the Film Booking Offices in the Northwestern territory. I. Schlank, formerly a salesman for A. B. Metzger's local F.B.O. exchange, is manager of the Omaha F.B.O. branch. Mr. Maxey has been manager of the First National exchange in this city since November, 1922, when he succeeded L. O. Lukan, now connected with the Blue Mouse circuit.

Two new film men have joined the Seattle office of Goldwyn and are now working under the direction of W. E. Bamford, exchange manager. Dave Farquher, formerly manager of the Select office in Salt Lake City, will work from Portland, and "Butch" Wingham, recently a salesman for Universal and F.B.O., will handle work out of the Seattle office.

Leon Bories has just joined the Seattle office of Universal and will specialize on selling Universal features in and around the local territory. J. L. Schlaifer, manager of the exchange, recently donated the use of two Harry Carey and Jack London two-reelers to the Zillah, Wash., Boy Scouts organization for a special show put on by the Scouts and has received an extremely appreciative letter thanking him for his kindness to them .

The series of twelve Heeza Liar cartoons now being handled by Manager J. R. Beal of the local Hodkinson exchange have been booked with the Blue Mouse circuit in Seattle, Tacoma and Portland. "Fun From the Press," another Hodkinson short reel that is finding favor among Northwest exhibitors, is being shown at the Coliseum and Winter Garden theatres in this city.

"Safety Last," the latest Harold Lloyd comedy, has arrived at the Pathe office, and was given a preview at the Liberty theatre recently by Paul Lynch, manager of the exchange. The opinion of the members of the Jensen-VonHerberg personnell who saw the picture was that it eclipsed all previous efforts of the comedian.

"The Marriage Chance" has been booked by Manager Louis Amacher of the American Releasing exchange with the Blue Mouse theatre in this city for an engagement beginning the end of April.

"Java Head" and "Kick In" are two of the latest Paramount pictures that have been booked with the Jensen-VonHerberg circuit by George P. Endert, manager of the Famous-Players exchange and are due for Seattle showing in the near future. "Kick In" was scheduled to follow "Robin Hood" at Manager Leroy V. Johnson's Liberty theatre.

"Peg O' My Heart" has been booked with Manager H. B. Wright of the Strand for early showing, by the local Metro exchange.

The Auditorium theatre at Ione, Oregon, under the direction of E. P. Rich, has been closed, according to advice received on Film Row this week.

J. L. Johnston, publicity and exploitation manager for the First National exchange here returned to the city after a three week tour around the Washington and Montana circuit.

J. A. Gage, manager of the Educational exchange has left for a short tour around the local territory with "The Message of Dr. Coue." Wallace Rucker, Educational salesman, returned to the city last week for a few days after a month's trip in Washington and Oregon, and left again to return to his territory.

All Seattle employes of the Greater Theatres company, operating the Coliseum, Strand, Liberty and Neptune theatres, were guests of the company at a supper and dance given at the Liberty theatre recently. The affair began at 10:30 p. m. A number of special entertainment numbers were provided. J. G. VonHerberg and H. B. Wright were the speakers on the program. The upper floor of the theatre was elaborately decorated for the occasion, and several novel musical and vaudeville numbers were included on the program, which was arranged under the direction of the managers of the four houses. More than one hundred persons attended the affair.

"Thorns and Orange Blossoms" and "The Hero," two of the latest Al Lichtman Corporation productions have been booked by the Blue Mouse theatre of this city, according to an announcement made by John Hamrick, president of the Blue Mouse circuit. These are the first Lichtman productions to be presented at the Blue Mouse. Playing dates have not been definitely decided.

Seattle downtown theatres are looking forward to slightly increased attendance from now on, as a result of the recent reduction to five cents of the local street car fare. For many months the fare was six and one-quarter cents and then eight and one-third cents, and the reduction came only after a hard campaign on the part of the citizens. Theatres of the city banded together when the fare was lowered and used a full page advertisement in Seattle papers emphasizing the lower fare and the increased economy with which people could attend the theatres.

Because the picture could remain in Seattle only one week, Manager H. B. Wright was forced to give two extra performances of Charles Chaplin in "The Pilgrim" the first day of its engagement at the Strand theatre. The first performance began at 10 o'clock in the morning, and continued on a two hour schedule with the second extra performance beginning at midnight. "Toll of the Sea" was the other longer subject used on the bill with "The Pilgrim," and the novelty was enjoyed by Seattle patrons.

Admission prices for evening shows at John Danz's Colonial theatre were recently raised from ten to twenty cents. The Colonial is the largest downtown second run house in the city. The ten cent at any time policy was begun by Mr. Danz several months ago, but the increased elaborateness of programs at the theatre necessitated the raise which has just gone into effect.

WINNERS of the Daily Bulletin-Graf and Warfield Motion Picture Contest have just been announced by Manager Lionel H. Keene, marking the end of the race for film-fame in which 73 candidates competed. The contestans were first enrolled in the Daily Bulletin. Then all were given the "studio screen test," with professional equipment, settings, etc., on the stage before the audience during the regular performances at Loew's Warfield.

Then came the week of voting during which patrons registered their choice of candidates as the "tests" were shown on the screen. This was the most trying ordeal of all as some of the candidates had a comic effect on the audiences.

Paul Powell, director for the Graf Production "In The Fog," who chose the girls is so pleased with them he will use practically all in the present picture. The winners of the contest are: Ruth Royce, Elizabeth Hood, Alice Thompson, Frances Bell, Bernice Coleman, Dorothea Sommers, Barbara Barrington, Erial Tellegan, Myrtle Fonts and Ermay Goodleigh.

Thomas Wilkes, of the Alcazar theatre who controls a chain of playhouses in the West has invaded the New York field, according to an announcement just received from him.

Louise Dresses has arrived in San Francisco to join a galaxy of stars now appearing before the camera of Graf productions for their forthcoming production "The Fog" which is being filmed at the Pacific Studios.

The synco-symphonists of the "Granada" have just been featured in an act "On the Atlantic." Mirth and melody prevail through the whole act. Wilbur Hall, funny man, of the orchestra, assisted by Rube Crozier, impersonated "Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Shean." Numerous requests have been made for this number. On one occasion they were called out 15 times.

War veterans and other patients at Letterman General Hospital were recently entertained with a concert. The musicians were from the Granada, Imperial, Portola and California theatres. It was one of a series of entertainments which are being given at Red Cross House by local talent.

A. A. Richards of Modesto, opened a beautiful and thoroughly modern theatre of 900 seat there last week. It is called the Richards.

Bob Sharp, well known publicity man of the Liberty and Strand theatres of Fresno, has been in the hospital for some time as the result of a serious operation, but is now on the road to recovery.

ROBERT D. HUTCHINSON, for seven years manager of the Lyric theatre and for four years manager of the Folly theatre at Oklahoma City, and one of the best known theatrical men in the country, has been appointed manager of the Liberty theatre at Oklahoma City, Okla., succeeding H. W. McCall, resigned to enter private business, it is reported, in Arkansas.

Charles E. Hutchinson, brother of Robert D. Hutchinson, and at present assistant manager of the Orpheum theatre, has been appointed manager of the Folly theatre. The position of assistant manager of the Orpheum will not be filled for the present, as the Orpheum will likely close for the season in June.

James H. Cooper, the popular manager of the Criterion theatre at Oklahoma City, Okla., left Sunday, March 11th, for a visit in New York City and other eastern points, where he will combine business with pleasure.

Yeggmen entered the office of the Majestic theatre at Oklahoma City, Okla., Sunday night, March 4th, and after having broken the combination lock of the safe took over $500 in currency and made their escape, leaving no clue as to their identity. Morris Lowenstein, the manager, has offered a large reward for the bandits' capture and conviction.

For a number of months the matter of closing the moving picture shows and other forms of amusement on Sunday at Henrietta, Okla has been agitated.

The movement has strong supporters, many who want Sunday baseball included, but a large number of baseball fans residing at Henrietta protesting, the stoppage of Sunday baseball will not be included in the petition to be submitted to the city council.

The theatre owners have informed the council that they are willing for the citizens to decide if a Sunday law in Henrietta is wanted and the city attorney has been instructed to see that a ballot is taken during the general election in April.

Boston Briefs and New England Bulletins

FOR six years now Charles H. Ross has guided the destinies of the Lancaster theatre, Boston, and that means since its birth. Situated as it is at one of the city's great railroad terminals, it has had to a great extent what might be called a floating population, though there was a large and regular attendance from that neighborhood also. Now, when it is flourishing, he has left it, knowing that it will continue, and has become manager of the Fenway theatre, one of the most popular small houses in the city. He says that he is going to give Boston something that it has had too little of, prologues, and to that end has announced his intention of importing at least six artists from New York in connection with the billing of "The Christian," Goldwyn's special production.

CHAS. H. ROSS

Dr. Piero Antonio Gariazzo's motion pictures of Bible stories were given a trial showing last Wednesday at Tremont Temple in Lorimer Hall, the audience consisting of clergy and representatives of Boston churches. The verdict of those people, who had come with the idea that the right kind of sacred films could at this time fill a great spiritual and educational need, expressed unanimous approval of the story of Joseph, as depicted in four reels The filming was done in Egypt and the Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc., are now placing them in churches of the country. There are 52 reels, the work of an Italian company, said to have cost $3,000,000.

The Rialto theatre, Lawrence, has been leased for a period of ten years to Edward F. O'Brien and John E. Tierney of that city. The theatre will be made into an auditorium and only the stage will be left intact. The entire interior will be made over, a new floor laid, and the place made suitable for conventions, sporting events, and the like. It is thought it will be ready by Labor Day.

L. H. Raymond, formerly of Pittsfield, Mass., and who was recently made manager of the Capitol theatre, Springfield, has taken up his duties at the new post. Until the weather gets better for moving he will retain his residence in Pittsfield. He was manager of Goldstein's Colonial theatre, of Pittsfield, for nearly four years, and before going there was in Fall River for the Loew interests.

The week of March 11 was anniversary week for Loew's State theatre, Boston, the largest motion picture house in the city and almost the newest. Manager Joseph H. Brennan put on a special celebration bill for the occasion, engaged a coloraturo soprano, Marjorie Moody, for many shekels, for 'tis said she joins the Chicago Opera Company next season; led the films with "Where the Pavement Ends," and sat down to watch standing room sold out every night. Marcus Loew came to Boston for the occasion, met every one both at the theatre and the Metro exchange, and departed satisfied. Joe Brennan says the first year has brought success and business to the house far beyond expectations, beyond their fondest dreams. Most Saturday nights see 'em lined up in both directions way down the street.

Students of the night high school at Springfield, Mass., have evolved a new method of financing their graduation gift to the school. More than 1,000 persons witnessed a motion picture program last week presented by the graduating class in the hall of the High School of Commerce. They garnered in $150 on the venture, which, we say, would buy a good present

Manager Stephen Fitzgibbons of F. B. O. Boston office says that "The Third Alarm" exceeded his fondest hopes last week at the Modern theatre, Lawrence, Mass. The police were called to the house Sunday afternoon to quell a disturbance at the entrance. The house was sold out, but the scores still outside were bound they would get in. One of the lobby doors was torn off in the melee. That's what exploitation does.

RUMORS persist that the Church Federation of Indianapolis plans soon to start some sort of court action looking toward closing of local theatres on Sunday. The Rev. C. H. Winders, executive secretary, had a conference with Prosecutor William P. Evans some time ago but declined to discuss the rumor which first sprang up after this.

With the advent of warmer weather, Dr. Herman G. Morgan, city sanitarian, has warned theatre-owners and proprietors of other public buildings to guard against heating over 70 degrees. He says overheating is worse from the standpoint of public health than underheating, in some respects. Thinking of the heat bills nobody objected to this warning.

Gustav G. Schmidt, president of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of Indiana and operator and part proprietor of the Crystal and Stratford, started construction last week of a new $150,000 business block and neighborhood movie theatre at College and Fairfield avenues. Schmidt declared he believes Indianapolis has reached the stage where a fine neighborhood house will pay because of downtown traffic congestion. The new theatre will be modern in every respect with beautiful finishing, 1,200 capacity, pipe organ and other first-class features.

The location is in the midst of one of the best North Side residence districts on a corner which the city plan commission had set aside as a site for a community center. Schmidt said he planned to make his house just this.

Buffalo Notes and Western New York News

INTRODUCING C. W. Anthony, manager of the Vitagraph exchange, 257 Franklin street, Buffalo. Mr. Anthony is celebrating his first anniversary as head of the local exchange and his fifth or so with the company. Since coming to the Queen City of the Lakes, C. W. has put Vitagraph on the exhibitorial map just about 100 per cent—or more. He is so popular that home office officials come up from New York almost every week end to chat with him. Ask Mr. Blasdon. C. W. comes from Pittsburgh but he has been able to live that down and he says that he finds it more economical to live in Buffalo than Pittsburgh because one can keep one's collar on for a week at a time. Just now Mr. Anthony is planning to break booking records at the local exchange with "Masters of Men," for which he is arranging a screening party in each key city.

C. W. ANTHONY

Colonel James Fater is back in town. He's now in charge of the Buffalo Al Lichtman office in the Bond Photoplays corporation building. Jim was formerly manager of the Hodkinson office, then he went with Paramount. Watch Jim. He's got some great stuff.

Miss Jennie Barone, formerly contract clerk at the Fox exchange, has resigned to accept a position as secretary to the Hon. James G. Fater, Al Lichtman manager. Jennie has been with Fox five years. They'll miss her, no doubt.

R. A. White, general sales manager for the Fox Film company, has been in Buffalo conferring with Branch Manager Charles N. Johnston.

M. Cohen, Warner Brothers' exchange manager, is all set on his subsequent runs in the territory and is now looking forward to the arrival of prints of "Main Street." Norman Speer is in Rochester for W. B. and Nat Marcus in Syracuse and Utica.

J. E. Flynn, vice president of Goldwyn, was in town last week for a visit with Tom Brady, local chief. J. E. was enthusiastic over the "bigstuff" about to be released by his company. He pumped this enthusiasm into Tom and the whole office force.

As was to be expected Gene Marken's new spring suit is the talk of Film Row. It is the last word in swank. No wonder he's way ahead in the sales contest. No one can resist this fellow. He's too darned charming for words.

Western New York exhibitors, especially those in the towns, are due for a real shock soon as the roads are open. Col. Howard Brink, Educational chieftain, has purchased a new Willys-Knight coupe-sedan, one of those trick bodies, not a coupe, not a sedan, you know class all over. Well when Howard bursts into town in this royal equipage and pulls up in front of the local picture palace—well it's going to be one of the events of the year.

Harry Dixon, F. B. O. salesman de luxe, bowled with some fellow exchange men and exhibitors one day last week and rolled a 204. No one has been able to talk to Harry since.

Ben Gulick has arrived in town to manage the local First Graphic exchange.

Mrs. Bork has resigned as secretary to Ralph Myerson of Macmy Pictures.

Harry Gans, formerly manager of the American Releasing office in Albany, has come to Buffalo to join the Hodkinson sales force. He will cover the Syracuse and Utica territory, formerly covered by Paul Shaver who has resigned. "Popsy" Carrick, local branch manager, has returned from a conference at the home office. Early this week he visited Rochester where he signed up "The Kaiser in Exile" for presentation at the Eastman theatre. He has also booked this interesting short subject with the Robbins circuit.

Peter D. Dana, in charge of the office force for Hodkinson in Buffalo, is a popular young man along Film Row. Although a newcomer to Buffalo, Pete has won a host of friends among exhibitors and exchange men. Pete started in the business at Hodkinson office in New York last May and came to the Queen City of the Lakes in June, succeeding J. L. Daly. Mr. Dana brought his bride to Buffalo with him. Between "Popsy" Carrick, manager of the Hodkinson exchange, and Mr. Dana, Hodkinson products are being put on the map 100 per cent here-

Clayton H. Pfeiffer, assistant to Earl Brink, booking manager at the Buffalo Paramount exchange, jumped into the film business from the automobile game. Clayton was formerly associated with the Pierce-Arrow Motor Car Company. However, when he saw those cars being turned out all around him, and finding himself unable to get one for his own personal use unless he worked for at least 100 years, he decided to go away from there—where the temptation would not lead him to rob a bank or something desperate. He now hopes to become a millionaire in the film business. Here's wishing him luck.

CLAYTON PFEIFFER

Otto Siegel has signed up a big contract with Si Bunce, proprietor of the Savoy theatre, Buffalo, for the entire output of the company. J. H. Gecox, special representative out of the New York office, is now working in the Buffalo territory. The girls at the Goldwyn exchange have received post cards from Mrs. George A. Hickey, wife of the former manager of the exchange, who is now touring Europe.

H. E. Hughes has resigned as a member of the local Hodkinson sales staff. He was formerly employed by Realart, Fox and other exchanges.

Bob Harris has resigned as manager of the local American Releasing exchange to accept the position of local manager for Al Lichtman in the Albany territory.

W. G. Gehring, better known as just plain Bill, Rochester representative for the local Fox exchange, is going to jump off next September. He's decided to join the ranks of those happily married. The bride will be Miss Frances Fell of Buffalo.

George Canty, Bond Photoplays corporation salesman, has been transferred from the Southern Tier to Rochester. George Ferguson has been promoted to special representative. "The Curse of Drink" did a big business at Fay's, Rochester, last week, according to an announcement by Fred M. Zimmerman, sales manager. Sam Zierler and Bobby North were in town last week end for a conference with Mr. Zimmerman.

Toronto and Canadian Branch-Office News

THE Allens of Toronto have followed up the importation of several leading English-made productions by the securing of "Squib Wins the Calcutta Sweep," a recent British comedy success. The first Canadian run for this release was held in Allen's Downtown theatre, Toronto, for two weeks, starting March 19.

There has been quite a vogue in the Dominion recently for the English productions, those which have proved to be very popular, including "The Game of Life," which played several of the downtown theatres of Toronto successfully before it was sent out to the Provincial towns; "Me and My Gal," and Goldwyn's "The Christian," the latter having been made in Britain. "The Christian" played three weeks at the Grand Opera House, Toronto, for its first Canadian engagement.

Before "Me and My Gal" was presented at the Allen theatre, Montreal, the subtitles were changed throughout, French titles, conveying French-Canadian slang terms, replacing the titles in English having a Cockney flavor. "Me and My Gal" was shown at the Allen Regent theatre, Ottawa, the Canadian capital, for ten days, the house record for a day's attendance being broken during this run.

A tendency is noted among Canadian moving picture theatres to reduce admission prices. The Lyceum, Winnipeg, Manitoba, is one of the latest of large Canadian houses which have taken this step. General admission at evening shows at the Lyceum is now 40 cents, including tax, a drop of 10 cents. Afternoon general admission is 25 cents.

Oral D. Cloakey, one of the outstanding moving picture theatre managers in the Dominion, has been transferred to the Savoy theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Toronto. Cloakey, who formerly had charge of the Capitol and Allen theatres, Winnipeg, as well as houses in other centers, established a new policy for the Savoy, which included film attractions and specialties, such as band concerts, popular song reviews, stunt nights and juvenile revues, on different days during the week. An orchestra of twenty-five pieces has also been organized by Mr. Cloakey. The Savoy celebrated its third anniversary during the week of March 19 by the presentation of "The Hottentot."

The Hamilton Herald published an "Every Day, In Every Way" page, comprising business advertisements and announcements regarding Educational's special on Emile Coue, in connection with the presentation of this release as a feature attraction at the Capitol and Savoy theatres, Hamilton, Ontario, simultaneously during the week of March 12. Fifteen advertisements appeared on the page and it was the first time in Hamilton that a newspaper had tied up a stunt page with a two-reel production.

Manager Allen of the Globe theatre, Vancouver, B. C., gave "The Game of Life" a two weeks' run for the first half of March. The English feature made a hit in Vancouver.

R. Vallee has had the Casino theatre, Sherbrooke, Quebec, closed for the past week or two, during which extensive alterations have been carried out.

Harold Brenner has been appointed manager of the Court theatre, Montreal, by George Sparrow of the Sparrow Amusement Company, which took over the house not long ago. The Court theatre was formerly a Loew house.

C. H. Moodie, manager of the Colonial theatre, Port Arthur, has been transferred to Owen Sound, Ontario, by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation. The corporation has appointed J. Lynch as manager of its two moving picture houses in Port Arthur.

Albany Brevities and Eastern New York Items

BUNNY GRAUER has been making personal appearances at the Lincoln in Troy, N. Y., the past week in connection with a week's run of "The Town that Forgot God." It is the first personal appearance made in that city in several months. The picture played to big business throughout the week.

ULY S. HILL

"I wish I could say that we had made as much money off some of the so-called big pictures," said Uly Hill, manager of the Mark Strand in Albany, in referring to a three days' showing of "The Little Church Around the Corner."

"One Exciting Night" failed to draw in Troy, and was taken off after three days, and replaced with "Racing Hearts," which scored far better.

R. A. White, general sales manager of the Fox company, was in Albany the past week for a conference.

Charles Walder, manager of the Goldwyn exchange in Albany, was away for four or five days last week, booking "The Christian" at the Rialto in Glens Falls, and in covering the territory to the north.

Grover S. Woodard, manager of the Fox exchange in Albany, gathered a force together last Saturday, and gave them an inspiring talk in connection with a six weeks' drive for managers, salesmen and bookers, and in which the local exchange expects to clean up.

Although Jake Rosenthal has been sick in bed with carbuncles, he managed to get out one day last week and visit the Albany exchanges, and complete bookings for his opening on March 31.

Alec Weissman, of the New York office of United Artists, was in Albany last week. And so was George Jeffery, district manager for Al Lichtman.

Fred N. Herbs, of the Strand in Philmont, N. Y., was along Film Row in Albany the last few dayls. E. L. Griffin, of Kinderhook, also in town, reports better business in the smaller places with the advent of spring.

A. J. Herman, manager of the First National Exchange in Albany, spent a portion of the week in Plattsburg and Saranac, placing features for the summer months. Incidentally, Mr. Herman is still leading in the managers' contest between Albany, Buffalo and New York exchanges, with S. E. Feld, still on top in the salesmen's contest.

Big preparations are being made by C. R. Halligan, manager of the Universal exchange in Albany, for Anniversary Week, May 6 to 12.

A. J. Blanke, who has just assumed the management of the American Releasing exchange in Albany, was formerly office manager for United Artists in Omaha.

Jack Hogan, formerly manager of Proctor's Leland in Albany, is now handling the Palace in Troy.

Several exhibitors in this vicinity have been ill during the last few days. Ben Apple, owner of the American in Troy, was down and out for a couple of days, while Samuel Suckno, owner of three or four houses in Albany, has also been ill from the grippe.

C. C. Charles, manager of the Bond Photoplay exchange in Albany, won a big bonus in a ten weeks' contest, and is now planning to buy an automobile. It is said that Mr. Charles pocketed about $1,000, through his efforts.

Abe Stone, of the Rialto in Schenectady, is planning a spring and summer program, which will place the house on the same plane with other of the leading residential theatres in that city.

Otto Eigen, proprietor of the Academy in Sharon Springs, and who wintered in Albany, has left town and is now busy planning for a reopening.

H. E. Wilkinson, manager of the Lincoln in Troy, was in New York the past week, booking pictures.

Much praise is being heard these days for the orchestra at the Griswold in Troy, and its leader, Edgar Best, formerly of the Olympic in Watertown.

All theatres in the Capital District report but a fair business during the last two or three weeks. It is expected that business will pick up after Easter. Troy is looking for big business within the next year or so, with the opening of the new Ford plant in Green Island, where thousands of men will be employed.

D. S. Regan will remodel the Star in Greenwich, N. Y., this spring. Among other things, a better ventilating system will be installed, and new lobby will be built.

Miss Ruth Kinney, of New York, soloist the past week at the Lincoln, in Troy, was the feature at a Kiwanis Club luncheon in that city last week.

The Troy Women's Club has just adopted a resolution of protest against Arbuckle films.

A program of Irish music was featured at the new Troy on St. Patrick's Day. "Robinhood" and "Adam's Rib" have been booked by the house for an early showing.

George Roberts, of Albany, who chanced to be in Newburgh, N. Y., last week, when the police of that city located a boy kidnapped in Albany, and for whom rewards aggregating $4,200 had been offered, came into the limelight through entertaining the child, pending its father's arrival, and was photographed holding the boy.

The new Troy will give an elaborate Easter week musical program, featuring Vivanti of New York in cello solos. Troy is a musical city and the new theatre is making every effort to attract patronage through its orchestra.

Personals and Trade News from Des Moines

TED MENDENHALL, of the Famous Players exchange salesman force, is confined to his bed. He caught the "flu" and is at his home in Oskaloosa.

A. H. Blank, of First National, Educational, etc., returned Saturday from a trip to New York, where First National executives were in session.

A. W. Nichols, manager of the Famous Players branch, took a flying trip to Cedar Rapids and Davenport last week. He was accompanied by John Curry, of the accessories department. Mr. Curry's dog stayed at home.

Harry Gottlieb, who was formerly at the Universal exchange, is salesman for distribution in Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas City for Educational, in which A. H. Blank holds a large interest and which has its offices on the same floor with the First National exchange. Mr. Gottlieb, who was first an exhibitor, has so covered the field as booker, salesman, etc., that he knows practically every exhibitor in Iowa.

L. R. Brager's exploitation stunt for "Mighty 'Lak A Rose," which plays at the Des Moines next week, is as follows. A $100 violin is offered as a prize to the one who turns in the best words written to the tune of "Mighty 'Lak A Rose" and built upon the action of the picture. He is also staging, with the cooperation of one of the papers, an old fiddlers' contest, open only to fiddlers over forty-five and giving prizes of $15, $10 and $5. This will be staged at the Des Moines theatre on Friday at 9:30. Mr. Brager is of First National's exploitation force and active in thinking up new ideas.

S. S. Swarz visited Kansas City and Omaha this week in the interest of "Mighty 'Lak A Rose."

L. R. Brager tied up with the Clinton Herald for a six-day fictionization of "Oliver Twist."

Arthur Johnson, of the F. B. O. exchange, planned last week to drive to Missouri to visit Mrs. Johnson's people. He got as far as Indianola and came back, fortunately, as it kept right on raining. The salesmen haven't been able to get about in the territory on account of the rain.

"The Flirt," cleaned up some big business in Cedar Rapids at the Isis theatre and "Human Hearts" also made everybody happy with its box office receipts at the Family theatre at Clinton.

Walter Davis, who was at the Rialto theatre in Des Moines for over a year, was placed by A. H. Blank in charge of the new theatre at Council Bluffs, built by Council Bluffs business men to keep business from going over to Omaha. Mr. Blank was given charge of running the theatre.

J. Lux of the Rex theatre at Lone Tree died very suddenly after a short illness.

Wind, rain, hail, crashing trees, these are the effects which go with "One Exciting Night" at the Des Moines in the storm scene. Mr. Stolte and Mr. Groves of the Des Moines theatre invited all the other exhibitors over to see how it was done from behind the scenes.

Bill Strickland, former booker at the Pathe Film exchange, Des Moines, is now salesman in the southern part of Iowa. Leo Wedertz has been promoted from the cashier department at Pathe to the branch booker department, and Miss Rose Browder from the poster department to bookeeper in the cashier department. Miss Florence Harris has joined Pathe to take charge of the poster department.

Mary Frace, sales control clerk at Pathe exchange, has been ill with the flu for a week. Her husband, Ernest Frace of the accessory department at the Famous Players office, has been ill with the same sickness.

David T. McElhinney, who served in the Denver territory for eight years, will cover the northern part of Iowa as salesmanager for the Pathe exchange.

Mr. Mervin Hyde and Mr. Louis Clements of Famous Players, Des Moines, were out in the territory last week for percentage pictures.

Hugh Bennett, of Universal, is recovering from influenza.

F. L. Davie, manager of Universal Exchange, has returned from a trip around the territory and reports conditions improving slow but sure.

Mr. Luther Gartin is the new shipping clerk at Pathe exchange.

Providence, R. I., Trade Notes

The Ministers' Union of the Attleboro Y. M. C. A. is protesting the display of motion pictures in that town on Sunday and are to appeal to the town-fathers to close the Star, the manager of which refuses to cease operating on the Sabbath Day.

Harold Lloyd's "Dr. Jack," booked in for the Emery theatre in Providence for March 12, 13 and 14, made such a distinct hit with the patrons of this two-a-week house that Manager Toohey retained it for the entire week.

"Adam's Rib" was shown at both the Strand and Modern theatres during the week of March 12. The two houses combined on their advertising, thereby enabling them to "top the column" throughout the week in the newspapers.

Fire caused damage of $1,500 to the Odeon theatre in Riverside this week. The damage was quickly repaired and pictures are now being shown.

Charlotte Items and News of the Carolinas

THE NEW BROADWAY, Columbia, S. C., opened Monday, March 19, under the management of R. D. Craver, of R. D. Craver Enterprises, Charlotte, N. C. "R. D." was literally covered with an avalanche of congratulatory messages from all over the United States upon the formal opening of the house under his management and the opening was most auspicious and attended with great success. The Broadway was originally built and operated by Craver, who later sold it and he is particularly proud of having it under control again. Ralph H. DeBruler, formerly manager of the Howard, Atlanta, who is also manager of Craver's Broadway at Charlotte, will manage the new house, which has been closed for several weeks for extensive alterations and improvements. A real high class program with vocal and special vaudeville features serve as an opening attraction, with the First National attraction, "The Dangerous Age." The Broadway will play all First National releases, it is announced.

R. D. CRAVER

Only one minor bill, of consequence to the motion picture industry of the State, was passed by the North Carolina General Assembly which has adjourned its regular session. This is a bill applying only to the one county of New Hanover, and which prohibits the attendance of children under 16 years of age at theatres or other places of amusement after 8 P. M. unless accompanied by a parent or legal guardian. New Hanover is the home county of President Percy W. Wells, of the North Carolina M. P. T. O., but the bill was railroaded through without giving an opportunity for a hearing. It is now believed, however, that its consequences will be serious, since the attendance of unchaperoned children at night is very small at the Wilmington theatres.

The censorship question was not brought up at all during the entire season, an evident result of the good work being done by the various Better Films Committees throughout the State.

The destruction of film by the theatres throughout the Carolinas is assuming alarming proportions, according to announcement by the Charlotte Film Exchange Managers' Association, who at a recent meeting took steps to combat the costly destruction of valuable property on the part of theatres who have allowed their equipment to deterioriate during the bad business depression of the past season. It was stated at this meeting that many of the superfeatures were sent out brand new to come back after three days' use almost ruined by equipment that is worn and out of adjustment.

The secretary of the association has been instructed to write to all theatre owners protesting against this wanton destruction and to urge that they overhaul their projection machines immediately. It is hinted that some exhibitors may find it hard to get film in future unless this warning is heeded.

As a natural result many complaints from theatre owners who do take care of film in their possession are pouring into the exchanges on account of bad prints which the exchanges are forced to send, rather than cacel dates, owing to having insufficient time to order new prints. This, it is pointed out, apart from the cost of replacement, is one of the worst features of the situation which must be remedied.

The Charlotte Al Lichtman exchange has been opened with J. U. McCormick, formerly of Select, as manager.

Sa Weil, of the Service department of Universal exchanges, is visiting the Charlotte office.

H. H. Everett of Progress Pictures, Charlotte, is visiting the Atlanta exchange for a few days. They have recently taken over the business and rights of the Peerless Film Company, including territorial rights to Will Hye's "Notoriety."

Re-opening on Monday, March 19th, the same date as the opening of Craver's New Broadway, the Ideal theatre, Columbia, S. C., after being closed some time for extensive improvements has opened again. A new Moeller concert pipe organ has been installed, new projection machines, and the entire theatre redecorated. The very highest class feature pictures will be presented with orchestra accompaniment.

J. S. Wadsworth, for many years travelling representative throughout the southeastern states for Southern Theatre Equipment Company is making things hum as an exhibitor at Great Falls, S. C., a live cotton manufacturing town. Wadsworth is exhibiting many of the traits of the born showman and is setting the town afire with his elaborate lobby displays.

J. C. Duncan, who has managed the Majestic, Asheville, N. C., for Southern enterprises, has been transferred to the Strand, Asheville. Ray Beall, has been transferred from Spartanburg, S. C., to manage the Imperial, Asheville, and is succeeded in Spartanburg by Frank Strozier.

A new theatre for colored patrons only will be erected in Charlotte on South Mint street. Charlotte already has one colored house, operated by Sam Craver.

Dr. R. P. Lyons, owner of the Lyric, Wadesboro, was a Charlotte visitor during the past week.

M. H. French, owner and H. W. Marcus, manager, of the Garden, Rockingham, N. C., were visiting Charlotte exchanges the past week.

Exhibitor and Exchange Items from Spokane

A STORM of excitement verging upon a virtual ruckus in the exhibiting field here, following developments with regard to the staging of the labor temple circus and allied entertainments at the Auditorium theatre April 14-21, was quieted March 13th at a friendship meeting of the newly organized Spokane Allied Amusement Association.

The first matter of importance was the protest made by Maurice Oppenheimer, manager of the Hippodrome theatre, upon the sale by the Universal Exchange of "The Flame of Life," starring Priscilla Dean, to the labor people for showing at their circus. The fur flew thick and fast until Manager Roy Boomer of the local Universal Exchange obtained quiet. Mr. Oppenheimer finally withdrew his protest, it is reported.

Declarations by members of the labor movement that the show people of Spokane had objected to the labor temple circus and were fighting the affair drew a storm of protest from the members of the Allied Amusements.

"We are not only not fighting the circus, but we are for it," said A. J. Pugh, manager of the Associated Exhibitors and acting secretary of the association during the absence in Montana of Secretary C. M. Van Horn. "The matter was not brought to our notice formally but reading of the rumors we met to settle the matter once for all."

The rumor received circulation following a meeting of the Spokane central labor council last night. Andy Olson, a delegate, spoke of hearing that the show people had objected to the circus.

A combined program of "The Message of Emile Coue" and Katherine MacDonald in "Heroes and Husbands," "flopped" at the Clemmer theatre here the week-end of March 11. The pictures began showing at the Clemmer theatre Saturday evening, March 10 and expectations were that they would draw big crowds. Sunday the program held fair but the management jerked the program before the "mouth to ear" advertisement could get into working. Anita Stewart in "A Question of Honor" and Snub Pollard were screened until the following Friday to fill the bill.

The week end of March 17th was a gay one for Spokane screen fans with three of the local screen houses showing high class bills in competition. Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood" held forth at the Liberty theatre, Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle in "One Week of Love" showed at the Casino theatre while the Clemmer theatre presented "Peg O' My Heart" with Laurette Taylor, Buster Keaton in "The Balloonatic" and Madge Rush, Orpheum circuit danseuse.

The local force of the Universal Exchange is settling down after the general shake-up and transfer of executives and salesmen during the past few weeks. The latest addition to the Universal staff is Vernon Moore, of Portland, who was signed today to work out of the local exchange. Mr. Moore has been connected with the Paramount exchange in Portland for the last five years.

R. C. Hudson has taken over the position of assistant manager of the exchange, coming here recently from Portland where he was connected with the Film Booking Offices. J. Bryant, former salesman with the Universal here has gone to Goldwyn in Seattle. Roy Boomer is manager of the Universal Exchange here, succeeding A. H. McMillan when a transfer was made five weeks ago. Mr. Boomer came here from Seattle while Mr. McMillan transferred to Metro.

C. M. Van Horn, manager of the Spokane Pathe Exchange, was in Butte last week acting in a managerial capacity at the sub-exchange there. A. J. Pugh, manager of the Associated Exhibitors for the territory comprising eastern Washington, Idaho and Montana returned last week from an extensive tour through the Montana territory.

"Business is picking up right along in Montana," said Mr. Pugh, "It is getting better consistently."

Exchange and Exhibitor Items from Florida Territory

A. JURAN, manager of the Casino theatres in Ybor City and West Tampa, left Thursday morning for Atlanta, where he will book attractions for his theatres. Leon Cazin, his assistant, is keeping the home fires burning.

Since the resignation of C. D. Cooley, who was general manager of the Consolidated Amusement Company in Tampa, Jack Frost, his assistant, has been in charge, but this week the new line up was announced. R. C. (Jack) Frost will now have the management of the Strand and Grand theatres. John B. Carroll, who comes here from Asheville, N. C., where he has had charge of the theatres operated by the Southern Enterprises, will be manager of the Victory, and J. H. McLaughlin will have charge of the Bonita

At the annual meeting of the Consolidated Amusement Company of Tampa, held this week, Jerome A. Waterman was elected president. F. L. Metzler, vice-president; M. C. Calley, secretary; Hilton S. Hampton, assistant secretary; Dr. L. A. Bize, treasurer; and F. L. Metzler, assistant treasurer.

In and Out of the Washington Exchanges

THE past week was marked by a number of changes in Washington film offices. Manager Eugene Wilson, veteran film exchange executive, Vitagraph, with them over five years at their local office, resigned, to get a little rest, after accumulating a small fortune from five years as film factor. His friend and superior, Supervisor Kendall, had been here for some time so that "Gene," could secure a needed rest. Assistant Manager Stanley Spoehr of Philadelphia has been broken in as the new manager at Washington, by Messrs. Wilson and Kendall. Mr. Wilson's former private secretary, Miss Lulu Redmiles is now private secretary to Manager F. L. McNamee of F.B.O., Washington.

The Film Board of Trade and exhibitors are arranging to give a suitable testimonial to the veteran, Vitagraph showman, Mr. Wilson. No elaborate dinner but merely a simple presentation is being arranged. The Board meets now every Monday for a lunch at the Hotel Harrington.

A visitor to the Fox office here was Saul Rogers' brother from the business office of Fox, New York. He was optimistic as to Fox prospects.

A former exhibitor who is to go into distribution is W. F. McGovern, who is associated with Manager Meyers of the Washington Booking Corporation, a new states right exchange here, in putting over the first narcotic film, of Principal Pictures. He was responsible for the success of "Mickey" as a road show and day and date film, as associate publicity and exploit expert with that production in the Pittsburgh territory. McGovern later opened the new Victoria at Altoona, Pa., as a special representative of the owners.

Alexander Kremen, former Baltimore exhibitor, having sold out, is now covering the territory as a specialist in Real Estate and Insurance. He was a Pathe visitor Saturday.

H. J. Sahm, who opened the Eagle Film Exchange at Raleigh, N. C., about two months ago, was a visitor at the Arrow-Seaboard Exchange of the Colemans, during the week. He reports business in states-right comedies, features and westerns as handled by him in the Carolinas, as very good. The industrial situation there is much improved and prospects are brighter, with larger pay rolls already in sight.

Inadvertently, Manager and Supervisor Scully of the Educational Exchanges, formerly with their New England office at Boston, was mentioned in these columns as Manager Hussy.

F. J. Schauss of the New York and Washington offices of the Pyramid Production units, is now in New York on a brief visit at the home office of the Smallwood Units. Their picture, "When the Desert Calls," gets a local first run and part of the week at a Crandall Ninth street house.

S. B. Lust returned from a Tidewater, Virginia tour on Friday.

Manager George Faulkner has returned from the conference of Hodkinson chiefs at New York. Mr. Eiseman of the local organization accompanied Mr. Faulkner.

Eastern District supervisor Robert Smeltzer of the Pathe organization was a caller at R. C. Robin's Pathe Managerial suite twice the past week, leaving in mid-week for Pittsburgh, and returning to Washington, Saturday.

Nelson B. Bell, in charge of advertising and publicity for the Crandall Theatres, returned from a four day business trip to New York, last Tuesday in the interest of his own department and the Public Service and Educational Department of the Crandall Theatres. While in New York, Mr. Bell had interesting interviews with Richard Barthelmess, John S. Robertson, Anders Randolph, Will Rogers, Thomas Meighan and others of note in the film industry.

Fred Miller reopened his remodeled theatre at Annapolis Friday night, last. He has had his contractor working on its rebuilding ever since the fire at Christmas time.

"Adam's Rib" at the Columbia of the Loew chain is held over for a second week. "Dr. Jack" has just finished its second, hilarious and final clinical engagement at Crandall's Metropolitan, which now announces a double comic bill with the former Washingtonian, Douglas McLean, as star of one of the comics.

The Plaza, Marcus Notes' small theatre on upper ninth street was closed again Saturday of last week. This is the second time since the first of the year that it has been dark. Although Notes obtained a permit for alterations, it was learned that he would not repair a house on which he held only a lease.

The Neighborhood section of the Washington Herald in its series of thumb nail sketches published a half-tone and a sketch of Dr. William P. Herbst, president of the West End Citizens Association, pharmacist and pioneer exhibitor of that section of the city.

Tom Hayes, well known showman of the territory, now entering a new film venture, is reported to be engaged to one of the leading younger screen actresses, who with a nucleus of half a dozen other film stars is to form a new artists-producing-distribution organization of which Hayes is to be the manager.

Milton Davis, organist at Crandall's Metropolitan Theatre and composer of the "French Trot" and "Every Little While," is soon to appear in a piano act at B. F. Keith's in this city. Three pianos will be used in the act which has been originated and will be presented by Meyer Davis. The engagement at Keith's will not interfere with Mr. Davis's regular sessions morning and afternoon at the Metropolitan.

Samson Noble, who has been concert master of the symphony orchestra at Crandall's Metropolitan Theatre since last August, is appearing at the Metropolitan this week as a violin soloist for the first time on a Washington stage.

Fallas Broche, manager of Crandall's Metropolitan theatre, last week surprised his patrons by presenting an entirely new interior garb for the house during the summer. The handsome blue and gold winter velours were supplanted throughout the theatre by exquisite Baronet Satin proscenium and door draperies in canary and royal blue. These in turn will give way to the summer cretonnes with the advent of summer temperatures. The change required all night work by a redoubled force of mechanics in addition to the regular house attaches.

In and Out of the St. Louis Branch-Offices

JOHN W. RADFORD, owner-manager of the Opera House, Thayer, Ill., had the misfortune recently to lose his brother, who was accidentally electrocuted while in the pursuance of his duties.

Theodore Roberts, stage and screen star, who played a week's engagement at the Orpheum Vaudeville Theatre, St. Louis, the week of March 11, was virtually helpless the greater part of the week from a severe attack of rheumatism in his right arm. By courtesy of Manager Herschel Stuart, of the Missouri Theatre, Roberts' latest film, "Grumpy," was given a private showing in his room at Hotel Statler. He had never seen the finished picture. Roberts' right arm was so badly crippled he was unable to put on his make-up for his vaudeville turn. While in St. Louis Roberts spoke before several business organizations.

George Beban, star of "The Sign of the Rose," which broke all St. Louis house records by playing three engagements at the same house, The Delmonte, in a single season, delivered a plea for better motion pictures through the K S D broadcasting radio station owned by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch on Monday evening, March 12. The address was given through the courtesy of the management of the Delmonte.

After congratulating St. Louis on its recent achievement in passing a bond issue of $87,230,000 for municipal improvements, Beban stated that he had become a motion picture producer to aid in the movement for better films of the real human type rather than of the salacious kind. He contended that the latter type are not the money-makers some misinformed producers think, saying that the American people have always patronized good, clean, wholesome amusements and could be depended upon to support any good production with a real human appeal.

Harry Greenman, manager of the William Fox Liberty Theatre, St. Louis, was given a surprise by his friends March 13 in honor of his twenty-fifth birthday. Greenman, who has been in charge of the Liberty two years, and prior to that manager of the Pershing, has many friends in St. Louis.

S. E. Pertle, of Jerseyville, Ill., was seen along Picture Row.

Lester Evans, of Glen Carbon, was a visitor of the past week.

The Avenue Theatre, East St. Louis, on April 1 will become a first-run house with 10 and 25 cents' admission fees. Fox's "The Village Blacksmith" will be the first picture shown under the new policy. The Avenue is owned by Phil Cohen, who also controls the Lyric Theatre in East St. Louis.

Ed Holmes, who conducts the Lyric Theatre, Coulterville, Ill., and another house at Tilden, Ill., came in to arrange for his Spring programs.

Alex Howard, of the Opera House, Glasgow, Ill., was another caller from out of town.

John Janakopolos has taken back his Grand Theatre, Alton, Ill., which had been under the management of Jim Reilly, who owns the Princess in Alton. The change was effective on March 10.

James D. Drake, who planned to reopen the Temple Theatre, in Alton, Ill., has met with opposition from the Alton City officials. He is hopeful of surmounting the difficulty. It will be recalled that Building Commissioner McKelvey, of St. Louis, condemned the Ozark Theatre a few weeks after Drake had purchased the house. Drake contended that the St. Louis official was persecuting him for personal reasons and has filed suit for damages against him in the St. Louis Circuit Court.

R. J. McManus, manager of the local Paramount office, is back from a trip to Hot Springs, Ark. He is very much improved in health as a result of his visit to the Southern spa.

Harry Weiss, manager for First National, has busted into the lecture field. Several nights ago he delivered an address on "Salesmanship" to an audience composed of the Public Speaking Class and the Business English Class of Soldan High School. The crowd was very generous in its applause, so Harry apparently "put it over."

E. Rowell, traveling auditor for First National, spent the past week in St. Louis.

Sherman Keely, of the Service Division, Department of Distribution, for First National, dropped off in St. Louis on his way to the coast.

George E. McKean, of Fox, is recovering from a slight attack of the "flu."

On Monday, March 19, the local Fox exchange launched its big six weeks drive and the organization is hopeful of setting new records during that period.

L. E. Talley, formerly with Fox, has joined Harry Strickland's American Releasing organization.

Cleveland Briefs and Film Row Personals

A BILL has been introduced into the Ohio Legislature to provide for the establishing of the office of State Fire Warden. The bill has been introduced by a man named Edmington, from the southern part of the state. In order to defray the expenses and pay the salary of this fire warden, it is provided that every theatre in the state shall be assessed ten dollars semi-annually. The bill is now in the code committee. Of course, it does not meet with the approval of the theatrical interests.

The music tax is causing a lot of unhappiness out this way. The largest proportion of exhibitors say that they cannot get enough good music without resorting to taxable music. As a result, much of their diminutive profit finds its way into the music tax drawer. And now the music tax collectors are demanding not only what they claim as their legitimate amount in taxes, but they are imposing an added fine of $75 if the exhibitor failed to pay the tax of his own free will. Whenever the tax collectors have to resort to the medium of sending a statement to the exhibitor, that exhibitor is charged an extra $75 fine. In other words, for every two-cent stamp used by the tax collectors, they are getting an added $75. When they get it. Some exhibitors say they will go to court rather than submit to such measures.

"Billie" Liebson, manager of the American Releasing Company's office, and Cleveland's only girl exchange manager, is just back from a week's trip covering the territory. Miss Liebson brought back with her a nice stack of contracts for "Timothy's Quest," "Queen of the Moulin Rouge." "The Marriage Chance" and "When the Desert Calls," among other American Releasing pictures.

The Cinema Club of Cleveland is staging a dance in the ball room of the Winton Hotel for the evening of Saturday, March 24th. Tickets are being sold at one dollar. The object of the party is to raise sufficient funds to permit the Cinema Club to extend its activities in promoting and supporting Better Films.

Eddie Zorn, for many years connected with the Temple Theatre, Toledo, is out of the exhibiting end of the motion picture business, according to information received here last week. The Temple Theatre is operated by the People's Amusement Company of Toledo. Zorn is said to have sold his shares of stock in the company to Charles E. Bullock. Mr. Bullock is now secretary and treasurer of the company. He has never been associated with the motion picture industry in any of its branches perviously, having been a specialist as credit manager. It is said that a new policy will be introduced into the Temple Theatre, along with its new management. The former combination vaudeville and picture policy will give way to straight feature pictures. There will also be a cut in admission prices, to 15c and 25c for matinees, and to 25c and 35c for evening performances. This includes the war tax.

M. A. Malaney, publicity director for Loew's Ohio Theatres arranged a radio publicity novelty for the opening of Mae Murray's "Jazzmania" at the Stillman theatre, last Monday, that met with an immediate response from the public. Last Monday, Malaney arranged to have Miss Murray talk over the radio. To the first Clevelander who correctly reported Miss Murray's message, the Stillman management presented a box for a performance of "Jazzmania." Free tickets were presented to others who picked up her message correctly. Malaney said he was surprised at the number of answers that came in.

It is reported that Sam Kaase has sold out his interest in the lease of Empress Theatre, Akron, to Charles Brill. Brill also has the Rialto and Norka theatres of Akron. It is also stated that he will enlarge the foyer of the Empress, and will redecorate the house.

A. H. Abrams, of the Mozart Theatre, Canton, is breaking ground for another new motion picture house on North Market street, Canton's main business thoroughfare, according to report.

Max Schagrin of the Orpheum Theatre, Youngstown, has annexed unto himself a new spring model Chandler. Lou Geiger of F.B.O asserts that Schagrin bought the car on the strength of his future business on "Fighting Blood" which he has bought for early release.

A. P. Botzam, owner-manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Akron, came back from a month's vacation in Florida on the wings of last week's tornado.

Joseph Laronge, of Loew's Ohio theatres, has just returned from an extended vacation trip through the south.

Joe Trunk of the Dome theatre, Youngstown, was observed putting his name on a contract for the early showing of "Rupert of Henzau" and "Common Law," which will be released just as soon as the Select reorganization is completed.

A. J. Rice, manager of the Temple theatre, Willard, braved the winds and visited Cleveland exchanges last week.

Harry Rosenthal of the Strand theatre, Ravenna, came into the Cleveland First National exchange one day last week and took home with him a big stack of paper to use in connection with his run on "The Hottentot."

O. J. Smith of the Majestic theatre, Akron, was in the city last week and booked a lot of return engagements on former successes. Among them were the Tarzan series, the Pickford series, including "Daddy Long Legs"; "The Thunderbolt," with Katherine MacDonald, and others that were undisputed successes when first released.

O. E. Bellas, president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors League has been notified of the election as member of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce.

Kansas City Exchange and Exhibitor Items

EXCELLENT support has been given "approval nights" in motion picture theatres in Kansas City, arranged by the motion picture committee of the Women's City Club and the Parent-Teacher Association, according to exhibitors. Friday night the two organizations united in a joint "approval night" at the Isis theatre, operated by Jack Roth, where "The Making of a Man" and "This Wife Business" were on the program. The "approval night" plan has grown so rapidly the last few weeks that it is proving vastly profitable to exhibitors.

Each week a number of pictures are approved by the two organizations and the names of the productions given space in the daily newspapers. There is no antagonism on the part of the organizations toward the screen, it simply being a campaign for better pictures and a plan to aid, financially and morally, the exhibitors who run better pictures.

A garage building at Fifty-seventh street and Troost avenue, Kansas City, will be remodeled into a modern suburban theatre at a cost of $30,000. The new house, which will be known as the South Troost theatre, will be built and operated by M. M. Gleason, C. C. Ziegler and C. R. Gilchrist, who have formed the South Troost Amusement Company. The New house will have a 100-foot frontage and will be opened about May 1. This makes the fourth suburban house in three weeks of which construction has been announced in Kansas City.

A steam shovel started working Wednesday at Fortieth and Main streets, Kansas City, on the site announced for the new $700,000 hotel and Rockhill motion picture theatre. Contracts for the erection of the buildings, which will be combined, are held by Pratt-Thompson Construction Company.

Frank L. Newman, of the Newman theatre, Kansas City, has announced a series of "discovery concerts" for the theatre each Sunday in April from 12 to 1 o'clock. In that hour every non-professional entertainer of the city and vicinity will have a chance to appear. Eight or nine numbers will be scheduled each week, the performers having first been heard by Milton H. Feld, managing director, who is directing the concerts. All seats for the "discovery concerts" will be reserved, the usual price of admission being charged, which will include the regular screen program. Tickets will be on sale at the Newman one week in advance and can be ordered two weeks in advance.

Beloit, Kan., which lays claim to the distinction of being the smallest town in the Middle West sponsoring a "Go to Theatre Week," is preparing for that annual event next month. The credit of establishing a "Go to Theatre Week" in a town of 2,300 belongs to William Gabel, who operates the Grand theatre in that town. "The Hottentot," "Brawn of the North" and "Sunshine Trail" have been booked by Mr. Gabel for the event.

The Globe theatre, Kansas City, a combination motion picture and vaudeville house, profited greatly this week by the addition of an "All-Kansas City" juvenile jazz band to the program. The band will tour the western vaudeville circuit.

The Jewell theatre at LaHarpe, Kan., has been opened by F. A. Robinson, while the Strand theatre, Kansas City suburban house, has been purchased by Fred Thompson. The Jefferson theatre, Springfield, Mo., which has been closed for some time, has been leased by S. E. Wilhoit and will be reopened about June 1.

At a meeting of civic clubs in Wichita, Kan., last week the slogan, "Better Pictures for Wichita," was adopted. Censorship methods also were discussed. A committee, which will study conditions and make recommendations, will be appointed.

In announcing the change in policy of the Beeson theatre, Dodge City, Kan., Chalk Beeson, manager, booked twenty-two super-specials for March and April. The Beeson theatre was erected years ago, when Dodge City was little more than a "cow country," as a monument in honor of the memory of Mr. Beeson's father. H. Beeson.

For the last two weeks C. R. Wilson, of Liberty, Mo., who has been acting as temporary business manager of the M. P. T. O. Western Missouri, has been forced to use a store room as a theatre, his house, the Lyric, having been destroyed by fire. Arrangements are being made by Mr. Wilson for the erection of a new theatre.

Another "annual" balloting on the Sunday closing question is about to be inflicted upon the citizenship of Chillicothe, Mo. In the past the attacks of the reformers have been successfully combatted by William Cuff of the Strand theatre, who has won the support of the best citizens of the town. Incidentally, Mr. Cuff has added a lobby shop to his theatre, carrying a stock of candies, cigars and refreshments, and has made it a popular place on Sunday.

A profitable and inexpensive method of obtaining publicity for a theatre literally was bestowed upon Frank L. Newman, owner of the Newman theatres, Kansas City, last week, as a result of a chain of circumstances. Carlos De Mandil, new conductor of the orchestra at Mr. Newman's Royal theatre, was given a liberal welcoming in the newspapers. Invitations from various civic clubs requesting Mr. De Mandil's appearance followed. On each occasion at which Mr. De Mandil played a good newspaper story resulted.

Comedies, Short Subjects & Serials

Work on Andy Gump Fun Films Under Way

WITHIN the next two weeks production of a series of high class two reel comedies presenting to the motion picture public the famous Gump family, will begin at Universal City. The pictures will be produced by Samuel Van Ronkel and distributed by Universal, plans are practically completed and casting is under way.

Picturization of the activities of the Gumps, made famous by Sidney Smith's comedy strip in the daily newspapers, will include the love affair of Uncle Bim and the Widow Zander, which caused nation wide interest a couple of years ago.

Van Ronkel's contract with Sidney Smith extends over a period of five years and the pictures to be filmed will follow the Gumps' activities to a considerable extent as they appear in the daily comedy strip.

"The comedies are not to be of the ordinary slap-stick variety so common in 'two-reelers,' but will be of a very high-class order," says Van Ronkel.

Universal Holds "Get-Together"

Serial Department Discusses With President Past, Future Activity

PREPARATORY to the opening of its spring productive drive—and the filming of serials for summer and fall releases, the serial department at Universal City held an important Dinner-Conference last week in the Assembly Tea Rooms, Hollywood—with Carl Laemmle, Universal president, as guest of honor.

Stars, directors, cameramen, publicists, scenarioists and film editors were on hand, to listen to the discussions, which were confined solely to the past and future serial activities of the company.

Fred J. McConnell, manager of the serial department, who is now at Universal City personally supervising production of continued features, was toastmaster.

Eddie Laemmle, on behalf of the members of the department presented Mr. Laemmle with a handsome silver loving cup, as a token of appreciation of Mr. Laemmle's efforts to better the industry. Mr. Laemmle was visibly affected by the unexpected show of loyalty and friendship, and in a broken voice briefly uttered his heartfelt thanks to the entire organization.

Among those present in addition to Mr. Laemmle, were, Eddie Laemmle, Julius Bernheim, Art Acord, William Desmond, Jack Mower, C. L. Theuerkauf, Edward Armstrong, Benny Westland, Sigmund Moose, Ed Moffatt, Harold Hurley, Fred Datig, Frank Messenger, D. S. Mitchell, H. D. McBride, Duke Worne, Duke R. Lee, Ray Taylor, Dewey Calway, Gene Moffat, W. F. Willis, Harry Zehner, Al Wilson, Fred Thompson, Robert Hill, Homer A. Boushey, F. J. McConnell, and Don Ryan of the Los Angeles Examiner.

Every one present made a brief talk, confining his words to the serial division, and as a result the combined ideas of the department were given out for discussion. It is expected that the success of this get together affair will lead to future gatherings of all departments of the big studio.

Views of King "Tut's" Tomb in Fox News

FOX FILM CORPORATION has just received the first and exclusive moving pictures of the scenes surrounding the excavations of the tomb of Tut-ankh-Amen at Luxor, Egypt, by the Lord Carnarvon expedition. The pictures were shown in the Brodaway theatres this week and are now being exhibited in theatres throughout the United States.

The Valley of the Kings, tne native helpers clearing away the debris from the entrance to the tomb, princesses of the Court of Egypt entering the tomb under the guidance of Howard Carter who is in charge of the work, the camp of the scientists built near the tomb where the priceless treasures are sheltered and packed for shipment and the actual removal of the first relics from the tomb, are all interestingly set forth in the news pictures.

Lucian Maes, Fox News staff cameraman at the Paris office, arrived early at the scene of the excavations and secured some excellent shots with the aid of a long focus lens. He concealed his camera in a box and ground out complete pictures showing the work going on at the tomb before the guards discovered him.

Nat'l Committee Uses 12 Pathe Subjects

In the February list of pictures for selected programs, published by the National Committee for Better Films, a total of fifty-four subjects, representing sixteen companies, are recommended, twelve—nearly one-fifth—being Pathe releases.

News reels are not listed. Practically every other brand of Pathe product is represented—Pathe Review, one and two-reel comedies, features, Harold Lloyd feature comedies. "Safety Last" is designated as "a particularly good picture."

Most exhibitors are familiar with the National Committee's slogan: "Selection — not censorship — the solution." Also that the board is associated with the National Board of Review, and that its reviewers number 150 skilled volunteers, having no connection with the motion picture industry.

Eight Releases in Pathe Program

March 25 Issues Embrace Varied Subjects of Short Length Offerngs

PEARL WHITE'S serial, "Plunder," reaches its ninth episode in Pathe's program of eight subjects announced for release on March 25, the episode title being "Game Clear Through."

The Hal Roach one-reel comedy of this program features Paul Parrott and is called "Bowled Over." A bowling alley tournament, with the hero as the favorite, and all sorts of trick apparatus aid the comic developments of the travesty.

"The Alley Cat" comes in strong as the Aesop's Film Fable of this program. The moral is: "What can't be cured must be endured."

Pathe News Nos. 26 and 27, Topics of the Day No. 12 and Pathe Review No. 12 completes the list.

Creighton Hale Signed for Role in "Trilby"

Richard Walton Tully has signed Creighton Hale to play the role of "Little Billy" in his production of "Trilby" which will be released by Associated First National and which will be directed by James Young.

"Grandma's Girl" to Be Remade by Century

"Grandma's Girl," the Baby Peggy Century Comedy which was left unfinished by the departure of her former director, Goulding, and which afterwards was destroyed almost entirely by fire, will be remade. The entire story has been re-written by Sig Neufeld under the direction of Julius Stern who was especially pleased with Baby Peggy's part in it.

Lillian Worth, whose exceptional work in "The Adventures of Tarzan" won for her a contract with the Century will play an important part in Baby Peggy's current production "The Orphan." She is cast to represent Peggy's mother.

"Chop Suey Louie" Is Joe Rock's Next

The seventh two-reeler to be released by Jo Rock Productions, starring Joe Rock, the independent comic, is "Chop Suey Louie." As the title indicates, the locale of the subject is Chinatown, where, as the subtitle says, "every pool player carries his own cue." An extra effort to stage the scenes and dress the large cast in faithful oriental fashion has been made. Sixty extras appear in the mob scenes, and a complete Chinese colony, with temples, dens and innumerable coolies, has been supplied to give reality to the setting. Billie Rhodes carries the feminine honors, with Frank Alexander filling the fat man's role and Max Asher lending his bit to muddle things up. Thrills have not been forgotten in Rock's capers. Mad rides on treacherous ginrickshaws, mob fights and dare-deviltry that makes even a Chinaman's cue stand on end is plentifully supplied. The mystery and melodrama element is generously injected, with a succession of trap doors, sudden apparitions and self-closing doors in abundance. Rock's comedies are being distributed by Jo Rock Productions. State rights on the series have been almost entirely sold.

Jack White's Comedy "Kick Out" Ready

JACK WHITE has completed production work on the Educational-Mermaid comedy, featuring Lige Conley, "Kick Out."

The picture is a "lion comedy," in which about a dozen lions chase Conley around a motion picture studio. White made his reputation with Fox producing lion comedies, and claims that he has outdone himself in "Kick Out."

The next production in which Conley will be featured will be called "This Way Out," and will present Mack Swain and Ruth Hiatt in support of Conley.

International News Shows Kemal and Bride

Exclusive motion pictures of Mustapha Kemal Pasha, Turkey's "Miracle Man," and his beautiful heiress bride are among the features of the International News Reel No. 22, now being released by Universal. The pictures were made by O. K. Whipple, staff photographer of the International, who was sent from New York to Turkey to film activities there incidental to the war threatened by the phenomenal rise of the Turks.

The same news reel also has interesting pictures of the President and Mrs. arding vacationing at Ormond, Florida.

Other striking subjects contained in this issue include pictures of mounted mail carriers battling their way through the mighty snow drifts of the west. These scenes were made near Ashton, Idaho. There are also some strange and weird pictures from Lhassa, Thibet, the sacred city of the Grand Lama, showing the "Dancing Devils" of this extraordinary land in a frenzied religious welcome to the Thibetan New Year

"Oh Nursie!" Jack Cooper's Next Release

"Oh Nursie!" is to be Jack Cooper's next Century release. In it the comedian has the most difficult proposition of his life choosing among a bevy of pretty nurses which rival a Ziegfeld chorus. His companions in misfortune are Joe Bonner, Jack Earle and Marjorie Marcel.

Jack Cooper plays a nervy insurance agent who tries to sell everyone he meets. While he is deafening a doctor with his insurance patter the medico is trying to inflate the tire of his automobile, and so annoyed and deafened is he that he loses his head and pumps too much air into it and its bursts. The doctor loses his patience entirely and Jack flees, only to meet the irate doctor later when he is brought to the hospital after having been dynamited as a result of his efforts to insure another man against dynamite. The doctor's efforts to prevent Jack from flirting with the prettiest nurse prove futile and all ends happily.

"Safety Last" Head's Pathe's List

Ten Releases for April Also Includes Pollard and Maloney Two Reelers

APRIL 1 is the date announced by Pathe for the general realese of Harold Lloyd's first seven-reel comedy. "Safety Last," in which the star is declared to achieve in the highest degree the rare combination of true sentiment, suspense, thrills and constantly recurring moments of the irresistible comic.

The same program, listing a total of ten subjects, includes two 2-reelers of standard popularity—Snub Pollard in "Where Am I" and "The Extra Seven," with Leo Maloney. The other items are: Episode 10 of "Plunder"; "Get Your Man," 1-reel Hal Roach Comedy, with Paul Parrott; an Aesop's Film Fable; Pathe Review No. 13, Pathe News Nos. 28 and 29, and Topics of the Day No. 13.

The new Snub Pollard comedy presents the amusing spectacle of a young husband pretending "total loss of memory" as a means of side-stepping his wife's mother during her visit.

Leo Maloney, as the bashful suitor of the pretty daughter of the ranch where he "punches" cattle, is accused by her of encouraging her brother's vice of gambling. The hero, however, is really engaged in securing evidence that the boy is in the hand of a card shark and desperado.

The moral of the Aesop's Film Fable, in this list, "Farmer Al Falfa's Bride," does not enlighten him until he has received repeated rude and painful rebukes from the lady. Her final yielding brings it home to him that: "When maidens say no, they often mean yes."

The tenth episode of "Plunder," shows the heroine and her lover beset by mysterious and dreadful devices of three strange enemies from a tropical country.

Pathe Review, in a varied list of items, presents a novelty called "From Nothing To"—in which distinct forms are by almost imperceptible degrees evolved out of writing chaotic masses. The American Indian Series shows how the Alaskan and other northern Indians fought the sea devils with terrifying masks and incantations.

Tribute to Educational Products

National Board of Review Chose Two Subjects for Special Program

ANOTHER fine tribute to the quality of the Educational Film Exchanges' product was paid by the National Board of Review when it chose two of short subjects to form the short subjects portion of the showing of Exceptional Photoplays, which was held at the Town Hall, Tuesday, March 20.

The pictures chosen were the Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tale, "Jenkins and The Mutt," one reel in length, and "The Enchanted City," an Educational Special. "Jenkins and The Mutt" is one of the new series of wilderness tales which Mr. Bruce has just completed after a sojourn in the wildernesses of Oregon, Washington and California.

"The Enchanted City" was produced by Warren A. Newcombe and was released as an Educational Special. It is a distinct departure in the field of motion picture making, and tells a fanciful tale by means of a series of beautiful paintings. This picture enjoyed a run at the Rivoli theatre.

The significance of the showing can be realized when it is stated that the showings are attended only on special invitation by the National Board of Review. The invitations are sent to the leaders in professional and literary life, representative critics of stage and screen and society leaders who are interested in the best pictures the screen affords.

These two short subjects are the only short pictures to appear on the program at the Town Hall at this showing, and the only American pictures to be shown

"The Handy Man" Stan Laurel's Next Comedy

"The Handy Man" has been finally chosen as the title of the next Stan Laurel comedy to be released by Metro Pictures Corporation.

This two reel comedy, latest of the series which this popular comedian-star has made for Metro release, was originally known as "The Dumbell." The photoplay, recently completed at the Hollywood studios of Amalgamated Productions, Inc., is scheduled for early release.

The same staff yhich produced Mr. Laurel's recently released comedy, "When Knights Were Cold," likewise was in charge of "The Handy Man." It was directed by G. M. Anderson and photographed by Irving Ries.

"The Handy Man" is the sixth of the Quality productions starring Stan Laurel for Metro distribution. Others were "The Egg," "The Weak End Party," "Mud and Sand," "The Pest" and "When Knights Were Cold."

Hallroom Boys Comedy Mentioned in "Times"

A Hallroom Boys Comedy was given special mention in the New York Sunday Times listing of "recommended pictures."

The motion picture editor listed the recent pictures he thought worth particular attention and special mention, and, under the heading of short subjects, listed the Hallroom Boys Comedy.

His comment on it—the comedy being "High Flyers," which played at the Rialto theatre, New York, a couple of weeks ago—was that it had "succeeded in being irresistibly funny."

Christie-Educationdal "Green as Grass" Rean

"Green As Grass," the first Educational-Christie Comedy in which Jimmie Adams will appear, has been finished, and the Christie studios are now working on two other comedies. Bobby Vernon, under the direction of Scott Sidney, is making "Take Your Choice," while Al Christie is directing Dorothy Devore at Truckee in "Winter Has Came."

Rousing Reception for "Safety Last"

THE BEAUX ARTS THEATRE at Palm Beach made the most of of its opportunity to stage the pre-release world's premiere of "Safety Last." Manager Stanley C. Warrick reported to Pathe that his showings of the Harold Lloyd seven-reel comedy on March 17 and 18 packed the house at every performance, "Millionaire's Row" turning out in full force and greeting the picture with laughter and applause.

The Beaux Arts pre-release booking was personally accepted by General Manager Elmer Pearson, of Pathe, while on his recent two-weeks' vacation at Palm Beach. Manager Warrick's announcement set the famous Southern resort all agog. The Palm Beach Daily News made the engagement the subject of a special news feature headed: "Palm Beach Has Honor of First Showing of 'Safety Last.'"

"Masters of Men" is the title of the Vitagraph Release, starring Earle Williams, from which these scenes are taken.

Famous Stars in Famous Pictures Due Soon

THE first of a series of famous pictures of famous stars to be released by Harry Aitken and Oscar Price will be the Triangle picture "The Americano," starring Douglas Fairbanks and "Dough and Dynamite," Charlie Chaplin's Keystone Comedy classic.

John Emerson and Anita Loos are assisting in the preparation of "The Americano" for its presentation which is expected to be a most elaborate one. Syd Chaplin is doing likewise for "Dough and Dynamite."

"The Americano" was directed by Allan Dwan and includes in its cast Mildred Harris and Alma Rubens. Chester Conklin, Slim Summerville and a great array of the ever to be remembered Keystone comedians appear with Chaplin in "Dough and Dynamite."

Accessories Completed on C.B.C. Features

Advertising accessories have been completed on the two C. B. C. Films Sales Corporation features, "Temptation" and "Her Accidental Husband," which have been announced as ready for release.

Special attention in both cases was given to the selection of the posters and lobby display, which are said to be especially effective. Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn of the C. B. C. organization personally supervised the selection and work on the paper.

A special color process has been used on the lobby display on both these features. Beautiful oil paintings have also been prepared in various sizes, for special display purposes.

Extensive Campaign for Hodkinson Feature

Hodkinson Pictures has issued an elaborate press book with supplemental sheets on "Down to the Sea in Ships." The book proper is devoted to action stills from the production and is splendidly compiled. It also reprints the many favorable reviews from different parts of the country.

There are three supplemental sheets. One contains ballyhoo and exploitation ideas. A second is devoted to newspaper ad cuts and the third to newspaper stories and ad cuts. In its entirety it is one of the most complete campaigns planned in connection with a feature picture.

First National's Spring List

Eleven Big Features Included in Schedule for Coming Three Months

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL announces a strong group of features for spring release.

The list of pictures scheduled for the coming three months is as follows: Richard Barthelmess in "The Bright Shawl," Norma Talmadge in "Within the Law," Douglas MacLean in the Thomas H. Ince production, "The Man of Action," Edwin Carewe's production of "The Girl of the Golden West," Katherine MacDonald in "The Lonely Road," Richard Walton Tully's production of "Trilby," James Young's production of "Wandering Daughters," Constance Talmadge in "Dulcy," Jackie Coogan in "Toby Tyler," Frank Borzage's production, "Sands of Time," and Dorothy Phillips in the Allen Holubar production, "Slander the Woman." It is probable that several more pictures will be added to this list.

Inspiration Pictures, Inc., is responsible for the production of Joseph Hergesheimer's popular novel, "The Bright Shawl," with Richard Barthelmess as the star and Dorothy Gish in his support. John Robertson directed.

In "A Man of Action," Thomas H. Ince has supplied an adroit comedy from the pen of Bradley King and starring Douglas MacLean. Supporting MacLean are Marguerite de la Motte, Raymond Hatton and Arthur Hull.

"Within the Law" is coming to the screen with Norma Talmadge in the character made famous by Jane Cowl. Frank Lloyd directed. The cast includes Lew Cody, Jack Mulhall, Eileen Percy, Joseph Kilgour, Arthur S. Hull and Helen Ferguson.

"The Girl of the Golden West" is now the subject of thrilling motion picture, directed by Edwin Carewe, with J. Warren Kerrigan as Ramierez, Sylvia Breamer as the girl and Russell Simpson as the sheriff.

The third Richard Walton Tully production, starring Guy Bates Post, is "Trilby." For the title role, Mr. Tully secured a beautiful young French actress, Andree Lafayette, who was brought to America especially for this production.

In "The Lonely Road," Katherine MacDonald has an original story by Charles A. Logue, introducing the age-old question of family finances and the rights of a wife in sharing her husband's earnings.

First National Sells 36 Films to Far East

Associated First National has closed a contract with the Globe Cinema Co. of Calcutta, India, for the distribution of thirty-six pictures in the territory of India, Burma and Ceylon.

Blizzard Halts Work on "Wolf Fangs"

In the filming of the latest Warner Brothers picture under the working title of "Wolf Fangs," featuring the famous Belgian police dog, Rin-Tin-Tin, director Chester M. Franklin and his group of players encountered the biggest blizzard that has ever faced a detachment of film players visiting the Feather River country, Plumas County, California, according to a letter received by Sam and Jack Warner at the Coast studios.

Director Franklin makes known that three more weeks will have to be spent filming the picture in the frozen north, if the members of the company "live that long."

The story of "Wolf Fangs" was written by Mr. Franklin and Fred Kennedy Myton. Frank Good is cranking the camera, and Charles Watt is assisting Mr. Franklin in the direction. The cast thus far chosen for the production includes Claire Adams, Walter McGrail, Pat Hartigan, Ralph Yearsley, Fred Huntley and the dog, Rin-Tin-Tin. The production is being made under the direct supervision of Harry Rapf.

"Grandma's Boy" Aid Students' Fund

For a long time members of the senior class of the Wilkes-Barre, Pa., High School have been saving their dimes and quarters and placing them in a fund which they hoped would permit them to go to Washington in a body and call on President Harding.

The fund languished somewhat until the students hit upon the idea of becoming motion picture exhibitors. Their committee signed a contract with Associated Exhibitors and for three nights last week the Harold Lloyd feature, "Grandma's Boy," was shown in Wilkes-Barre as a "Washington trip fund" benefit. The project was a complete success, according to the local newspapers, the hall being crowded each evening, and now the students almost imagine themselves glimpsing the Washington monument even before the railroad tickets have been purchased.

Reviewers Acclaim Pola Negri

Los Angeles Critics Enthusiastic in Reception Given "Bella Donna"

THAT Pola Negri in her first American picture, George Fitzmaurice's Paramount production, "Bella Donna,' has achieved the greatest triumph of her career, seems to be the unanimous verdict of Los Angeles, where the picture had its world premiere Tuesday at Grauman's Rialto Theatre. The crowd at the opening performance according to Sid Grauman, was one of the largest ever seen on a similar occasion in that city.

Edwin Schallert in The Times said: "I have looked forward keenly to the debut of Miss Negri in her first American-made picture. I anticipated what it would mean for the disclosure of her physical beauty and the fascination of her face and hands and form, and I can now loudly shout and proclaim that at last we have seen Pola Negri. At last we really know how her wonderfully expressive countenance looks."

Florence Lawrence said in The Examiner: "George Fitzmaurice has made a beautiful creation in his film adaptation of the Hitchens play. The drama of a human soul is revealed stark and realistic. Miss Negri has effected her characterization with vivid realism as the woman with beauty and appeal who sacrifices honor and the life and happiness of those who love her on the altar of her own selfishness."

Allen Claire said in The Record: "Pola's work in 'Bella Donna' is a splendid character delineation and all the superior original creations of American cinematograph craftsmanship are employed.'

The Herald said: "In what will undoubtedly be selected as one of the foremost motion picture productions of 1923 Pola Negri made her initial bow at Grauman's Rialto yesterday in 'Bella Donna.' If there is a vacant niche in the motion picture hall of fame Miss Negri will henceforth occupy it as a result of her work in this, her first American picture.'

The critic of The Express said: "The name and fame of Pola Negri brought bumper crowds to Grauman's Rialto. The direction is faultless in every detail and apparently no expense has been spared. The mass effects are marvelous and the succession of scenes is interesting and beautiful."

Davies' Vehicle Nears Finish

Cosmopolitan Star Almost Continuously at Work for Past 3 Months

SELDOM has a screen star made such a record for continuous work before the camera as has Marion Davies for her next Cosmopolitan picture, "Little Old New York," final scenes for which are now being completed. For practically three months Miss Davies has been at work at the studio from nine in the morning until six at night and sometimes much later. As "Patricia O'Day," the heroine of the photoplay, the star's presence is required in almost every scene that is shot.

Work was begun on "Little Old New York" the middle of December. With its completion this week the picture will be finished on schedule time in spite of the interruption by fire at the Cosmopolitan studios and will have consumed about ninety days in the actual filming. Five different studios were used for the big production. One set, showing Bowling Green and the Battery in New York as they were a century ago, was built in the immense twenty-third Regiment Armory in Brooklyn, no studio in New York being large enough to hold it. The Jackson studio in the Bronx, the Tilford on Forty-fourth Street and the Tech-Art studio on Forty-eighth were all used following the fire at Cosmopolitan studio where many of the scenes had already been made.

To keep up with the strenuous schedule Miss Davies has led a life of almost military routine in order to keep fit for the trying demands of the role of Patricia O'Day. Her regular rising hour during the last three months has been at 6:30 in the morning. After a brisk walk in Central Park and some military "setting up" exercises she has a light breakfast and is whirled away in her car for the studio; sometimes making up as "Patricia" on her way over in the limousine.

Pictures Lend Color to Art Exhibition

A unique method of enhancing the attractiveness of an art exhibition was recently employed by the First Methodist Church of Rolla, Mo., by the use of motion pictures. Each evening a series of paintings were exhibited, the feature of which was the reproduction of the work of some famous master. Inasmuch as the Triart's productions, "The Beggar Maid," "The Bashful Suitor," "The Young Painter," and "Hope" distributed by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation are adapted from the featured paintings, the church committee were able to arrange an interesting tie-up.

The feature of the first evening's program was a reproduction of the original painting "The Beggar Maid." Following this was a showing of the Hodkinson picture giving a film version of the celebrated painting. This same plan was followed with the other exhibits and met with such success that the entire series of exhibitions were repeated on four consecutive Monday nights.

Sky-scraper Collapse Is Picture Thrill

Eight cameras manned by star cameramen on the Powers lot in Hollywood trained their lenses on the huge sky-scraper set as it collapsed in filming a big dramatic scene for "Daytime Wives," soon to be released by Film Booking Offices of America.

Under the supervision of Emile Chautard, who is directing the production, the battery of cameras shot the scene from many varied angles, while hundreds of extras posing as laborers rushed to safety.

"Daytime Wives" is a drama of modern domestic unrest in which the energetic and keen-minded stenographer is shown in vivid contrast with the pampered and petted wife of a business man. The story was written by Leonore Coffee and John Goodrich and adapted by Wyndham Gittens and Helmer Bergman, F. B. O. scenarists.

In the cast are Wyndham Standing, Grace Darmond, Ann Perdue, Edward Hearn, William Conklin, Kenneth Gibson, Mickey M'Ban, the child prodigy and others.

"Safety Last" Contract Explained by Pathe

In announcing April 1 as the release date for Harold Lloyd's first seven-reel comedy, "Safety Last," Pathe issues the following statement concerning the "Safety Last" contract:

"The essence of 'Safety Last' contracts lies in rental provisions, which enable indefinite extension of runs. Frank discussion of the individual exhibitor's problems settles the question of terms—guarantee, sharing, etc.—in a way to enable him to serve his community with profit to himself by continuing his run for a reasonable period after the capacity houses stage of his engagement has run its course.

"The volume of 'Safety Last' business booked throughout the United States up to two weeks before release date is reported to show a solid front of indefinite runs, with exhibitors' interests better protected and their communities better served than has been recorded in the history of any other outstanding picture production."

"Dr. Jack" Proposed as Kansas Rotarian

Pathe reports receipt of a large volume of correspondence indicating that anticipations of the release of "Safety Last" have had no perceptible effect on public enthusiasm over "Dr. Jack.' Harold Lloyd's "sunshine and fresh air" comedy supplies many angles for exhibitor and patron comment, of which the following are samples:

A copy of the Secretary's minutes of the meeting of the Emporia, Kansas, Rotary Club held on March 5, contains this entry:

"Proposed for membership—'Dr. Jack.' Classification, Gloom-Buster. Firm—Strand theatre Co. Proposed by Harry McClure. (Four tickets for my family, please)."

C.B.C. Feature Sold to Pittsburgh Exchange

According to negotiations completed this week between the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York, and Progress Pictures of Pittsburgh, the latter company takes over territorial distribution rights on "Her Accidental Husband."

Progress has contracted for the handling of this first Belasco Production in the West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania territory.

The sale was personally completed by Joe Brandt, head of the C. B. C., who was in Pittsburgh at the special request of P. W. Hamilton, and F. W. Moore, Vice-President of Progress. A screening was arranged in Pittsburgh and negotiations completed at once. Following the screening, Mr. Moore wrote to Jack Cohn of C. B. C. praising the feature highly.

"It is a splendid feature with a wonderful cast, ably directed and acted, and worthy of the name Belasco. It is a wonderful picture from every angle," he said.

Before leaving for Pittsburgh Mr. Brandt personally supervised the laying out of a special exploitation campaign in connection with the launching of "Her Accidental Husband" in that territory.

Goldwyn to Introduce New Juvenile

A new juvenile actor will be introduced by the Goldwyn Company in "Three Wise Fools." William Haines, selected one year ago by Casting Director Robert B. McIntyre from thousands of applicants in New York, and who has since been playing small parts and receiving training in cinema technic, has his first big chance as Gordon, the nephew in the King Vidor screen production of Austin Strong's popular play.

As the juvenile lead, working with such actors as Claude Gillingwater, Alec Francis, and Wm. H. Crane, Mr. Haines has a great opportunity, of which he is taking full advantage. It happens that the girl in the play is Eleanor Boardman, who came out from New York at the same time and under the same conditions, and who has fully justified Mr. McIntyre's judgment.

George A. Billings, who is playing the role of Abraham Lincoln in the Rockett-Lincoln Film Company's twelve-reel photodrama of "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln."

Chas. Ray Does Some Explaining

Tells Why He Decided to "Branch Out" and Play Myles Standish Role

CHARLES RAY, who is now hard at work on the production of "The Courtship of Myles Standish," the biggest adventure of his film career, is delighted to be working on a subject of such deep historical interest, and a character as full of meaning to the American public as that of John Alden.

"I started to give serious thought to something on the order of 'The Courtship of Myles Standish,'" said Mr. Ray, "when the big foreign pictures, based upon European history, began to be shown in this country. The spirit shown was foreign to American lines of thought and many of the pictures were inferior, technically, to American standards. Yet they caught the imagination of Americans and drew large patronage.

"After much thought I concluded that this was because they represented something more than mere entertainment. In each case they had a great underlying idea that might be summed up in the word 'tradition.' This gave them a reality that realism often tries vainly to copy.

"It was while the matter was turning over in my mind that my sister suggested 'The Courtship of Myles Standish' as a theme for me. That subject led me straight into an American tradition of the finest sort, for the recital of the first American love story could not be made on the screen without a much larger background, the great adventure of the Pilgrim Fathers, and all that it signified.

"Mr. Griffith filmed history without consulting anybody when he made 'The Birth of a Nation,' and when it was learned that he had stretched the picture to more than a dozen reels there were persons who said he was mad. But it has been his very boldness in breaking precedents that has given him his high standing as a producer. The question, often raised, why many producers do not get out of the old ruts, is answered by the horror which men influenced wholly by the commercial side hold for anything in the nature of an innovation. Yet there is such a thing as a combination of the commercial and the artistic, based also on a solid historical theme.

"I have had my heart set on just such a venture as this for a long time, and I am getting immense satisfaction out of the prospect of giving the public a picture it will remember longer than anything else I ever attempted."

Laud "Crinoline and Romance"

Viola Dana's Vehicle for Metro Wins Approval of Trade Critics

"CRINOLINE AND ROMANCE," the most recently released Metro picture starring Viola Dana, has earned the commendation of critics representing the industry's leading trade magazines.

The Motion Picture News, in reviewing the photoplay at length, commented in part as follows: "Light, frolicsome comedy romance—one ideally suited to Viola Dana's personality. This star is one actress who is fortunate in having material which fits her. . . . The atmosphere is very good. So are the exteriors, interiors and detail. . . . Good direction."

Similarly commendatory is the critic of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, who said: "An attractive screen offering . . . As a romantic picture it should qualify in furnishing a theme that will readily win appeal. Good interest is sustained . . . Viola Dana . . . is a vivacious little actress and excellent in her part . . . The picture is thoroughly enjoyable."

"Unique and pleasing romantic comedy drama" is the summary of the critical review of the Moving Picture World. "Unusual in theme and treatment . . . Pretty little romance . . . many laughs . . . nicely handled and quite different."

The photoplay is a Harry Beaumont production, released by Metro Picture Corporation. In support of Miss Dana are John Bowers, Claude Gillingwater, Alan Forrest, Betty Francisco and others. Bernard McConville wrote the story and scenario.

Equity Closes Deal on Latest Release

Word came into the office of Equity Pictures Corporation during the week from Louis Baum, Vice-President of Equity Pictures Corporation, who is now touring the country on a sales drive, that another territory had been sold on "Has the World Gone Mad?" the latest Equity release.

The deal was closed with the A. H. Blank Enterprises of Des Moines, Ia., and this progressive state-right organization will handle the picture in the states of Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa. This makes the second Daniel Carson Goodman production that the A. H. Blank Enterprises have purchased from Equity, the other being "What's Wrong with the Women?"

A big campaign is planned for the special showings in all the big towns of these three states and in order to achieve the maximum amount of success in this drive, the two organizations have joined forces for the tremendous advertising and publicity tie-ups and displays that are now contemplated for each first run.

"Life of Lincoln" in Production

The Rockett-Lincoln Film Company, after many months of research and preparation announce that they have begun actual filming of their big Lincoln feature, the working title of which is "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln."

Philip E. Rosen is directing and Al Kelley and Robert Kurrle, respectively are assistant director and chief cinematographer. Mr. Rosen left Famous Players Lasky last October to prepare for the direction of their Lincoln picture and he has spent the intervening five months in intensive research and study of the subject in order to be perfect master of it before taking up his megaphone.

Frances Marion is author of the working script of "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln" and she views the work as the greatest achievement of her career.

George A. Billings is to play the part of Abraham Lincoln, which Miss Marion declares is the longest and most arduous role ever written into a photodrama.

Exploitation Aids for "Masters of Men"

Vitagraph is preparing unusual exploitation and exhibitor's helps for "Masters of Men," which is now receiving final editing at the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn. "Masters of Men" is considered the best of all Morgan Robertson's novels of life at sea. It relates the adventures of a young American both in the United States Navy and on board a sailing ship. Special exploitation stunts are being arranged and a special drive being made in the daily newspapers.

The cast is headed by Earle Williams, Alice Calhoun, Cullen Landis, Wanda Hawley, Dick Sutherland, Jack Curtis, Charles E. Mason, Bert Apling, and Martin Turner.

The United States Navy Department at Washington gave to Vitagraph every co-operation in presenting the life of a blue-jacket on board a man-of-war faithfully.

Chooses First National Features Among Best

IN his selection of the twelve best pictures for the first quarter of the year, J. O. Spearing, motion picture editor of the New York Times, who is retiring to devote himself to production work in a western studio, includes three First National pictures shown on Broadway between January 1 and March 15. The list was published in the Sunday Times, March 18.

The three First National pictures named by the erudite critic are "The Dangerous Age," commended for the cinematographic treatment of John M. Stahl and the acting of Lewis Stone; "The Hottentot," starring Douglas MacLean, called "a fast, funfilled farce" and "The Pilgrim," in which Charlie Chaplin is credited with bringing "broad comedy, keen satire and revealing insight to the screen."

The complete list compiled by Mr. Spearing reads: "The Dangerous Age," "Driven," "Head Hunters of the South Seas," "The Hottentot," "Hunting Big Game in Africa with Gun and Camera," "Mad Love," "Milady," "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," "Peg o' My Heart," "The Pilgrim," "Othello," "The Second Fiddle."

"Brownie" Stars in "Why Dogs Leave Home"

The final title of the picture heretofore known as "Try to Get It," is "Why Dogs Leave Home," which has just arrived at the New York office of Century. It gives a bigger part to "Brownie" than he has had, heretofore, in his pictures, and permits him to show many new "tricks," which he has practised. The story begins with "Brownie" being thrown out of a house and shows how he substitutes himself for a millionaire's dog, which leads him into many canine difficulties.

"Mighty Lak' A Rose" Praised

First National Feature Emphatically Endorsed by N.Y. Reviewers

"MIGHTY LAK' A ROSE," the First National picture showing at the Strand theatre, New York, this week, received the emphatic endorsement of the critics of the New York newspapers, because of its strong human appeal, the superior quality of the production made under the direction of Edwin Carewe, and the exceptionally fine acting. A great personal triumph was scored by Dorothy Mackaill in the sympathetic character of Rose.

Excerpts from some of the reviews follow:

Beauvais Fox in the Tribune: "The picture gets you, and most of all the girl gets you. The girl is played by Dorothy Mackaill. She has that mysterious and indefinable appeal that is summed up as screen personality. She is of the Blanche Sweet and Lillian Gish type, and is a real find for the screen."

Evening Telegram: "Mighty Lak' a Rose," Edwin Carewe's latest photoplay, is just about as pretty a love story as has been unreeled on Broadway in a long time. It has a touch of human interest seldom seen on the screen and at times a lump comes up in your throat, only to be swallowed when something humorous is shown."

Evening Mail: "Edwin Carewe, the director, it seems, believed that the song which enjoyed a long term of popularity, if made the title of a picture, would bring many into the theatre. No doubt it will and a goodly number of those who see it will weep at the trials and tribulations there set forth."

The Sun: "The picture does work up interest and is very, very well acted. Its effect (referring to the big scene) is very probably due to the fragile beauty and excellent acting of Dorothy Mackaill, as the blind girl. Here is a really beautiful performance. The ending of the picture is effective."

Evening World: "Edwin Carewe chose well when he used 'Mighty Lak' a Rose' as his theme, and has turned out a picture that is not only well directed, well photographed and well acted, but decidedly pleasing in every way. 'Mighty Lak' a Rose' as shown, is just as pleasing a film as it was as a song."

"Fighting Blood" Near Finish

Woman Continuity Writer Working on Last Episode of Popular Series

BEATRICE VAN, scenario writer of the Film Booking Offices of America, is completing the continuity of the last of the "Fighting Blood" stories, by H. C. Witwer. The final episode of this series was recently published in Collier's Weekly. Miss Van, a young woman whose rise in the field of screen writing marks her as one of the most brilliant scenarists of the industry, is responsible for the screen version of the entire series of "Fighting Blood."

The assignment of Miss Van to the work of scenarizing "Fighting Blood," which was announced by Emile Offeman, F. B. O. production manager, shortly after the purchase of the screen rights of the stories, aroused considerable interest in the trade, inasmuch as Miss Van is the first woman to adapt to the screen a story hinging around the career of a boxer. The wisdom of Mr. Offeman was evident after the first few episodes and stronger proof is offered by the fact that all of the rounds already completed maintain the high standards of interest, suspense and humor set by the initial offering. Not only does Miss Van incorporate in her screen adaptations all the fascinating atmosphere of the boxing arena, but she also preserves all of the author's humor of situation and characterization, intermingling action with comedy relief in a zestful fashion.

Miss Van has been active in building R-C pictures for the past three years. She has to her credit the screen adaptation of many of the Doris May comedy-dramas. Previous to joining Film Booking Offices, which was at that time known as R-C Pictures, Miss Van was associated with Universal for four years. There she acted, wrote original stories, made continuities, helped direct and cut, edited and titled pictures. She was at one time the head of the book and play department of one of the largest photoplay script organizations in the West.

Additional Sales for "Passionate Frends"

George H. Davis, producer of "Isobel," whose new pictures, "The Passionate Friends," H. G. Well's story, and "The Lamp in the Desert," Ethel M. Dell's romantic story of India, have just been released, announces more important sales this week on both pictures.

Mr. Davis is in receipt of a communication from Joe Brandt, of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, through which these two new Davis productions are being released, telling him that the R. A. Branch Productions of Detroit have closed for "The Passionate Friends" for Michigan.

Celebrated Players, through Joe Friedman, have secured the rights to both "The Passionate Friends" and "The Lamp in the Desert" for Northern Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. Harry Landy, of the Landy Distributing Company, has closed on "The Passionate Friends" for West Virginia, Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Kentucky.

Hal Roach Signs Stan Laurel for Five Years

A CONTRACT for a period of five years has been consummated between Hal Roach and Stan Laurel to star the comedian in one-reelers, for Pathe release. This action was taken by the producer, according to advices received by Pathe, on seeing Stan Laurel's first two pictures.

As recently announced from the Pathe offices, Stan Laurel is to alternate with Paul Parrott as star in weekly one-reel comedy releases under production specifications which add considerably to the average cost of these short comedies in the past.

Wide Publicity Planned for "If Winter Comes"

When "If Winter Comes" is released to theatres throughout the country, it will be backed up by one of the most extensive exploitation campaigns ever prepared for a special production, declares a statement from the Fox Film home office. The statement continues:

"By the time the picture is released in the Fall there will be a dozen different music publishing houses featuring both vocal and orchestration numbers of "If Winter Comes." The book, which has remained consistently a best seller for two years, will shortly into another edition. National tie-ups have been arranged by the Fox Publicity Department with both the music publishers and the book publishers. There is a fox trot now being sold by several of the record companies, and one of the largest phonograph companies is considering bringing out its own number in the fall."

Minister Using Films in Blue-Law Town

The city of Topeka, Kan., is what is known as a "blue-law" town, and motion picture houses are not permitted to do any business on Sunday. So the Rev. John Wells Rahill, pastor of the Central Congregational Church, has been using United Artists releases with his church services and therey increasing the attendance to such an extent that he is turning away a large number of people who cannot get into his small auditorium.

"The pictures you are sending me for Sundays are great," said the Rev. Mr. Rahill in a letter to United Artists Kansas City exchange, "and I think that picture 'The Man Who Played God' is the best I ever saw."

"Man from Glengarry" Popular in Canada

According to Ernest Shipman, the first thirty days "The Man from Glengarry," the Ralph Connor story which he is presenting through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, surpassed the net returns to the producer of any other Canadian picture showing in Canada during their entire run up to date.

Inasmuch as this production has had the audience test throughout the Dominion, and as this test has been one of great success, there is no question in the minds of the producers as to the ultimate drawing and money making power of this production in the United States.

"The Man From Glengarry," which is the first of the Shipman products to be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has been made upon the exact locale called for by the original story by Ralph Connor. It is a virile full blooded story of the big lumber camps and follows along the scheme of Mr. Shipman, who plans to present many other stories of the big outdoors, most of them laid in the wooded and wild country of Canada.

"The Man From Glengarry" was adopted by Faith Green from the novel by Ralph Connor and directed by Henry McRae with an all star cast. It will be released March 25 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Press Book Ready for "Wonders of Sea"

Announcement is made that F. B. O. has completed the compilation of an elaborate press book for its release of the latest J. Ernest Williamson undersea picture titled "Wonders of the Sea."

The front and back covers contain exact reproductions of the special twenty-four sheet stands provided for this production.

Six pages are devoted to original and outstanding display advertising for which cuts of various size and attractive variety are available, including mats of all cuts. Six pages are given to advance notices, readers and other matter that should be of great value to the exhibitor. The lobby display, banners, paper, heralds, scenes and portraits are also shown, together with helpful suggestions and exploitation stunts and hints to the exhibitor.

To Syndicate Cartoons on "The Curse"

An important publicity move was made this week by the exploitation department of L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North in connection with their six-reel state-right feature, "The Curse." Arrangements have been made with a noted newspaper cartoonist to draw a series of seven cartoons illustrating seven different evils and headed "The Curse." The subjects of the cartoons are divided between politics and domestic problems, and are all serious in treatment. Two syndicates will release the series of seven to six hundred daily newspapers, the latter paying for the cost of the mats and a few cents additional, which will cover the cartoinist's fee.

"Lost and Found" Is Approved

N. Y. Reviewers Commend Goldwyn Production at Premiere Showing

"LOST AND FOUND," Goldwyn's picturization of the story by Carey Wilson which was made on the Island of Tahiti by Director Walsh with one of the finest casts of the season, received its New York premiere at the Capitol theatre this week. Judging from the reviews by the critics of New York newspapers, the picture has lived up to all the claims made for it by its producers. They commended its rapidly moving story, the exquisite tropical scenes and the acting of House Peters, Pauline Starke, George Siegmann, Antonio Moreno and Rosemary Theby.

Rose Pelswick in the New York American wrote: "A photoplay of action that abounds with exquisite scenes of out-door life. No one could possibly complain of lack of action. It was continuous. The out-door scenes are some of the most exquisite we have seen in any picture."

Beauvais Fox in the New York Tribune: "Has the rare merit of being unhackneyed. It has the genuiness which many of the South Sea pictures taken near Miami and Long Beach lack. . . . The action is spirited and the natives authentic. A South Sea idyll."

Robert E. Sherwood in the New York Herald: "'Lost and Found' is authentically beautiful. . . . Its use of pensive palm trees still lagoons and dusky Kanaka maids adorning their locks with hibiscus blooms are incredibly soothing. Undeniably pictorial. . . . legitimately thrilling."

The Sun: "The best picture of the South Seas that this reviewer ever sat through. . . Exceptionally well done. R. A. Walsh has directed the production with his usual dash, vigor and kaleidoscopic variety so that the spectator can scarcely draw a free breath during its entire course. . . Unforgetable scenes."

Telegram: "One of the most picturesque and colorful pictures of the South Seas. Director Walsh has distinguished himself by the staging of the battle scenes in which thousands of native warriors participate."

Evening World: "Red hot romance and adventure. Well worth seeing."

Evening Mail: "Good entertainment. Maintains the interest from beginning to end. Photography especially beautiful."

First National Adds to Service

Half-Sheets Added to Regular Paper Supply Commencing with "Refuge"

FIRST NATIONAL announces an interesting and novel addition to the paper being issued with all First National pictures.

Starting with "Refuge," the latest picture, starring Katherine MacDonald, two half-sheets will be supplied, as well as the usual one-sheet. This increase in service was decided upon after the practical value of the half-sheets had been thoroughly tested, it is stated.

The half-sheets, as it has been worked out by First National, is described as an extremely effective piece of paper, large enough to permit of a striking pictorial display, yet of a convenient size for use where one-sheets cannot be placed.

The new paper is said to be particularly handy for window showings in book stores, drug stores and in connection with special window dressings arranged to exploit First National pictures. Frequently the sheets are used instead of window cards. Because of their convenient size, exhibitors are using the half-sheets in lobbies, either in frames, or panels, or stuck on mirrors.

An interesting variation in treatment is shown in one of the half-sheets for Maurice Tourneur's "The Isle of Lost Ships." Here the artist arranged an arresting design with a drawing of the floating island of lost ships as the keynote. Generally, however, the point of attraction is a human figure.

Two half-sheets are supplied at the price of a single one-sheet, and the sliding price scale, according to quantity, prevails as in the case of other First National paper.

Mimi Palmeri, who will make her screen debut in "The Ragged Edge," a Distinctive picture.

Miss Vidor in "Alice Adams" Praised

Associated Exhibitors' Encore Picture, Florence Vidor in "Alice Adams," which is scheduled for release April 8th, has won enthusiastic praise from every person who has had a preview of it, according to word from the Associated Exhibitors' headquarters. Readers of Booth Tarkington's great prize-winning novel have been struck by the fidelity with which it has been transferred to the screen.

Drug Picture Shown in Capitol Buildng

For the first time in the history of the state of Pennsylvania a motion picture was shown in the State Capitol Building in Harrisburg when "The Greatest Menace," a photo drama exposing the illegal narcotic drug traffic was screened last Tuesday night in the Hall of the House of Representatives. Practically every member of the House viewed the picture and heartily endorsed it.

It is the intention of the Resolute Film Sales, Inc., who are acting as selling agents for Mayer & Quinn, the producers of "The Greatest Menace," to show the picture to Governor Smith and his staff in Albany in the near future.

"The Greatest Menace" is being sold on the independent market the following territories being closed this week: New England to Moscow Film Exchange, Boston; Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to DeLuxe Film Exchange, Philadelphia; California to Mayer & Quinn Exchange, Los Angeles; and Canada to Harry Kaufmann, Montreal.

Lester Blankfield, personal representative for J. G. Mayer, is at present on a selling trip which will cover Pittsburgh, Indianapolis, Cleveland, Chicago and Minneapolis.

Spring Play Dates for "Quicksands"

Early spring play dates on "Quicksands" will follow a first-run engagement at one of the important Broadway theatres, it is announced by American Releasing.

"Quicksands" stars Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix, supported by Alan Hale, Walter Long, Noah Beery, Tom Wilson, Frank Campeau, Edwin Stevens, Hardee Kirkland, J. Farrell McDonald, George Cooper, Jean Hersholt and Dick Sutherland, as well as the 10th U. S. Cavalry.

The story is by Howard Hawks, the producer, and was directed by Jack Conway. It is described as essentially a big story and timely as well, for it deals with a vicious ring of narcotic smugglers, who make their headquarters in a sinister resort lying between this country and Mexico.

Dignitaries Approve "Down to the Sea In Ships" at Showing in Oklahoma

ONE of the largest crowds that ever witnessed a private screening of a motion picture, saw Elmer Clifton's production "Down to the Sea in Ships," recently at the State Convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors in Oklahoma City, Okla.

Mr. L. C. DeWalt, Branch Sales Manager of the local Hodkinson Exchange issued special invitations to a large number of exhibitors and distinguished visitors. Twenty seven members of the House of Representatives and seventeen senators with their wives were in the audience, including Ira M. Finley, John M. Voorhees, Wilbur F. Vonhum and prominent members of local clubs. In addition to members of the Ladies' Music Club, the Sorosis Club, McDowell Club and the Apollo Club, there were 150 motion picture exhibitors from all sections of the state in attendance.

Mr. Edward Muchanan Bryan, who for several years has been in charge of all the high class operas in the city, assisted Mr. DeWalt with the invitations. He was enthusiastic over the reception accorded the picture and declared that during his entire experience in Oklahoma, this was by far the largest gathering in the state capital ever yet present at the screening of a photoplay.

The showing was held at 11:30 P. M. augmented by a special musical program. At the close of the picture the audience applauded vigorously.

It is believed that considerable interest was aroused in the picture by a special display arranged by the Hodkinson staff. A booth in the convention hall was decorated with posters, stills and other accessories, in the center of which was a shadow box lined with black crepe paper. An exact replica of the old square rigger "Charles W. Morgan," used in filming the picture, was placed in the box. A ripple or wave effect ingenuously painted and arranged with beaver board added to the effect. The ship aroused considerable interest inasmuch as it is one of the most complete miniature models ever built, and the Hodkinson staff was the recipient of many compliments on the artistic display.

Much satisfaction has been expressed at the Hodkinson offices over the splendid reception given to "Down to the Sea in Ships," and as a result of the convention, it is believed to be sold 100 percent in the State of Oklahoma.

"Robin Hood" Scores in Europe

Opening of Fairbanks' Vehicle in Paris Hailed by Press and Public

"DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS IN ROBIN HOOD" began its first engagement in Continental Europe at the Salle Marivaux, Paris, on February 16, and has made a bigger hit in the French capitol than any American or European motion picture production that heretofore has been presented there, it is declared by the United Artists home office in New York.

Receipts for the first and second weeks of the run were not only larger than any other motion picture house had ever received in Paris, it is claimed, but greater also than any two weeks' receipts in any of the dramatic theatres.

It is further pointed out in the United Artists statement that out of four productions that previously had set new records in receipts in France, three were photoplays of stars comprising United Artists. These three were Douglas Fairbanks' "The Mark of Zorro," Charlie Chaplin's "The Kid" and D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East."

The Paris daily newspapers, which ordinarily do not review at length motion picture productions, gave long and enthusiastic accounts of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood." The engagement at the Salle Marivaux will continue at least until the warm weather and it is more than likely that the run will extend all through the coming summer.

"Hook, Line and Sinker," is the title of the Pathe comedy which features Snub Pollard.

"Fighting Blood" Cast Honors Director

Members of the "Fighting Blood" unit, now engaged at the F. B. O. studios transferring H. C. Witwer's Colliers' Weekly stories to the screen, surprised Mal St. Clair, their director, recently by presenting him with a handsome photographic panel as a token of their regard.

The panel embraced the photographs of all the characters in the "Fighting Blood" stories, together with the technical aides and "Lord Algy" the monocled dog, which appears in the pictures.

"Two Stones With One Bird," is the title of the fourth round of "Fighting Blood" series, F. B. O. two reelers from stories by H. C. Witwer.

Premiere For "Tie That Binds"

Appreciative New York Audience Approves Independent Production

BEFORE an appreciative and enthusiastic motion picture audience "The Tie That Binds" was given its premiere presentation at the Dyckman theatre, New York, by Jacob Wilk, who controls the distribution rights to the production. Mr. Wilk is releasing the feature on a state right basis, the foreign rights of which have been purchased by the Warner Brothers

Negotiations for the sale of the picture are being made with a number of territorial buyers, according to Mr. Wilk, and it is expected that within the next fortnight the deals will have been consummated. Of interest to the state right buyers is the statement by Mr. Wilk that the production contains the essential qualities eagerly looked for by motion picture patrons.

"What will please the most discriminating picture goer," said Mr. Wilk, "is the fact that the entire structure of the picture rings true. It portrays very vividly and entertaining a theme that has been sadly neglected on the screen.

"Briefly, the story centers around an ambitious young man whose better half does not share his eager desire to gain a foothold in the world. Usually, the situation is reversed and the woman is made the sympathetic character, but in this instance the woman is shown in her true light and we learn that upon her in a large measure rests the foundation of domestic happiness."

The production is described as a modern domestic drama adapted for the screen by Pearl Keating from a story written by Charles K. Harris, well known song writer and scenarist. It is interpreted by a cast which includes Barbara Bedford, Walter Miller, Raymond Hatton, Robert Edeson, William P. Carleton, and Julia Swayne Gordon. The feature was made under the direction of Joseph Levering.

Shirley Mason Club for N.Y. Youngsters

In New York City, under the guiding spirit of Miss Colette Kafelbaum, there has been organized a Shirley Mason Club. Says Miss Kafelbaum in a recent letter:

"Our club was formed last September and now has a membership of more than thirty little boys and girls. We all love Miss Mason very much and never fail to see her in any of her Fox photoplays, and it may interest you to know that we always enjoy her work immensely. 'Youth Must Have Love' and 'Shirley of the Circus,' are considered her very best and, of course, we shall not fail to see her in her new photoplays which we trust will be released very soon.

"We are going to issue a club booklet entitled, 'Picture News.'

"We all thank you in advance for anything you can do for us to make our little club a big success.

(Signed) "Miss Colette Kafelbaum."

Transparencies May Be Used to Excellent Effect for Stage Specialties

(Articles by Lee S. Ferguson)

IN the progress of lighting specialties as presented in the higher class motion picture theatres, transparencies have found a welcome place. Their use is varied enough to afford a never monotonous but ever changing method, through which some very beautiful effects are gained. There are some means of lighting a specialty of this kind making it appear as an illusion, and there is no better way to keep an audience talking and satisfied than to show them something that keeps them guessing.

Managing Director Edward L. Hyman has brought the Brooklyn Mark Strand to the very front ranks by putting on these novelties with the use of transparencies, and he is still working on new effects that in some instances are improvements over others and in some cases are absolutely new. Presentation is one thing that can not stand still—it must advance or change or undergo alterations. The exhibitor or showman must make his presentation move with the times and in keeping with the growing prestige of the picture theatre, or he will find himself deserted by his patrons. He must not think he has a thing perfected so well that his public will accept it week after week and month after month without change. Presentation is never perfect.

For the week of March 11, during which St. Patrick's Day brought up the tail end of the seven days, Hyman staged an original overture which brought the transparency into play. It was called "Irish Springtime Prelude," in honor of the immortal snake killer, and was Irish to the core. It had the advantage of being in striking contrast to "The Christian," the feature photoplay, which is heavy drama with an unhappy ending. Hyman always uses light specialties and overtures around a heavy picture, and vice versa.

The smashing introduction to "Irish Springtime Prelude" was the Victor Herbert number, "'Tis a Great Day Tonight for the Irish," from "Eileen." It was played by the Symphony Orchestra with great flourish, with the draw curtains closed. Upon the curtains were thrown the following lights: Four arch spots, two of which were rose pink, one orange and one medium green. A deep blue Mestrum flood was thrown over all this, and the combination result was fascinating to the extreme. At the same time a light green Kliegl flood covered the musicians of the orchestra, with the borders and foot lights of the orchestra stage also in green, and green footlights on the small stage throwing their color into the combination already described. The large transparent windows, one on each side of the orchestra stage, reaching from floor nearly to ceiling, were lighted from behind by green gelatin over the spots.

At the rousing close of the introduction, the draw curtains parted, revealing a scrim on a dark stage. Upon the scrim, which covered the opening the same as a curtain or screen, was shrown a scenic of Ireland, with no titles, coincident with the introductory strains of an Irish song. An orange spot from the wings lighted up at the right behind the scrim, showing a fireplace, floor lamp and armchair, with Everett Clark, tenor, seated in the chair. He sang "There's a Little Ould Town in the Ould County Down," while the scenic was reeling its rivers, lakes and hills over the scrim. To the observer it appeared at times as though the singer and his surroundings were a part of the film, and at others it seemed he was in front of the motion picture—and then behind it. Then he looked as if there was no scrim there at all, but that the picture was being shown on thin air only. The effect was nothing short of startling to hundreds in the audience. The singer, of course, was the chief point of interest, as was intended, with the setting, and the motion picture merely incidental, without a mass of detail.

At the conclusion of this song, but with the scenic still unfolding upon the scrim, the lights behind the curtain dimmed out to darkness, for the moment leaving the motion picture as the chief point of interest; then a light blue spot at the left, behind the scrim, dimmed up to show a white-haired old lady seated in a rocker, knitting. Her song number was "Come Back to Erin"—and the scenic flickered right along. With this song finished the blue spot dimmed out and then four light blue spots centered behind the scrim came up to show four Irish lassies, who danced the famous Irish Jig, now appearing in the road or highway and again on the bottom of the clear waters of a lake, at the will of the scenic. This jig, with its accompanying illusion and novelty, brought a punch conclusion to the overture. The wonderful synchronization and harmonizing of orchestra, vocalists, dancers and staging made the number the big success it was, and although it takes but a moment to tell of it here, the fact is that hours of planning and preparation and rehearsal were put into it by Hyman, his assistants and the artists.

Any exhibitor with a spot light or two may take this overture and reshape it to fit his theatre, using a transparency in proportion to the size of his available space. It suggests a multitude of uses, but the thing most needed is a willingness to try it and to experiment a little in order to get the most out of presentation.

The scrim idea was used again on the same program by Hyman, this time as a part of the prologue to the feature picture, "The Christian," or rather to link the prologue up closer to the introduction of the picture.

The scrim was placed to cover the opening directly behind the draw curtains. It was not visible as the curtains parted, because a mountain back drop was lighted, with set rocks, upon which was a singer attired as the Christian in the photoplay. The effect was of a singer in the mountains at night, with a spot on face and shoulders only. He sang "Invictus," by Huhn, and as he came to the closing bars a cross lighted up in the sky and "The Christian" was thrown upon the scrim, thus linking the prologue and the picture. The regular motion picture screen was lowered in front of the scrim, catching the picture well before the first scene. The front lighting consisted of two magenta entrance spots and two medium green, focused on the ceiling. Cove lights were blue, and the large transparent windows were light blue.

With a permanent screen that cannot be moved or drawn up, the scrim idea may be used if black draw curtains or plush cyclorama are drawn over the screen, parting at the center. The scrim may then be in front of this, and the singer, dancer or whatever is used, between the two. When the number finishes the spot is dimmed out, while the picture is on the scrim, and then the curtains are parted from the picture screen and the scrim is raised or drawn aside.

Unusual Equipment Number Coming

It will be of interest to all exhibitors and prospective builders to know that a special number, devoted to construction, remodelling and equipping of theatres, is to appear in an early issue of the NEWS. The text in this special edition is being prepared by Thomas W. Lamb, the well known theatre architect, and will be a thorough treatise on all problems met with in the building, remodelling and equipping of a theatre. Mr. Lamb's high position among theatre architects will mark this section as probably the one authentic source to which one can turn for valuable information.

Duran Liberty Opens

Robb and Rowleys new Liberty theatre opened at Duran, Okla., recently to pleased capacity business. The theatre has a seating capacity of 1,500 and is fireproof. The interior presents an oriental appearance due to the velvet draperies and lighting system. Ladies' rest room and gentlemen's smoking room are provised and a nursery for the kiddies and babies. The Fotoplayer organ furnishes up-to-date music. The ventilating and heating system are of the last word in design guaranteeing plenty of air, heat and a cool atmosphere in the different seasons of the year.—Noble.

F. W. Fischer Opens New Madison

The New Madison remodeled from the old Grand on State St., Madison, Wisc., opened recently as one of the F. W. Fischer chain of Wisconsin and Illinois theatres. An orchestra will provide the musical novelties. The latest word in theatre equipment has been installed, including a Bartola organ whose console is raised by hydraulic lift to a height of 7 feet above the stage during organ solos. F. J. Williams is manager, Louis St. Pierre art director and Robt. Gary, director of publicity. Mr. Fischer operates the Majestic in Madison, one other in Appleton, five in Kewaunee and two in La Salle, Ill.—Pollak.

Supply Dealers' Association Progresses

It is reported that everything is moving exceedingly satisfactorily in the development and carrying out of the policies and plans of the Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America. This movement, which has now gotten under way in earnest, will be a test of the possibilities for standardization and acceptance of high business standards in the supply end of the motion picture industry. As long as this movement is carried on with the high ideals and aims as incorporated in its present policies, it should meet with the hearty cooperation and assistance of everyone connected in any way with the motion picture supply end, either the manufacture or the purchase. Every motion picture supply dealer should look into the details of this organization which should prove its value to him, and thereafter become a member.

Direct Current Circuits

Lesson III—Part I

ELECTRICITY flows through conductors in several different ways, depending upon how it is generated. Thus, if a current flows steadily through a wire without regular, or periodic changes in value, it is called a continuous current, i.e., it flows continuously in one direction. A more common name for it is direct current, or just D. C. Such currents are usually supplied by direct current generators, storage batteries, dry cells and magnetos.

If, however, the current always flows in the same direction but periodically changes its value, it is called a pulsating current. That is, the current, while always flowing in the same direction, is increasing and decreasing in strength; pulsating, in other words. Mercury arc and Tungar rectifiers supply such currents. The crystal of a radio receiving set also supplies such a current to the headphones. In these devices, however, the current is not generated but merely changed from another form of current to that just described.

Another kind of current, which has found great favor in the past twenty years because of its flexibility and ease of control is known as alternating current. This flows first in one direction and then reverses and flows in the opposite direction. It keeps repeating these alternations many times a second. The mercury arc rectifier mentioned above changes alternating current to pulsating current, which is very similar to D.C.

Direct current only will be considered at this time, the other two forms being reserved for later treatment.

Current, Voltage and Resistance Relations

We have already learned in the foregoing lessons that the three fundamental electrical quantities, current, voltage and resistance, are related in a manner called Ohm's law:

$$I = \frac{E}{R}$$

In this formula remember that I means current; E, voltage, and R, resistance. Knowing any two of these we can find the other.

We have also learned that the product of E and I equals another quantity called Power, and that power is commonly measured in Watts, though sometimes in Horse-power also. It requires power to drive an electric current through a conductor, due to the friction of the conductor, which is called resistance. The power lost in thus transmitting a current depends upon the amount of current flowing and the resistance of the conductor. The relation between power, current and resistance can also be expressed in the form of an equation known as Joules Law (pronounced Jowl), as follows:

$$P = I^2R$$

Resistance

The voltage across a circuit depends upon the generator supplying it; the current depends upon the voltage and resistance of the circuit, but the resistance is independent of either of these two quantities. It depends upon four things. These are: the thickness of the conductor; the material of which it is made; its length, and its temperature.

The resistance of a conductor varies directly as its length. That is, the longer the wire, the greater the resistance and vice versa. It also varies inversely as its thickness or sectional area; meaning that the smaller the wire, the greater the resistance.

Then again, some metals are poorer conductors than others and so have a higher resistance. Copper is a very good conductor and so its resistance is low compared with, say, iron. This property in metals is taken care of by a factor called the specific resistance of the metal. The specific resistance of a metal is the resistance of a wire made from it which measures one foot in length and has an end area of one circular mil. (A circular mil is the area of a circle which has a diameter of one mil, and one mil is .$$1 (one-thousandth, of an inch).

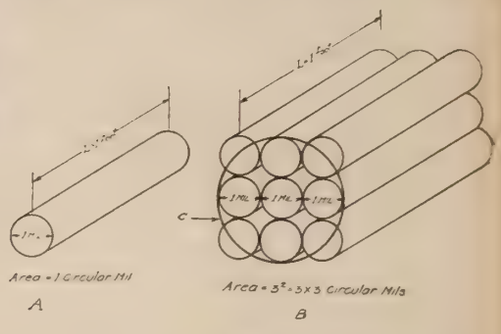

Figure 20

All of the above mentioned relations can be combined into a formula which reads as follows:

$$R = K\frac{L}{A}$$

which means that the resistance (R) of a particular conductor is equal to its specific resistance (K) in ohms per circular mil foot, multiplied by its length (L) in feet and divided by its sectional area (A) measured in circular mils. If the conductor, instead of being a round wire, is square in shape, such as the busbars of a switchboard, then the area A would be expressed in square mils. A square mil is the area of a section measuring one mil on each side.

Resistance of Square Conductors

In Fig. 19-A is shown a square copper conductor measuring one mil on each side and one foot in length. The area of the end section is accordingly I x I = I square mil. Now to find the resistance of this particular conductor the formula given once before should be used. The first step will be to find the value of K, the specific resistance of the square conductor. Table III shows that at 20° C. (ordinary room temperature) it is 8.13 ohms per square mil foot. Since this conductor is one foot in length and has an end area of one square mil it is called one square mil foot, and hence has a resistance of 8.13 ohms, as shown by the table.

TABLE III

Temperature in Degrees Centigrade	Resistance of one square mil foot in ohms	Resistance of one circular mil foot in ohms
0°	7.52	9.56
20°	8.13	10.37
50°	9.11	11.59
75°	9.85	12.62

Note: Ordinary room temperature is 20° Centigrade.

This can also be proved by substituting the values of the letters in the formula:

$$R = K\frac{L}{A}$$

$$R = 8.13 \times \frac{1 \text{ foot}}{1 \text{ square mil}}$$

$$R = 8.13 \text{ ohms}$$

Suppose, however, that the conductor measured 3 mils on each side; what would then be the resistance? The effect here would be as if the larger conductor were split into nine smaller ones, each measuring 1 mil on a side as before. This is shown in Fig. 19-B. The area of the conductor would then be 9 square mils. Using the formula as before,

$$R = 8.13 \times \frac{1 \text{ foot}}{9 \text{ square mils}}$$

The resistance of the conductor has been reduced to 1/9 of its former value. If the length was doubled the resistance would also be doubled. So we see that to find the area of a square conductor in square mils we merely multiply the dimension by itself. In other words, we square it.

If the conductor is not square but rectangular (having one side longer than the other) then one side (measured in mils) must be multiplied by the other (also measured in mils) in order to find the area of the section in square mils.

Resistance of Round Wires

It is much easier to draw the conductors out in the form of round wires, and this shape is commonly used. Copper, because of its high conductivity and low cost, is most used for carrying electric currents. The wires are graded into various sizes, depending upon the current they must carry. There are three methods of grading in use today in this country. In the first the diameters of the wires are expressed in decimals of an inch or in mils (one mil equals one-thousandth of an inch); in the second method the end areas of the wires are expressed in circular mils; and in the third, which is the most common of all, the wires are assigned numbers starting with 0000 (or 4/0) for the largest size wire, which has a diameter of 0.46 inches or an area of 211,600 circular mills, and then the size numbers increase as the diameter of the wire decreases. This is called the American Wire Gauge (B. & S. number, which means Brown & Sharp number). Thus a number 12 wire is smaller than a number 10, etc.

The procedure to be followed in calculating the resistance of round conductors is the same as that outlined for square ones. In Fig. 20-A is shown a round conductor having a diameter of one mil. The area of this end circle is called one circular mil. Now it is a fact that the area of a circle varies as the square of its diameter. This means that if the diameter of a circle is doubled the area will be four times as great. If the diameter is trebled it will be nine times as great. Fig 20-B shows that when the diameter is trebled the area is equal to the combined areas of nine smaller circles, each one mil in diameter. (The diameter of circle C is 3 mils). Thus a wire 3 mils in diameter and one foot long will have only 1/9 the resistance of another wire of the same material one mil in diameter and also one foot long.

If the diameter of a conductor is expressed in mils all that is necessary to find the area in circular mils is to square the diameter; i.e., multiply the diameter by itself. If the diameter is expressed in inches, the inches should be changed to mils and then squared. Thus 0.5 (½) inch equals 500 mils, and the area of a circle having this diameter would be 500 x 500 equals 250,000 circular mils.

In order to use the resistance formula

$$R = K \frac{L}{A}$$

, the value of K should first be taken from Table III and then the value of the other letters should be substituted in the formula. Thus, the resistance of 1,000 feet of round wire 1/10 (0.10) of an inch in diameter at ordinary room temperature (20°) is

$$R = 10.37 \frac{1{,}000 \text{ feet}}{10{,}000 \text{ cir. mils}}$$

$$= 10.037 \text{ ohms}$$

A rough rule for finding the resistance of a copper conductor when its length and size are known, is as follows: 1,000 feet of No. 10 B. & S. gauge wire has a resistance of, roughly, 1 ohm. Every three sizes up the scale the resistance is doubled, while every three sizes down the scale the resistance is cut in half. Thus, 1,000 feet of No. 13 has 2 ohms resistance; No. 16 has 4 ohms; No. 7 ½ ohm and No. 4 has ¼ ohm. If smaller lengths than 1,000 feet are used, then proceed as follows: suppose we wish to find the resistance of 150 feet of No. 16. Since 1,000 feet of No. 16 has 4 ohms resistance, then 150 divided by 1,000, multiplied by 4 will be the resistance of 150 feet of the wire.

$$\frac{150}{1{,}000} \times 4 = 0.6 \text{ ohms.}$$

Effect of Temperature on Resistance

As the projectionist will rarely, if ever, have to consider the effect of temperature on the resistance of conductors, a detailed description of how to make such calculations will be omitted. It is enough to say that the resistance of practically all pure metals increases with temperature, while the resistance of all insulators (non-conductors) decreases with temperature. The exceptions to the above are that the resistance of carbon decreases with increase of temperature, while that of manganin remains practically constant for a certain range of temperature.

Projectionists—Keep Up the Good Work

Although the columns of the N. A. M. L.. have been devoted almost entirely to the new series of articles on elementary electricity, it is strongly urged by the editor of this department that the projectionist still continue to push the idea behind this Forum and keep up their endeavors to obtain good projection in their theatre. This series of educational articles should simply help the projectionist to become better acquainted with the elements of his profession and in the end to tend towards perfection in his work. We are very glad to note that the number of new members joining this league are still increasing satisfactorily.

NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE PLEDGE

AS a motion picture projectionist who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the projection-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in reasonably good condition, according to conditions of film when received. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother projectionists and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

You Exhibitors helped to make it a success!

Back in 1916 the MAZDA Lamp Companies brought out a lamp for motion picture projection.

We knew the idea was sound. We knew that such a lamp would be the ultimate light source—a light that neither flickered nor wandered, which would burn equally well on A.C. or D.C., which would not require constant adjustment, and which would save the exhibitor money by using less current.

And you exhibitors—hundreds of you—helped by giving these lamps a trial, and pointing out how they could be improved.

The engineers of the great Research Laboratories of the General Electric Company made these improvements, one by one—through tireless research and the construction of hundreds of sizes and shapes, until now a lamp is being produced which gives absolute satisfaction.

Now we can put in your hands a lamp which fulfils every demand placed upon it.

If you have been doubtful as to the real advantages that Edison MAZDA lamps for projection offer, write and let us show you the rapidly growing list of satisfied exhibitors—men who are saving money and gaining patronage each day as a result of Incandescent Lamp Projection.

Our engineers stand ready at all times to advise exhibitors as to how they can best use Edison MAZDA lamps to advantage. Write us for information and free booklets.

Another New Million Dollar Theatre Planned For Hollywood

That Hollywood, cinema home of the industry, is to have another beautiful showplace for the silent drama product became known today through announcement from Sid Grauman, Joseph M. Schenck, Sol Lesser, Adolph Remish and other members of the West Coast Theatres, Incorporated.

According to these theatre executives, the new theatre will seat between 1,500 and 2,000 persons, and will cost in the neighborhood of a million dollars. While the exact site has not yet been determined, it is known that several are under consideration and that the land will be settled upon this week.

"It will be in the heart of Hollywood," says Lesser, "and it is the intention of those associated with the project to make it one of the biggest show places in the country."

"The success of the new Egyptian theatre," says Mr. Grauman, "has proven to us that Hollywood is ready to support the finest in entertainment and that there is now room for another cinema temple."

The West Coast Theatres' chain have a joint interest in the Grauman Hollywood theatre and also operate the Hollywood, Apollo, Wilshire, Granada, Paramount and other houses in Hollywood and vicinity.

That the theatre will be ready for occupancy within six or eight months is assured by the theatre men. Work on the building will be started immediately the site is selected.

In speaking of the new transaction Mr. Schenck says: "I have watched with great interest the growth of Hollywood and the surrounding part of that great film capital. I have utmost faith in its future. I feel that anything accomplished for the growth and advancement of Hollywood will succeed at all times. I feel safe in saying that the new theatre will be one of the finest in America and that it will be a success because Los Angeles people and Hollywood citizens patronize anything that means prosperity."

The West Coast Theatres, Inc., chain exceeds 100 houses—all in California. It is regarded as one of the biggest theatre chains in the country.

S. M. P. E. Spring Convention Draws Near

As the Spring Convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, which is scheduled to be held at Atlantic City, N. J., on May 7, 8, 9 and 10th at the Hotel Traymore, draws near it is high time that all the members and those who wish to attend this convention make their plans accordingly.

In every possible way there is great promise of a most successful convention being held both from the aspect of interesting papers on motion picture developments and apparatus and also from the unusual attraction added by the meeting place of the Society. Atlantic City at the time this convention will be held, will be at the height of its season. The committee for arrangements for this convention reports that an unusual number of members are planning to attend this convention.

First National Installs Powers

The screening room of the Dallas branch of the Associated First National Exhibitor's Circuit is one of the finest in the entire south and while comparatively small, it embodies the very latest in equipment. Furniture within the screening room consists of upholstered wicker settees and chairs with especially designed tables for making notes for future reference of the more interesting scenes in a feature when being screened. The projection equipment consists of two of the latest model improved Powers 6-B projectors and 6 x 8 Minusa Mazda-lite screen which was built to conform with the specifications of this exclusive screening room. The Southern Theatre Equipment Company of Dallas equipped this screening room complete.

Sommers Under Contract with Fox

I. Sommers, President of Sommers, Nestle & Co., of New York, has been sent to Oakland, Cal., to supervise the decorations for the new William Fox Million Dollar theatre. For seventeen years Mr. Sommers has been in the employ of William Fox and is at present under contract to keep all of the Fox theatres renovated and re-decorated as it becomes necessary. In addition, his force of interior decorators are active in the Fox Studios, New York. Upon completion of Mr. Sommer's work in Oakland he will return east to take up the decorating of the new Fox House in Philadelphia which will be ready for his crew about the first of May.

Good Sales for Paramount Condensers

The Paramount Lens Corporation of Brooklyn, N. Y., reports that the sale of their condensers is going very satisfactorily. These condensers are of the imported type and have been sponsored in this country by M. H. Tromba. There are many claims made regarding the advantages of these condensers, among others that the Paramount condensers do not discolor or fog, they stand a great deal of usage without pitting and that the light after continuous use is nearly as efficient as when first installed. Also it is said that the breakage is almost unmentionable.

New Central Installs "Gold Seal"

Among recent installations, Mr. E. S. Bowman, Treasurer of the Automatic Ticket Register Corp., reports a Gold Seal ticket machine installation in the beautiful New Central theatre, Cedarhurst.

Mr. Lloyd L. Craft, proprietor, has been operating the Cedarhurst playhouse for some eight years, and the New Central is typical of the growth of interest in moving picture theatres in suburban communities.

The Central theatre will accommodate nearly 2,000 people, as compared with a capacity of 700 in the old house.

In addition to using Gold Seal equipment in the box office, Mr. Craft has provided for the finest equipment throughout the house.

Balboa Theatre, San Francisco, Has Homelike Atmosphere

THE Balboa theatre, another splendid house to be devoted to motion pictures presentation, according to the highest standard of art, opened recently in Westwood Park, by its owner Samuel H. Levin. Situated in the heart of an exclusive residential district, and surrounded by beautiful homes, the Balboa theatre will be homelike in every sense of the word. It is the ideal of its builder and owner, Samuel H. Levin, one of San Francisco's best known theatrical men, to cater to the family. He has had considerable experience in this regard, through many of his theatre building enterprises in the residential districts, notably his Coliseum, Ninth avenue and Clement, the Haighe, Haigh St. and Cole, and other similarly classed houses.

To quote Levin: "The Balboa will be one of the most intimately constructed residential district theatres in San Francisco. Every detail that will contribute to the comfort, sumptuousness and elegance of the Balboa has been incorporated in our plans. I am to endow the theatre with the same homelike atmosphere that has distinguished the Coliseum, and other of my theatres. The Balboa will combine the architectural beauty and dignity of the old Spanish and Moorish art. Reid Brothers, who also designed the Coliseum, are the architects. In artistic conformation with the contour and general architectural scheme of the home section which it will serve, the Balboa is a 'rambling' structure, suggestive of some early California mission."

Stores will share the frontage with the entrance, which joins the main auditorium to form the familiar "L" which has been found by Mr. Levin and other successful theatre builders, to be the most practical.—Gross.

Archie Jacobson Finishes Picture

Archie A. Jacobson, second cameraman, has just completed the first test Film Guild Production for Hodkinson release entitled "The Scarecrow," starring Glen Hunter and directed by Frank Tyttle. Fred Waller, Jr., was first cameraman on this production, which was produced at the Biograph Studios. Mr. Jacobson was formerly cameraman for the Federated Screen Review.

"Webster Square" Started

Work on the new Webster Square theatre in Worcester, Mass., will start in April, and the house is expected to open in October. It will seat 1,400, and in addition to the theatre will have seven stores and five apartments housed in the three-story structure, costing $200,000. The exterior of the theatre will be in Italian Renaissance. James Boyd, Meriden, Conn., is the architect, and the H. Wales Lyons Co., that city, are contractors. The officers of the Webster Square Theatre Company, who will run the theatre, are: President, Archer B. Greeley, and Treasurer, Harry Steinberg. Principal stockholders are Helen Rogers Steinberg and Harold T. Sweeney, of Worcester.—Spencer.

Majestic Theatre Changes Ownership

The Majestic theatre, Enid, Okla., formerly managed by Leslie Cox, has been sold for the consideration of $4,000 to two showmen from Magun, Okla. The house will be operated as a straight picture house with big productions as the policy. New projection equipment may be installed at an early date.

Mr. Cox will return to his home in Tulsa, Okla., where he was formerly engaged in the theatrical business.—Trout.

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

The delicate tones between highlight and shadow that skillful exposure has secured in the negative, are reproduced in their full values on Eastman Positive Film. It carries the quality of the negative through to the screen.

Eastman Film, both regular and tinted base—now available in nine colors, is identified throughout its length by the words "Eastman" "Kodak" stenciled in black letters in the transparent margin.

A Lot of Little Photographs

"ALL the time, talent and money expended in the motion picture industry, all the genius of director, cinematographer and player are eventually represented by a lot of little photographs", says John M. Nickolaus in the April issue of The American Cinematographer. Mr. Nickolaus, Vice President of STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES, is considered one of the industry's foremost authorities on film laboratory work and photography.

"THOSE little photographs—or a moving photograph are all a producer has to show, all he has to offer the public, after months of creative effort and the expenditure of a fortune," Mr. Nickolaus continues. "Hence, nothing should be left undone to improve this medium of screen expression. Whatever success STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES have achieved has been due to our one fixed ideal—the betterment of photography."

THERE is a message in Mr. Nickolaus' article in The American Cinematographer for every producer, every director and every cinematographer in the motion picture industry. It is well worth reading.

"Grumpy" is a perfect gem of photoplay humor. It should not fail to please anyone. Notable for its charm. Artistically produced—NEW YORK CALL

Theodore Roberts as "Grumpy" excels even his famous "Uncle Josh" in "The Old Homestead." "Grumpy" is the finest piece of acting he has done during his long and brilliant career. The picture is the type the fans love. Mystery, thrills, suspense,and charming love story.—NEW YORK JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

H

"Grumpy" is one of the most delightful of all Theodore Roberts' screen characters, and is played with his usual gusto. Tasteful, dignified. Players all accomplished, charming people.—NEW YORK TRIBUNE

I

Picture well worth seeing.—NEW YORK TIMES
Role which brought Cyril Maude fame and money on the stage is even better played by Theodore Roberts. He is a joy to watch. Well produced—NEW YORK AMERICAN

Character of "Grumpy" fits Roberts like undersized rubber glove. Although this sterling character actor has done some mighty fine things, "Grumpy" stands out like the Woolworth Building on a desert. Corking good picture. Heartily enjoyable hour's entertainment.—NEW YORK EVENING WORLD.

Roberts as "Grumpy" gives unceasing pleasure.—NEW YORK SUN
It is a pleasure to see Theodore Roberts play the name part in "Grumpy." It is doubtful if his talents have ever been so brilliantly displayed.—NEW YORK JOURNAL

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST
March 31, 1923
Adolph Zukor Presents
Pola Negri
in
Her First American Production
"Bella Donna"
by Robert Hichens
Supported by Conway Tearle, Conrad Nagel and Lois Wilson
At last—what fans in every town in America have been longing for—Pola Negri as a fashionable modern woman! The most fascinating love-actress in the world in a George Fitzmaurice Paramount Picture!
Robert Hichens might have written the book with Pola in mind. Ouida Bergere did write the scenario to that tune, and Pola is herself to the last frill and glance in this intoxicating career of a thousand love-triumphs, until,— —ah, that's the plot and a rare dance it leads you,
—through the luxurious Hotel Savoy in London, through the colorful life of modern Cairo, to the moment when the proud Pola meets the appraising, brilliant eyes of a great Oriental potentate.
What chance has the young aristocrat she has married against such a man? You will see.
If you miss "Bella Donna" you miss life at its intensest.
See your theatre manager and find out when!
Note to Theatre Managers
POLA NEGRI'S First and Only American-Made Picture is "Bella Donna"
Miss Negri has NEVER appeared in any other American-made picture. Her second American-made picture will be "The Cheat"

At last—Pola Negri as your public wants her!

No wonder Sid Grauman's Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, has been jammed to capacity ever since Pola Negri in "Bella Donna" opened.

No wonder the Los Angeles critics simply went wild over the picture.

"Bella Donna," Pola Negri's first AMERICAN picture, differs from her former foreign-made productions as a sparkling Tiffany diamond differs from the dull paste imitation.

The double-spread advertisement above, which appears in the Saturday Evening Post, and full-page ads in all the leading fan magazines are telling your public that they haven't seen the real Pola Negri till they see "Bella Donna."

With Harry Carey
The World's Only Western Star

Thousands of exhibitors know the drawing power of Harry Carey's name. That's why you can rest assured that with every Carey release you can ride through to big business with the only real Western star in the business—that's why you can pick up any of the trade papers and find reports like these:

"Carey has a big following."—Hess & Rau, Metropolitan Theatre, Watertown, S. D.; "Carey very good drawing card"—R. W. Crocker, Star Theatre, Elgin, Ill.; "Carey well liked here"—Bonton Theatre, Jackson, Mich.; "Carey has always been a good bet for me"—H. E. Swan, Crescent Theatre, Kearney, Neb.; "Carey is always good"—Wheeler Bros., Woodman Hall, Montrose, S. D.

You, too, can begin cashing in on Harry Carey NOW—by booking his "Crashin' Thru," of which Harrison's Reports say: "A remarkably good Western . . . . . it never for an instant fails to hold the attention. A spectacular touch is added by the showing of a stampede of horses down a hillside . . . . . 'Crashin' Thru' should go well anywhere." BOOK IT—BOOST IT—NOW!

What Killed Old King Tut?

A LOT of people who didn't know he was sick are just finding out that Old King Tut is dead.

The question naturally arises: What killed the King?

During my recent visit to Egypt in the interest of PREFERRED PICTURES, I learned the answer.

Back in those good old days, Tut was King of the Independent Exhibitors. A slick city salesman, driving up on his camel, induced Tut to sign up for his series of 78 Super Specials.

Tut played 77 of the 78 and, as usual, was borrowing on his life insurance to pay his bills.

Along came the 78th picture, which turned out to be good enough for him to make a profit on.

The shock killed him. Poor King Tut!

Requiescat in pace! Meaning olav hasholem!

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS IN ROBIN HOOD.—Borrow all the money you can get hold of, then book this film. It's the sensation of the season. Gets the crowds. Brings them back the second time. Makes them talk. Gets you new faces you never knew were in town. Don't be afraid of this picture. I think it's the greatest of its kind on the market today. Paid the most money I ever paid for a picture. Advertised it the biggest and, Boys, I got a nice bank account left after the showing.

Don't pass up this bet for any amount of rental asked. "Robin Hood" is good for any theatre for at least a week's run at advanced prices. Never had so many compliments on a production. Had patrons and a lot of them from surrounding towns. Some came as far as thirty-five miles and they went away feeling they had seen a rare treat.—H. E. SWAN, Empress theatre, Kearney, Neb.

Five Reels of Roars!

From The Exhibitor Playing To Capacity

"'The Shriek of Araby' is a picture which urges an exhibitor to express his genuine appreciation," said H. B. Breckwedel, of the Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, in the fourth week of the run of this Sennett comedy.

"And this expression is not influenced simply by the box-office success of 'The Shriek.' That is, of course very gratifying, but it also is very gratifying to sit in my office and listen to shrieking audiences acclaiming their approval of a picture as they are doing in the case of 'The Shriek of Araby.' It would be superfluous to wish 'The Shriek' the same success throughout the country. That is already assured."

Los Angeles Critics Praise "The Shriek"

"Ben Turpin has never done anything funnier,"—Express. "It is a whole crowd of shrieks. If you want to laugh and forget your troubles, see this 'Shriek.'"—Times. "It is a shriek of mirth."—Examiner. "Ben Turpin's picture is all the title implies. It is a shriek."—Herald.

What Douglas Fairbanks Says About "The Girl I Loved"

"Your own performance is marvelous—the only word for it. The best you've ever given. And in view of the fine performances you always give, that is saying something. The pains and care evidently devoted to the entire production cannot be too highly commended. We were all of us intensely interested—thrilled."

"A Super-Production," Says Thomas H. Ince

"It is a new and super Charles Ray production, with all the personal charm that endeared you to the public. Your modest claim that you believe it contains some of your best work, is more than justified."

The Type of Picture That Made Charles Ray a Star

"Charles Ray in the type of production which established him as a star," says Motion Picture News. "There is no question that he has a vehicle here which will be well patronized. It carries homespun humanities which tug at the heart with sympathetic appeal, and which will conquer the spectator because the figures are humanized in a life-like manner."

First Presentation on Screen and Stage: Keith's "Victory"—Providence Easter Week

This combination attraction was booked on sight by Arthur G. Whyte for its world premiere in Rhode Island's capital city, thereby inaugurating the limited twelve-week season for which Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne are available for their personal presentation of a dramatic big scene from the picture.

The drawing power of these two great stars is tremendous. In person in Keith-Orpheum vaudeville they have smashed many records. This Keith premier booking of the act and picture is further tribute to their drawing power.

Modern Marriage

By Dorothy Farnum

From Derek Vane's Celebrated Novel "Lady Varley"

Directed by Lawrence Windom

Supervised by Whitman Bennett

"Modern Marriage" is a big society drama—a romance; a melodrama, with an element of mystery. It shows how a wife almost wrecked the family and how the clenched fists of a determined husband preserved a home from disaster. You want this one—and want it quickly.

THE EVENING WORLD, TUESDAY, MARCH 27, 1923.

Goldwyn's production of Rupert Hughes's own screen adaptation of his novel "Souls for Sale," as shown for the first time semi-publicly at the Capitol Theatre this morning, is, in our estimation, the greatest audience picture we ever saw. And by that we mean that, from our point of view, "Souls for Sale" has every element in it that will attract and hold an audience.

At the present time we know of no film subject that could be one-eighth as interesting as films themselves. Every one, or practically every one, talks of Hollywood at least once every day, and in "Souls for Sale" Hollywood is made to stick out its tongue, open wide its maw and say "Ah," while the audience feels the Hollywood pulse and takes its temperature.

Evidently Rupert Hughes, an impetuous sort of chap, grew rather weary of hearing his cherished locality referred to as though it was prancing about on cloven hoofs and chewing Roman candles and set himself out to set Hollywood right in the eyes of the doubting ones. And whether Hollywood life and happenings as depicted in "Souls for Sale" are the life and happenings of the real Hollywood is a secondary consideration, for Major Hughes has given the screen a masterpiece and is unfolding a story as gripping and as real, as logical and as thrilling, as any film we have seen.

Although there are no stars flaunted in big typed flourishes on the advertising of the picture, "Souls for Sale" probably shows more real stars than any other film on record save the news reel showing the annual meeting of the Screen Actors' Guild at a barbecue. In fact, the beholder is led right up to many of the big California studios and allowed to pet the "animals" to his heart's content.

And besides showing us the mainspring and what makes the cuckoo coo, Major Hughes has given us a story that is interesting from the moment Eleanor Boardman, as the sad-faced heroine, jumps from a transcontinental express in the middle of the Great American desert in order to escape a man she had been tricked into marrying, until the film ends in complete destruction by fire and tornado of a circus as big as P. T. Barnum ever dreamed of.

The cast?. See "Who's Who in Hollywood;" and even then you'll miss a few who appear.

The outstanding Common capital stock issue of Allens Vancouver Theatre, Limited, is $700,000. (7,000 shares).

Tenders will be received either—

(a) For all parcels en bloc, in which case tenderers are required to state the amounts apportioned in their tenders for each of the parcels separately, or—

(b) For parcels Nos. 11 to 36 en bloc, in which case tenderers are required to state the amounts apportioned in their tenders for each of the parcels separately, or—

(c) For any parcel separately,

The conditions in (a) and (b) above mentioned must be strictly observed and complied with.

Where any parcel tendered for consists of shares, the tenderer must state the amount tendered by him for the parcel as a whole, and also the rate per share which is tendered for the shares comprising the parcel. Tenders for such parcels must be made by each tenderer subject to the conditions that the delivery to him of shares to the number of 10% more or less than the amounts mentioned in respect of any parcel or parcels tendered for will be accepted and paid for by the tenderer—should his tender be accepted—at the rate per share mentioned in his tender. Where a tenderer is unwilling to agree to this condition in respect of any specific parcel or parcels tendered for, he must so state in his tender. In all cases the purchaser will pay transfer taxes.

If any tender for the purchase of all parcels en bloc or for the purchase en bloc of parcels Nos. 11 to 36 shall be accepted, then with such acceptance the purchaser must agree that failure or unwillingness on the part of the Vendor to deliver one-fifth in number or less of the parcels tendered for shall not relieve the tenderer from obligation to complete the purchase of the remaining parcels covered by the tender at the amounts apportioned therefor by the tenderer and stated in his tender, but the tenderer must bind himself to complete such purchase and pay the amounts apportioned in the tender for the parcels of which delivery shall be made. In respect of this condition a tenderer shall be at liberty, when making his tender, to state the specific parcel or parcels in respect of which he requires that delivery must be made if his tender is to be open to acceptance.

Contracts for the rental of films have been made by the Estate of Allen Theatres, Limited, on behalf of theatres which are owned outright or controlled under lease by Allen Theatres, Limited, and also by subsidiary companies, control of the operations of which has rested in the hands of Allen Theatres, Limited, by reason of its holdings of the capital stock of such theatres. The successful tenderers, if any, for such theatres and/or shares must agree to assume and carry out such contracts.

Information as to the assets and liabilities of subsidiary companies whose shares are offered in the above parcels, and as to the income and expenditures of such companies and of the theatres which are offered in the above parcels, will be furnished on application to the undersigned. The information so to be furnished will be that which has been made available to the Vendor. The Vendor will not be responsible for the correctness of such information but tenderers are required to satisfy themselves as to such assets and liabilities and income and expenditures.

As to parcels Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 12 and 13, the purchaser shall search the title at his own expense. The Trustee or Vendor shall not be required to furnish any abstracts or produce any deeds, declarations or any evidence of title except those in his possession. The purchaser shall have thirty days in which to make objection or requisition in respect of the title, and in case the purchaser shall within such time make any objection or requisition which the Trustee or Vendor shall from any cause be unable or unwilling to remove or answer, the Trustee or Vendor may rescind the sale, in which case the purchaser shall be entitled only to a return of the deposit money, without interest, costs or compensation. In the case of the sale of any of the leasehold properties above mentioned the Trustee or Vendor shall not be required to obtain the consent of the Lessor to the assignment of the lease.

TERMS OF SALE—

As to Parcel No. 1:—Marked cheque for $5,000.00 must accompany tender; $10,000.00 to be paid within thirty days after the acceptance of the tender, and the balance in ten equal semi-annual instalments. Interest on deferred payments to be at the rate of 7% per annum. Deferred payments shall be secured by a mortgage upon the property in form satisfactory to the Trustee or Vendor.

As to Parcel No. 2:—Marked cheque for $1,000.00 must accompany tender; $4,000.00 additional to be paid within thirty days, and the balance at the rate of $2,000.00 per annum, with interest at 7%. Deferred payments shall be secured by mortgage upon the property in form satisfactory to the Trustee or Vendor.

As to Parcel No. 3:—Marked cheque for $1,000.00 must accompany tender; a further $1,500.00 to be paid within thirty days, and the balance at the rate of $2,000.00 per annum, with interest at 7%, secured by mortgage upon the property, in form satisfactory to the Trustee or Vendor.

As to the Remainder of Parcels:—Marked cheque for 10% of the amount of tender must accompany each tender, and 15% additional of the amount of tender shall be paid in cash upon its acceptance. Where the purchase price of any parcel shall be $10,000. or less, the balance of such purchase price shall be paid in three, six and nine months with interest at the rate of 7% per annum, secured to the satisfaction of the Trustee. Where the purchase price shall exceed $10,000., the balance of such purchase price shall be paid in three, six, nine and twelve months, with interest at 7% per annum, secured to the satisfaction of the Trustee.

Where tenders are made for the whole of the parcels en bloc or for parcels Nos. 11 to 36 en bloc, marked cheque for 10% of the amount of tender must accompany the tender and a further 15% of the amount of tender be paid upon its acceptance, and the balance of the purchase price shall be paid in six, twelve and eighteen months, or as may be otherwise arranged, with interest at the rate of 7% per annum and such balance shall be secured to the satisfaction of the Trustee.

All taxes, insurance, water rates and similar items will be adjusted to the date of acceptance of tender, in respect of Parcels Nos. 1, 2, 3, 12 and 13.

The sale of Parcels Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 12 and 13 shall be completed not later than forty days after the acceptance of the tender by the purchasers. In respect of all other parcels above mentioned the purchase and sale shall be completed within ten days from the date of the acceptance of tender.

In respect of Parcels Nos. 1, 2, 3, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 23, 24, 25 and 26 the respective purchasers must pay the costs of operating the theatre comprised in the parcel purchased and be entitled to the revenue from the date of acceptance of tender. Where the parcel sold shall consist of leasehold, the purchaser must take an assignment of the lease and indemnify Allen Theatres, Limited, and the Trustee from all liability thereunder from the date of acceptance of tender.

Particulars and information relative to the interests of Allen Theatres, Limited, in Parcels Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11 and 36 will be given upon application to the Trustee, but the Trustee will not be responsible for the correctness of such information.

A marked cheque, payable to the order of G. T. Clarkson, Trustee, for ten per cent of the amount of such tender, or for the amount as above otherwise specified, must accompany each tender, which cheque will be returned if the tender is not accepted and forfeited if the tender is accepted and not completed by the purchaser.

The highest or any tender not necessarily accepted.

Tenders will be opened at the office of the Trustee, 15 Wellington Street West, Toronto, at two o'clock p. m., of Wednesday, April 25th, 1923, at which time all tenders will be considered. The Trustee reserves the right, however, to withhold acceptance or rejection of the tenders, or any of them, until four o'clock in the afternoon of Thursday, April 26th, 1923, in order to allow time for consideration of the tenders. Tenderers may at their option be present at such times.

Further particulars may be had upon application to the Trustee.

DATED at Toronto, this 12th day of March, 1923.

G. T. Clarkson, Trustee, of E. R. C. Clarkson & Sons,
15 Wellington Street West, Toronto.

"CAN A WOMAN LOVE TWICE"

NO more beautiful picture will be offered this season to discriminating theatres than "CAN A WOMAN LOVE TWICE."

It is a thing apart,—a picture of higher quality—done with more finesse—a production that stands out as unusual—a picture for those who love the finer things of life. First run theatres everywhere have been asking for 'finer pictures'. "CAN A WOMAN LOVE TWICE" is one of F.B.O.'s first answers to that nation-wide request for 1923. There will be more during the season.

Ask your nearest F.B.O. exchange to screen this splendid offering for you. To see it means to book it.

SHE was the most beautiful woman in New York's richest and most exclusive society set. She became the most brilliant hostess in the gayest and most fashionable court of all Europe. Young bloods, men of affairs, great statesmen sought her, rivals for her favor. She chose her loves from thousands. Vital, magnetic, erotic, she drained the cup of life —and love—to the lees.

Time passed. Beauty faded. Lovers deserted. She was old.

A Viennese biologist made a wonderful discovery, a scientific revitalization of the glands of life.

She was rejuvenated—young again, as young as the flapper granddaughters of her old time friends. She returned to New York—a sophisticated brain in a young body. Her adventures astounded the world. You will marvel at her experiences. They will astonish you. Have YOU read this remarkable book by Gertrude Atherton?

This is Jackie's Best Audience Picture!

This is Jackie's best picture. That's the consensus of opinion of all who have seen it.

You know how the public loves Jackie now. They'll idolize him after this one.

The appeal of "Daddy" is universal. It will delight every audience—and every man, woman and child.

Heart interest—that's the one element that puts a picture over Big. "Daddy" has it in a degree few pictures have attained.

There's pathos that will tug at the heartstrings; there's plenty of joyous laughter; there's a beauty of sentiment that will make them all happy.

They'll laugh; they'll cry; they'll go away happy. A rare combination. And added to this is Jackie's own pulling power as a star.

Here's the stuff that makes sure-fire audience appeal. And that's what brings the money into the box office.

The Producer

EXHIBITORS, in general, view the producer through a long-distance lens. Perhaps a close-up—such as we experienced with one at lunch last week—will be instructive.

About a producer's responsibility, for instance—the burden he carries.

Suppose you—an exhibitor—had the responsibility of planning five, ten, twenty, forty—or more pictures for next season.

And the distributor was sitting astride your shoulders with the heavy mandate—"make 'em to sell—make 'em to sell—make 'em to sell!"

It's perfectly natural for the distributor to shout this way, you know.

He's got to sell these pictures to you.

And, certainly, it is logical to assume that the distributor gets his selling cue from you.

When he shouts—demands, is the word—"make 'em to sell," he means: "make them the way the exhibitors want them made."

You are the man on the firing line. You want what the public wants—and what you want the distributor wants—and so on back to the producer. That's the way the pressure goes.

So in reality the responsibility is yours—as to what the public gets.

Now, the producer has a very uneasy feeling that the public isn't getting altogether what it wants.

He knows pretty well that the run of pictures today are in a rut. Their crying weakness is sameness. And the public is fed up on this sameness—sameness of themes, faces, situations and treatment. Pretty nearly everyone—public, newspapers and picture people—knows that.

The producer feels the urge to try something different. But—the distributor says: "Don't; I've got to sell the different picture to the exhibitor and it's tough sledding. I don't want the job."

So, we reiterate, the producing problem goes back to you.

You determine it. If you want stars and the high cost of them, names and the high cost of them, stock stories and situations—you are going to get them.

Some pretty wise people have said that the public doesn't know what it wants.

Which is largely true.

So the probability is that you don't know. At any rate, it's not wise to be cock-sure that you do know.

And it's possible that when you think of your public you are thinking of those who come readily to your theatre.

How about that larger portion of your community who don't come often or at all? Do you know what they want?

We hold pretty firmly to the belief that the finer picture—which is generally the different picture—will go strong if you get the word of it to the public you don't know about.

We published an article last week showing conclusively that this type of picture went well over the box office profit mark when the women of the community got back of it, which simply means good advertising effort. There's a big, practical message in that article. Turn back to the March 17th issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS and read it, if you haven't already.

If we are to have more of these different pictures—pictures of fresh and finer creative work—you have got to sell them to the public if you expect the producer to make them for the distributor to sell to you.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

THERE comes to our desk an envelope which brings back memories with a rush. We used to get just such an envelope ten years ago with the address printed on the flap and the entire front of it occupied with a cut of what was then about the finest and largest studio and laboratory plant in the business. The envelope generally contained a polite declination to advertise coupled always however with a cordial invitation to come over to Flatbush, Brooklyn and lunch with J. Stuart Blackton, Albert E. Smith and William ("Pop") Rock.

J. Stuart Blackton has chosen, happily, this old style envelope to announce his return to this country, to Vitagraph and to his old job as Vice President, along with Albert E. Smith and—now it is John, not William Rock. And, somehow or other, the envelope and letter got a lot of sentiment out of us.

There's a large "welcome" sign for J. Stuart Blackton and the whole industry is back of it. Not a man knows him but likes him and respects him. He has held positions of prominence and responsibility, always ably and fairly and with credit to this industry.

His letter concludes with:

"Throughout all the years since 1896, I have been actively engaged in producing motion pictures. I have always retained my one-third interest in The Vitagraph Company, and now, after five years of independent producing in the East, in California and for two years in England, I have returned to my old office of Vice President of The Vitgraph Company.

"This reviewing of old ties and associations means to me much more than a mere business deal. Vitagraph is my old home. With Albert E. Smith and 'Pop' Rock, I helped to build its foundations. I was with it through its years of astounding success. It is the only one of the old line pioneer companies still actively and successfully working.

"It's a grand old name, is 'Vitagraph.' The training school, the Alma Mater of hundreds of famous people in all walks of motion picture life.

"Vitagraph has a great and an honorable past. I believe it has a still greater and more successful future in store for it, and I am very happy and proud to be able to write and tell you that I am 'back home' again."

THOMAS SAXE'S Theatorium, the monument of a pioneer in the motion picture field, has executed a fade-out. This tiny theatre, hedged in by cigar stores, haberdasheries, restaurants and refreshment parlors, was the pioneer of Milwaukee's motion picture palaces.

Mr. Saxe opened the theatre as a "Hales' Tours" car in 1906. It was fitted up as a railroad Pullman, the entrance modeled after the observation end of a train. The pictures were chiefly scenic. All the accompaniments of a train journey were observed; the whistles, crossing bells, and puffing of the engine. There was even a device which gently rocked the floor, enhancing the idea of a train trip. The crude projecting machine was placed behind the screen, which was a sheet, and had to be dampened with a hose from time to time so that the pictures would show through. There were but forty seats in the theatre.

The hey-day of the Theatorium was the day of John Bunny, Florence Turner, Maurice Costello and Broncho Billy. A four story bank building costing $500,000 will replace the tiny theatre, which has taken its place in history along with other buildings which are first in something but must make way in the name of progress.

NO wedding bells will ring out their glad tidings for Pola Negri and Charlie Chaplin April 1. A rumor that the "Queen of Tragedy" and the "King of Comedy" were to unite their royal fortunes on All Fools' was dispelled this week by Pola herself. Six months, at least, must intervene, she says before she tosses the bride's bouquet. Reason? Production activities.

R. B. MURRAY, director, U. S. Army Motion Picture Service, thinks it is a good idea to bring to your attention what he considers some very interesting statistics—interesting in that they indicate the high entertainment value of the pictures that are now being produced and the efficiency of the distributing organizations. From July 1 to December 31, 1922, the U. S. Army Motion Picture Service had 9,814 programs scheduled for exhibition in the 110 War Department Theatres in this country and the Canal Zone.

Here are the reactions: there were 93 pictures substituted for pictures that had been advertised for showing; 93 cases where the audience did not like the feature; 341 cases where the film was received in poor condition; 39 cases where the films did not arrive or arrived too late to be shown on the scheduled date. Thus there were but 473 complaints against the distributors or five per cent. There were but 93 cases where the audience did not like the feature or one per cent.

Mr. Murray considers the operation of the service on a 94 per cent. basis is not only satisfactory, but that it is a remarkable tribute to the product of the producers and the efficiency of the distributors. The director's argument softens the hard knocks which the producer and distributor are receiving these days.

THE Authors' Breakfast will take place at high noon, April 21st, at the Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C. Mrs. Harriet Hawley Locher, whose professional work brings her in touch with the leaders in the photoplay world, both producers and actors, has been appointed by Mrs. Louis N. Geldert, national president of the League of American Pen Women, as chairman of the Motion Picture Committee, and through her the interesting characters in this field will attend the Authors' Breakfast. Mrs. Locher is director of the public service and educational department for the Crandall Theatres in Washington.

A COLORFUL postcard pamphlet of Heliopolis, Egypt, has been received from E. V. Richards, who with J. S. Saenger and their wives are touring the Orient.

OF all the unique sets ever built in Hollywood, none, say the wise ones, has ever equalled the quaint old Spanish city now growing out of the roof of the Pickford stage for use in Miss Pickford's new picture as yet unnamed.

The roof is fifty feet high and for the sake of the film represents the summit of a hill in an old Spanish city. Surmounting the hill are a church, several dwellings and a number of trees. A burro path leads from the ground to the roof of the stage, and during the taking of the scenes much of the action will show not only the mules, but many people on the trail and on the roof. Intervening buildings which constitute a replica of one of the streets of the Spanish city rise between the cameras and the top of the stage, thus completing the illusion of the distant hill. A portion of the town which crowns the hill-top will overlap the roof of the stage, and supporting scaffolding will make it virtually a "city on stilts."

A HUNDRED or more of Ben Schulberg's many friends waxed merry and complimentary at a dinner held in his honor at the Ritz, New York, last Monday evening. B. P.'s interesting career from office boy to a position today as a big operator in productions was reviewed wittily and otherwise by Rube Goldberg, Roy L. McCardell, Joseph L. Friedman, George Blaisdell, Robert E. Welsh, Morris Ryskind, Jack Bachnar, Dr. Giannini and others. Harry Reichenbach was toastmaster. A vaudeville entertainment followed.

POLA NEGRI has cancelled an insurance policy for one million marks which if collected at this time would pay to the beneficiary the sum of fifty dollars at the present rate of exchange. The star took out this policy several years ago when she was at work in Berlin studios. When she began activities in "Bella Donna," her first American feature, she took out a similar policy with an American company for the sum of $250,000 which, by pre-war standards, approximates in value the million marks which the star recently renounced forever.

THE talking pictures again! Elias E. Ries, electrical engineer of New York, has received a grant of important patents on the talking motion picture, according to an announcement made Tuesday. The claim is advanced for him that this gives priority for his invention, called by him the "audioscope," in devices which depend upon the recording of sound on a strip of film. Mr. Ries holds patents on several devices and invented a submarine detector, for which patents were turned over by him to the United States Government during the war.

A LOUD protest against a continued demoralized street car service is being made by the picture theatre owners and managers in Schenectady, New York. The assertion is made that the service has cost the theatres thousands of dollars during the winter months. The trouble is said to have started last fall when the company introduced one-man cars and later are said to have cut the wages of the men.

The condition has become so bad according to Edwin O. Wienberg, manager of the State theatre, a house which cost $500,000, or more, that many persons have declared to him that it takes anywhere from an hour to ninety minutes to reach their homes, and for that reason they are not attending the theatres. Bus service has lately been started and this is affording some relief.

HERE'S service for you! Sound proof glass cages have been installed in the picture theatre at Bandon, Oregon, for the pleasure of mothers whose children accompany them to the show. Why not install a few of these cages in every theatre for the benefit of those pestiferous patrons who read the captions out loud?

M. C. LEVEE, president of the United Studios, has just purchased from the Government, five 125 H.P. aeroplanes for use in the production of films at this plant. When the planes arrive at the studio they will be partly dismantled and used as wind machines for the picturization of storm effects.

Incidentally, Mr. Levee, should feel proud over the Maurice Tourneur production, "The Isle of Lost Ships," which comes to the screen as one of the most distinct novelties ever recorded. See it and be carried away on a fantastic cruise. It is rich and romantic, quaint and colorful, and deserves a place among the better things.

TOM GIBSON of Hollywood is playing Harry Lauder's song, "A Wee Deoch an' Doris," upon his Vic these days. The 'Stork Special' whistled into the studio city last week and deposited another daughter on Gibson's doorstep. She weighed nine and a half pounds and while her name was 'David' before her arrival, it only took the fraction of a second to make it Doris. Mrs. Tom is doing nicely while Tom himself may be expected to continue with his present picture without the aid of a wheel-chair.

WOULD you know what has become of Edwin Thanhouser, whose company in the old days of the business was noted as among the foremost? We will advise you that he is in retirement at a handsome home in Oyster Bay, Long Island. Mr. and Mrs. Thanhouser are at present on their yearly pleasure trip to California.

THE Follies will not take to the road this season after the New York engagement, but that doesn't mean that theatregoers west of the Hudson will be denied a close-up of the show which glorifies the American girl. Flo Ziegfeld plans to make a permanent motion picture record of this year's Follies. Words and music, of course, will be silenced, but the girls should screen wonderfully well. And the professor of pulchritude can enlist the services of Will Rogers to write the captions.

We predict some agitation around the hearts of the bald heads when they get the close-ups of Gilda, Jessie, Shirley, Blanche, Avonne, Phoebe, Helen, Hazel, Anastasia, Dorothy, Margie, Marcel, Jessica, Betty and fifty others. It is estimated that twelve reels will be required to record the performance.

KENNETH HODKINSON, general manager of United Artists, has left on a swing around the circle which will include many of the U. A. exchanges. His first stop will take him to Cuba.

IT looks as if Rupert Hughes had made a raid on every motion picture lot in Hollywood to collect the players for his "Souls for Sale." In this stupendous cast are Eleanor Boardman, Mae Busch, Barbara La Marr, Richard Dix, Frank Mayo, Lew Cody, Arthur Hoyt, David Imboden, Roy Atwell, Wm. Orlamond, Forrest Robinson, Edith Yorke, William Haines, George Morgan, Dale Fuller, Snitz Edwards, Auld Thomas, Leo Willis, Yale Boss, Walter Perry, Sam Damen, R. H. Johnson, Jack Richardson, Rush Hughes, Aileen Pringle, Eve Southern, May Milloy, Sylvia Ashton, Fred Kelsey, L. J. O'Connor, Jed Prouty, Charlie Murphy, Margaret Bourne and the directors, Marshall Neilan, Eric von Stroheim, Fred Niblo and Charlie Chaplin. Oh yes, the King of Comedy is there with the megaphone for a brief moment. Major Hughes' story is much more serious than his picture, which, while it has its dramatic moments, is mostly pointed with satire.

Greater New York Joins M.P.T.O.A.

Division Organization Perfected with Large Membership of Independents

THE Greater New York division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was perfected within the past few days.

For several months the theatre owners in the Metropolitan territory have been meeting with National President Sydney S. Cohen of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, with this purpose in view. They signed individual applications of membership at first and were then officially and duly constituted the Greater New York division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

A large number of the members of the New York division of the National Organization are also members of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York City. They desired the advantage of national organization and have been assisting and cooperating with the National Officers for some time past. They have completed plans to join with the other New York State divisions of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Some of the Organization Committee active in the work of forming the Greater New York division are Morris Needles, David Weinstock, John Manheimer, A. H. Eisenstadt, Louis Geller, Sam Bock, Philip Rosenson and John Wittman.

The Western New York Motion Picture Theatre Owners, Inc., is affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and acts for and in behalf of the theatre owners in the Buffalo territory, comprising the counties of Erie, Niagara, Orleans, Genessee, Wyoming, Chautauqua, Alleghany and Cattaraugus.

The Rochester Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Inc., is also affiliated with the National Organization and includes theatre owners in the counties of Monroe, Wayne Livingston, Ontario, Yates, Seneca, Schuyler and Steuben.

The Bronx Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, which unanimously adopted a resolution applying for a charter in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, as the Bronx unit of the Greater New York division of that body, is an active organization in existence for about 11 years and has in its membership every independent theatre owner in the Bronx. These members have also signed individual applications affiliating themselves with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Knickerbocker Suit Lost by Insurance Company

JUSTICE HITZ in District Supreme Court at Washington, Friday last, held invalid the demurrer filed by the Equitable Life Assurance Society of America to the suit of Dr. Clyde M. Gearhart, war veteran and army surgeon, who was a survivor of the Knickerbocker theatre disaster and is a claimant to $2,250, under a total disability benefit clause in an Equitable policy.

The insurance company declared that it should not be held liable until eight months after the accident. Counsel for Dr. Gearhart claimed he was totally disabled the night of the accident and should be paid from that date. Joseph W. Cox and T. Hardy Todd appeared for Equitable, while Dr. Gearhart's counsel included Attorneys Darr, Whiteford & Darr.

Screen Writers Prepare for Annual Revue

Frank Condon and Tom Geraghty will write the book of the 1923 Screen Writers' Revue which will be held in Los Angeles, California, on the nights of April 27-28, it was announced this week by Frank E. Woods, president of the Writers' Club of Hollywood.

Working under the guidance of Chairman Milton Schwartz, the entertainment committee is well under way with the plans for the second annual show to be given by the screen writers.

Aubrey Stauffer, who wrote the music for the Revue of 1922, will undertake a similar task with the new show. Alfred Hustwick has already begun work on the writing of the lyrics to suit the musical compositions.

The actual working staff will constitute an informal production committee, which will have immediate charge of all the rehearsals and the final performances. This committee is made up as follows: Milton Schwartz, chairman; Aubrey Stauffer, stage director; Eddie Sutherland, Jefferson Moffett, Edward Rowland and Frank R. Adams, stage managers.

Studio Land Suit Against City Gets Hearing

The land suit of the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation against the City of Medford, Mass., came up again last week, when Mayor Coolidge held a conference lasting many hours with the members of the Water and Sewer Commission, Park Commission, Chairman Edward S. Randall of the Board of Assessors, City Solicitor Guy E. Healey and City Engineer Fred R. Charnock on the status of the Wright's Pond land suit, the location of the Mastercraft studios.

The producing company claims that the lease made in 1917 by the Mayor and Aldermen of the Wright's Pond land for a period of 20 years, at the rate of $1,500 a year rental, with the right to purchase at the end of five-year intervals during the term of the lease, is a valid agreement despite the failure of the Medford Water and Sewerage Commission, which has control of the land and pond, to ratify the lease and the agreement of sale. The proposition to sell the portion of the land on which the motion picture studio stands for the sum of $25,000, retaining the rest of the land and the water itself for the city, was fully explained.

Warners Sign Irene Rich and Baby Bruce Guerin

Irene Rich and Baby Bruce Guerin have been placed under long-term contracts by the Warner Brothers, according to an announcement by Harry M. Warner.

Portland Fire Damages Studio $25,000

A SPECTACULAR fire that is thought to have started in the developing room damaged the American Lifeograph Company studio, Portland, Ore., to the extent of $25,000 March 19th. Valuable prints and negatives were saved from the flames.

Construction of a new studio building, larger and more useful, will be started within the next few weeks, according to a decision reached by the board of directors the following day. The same site undoubtedly will be used. The staff of the company is now in Alaska making a picture for Alaskan interests.

All studio equipment, including wardrobe, lights and machinery, as well as the cutting, titling and developing rooms, was destroyed.

First National Invades Western Canada

Indication that Associated First National Exhibitors had made arrangements for direct representation in Western Canada is provided in the announcement of the establishment of a registered company, Associated First National Pictures of Western Canada, Limited. This company has been granted a license to do business in the Province of Manitoba by the Government of that province, according to announcement a few days ago.

The Allens of Toronto have been directing the distribution of First National attractions in Western Canada, the many Allen theatres, among others, holding First National theatre franchises throughout the West. In Eastern Canada First National has had its own direct distributing company, the latter operating in the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The Allens have held First National franchises for all but one of their Eastern theatres, but they did not control the exchange in the East.

Associated First National has been one of the principal creditors of Allen Theatres, Limited, the assets of which, affecting 36 theatres, are being offered for sale. The fact that First National now has its own exchange in the Canadian West indicates direct control of distribution throughout the whole Dominion.

O'Reilly Named President of T. O. C. C.

Charles L. O'Reilly was elected president of the Greater New York and Northern New York T. O. C. C. at the annual election held last Tuesday. The office was uncontested. Charles Steiner won by a substantial majority over Harmon Yaffa for the vice-presidency.

Other officers elected were as follows:

Joseph Jame and Max Miller, second vice-presidents; S. A. Moross, secretary; Hyman Rachmil, treasurer; Al Friedlander, sergeant-at-arms.

The executive committee is composed of William Landau and Leo Brecher, New York; Rudy Saunders and Billy Brandt, Brooklyn; Bernard Edelhertz, the Bronx; Hy Gainsboro, Queens; Charles Moses, Richmond; Leon Rosenblatt, Joseph Stern and Louis Rosenthal, Northern New Jersey.

The finance committee is made up of Saul Raives, Harry Brandt and E. H. Behrend.

Fox to Build $2,000,000 Studio on Coast

To Produce Only Specials; New Directors and Players Being Signed; B'way Plays Bought

FOX FILM CORPORATION, in a statement issued late last week, announces plans for the construction of a two-million-dollar studio in Los Angeles to be started during the coming summer. A number of sites comprising upward of 200 acres are being considered by Bauer, Wright and MacDonald, Fox's Los Angeles attorneys, as prospective locations for the picture producing plant.

Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager, also announces during the course of the statement that Fox is about to launch an extensive schedule of production at its West Coast studios. Fox will make no more program pictures, according to Mr. Sheehan, but will confine its efforts to special productions. In this connection, Mr. Sheehan let it be known that a number of important players and directors are being added to the studio forces both in New York and Los Angeles. Jean Arthur, Ruth Dwyer and Peggy Shaw (the last named a former Ziegfeld Follies girl, already seen in a number of Fox pictures) are among the feminine beauties that will be seen in forthcoming Fox productions as leading women. These players have already been sent to the Coast from New York.

The Fox production schedule set for the coming season includes the filming of John Galsworthy's play, "Loyalties," which has been one of the successes of the present dramatic season in New York and William Anthony McGuire's comedy, "Six Cylinder Love." "The Governor's Lady" will also be shortly started for the screen. "Hoodman Blind" is another stage production, the work of Wilson Barrett and Henry Arthur Jones, that will be launched in the near future at the Fox studios for the silver sheet. J. Gordon Edwards is now working in Panama on a melodrama of American naval and official life. Jack Fox is shortly to begin work on "Cameo Kirby," Booth Tarkington's and Harry Leon Wilson's stage play. Tom Mix's special production schedule includess two of Zane Grey's novels.

Other literary properties to be shortly produced for the screen by Fox will include Booth Tarkington's "Gentle Julia" and E. M. Hull's "The Shadow of the East." The production of "The Fool," Channing Pollock's play, will not be started until late in the fall.

Another feature of the statement from the Fox home office is the announcement of additions to the Fox chain of motion picture theatres. The new Oakland theatre, which will seat about three thousand, is expected to open about May 1st, while the Fox Philadelphia theatre, having a capacity of 3,700 seats, is expected to open September 1st. These two houses will bring the total of the Fox circuit up to fifty theatres.

New distribution offices are being opened this month in Cuba, Mexico, Holland, Czecho-Slovakia and Japan.

The Fox statement has the following to say concerning plans for the huge producing plant on the West Coast:

Spanish architecture will prevail in the new building, which will be of ornamental beauty, as well as superbly adapted to the purpose of producing perfect motion pictures under the most modern methods. Construction engineers and architects are now drawing up plans for the new plant, which will have the benefit of all present improvements in studio construction and will embody, as well, many features not existing in any studios now built. Prominent among these will be a wonderful system by which fire hazard will be reduced to a minimum. The building will be equipped throughout with a sprinkler system of the latest approved type; every fire prevention and safety device known to modern construction will be included.

"The establishment will include a complete laboratory equipped with up-to-date machinery for the development and handling of negative and for the production of positive prints in great quantity. It will include an experimental department in which research work will be conducted for the improvement of photography, printing, toning and perfection of machines used in the various processes.

"Under the care of dress and style experts, there will be an elaborate costume department, plentifully supplied with costumes and production accessories, which will be gathered from domestic and European markets. A millinery department is one of the novelties planned. A complete suite of baths, dressing rooms, ladies' hairdressing parlors, and an emergency hospital are included.

"There will be a research department, embracing a large reference library. A spacious restaurant which will be served by a sanitary kitchen, equipped with modern utensils and appliances similar to those in use in the best hotels, will be installed for the convenience and comfort of workers at the studio."

Asked regarding the disposition of the present William Fox studios of 14 acres on Western avenue and Sunset Boulevard, Mr. Sheehan replied that, owing to the increase in the value of this property, this tract of land would be turned to other purposes or sold. It was contemplated that stores, apartment houses and dwelling sites would soon replace the present studio.

John C. Eisele, prominent New Jersey banker, and treasurer of Fox Film Corporation, has been spending several weeks in Los Angeles in connection with the projected new studio and investigating the possibilities presented in the utilization of the present Fox studio tract for commercial purposes.

In addition to those productions already mentioned, the Fox statement announces as follows:

"Other big pictures to be released next year, production of which has been completed, include "St. Elmo," a picture version of the popular stage success, presenting John Gilbert and Barbara La Marr; "The Shepherd King," Wright Lorimer's great dramatic classic, the motion picture verson of which was staged in Egypt and Palestine by J. Gordon Edwards, director of "The Queen of Sheba"; "Monna Vanna," a beautiful photoplay made from Gabriel D'Annunzio's poetic drama and said to be the most beautiful picture ever produced in Germany; "The Eleventh Hour," a smashing melodrama of thrills and rapid-fire action, directed by Bernard J. Durning, featuring Charles Jones and Shirley Mason; and "Hell's Hole," a Western mountaineer story by George Scarborough."

Sunday Closing Big Issue in N. Y. Town Elections

CITY and village elections held in New York State the past week were characterized by the Sunday motion picture situation as one of the main issues. At Beacon, the proposition for Sunday shows received a big majority. At Ballston Spa, with a vote of over 2,000, the present officials who passed the Sunday movie ordinance, were re-elected with large majorities.

Public Censorship Report Waited in Springfield

First reports on public censorship of the motion picture theatres in Springfield, Mass., will be given Friday at a meeting of a censorship committee appointed some time ago by the Springfield Federation of Women's Clubs. These women have been working for several weeks now, with the collaboration of the theatre owners and managers, visiting the theatres and seeing that every change of program is "covered."

Each woman has made her individual report on the films she has viewed and these will be turned in to the meeting of the general committee next week. Mrs. Guy M. Peterson is chairman of the committee.

Just what action the committee will take in continuing this censorship effort and in including other organizations and individuals in the work will depend somewhat on the reports. The committee of club women will continue to attend shows until April 1, when the annual report on the experiment will be written up and presented at the annual meeting of the Springfield Federation of Women's Clubs on May 3.

Kansas Legislature Ends Without Adverse Laws

The adjournment of the Kansas legislature Wednesday marked a most striking tribute to the M. P. T. O. Kansas, and Mr. Cook in particular. Not a single adverse measure was passed during the session, despite the fact that several were introduced.

Mr. Cook, who maintained headquarters at the state capitol, Topeka, during the entire session of the legislature, accomplished more, in the words of R. G. Liggett, president of the Kansas body, than exhibitors have been able to succeed in doing in many years. A special show for members of the legislature was staged at the Orpheum theatre, Topeka, last Thursday night, and virtually every representative returned home with a warm spot in his heart for the exhibitors.

Industry Mourns Sarah Bernhardt

Her Appearance in "Queen Elizabeth" Marked Beginning of Feature Picture

THE death of Sarah Bernhardt in Paris Monday is an occasion of sorrow for the motion picture industry. It was her appearance in "Queen Elizabeth" nearly eleven years ago that marked the beginning of the feature picture and laid the foundation for the success of Famous Players, Adolph Zukor and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

At the time that "Queen Elizabeth" was produced, not only was the multiple reel picture unknown, except for a few hand-colored French-made subjects, but artists of talent or reputation refused to lend their presence to the silver sheet.

Adolph Zukor, after many attempts, finally succeeded in inducing Madame Bernhardt to appear in the historical story, "Queen Elizabeth," by convincing her that her art would thus be preserved for future generations.

The picture was produced, the Divine Sarah making a very creditable showing, in spite of the limited technical equipment of the day.

Bernhardt, however, did not do any further screen work until 1917, when, under the auspices of the French Government, she starred in a war picture released in America under the title of "Mothers of France." She made the principal role, a French mother, a character not soon to be forgotten.

All the dramatic art for which she was famous on the speaking stage was brought to the picture, in spite of the fact that owing to the amputation of one of her limbs, making walking difficult, she enacted nearly all of her scenes while seated in a chair.

At the time of her death, Madame Bernhardt was planning a third film production. Actual shooting of scenes was never begun, however.

The negatives of both "Queen Elizabeth" and "Mothers of France" are still in existence, but it is assumed that the latter, handled in America by World Film Corporation, is not available for new prints, inasmuch as it was filmed by the French government.

Late News Brevities from West Coast by Wire

EDWIN BIBBY has been appointed studio manager for the Jackie Coogan Productions Company. Mr. Bibby was formerly casting director for Mack Sennett and studio manager for Charlie Chaplin.

C. Gardner Sullivan, who is at present under contract with Joseph Schenck, has been loaned to the Jackie Coogan Productions for the purpose of preparing the screen version of Mary Roberts Rinehart's story, "Long Live the King."

Jesse Lasky arrived in Los Angeles on Thursday.

M. H. Hoffman is spending a few days with the Truart Production Company, which is working at the Goldwyn studios.

While taking a scene at the Vitagraph studio William Duncan was shot in the hand when his horse suddenly jumped sideways. The wound is not a serious one.

Tom Gray, song writer, former gagman for Buster Keaton and now supervising comedy units at Universal City, is writing songs and music and staging the program for the Wampas Frolic, which will be held on April 21st.

Billie Dove has been selected to play opposite Tom Mix in "Tempered Steel," which will be directed by Jack Blystone for William Fox.

New Corporations File for N. Y. Business

The past week brought the incorporation of the following motion picture companies, according to the papers filed with the secretary of state at Albany; Ogden Operating Corporation, $20,000; Emanuel Glick, E. J. Glick, Max Berger, New York. Alfred E. Aarons, Inc., $100,000; A. E. Aarons, L. E. Dresser, A. M. Wattenberg, New York. Howler, Incorporated, $20,000; F. H. Schnebbe, George and John Leffler, New York. Biltmore Society Orchestra, Inc., $5,000; Edward Sherman, M. H. Cousins, G. Lilenfeld, New York. Wollen & Oberstein, Inc., $15,000; F. S. Wollen, H. Vogel, New York. S. Oberstein, Brooklyn. Boston Theatrical Specialties, Inc., $125,000; Peter Minakaki, A. P. Minakaki, Brooklyn. J. S. List, Brooklyn. Guild Theatre Co., Inc., $500; Leonard Wood, Jr., Herbert A. Huff, Harry A. Brown, New York. Gramercy Park Photo-Play Corporation, $50,000; Abraham Maselow, J. Stern, New York. Edward Massoni, Brooklyn. Scott Lecture Bureau, Inc., $10,000; S. E. Grey, V. E. Scott, Elmore Leffingwell, New York; H. B. Productions, Inc., $10,000; G. DeWolf, C. DeWolf, Yonkers, D. Kalafa, New York.

Australia's Censorship Ruling Rigid

Millard Johnson, American representative of Australasian Films, Ltd., has forwarded information received from the Sydney office of the concern regarding the importation of once censored pictures that should be of interest to the industry.

It reads as follows:

"I have to inform you that the censorship will not accept applications for registration of any films which, having been once imported into the Commonwealth and refused registration, are reintroduced at a subsequent date.

"Films refused registration are prohibited imports and as such liable to seizure under the Customs Act.

"In the event of an application being made for the registration of a film of the above class on the score of its having been altered since its original importation, the onus will be placed on the importer of first proving that the film is not being imported in its original state.

"If it is proved to the satisfaction of the censorship that the film is altered, an application for its registration will be accepted and the usual censorship procedure followed."

Jack Alicoate in Ranks of Benedicts

Jack Alicoate, treasurer, business manager and part owner of the Film Daily, has joined the ranks of the benedicts. He was married to Mrs. Gertrude Neilan in New York City, Tuesday. The couple sailed for Paris on the steamship Paris, Wednesday.

Exhibitors File Answers in Music Suits

ANSWERS have been filed in all complaints brought by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers against fifty-odd North Carolina motion picture theatre owners who have defied the "music trust" by refusing to pay the tribute levied by that organization for the use of copyrighted music. A portion of the suits have been entered in the Federal Court at Greensboro, the balance at Raleigh.

Penn. Gross Receipts Tax Bill Deferred

The bill before the Pennsylvania Legislature in Harrisburg proposing a tax of one per cent on the gross receipts of theatres and other places of amusement has been held up temporarily by the House Ways and Means Committee, pending determination by the fiscal officers of the state as to just what the state's financial requirements will be for the next two years.

In event of the passage of the proposed manufacturers' tax, which, it is estimated, would yield $24,000,000 a year additional revenue, it may not be necessary to impose any other new forms of taxation and in this event the tax on theatre gross receipts may not be enacted.

At a hearing on March 20 before the same committee the bill proposing a tax of 5 cents a square foot on all space used for theatrical and other kinds of billboard advertising was withdrawn by its sponsor, Representative Edmonds, of Philadelphia. The Baldi Bill, however, proposing a similar tax of three cents a square foot, is still before committee and may be reported favorably if the big manufacturers' tax measure is not enacted.

Popular First National Branch Chief Dead

W. E. Lusk, Branch Manager for First National located in Washington, D. C., died Tuesday morning, March 27th, in Washington. Mr. Lusk has long been one of the most popular men in the distribution branch of the motion picture business. Prior to locating in Washington he had charge of the First National branch in Cleveland.

In earlier years he was connected with other motion picture companies, dating as far back as his association with the Mutual Film Corp. in 1915. He had been a newspaper and advertising man, at one time holding the post of advertising manager for the Cole Motor Company, St. Louis, Mo. , and at another that of Aviation Editor for the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, for which publication he also managed the Automobile Department.

Mr. Lusk had been in poor health for some weeks, his death being directly due to cancer.

Goldwyn Transfers Arthur Lucas to Boston Office

Goldwyn announces that Arthur Lucas, formerly District Manager covering the Atlanta and New Orleans offices, has been transferred in a similar capacity and will in the future supervise the Boston and the Buffalo offices. He will make his headquarters in Boston.

Commodore Blackton Returns to Vitagraph

J. STUART BLACKTON has been re-elected to his former office as Vice-President of Vitagraph, Inc. Blackton returned to America recently from London, where he has been engaged in production work. He will leave New York for the Coast within the next few weeks, and will very likely head one of the two new producing companies which Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, is planning to organize. Mr. Smith left for Hollywood last week for this purpose.

J. Stuart Blackton

Commodore Blackton resumes the vice-presidency of Vitagraph after an absence of two years. His resumption of activities for that organization, Vitagraph officials believe, will prove unusually advantageous because of his foreign contact and his knowledge of the domestic field. It is stated that he has brought back some promising story material for picturization.

New Delaware Corporations Show Industry Boom

A recent dispatch from Dover, Delaware, indicates a new boom in the corporate activities of amusement enterprises. The following concerns receiving Delaware charters during the first fifteen days of March are engaged in all phases of the motion picture industry from production and manufacture of equipment to the construction and operation of theatres, etc.:

The Rising Sun Production Company of Wilmington, Del., capitalized at $1,800,000; Cavalier Motion Pictures Corporation of New York City, capitalization $1,000,000; Notes Amusement Corporation, capital stock fixed at $700,000; The Stevens Pictures Corporation of New York City, capitalized at $650,000; The Super-Chemical Company of Wilmington, Delaware, capitalized at $500,000; The Photoplay Finance Corporation of New York City, $100,000; The Maryland Theatre of Wilmington, Del., $50,000.

Five-Year Sunday Opening Fight Won in Ohio

A five-year fight to exhibit films on Sunday was apparently won by exhibitors of Findlay, Ohio, when, after a long conference with Mayor Rodabaugh, on March 21, exhibitors announced that picture theatres would be opened for Sunday performances March 25 and thereafter.

The city will adopt a hands-off policy in relationship with the announced policy of the mayor, but when the administration changes this fight will undoubtedly be renewed on the part of exhibitors.

Mayor Rodabaugh, supported strongly by the Findlay Ministerial Association, has been endeavoring to enforce to the limit a "blue law" relative to film performances on Sunday. At the conclusion of the conference he was quoted as saying if the Ministerial Association wished to further conduct their campaign against Sunday film performances it would have to be a direct issue between them and the exhibitors.

First National Closes for More Tourneur Productions

IT is announced that First National has exercised its option on future Maurice Tourneur productions thereby assuring four or six pictures from this director next season. Negotiations were concluded a few days ago with M. C. Levee who controls the Tourneur product made at the United studios in Los Angeles.

This news closely follows the completion of "The Isle of Dead Ships," secured by First National through a deal with Mr. Levee, which included an option on subsequent Tourneur pictures.

As stated last week, First National is assured of at least sixty productions next season, including these made by its own individual units and the pictures supplied by affiliated organizations.

Employees of Loew, Inc., to Form Benefit Club

Fostered by Marcus Loew, a plan is under way to form a club among the employees of Loew's, Inc., for the purpose of promoting a closer co-operative spirit among the various departments. With the complete formation of the plan, expected within the next week, benefits will be derived by the sick; all individual collections will be abolished and placed before the club for consideration; an arbitration committee will hear all complaints; and the employees will meet frequently in social gatherings.

At a meeting planned for Saturday, the name of the club will be decided; officers appointed, and their duties outlined. In recent years the Loew interests have assumed huge proportions.

M.P.T.O. Kansas to Adopt New Constitution

Of major importance will be the adoption of a new constitution at the semi-annual convention of the M. P. T. O. Kansas at Wichita, the date of which has been changed to April 16 and 17.

The present constitution of the Kansas organization dates back to the formation of the association about ten years ago. The new constitution will be similar to that of the national organization, according to C. E. Cook, business manager. By-laws also will be adopted, although they may vary slightly from those now in force.

C. M. Smith, of Kansas City, Kan., chairman of the entertainment committee, is busy outlining a program. He will be assisted two weeks prior to the convention by Stanley Chambers and Howard Jameyson, of Wichita.

Uncle Sam Shakes Wicked Wallop When He Lands

A tax lien was filed in the United States district court in Kansas City Wednesday against the Dubinsky Brothers, who operate the Tootle theatre in St. Joseph, Mo., the lien being for the collection of admission taxes at the theatre from March, 1920, to June, 1921.

The tax	$ 7,910.95
Penalty	7,651.53
Total	$15,562.48

New Orleans to Develop Suburban Houses

Plans involving nearly a quarter of a million dollars in the extension and development of suburban motion picture theatre properties were announced by the Central Enterprises, Incorporated, composed of a group of prominent New Orleanians, who will give the neighborhoods at present without a modern photoplay theatre a chain of houses second to none in the South.

"With the gradual growth of the city," says the announcement, "and the building of hitherto sparsely settled sections has come the community development of each neighborhood or district. Branch banks, cash-and-carry grocery store chains, modern drug stores, have all followed in the group evolutions. So new, modern photoplay theatres will keep pace with contemporary progress."

The Central Enterprises are composed of men who have materially contributed to the advancement of New Orleans amusements. Its officers are E. V. Richards, president; N. I. Erlich, secretary, and M. H. Jacobs, treasurer and general manager.

Toronto Exhibitors Lose Daylight Saving Fight

The moving picture exhibitors of Toronto, Ontario, lost out in their battle against daylight saving, although they had the satisfaction of knowing that they made a red-hot political issue of the question before it was finally settled in a vote at the City Council meeting on March 22.

Many women's organizations lined up with the theatre men in opposition to the adoption of daylight saving and theatres throughout the city were used for the signing of petitions and for the presentation of views in short talks and on slides. A petition containing 16,515 names was presented at the City Hall against changing the clock, while representatives of sport organizations came forward to support prolonged daytime. Daylight saving starts May 13 in Toronto and will be concluded for the season on September 9.

Montreal, the largest city in the Dominion, on the other hand, has definitely decided to abolish summer time. Ottawa and Kingston, Ontario, as well as Toronto, are the three large cities of Eastern Canada which will have advanced clocks during the coming summer, principally because local sport organizations want the special time arrangements.

Coast to Greet Tourists at Picture Fete

Assurance that California is to have a greater number of tourists next summer than ever before is given in reports received by Frank B. Davison, director general of the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition.

Acceptance of an invitation to the premiere by the President of the United States naturally focuses interest on the first week of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial, but indications point to a steady influx of tourists all through the five weeks of the big fair, from July 2 to August 4. The exposition, because of its diplomatic aspects in celebrating the century anniversary, is assuring co-operation from foreign countries and every state in the Union is taking an interest in providing exhibits for what is the most unique fair ever projected.

First National Adopts New Policy

Increased Service Contemplated in New Exploitation and Advertising

H. O. SCHWALBE, secretary-treasurer of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., in an interview this week, announces a new policy in advertising and exploitation that has been adopted by the executive committee of the company, the outstanding feature of which is the curtailment of the force of traveling exploitation men, and the material increase of service to exhibitors through national advertising and publicity of the type represented in Saturday Evening Post campaigns. To this end the advertising and publicity staffs at the home office have been augmented.

Mr. Schwalbe's statement to the trade press follows:

"Field exploitation has not been abandoned by First National. It will be continued wherever justified by results, but a close study of conditions over a period of months led to the conviction that much of the money expended on exploitation could be spent in other ways to better advantage. It has been found that most of the large First National theatres were little benefited by exploitation men, and that a more satisfactory service can be furnished small exhibitors through other channels.

"An exploitation man can be in only one place at a time. First National plans to serve all its exhibitors all the time. Saturday Evening Post advertisements are to appear every other week and are to be directly tied up with local theatres. First National will have what is virtually an illustrated news page in the greatest advertising medium in the country."

"Advertising dealing with but one picture and single pages of display are not to be used because the greatest benefit from an advertisement could be reaped only by the exhibitors who happened to be playing that particular production near the date of the advertisement's appearance.

"The style of copy to be used by First National is aimed to go further in creating personal interest in a number of productions that are current and will not permit a picture to be forgotten until the local exhibitor has played it. In explanation of how First National has planned to obtain this result, Mr. Schwalbe states:

"It has been decided to publish a fortnightly illustrated news page, brightly written in fan style, so that it would be read because of its news and human interest, as are the pages of the fan magazines. A picture is to be heralded in advance, kept before the public as production progresses, emphasized on national release date and carried on for as many weeks after as conditions warrant.

"Richard Walton Tully's production of 'Trilby,' James Young's first independent production, 'Wandering Daughters'; Frank Borzage's 'Sands of Time,' Gertrude Atherton's 'Black Oxen' and Booth Tarkington's 'The Adventures of Penrod' are a few of the subjects included in text and illustration on the initial page. By the time these pictures are released the curiosity of millions will have been aroused, their interest attracted and a large patronage assured.

"The work does not end with the Post, however. Each page will be reproduced as a one-sheet for display in the theatre lobby, so that patrons will definitely associate the house with the Post advertising. These one-sheets will be supplied free to exhibitors.

"This unique campaign will be augmented from time to time by display advertisements on individual pictures. But the news advertising will be continuous—a feature of the Saturday Evening Post, a bulletin in the theatre lobby, a consistent business-builder for every house that runs First National pictures."

Mary Pickford Loses in Music Suit

The Court of Appeals in this city last Friday handed down a decision holding that Mary Pickford could not recover the sum of $2,803.82 from the Waterson, Berlin & Snyder Company, music publishers of New York City. This sum was claimed by Miss Pickford as royalties on the song "Daddy Long Legs" for the use of her picture and signature on the cover.

Through the fact that another contract was signed by Miss Pickford covering the publication of the song "Dear Old Daddy Long Legs" by the Broadway Music Corporation, the Waterson company claimed violation of contract and the loss of sale on its publication.

Changes Made in Southern Enterprises Managers

A number of changes have been made by Southern Enterprises in theatre management. J. C. Duncan goes to the Strand, Asheville, from the Majestic, Asheville. Ray Beall goes to the Imperial, Asheville, from Spartanburg, where he is succeeded by Frank Strozier.

C. D. Cooley has resigned the management of the Tampa theatre. R. C. Frost, his assistant, will be in charge of the Victory, Strand, Grand, Bonita and Princess. De Sales Harrison has resigned as manager of the Howard, but will remain with Southern Enterprises in another capacity.

Gathering Data for Censorship Repeal in Ohio

Indicating the imminent opening of a campaign to repeal political film censorship in Ohio, was the recent visit made to Hollywood studios by Mrs. Elmer G. Derr, of Cleveland.

Mrs. Derr is a leader of anti-censorship forces in that state. She is chairman of the cinema section of the Ohio State Federation of Women's Clubs and president of the Cinema Club of Cleveland. Mrs. Derr's recent hurried trip to Hollywood was for the purpose of gathering data for a speaking tour through Ohio to unite isolated local anti-censorship bodies into a unified organization. A definite drive for the repeal of Ohio's censorship law is to be made at the next Ohio legislative session.

Louis Burston Killed as Train Hits Auto

Louis Burston, president of Burston Films, Inc., with offices in New York City, was instantly killed Sunday evening, according to advices received at the home office of the concern. The automobile in which Burston was riding was hit by a train east of Los Angeles.

Cleaner Houses Advocated by Portland Manager

C. M. HILL, branch manager of Famous Players-Lasky in Portland, Oregon, is responsible for an idea that would react for the general good of the industry if carried out in all parts of America. It advocates cleaner houses and was sent in the form of the following letter:

"The other day I stood across the street from a certain theatre. Here is what I saw.

"A dirty dilapidated house badly in need of paint. Dirty posters that had been used several times. Next to the theatre was a big sign with the word "THINK," and I thought—the picture shown by that house must be like the posters—old worn out prints in bad condition. If the outside of the house is dirty, the inside must be dirty. There is no desire on my part to spend my money to find out if this is true, when a gallon of white paint would have made a neat, attractive and inviting front. Nice clean posters would have created a desire on my part to see the show. I lost an evening's entertainment. The exhibitor lost the price of admission. How many other admissions are lost by this neglect?"

Ghost Fails to Walk for Virginia Censors

Members of Virginia's State Board of Moving Picture Censors have not drawn their salaries, due to a lack of funds, for more than a month, it was recently learned. The present revenue coming into the hands of the board is entirely inadequate to take care of the running expenses of the department, according to Chairman Evan R. Chesterman.

The revenue received in Virginia is only half the amount collected in other states that maintain censor boards, and in some instances only one-third. The board now receives $1.00 for each film reviewed and the legislature will be asked to increase the revenue to $2.00 for each film. The bill will have the recommendation of Governor Trinkle and its passage in both houses of the Assembly is anticipated.

West Missouri Convention Date Is Set

The date of the semi-annual convention of the M. P. T. O. Western Missouri has been set for April 4 at Kansas City, according to Lawrence E. Goldman, counsel of the organization. President Sydney Cohen, William True, Michael O'Toole and other national and state officers will be present. Although the Missouri legislature will not adjourn for a week yet, virtually all legislation detrimental to the motion picture industry has been lost, despite last minute efforts of reformers to "railroad" a censorship bill through.

Secret Wedding of Star and Producer Told

Evelyn Brent, leading lady for Douglas Fairbanks, and B. P. Fineman, producer of pictures in Los Angeles, were married in New York City November 1, 1922, it has just been learned. The news comes as a surprise to the many friends of the couple. They had planned to keep the news secret until summer.

The Fineman studios adjoin those of Fairbanks.

Universal Announces Eight Super-Serials

Entire Year's Output Scheduled For Re-organized and Enlarged Department

THE Universal serial department has just undergone the biggest reorganization in its history, and, as a result, Universal now has in work its entire program of 1923-1924 chapter pictures. With the acquisition of a group of new serial stars, new serial writers and a greatly enlarged studio force, Universal now asserts it is prepared to make a series of chapter pictures far better than anything ever before attempted in the industry. Eight are scheduled during the coming year.

When Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, went to Los Angeles several months ago, his first efforts were directed towards the reorganization of the serial department. Fred McConnell, serial manager for Universal, had preceded his chief to the coast, and had laid the preliminary plans for bigger serials. Since Laemmle reached the coast, hardly a week passed without some striking improvement in serial production at Universal City.

Planned are two historical serials, two stunt articles, three western serials and one South Sea Island serial of novel treatment.

Universal's new serial stars are outstanding in their reputation and popularity.

They are William Duncan and Edith Johnson, his wife, who is his leading woman; Fred Thomson, the "Fighting Parson," who also is famous for his record as a world's champion all-around athlete; Ann Little, long a serial and feature favorite; Jack Mower, leading man and circus stuntster; Eileen Sedgwick, the heroine of a score of popular Universal serials; Al Wilson, the aeroplane stuntster in the United States.

Four of the forthcoming serials will be in fifteen chapters of two reels each, and the other four will be in twelve chapters each. Universal has found by long experiment that both the exhibitor and the public like medium length serials better than the longer or 18-episode types.

The Universal Serial Department has been greatly increased. There now are ten scenario experts busy. The directorial and technical staffs have been vastly augmented, and McConnell has received free rein in assembling the strongest possible casts for the forthcoming chapter pictures.

The first chapter picture to be ready under the new plan is called "The Eagle's Talons," and is an adventure and stunt serial. The picture is scheduled for release April 30th. Fred Thomson and Ann Little are the co-stars, supported by a strong cast, the most important of which is Al. Wilson, champion stunt flyer. It is being directed by Duke Worne.

The cast includes such popular players as Joseph Girard, Edward Cecil, Edith Stayart, Al J. Smith, George Magrill and Joe Bonomo.

The second on the schedule is a historical serial based on the romantic and adventursome life of Daniel Boone. The working title of this picture is "Daniel Boone." Jack Mower and Eileen Sedgwick will co-star in it. The role of Daniel Boone has not yet been filled. Mower plays that of one of Boone's proteges. Miss Sedgwick has the role of Boone's daughter.

Among others in the cast of this serial will be Duke Lee.

"Daniel Boone" will be in 15 chapters and will be released June 4th.

Scenes from "Grumpy" starring Theodore Roberts—Famous Players-Lasky production.

Jay Marchant and Frank Messenger will direct this serial together.

William Duncan, who is now completing his contract with Vitagraph, will be ready to start on his first Universal chapter picture in a few weeks. His first will be "The Steel Rail," based on the construction of a railroad in the west. Duncan will direct his own picture.

This serial will be in twelve chapters. It is to be released August 6th.

The fourth serial release will be "The Last Submarine," a twelve-chapter serial co-starring Fred Thomson and Ann Little. It will be placed in the hands of exhibitors September 10th. It is a thrill story from the pen of Edward Moffat, and concerns the struggle to outwit a master criminal who possesses a marvelous submarine—the last of its kind in existence, after this type of craft has supposedly been banned by the nations of the world.

The fifth chapter picture scheduled for production which now is being adapted for the screen is "By Right of Conquest," from G. A. Henty's novel of the conquest of Central America. It tells an exciting story of the early Spanish conquests and their effect upon civilization of the United States.

Jack Mower and Eileen Sedgwick will be co-starred in this picture, which probably will be directed by Eddie Laemmle.

Next on Universal's serial schedule will be "The Fast Express," a second vehicle for William Duncan. It is scheduled for release November 26th. This serial will be in fifteen chapters.

A third Fred Thomson-Ann Little serial is next on the Universal schedule. It is called "Beasts of Paradise," and will be laid in the South Seas. It was written by Ewart Adamson.

This serial will be in twelve chapters and will be released January 28th, 1924.

The eighth serial scheduled is a western type of hard-riding, thrill-a-minute action, in which Jack Mower will be starred, probably with Miss Sedgwick. The working title is "Hidden Gold." It is said to be an adventure story of the mine fields of the west. It will be released March 3rd, 1924.

Goldwyn Opens Up Five New Exchange Offices

Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has added five new branch exchanges to its list so that now it has offices in twenty-seven cities instead of twenty-two as in past years. In connection with this expansion there has been a good deal of changing in the management personnel, a number of men having been transferred to other branches and several head salesmen having been promoted to the management of other exchanges.

Harry W. Starrett is now resident manager of the Atlanta office to which he was promoted from the Cleveland exchange. Managers of the five newly created exchanges are: W. W. Willman, Indianapolis; Samuel Shurman, Milwaukee; Walter Etris, Portland, Ore.; A. Interrante, New Haven, Conn.; and Charles Walder, Albany, N. Y.

J. R. Levee Special Representative for Arrow

J. R. Levee, former exchange manager, has been appointed special representative for Arrow Film Corporation, by President W. E. Shallenberger.

Mr. Levee's experience as an executive in the motion-picture business dates back for a period of nearly six years. He was initiated into the business as branch manager for World and held important positions with Triangle and as division manager for United Pictures. Mr. Levee was also a home office executive for Famous Players over an extended period. Mr. Levee's duties with Arrow will necessitate his continual traveling, as he will cover practically all the key centres in the Eastern and Southern states. He left for an extended trip last week.

"Divorce" Is Completed by Jane Novak

Jane Novak has finished "Divorce" for Film Booking Offices of America.

It reveals Miss Novak in a role totally unlike any she has offered in the past. It is a society drama, said to be of lavish setting and powerful plot.

"Divorce" was directed by Chester Bennett.

Miss Novak's leading man in this new production is John Bowers.

Zukor, Lasky Deny Trust Charge

Acquisition of Theatres Admitted, But Competition Not Lessened, Is Claim

IN their reply to the amended complaint of the Federal Trade Commission in its drive against alleged monopolistic tendencies and conspiracies in the moving picture industry Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky maintain that they were forced to acquire theatres in self defense against "a group of producers and exhibitors controlling a large number of theatres and claiming to control over 3,000 theatres throughout the United States."

The corporation admits that it did acquire theatres throughout the United States but "solely for investment and for reasonably forwarding its business," with the result that "competition has not been thereby lessened, but has been increased, and that a monopoly has not been created but has been prevented."

The answer takes the same line throughout, viz, that whatever has been done by the defendants in the way of consolidations or absorptions of producing and distributing companies has not been for the purpose of restraining trade and has not in fact been promotive of monopoly. Famous Players-Lasky Corporation answers in identical language with that used by Zukor & Lasky. The Southern Enterprises, Inc., and Stephen A. Lynch deny everything improper alleged against them and emphatically question the authority of the Federal Trade Commission in the premises. Both the other answers also question the constitutional right of the Commission to proceed against them.

It is understood that the action of the defendants going so far as to raise a question not only as to the constitutionality of the Commission's proceedings in this instance, but of the constitutionality of the Commission itself, is likely to result in extraordinary interest being attached to the case.

Amer. Releasing Acquires "Toilers of the Sea"

"Toilers of the Sea," Victor Hugo's picturesque romance, has been filmed in Italy by R. William Neill with a cast in which American players predominate and has been obtained for distribution by American Releasing.

Last October Mr. Neill, his technical staff, and a group of players including Lucy Fox, Holmes E. Herbert and Lucius Henderson sailed for Italy under the auspices of the Community International Corporation. The arrival of the completed film is the first news of the success of the enterprise to reach the motion picture industry. Mr. Neill and his staff and players remain in Naples to undertake three more pictures of the series outlined prior to their departure.

Arrow Representative on Tour of Middle West

Thomas A. Curran, special representative of the Arrow Film Corporation, who has been in New York for the last few days, conferring with W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, left for an extended trip on which he will visit the leading exchange centres in the interests of the new Arrow product. Mr. Curran's first stopping point will be Louisville, Ky., from whence he will go to St. Louis, Mo.

Paramount Appoints Exploiteers for the South

Paramount exploiteers have been assigned to all of the five Southern exchanges of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation including the Southern Enterprise office at Oklahoma City.

Harry C. Swift, one of the veterans of Claud Saunders' staff has been transferred from Cincinnati to New Orleans. Alex W. Hicks has been sent to Charlotte, Jack Hays, for two years manager of one of the "Lightnin'" companies, to Dallas; and George W. Gambrill to Oklahoma City. Oscar A. Kantner has been conducting the exploitation activities of the Atlanta office for several months.

The vacancy in Cincinnati caused by the transfer of Swift to New Orleans, has been filled by Ralph (Buster) Thayer, formerly manager of the Century theatre, Baltimore, and the Cataract theatre, Niagara Falls.

The Paramount exploitation staff now numbers thirty-four men.

Three New Stories Bought by Goldwyn for Screen

Goldwyn announces the purchase of the screen rights to "The Day of Faith," Arthur Somers Roche's new novel; "Wild Oranges," written by Joseph Hergesheimer; and "The Rendezvous," by Madeleine Ruthven.

"The Day of Faith" will be directed by Tod Browning, recently signed by Goldwyn. The story is based upon the thesis that if mankind could be made to believe that everyone is perfect the world would be regenerated.

The direction of the other two subjects has not as yet been decided upon.

Planning of Sets in Miniature to Save Expenses

Wilfred Buckland has introduced a system of planning picture settings by means of quickly constructed models. Buckland is now engaged in laying out the setting for Richard Walton's film version of the du Maurier's classic, "Trilby," which will be released by First National. Experience has taught that production work has often been delayed and casts held idle while stage carpenters tore down and rebuilt sets that were found at the crucial moment to be inadequate to convey the idea or impression sought for. The plotting of sets in miniature is expected to eliminate such wasteful delay and make for greater economy and efficiency.

Schulberg Offers $10,000 Each Word for Title

Shortly after his arrival in New York last week, B. P. Schulberg, president of Preferred Pictures, after a conference with J. G. Bachmann, treasurer, announced that he was in the market for titles.

He has set a price of $10,000 a word for appropriate titles. If a two-word title is purchased, $20,000 will be paid. For a three-word title the rate per word will be given a cut to bring the total to $25,000. Schulberg explains that he is seeking alluring titles which when set forth in electric lights will create a desire for further information. He adds that this is not in any sense a contest but a bona fide market he is creating for the specific commodity.

Preferred Pictures now owns the rights to a dozen or more plays, books and stories which in many cases require a change to better picture titles.

First Nat'l Dist. Managers Meet

Plans and Policies Outlined for the Coming Season at 5-Day Convention

DISTRICT managers of First National held a five-day convention at the Hotel Astor, starting Monday, March 26th, and concluding Friday. The primary purpose of the meeting was to lay the ground work of plans for next season, to consider the fall product and to discuss ways and means of improving First National's service to exhibitors in all its details. A new advertising and publicity policy about to be adopted was explained.

Floyd M. Brockell, distribution manager, who presided at the meeting, gave a detailed analysis of First National's sales policy and spoke of the conclusions reached as a result of the three months' tour of the country from which he recently returned. Mr. Brockell was most enthusiastic about the prospects for the new season in almost every section of the country.

In an address delivered on Wednesday, H. O. Schwalbe, secretary and treasurer, spoke of the pictures promised for the coming season. He considered the production plans of the company as formulated and stressed the need for real service to exhibitors.

Hawley Turner, representing the Saturday Evening Post, explained the exact purpose of First National's full page advertising that starts in the Post April 7 and continues every other week thereafter. He declared it to be directly beneficial to the exhibitor in as much as it sought to sell to the public the picture he is playing.

Among others who addressed the meeting were S. O. Spring, of First National's Legal Department; D. Farralla, of the Financial Department; Sol Shernow, of the Print Department, and Stanley Hatch and Jay Gove, of the Distribution Department.

The district managers who attended were: H. A. Bandy, Central District Cleveland O.; Roy C. Seery, Mid-Western District, Chicago, Ill.; W. E. Callaway, Southern District, New Orleans, La.; Louis Bache, Canadian District, Toronto; Joseph Skirboll, Western District, Los Angeles. Mr. Skirboll has been managing the Pittsburgh exchange, but will go direct from the convention to Los Angeles.

Shipman Outlines Policy of Distribution

In response to numerous inquiries received concerning his policy of distribution, Ernest Shipman announced this week that his deal with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in no way alters his original plan to reserve for himself the foreign and Canadian rights on his Canadian-made productions.

Hodkinson already has contracted for the distribution of three of these pictures, namely, "The Man from Glengarry" and "Winner Take All" (based on "Glengarry Schooldays"), both by Ralph Connor, and "The Rapids," by Alan Sullivan; but this distribution will be limited to the United States.

Shipman will negotiate independently for the foreign sales; while in Canada he is distributing through his own exchanges. He is represented in Quebec and the Maritime Provinces by the firm of Burpee & West, Montreal, and in Ontario and Western Canada by Canadian Educational Films, Ltd., with exchanges in Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver.

Production Work on "The Fog" Well Under Way

Actual production work is now well under way on "The Fog," the newest Graf production for Metro, which is being made under the personal supervision of Max Graf. Players who will have principal roles are Mildred Harris, Cullen Landis, Louise Fazenda, David Butler, Ann May, Ralph Lewis, Marjorie Prevost, Edward Phillips, Ethel Wales and Frank Currier. Paul Powell is directing and John Arnold is the cameraman.

Distinctive Releases via Goldwyn

Twelve Features Scheduled for 1923; One Finished, Three Near Completion

FOLLOWING the merger of the distribution of Cosmopolitan Productions and Goldwyn Pictures comes the announcement that the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation will also handle the entire future motion picture output of Distinctive Pictures Corporation. An agreement to that effect was reached during the week between Arthur S. Friend, president of Distinctive Pictures, and F. J. Godsol, president of Goldwyn.

Twelve features are scheduled by Distinctive for 1923. The company now has one picture ready for release, "Backbone," a romantic story with a Northern Maine and a French setting, written by Clarence Budington Kelland. It was directed by Edward Sloman. The cast presents Alfred Lunt and Edith Roberts in the featured roles.

Three other pictures are now nearing completion. The first is "The Ragged Edge," a story with the action taking place in Canton, China, and in the South Seas, written by Harold MacGrath. Harmon Weight is the director, and the leading players are Mimi Palmeri and Alfred Lunt.

Another Clarence Budington Kelland picture, "Steadfast Heart," is in preparation at the Distinctive studios in New York. It is a story of life in a small Virginia town and the social barriers which are found there. Sheridan Hall is directing this. In the leading roles are cast Edith Roberts and Joseph Striker with little Joseph Depew as a featured player.

The third story now in the preparatory stage is called "Two Can Play," a Saturday Evening Post story by Gerald Mygatt which Harmon Weight will direct. Mimi Palmeri and Alfred Lunt will head the cast.

Among the story rights which Distinctive Pictures owns is "Salome of the Tenements," by Anzia Yezierska, author of "Hungry Hearts," which Goldwyn produced. "The Green Goddess," a melodrama by William Archer which ran for a year on Broadway, is also on Distinctive's program. Sir Gilbert Parker's Egyptian novel, "The Weavers," is another story which Distinctive will produce. Another Distinctive feature will be "The Adopted Father," by Edgar Franklin. This producing organization also controls the picture rights to I. A. R. Wylie's novel, "The Inheritors," and to Clarence Budington Kelland's "Hearts and Fists."

Distinctive Pictures Corporation was organized in its present form on October 5, 1922. Prior to that time it was known as Distinctive Production, Inc. Arthur S. Friend, formerly treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky organization and one of the organizers of that company, is president. Henry M. Hobart, formerly with Cosmopolitan Productions, is vice-president. Charles S. Hervey is treasurer. On the board of directors are Mr. Friend, Mr. Hobart, Richard Whitney, Winthrop W. Aldrich and Mr. Hetrvey.

Miriam Cooper Cast for "Daughters of Rich"

Miriam Cooper, as a result of her work in "The Girl Who Came Back," has replaced Marjorie Daw in "Daughters of the Rich." Gasnier now has the picture well under way at the Schulberg studios for Preferred Pictures. It will be released next month in the first group of Al Lichtman attractions.

The complete cast includes Gaston Glass, Ruth Clifford, Ethel Shannon, Miriam Cooper, Joseph Swickford, Stuart Holmes and J. Gunnis Davis.

Some striking moments from Thomas Ince's new production titled "What a Wife Learned," for First National distribution, with Milton Sills and Marguerite De La Motte in the featured roles.

Scenes from "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton," which appears on the Hodkinson schedules

"Enemies of Women" in Special Showing

A distinguished audience is expected at the Central theatre, New York City, on Saturday night, March 31, when there will be a special invitation presentation of "Enemies of Women," Cosmopolitan's picturization of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's novel.

The photoplay will have its first public performance on Easter Sunday, April 1, when it will begin an indefinite run. The Cosmopolitan Corporation, which has leased the Central theatre for the showing of the film, took over the house this week.

Among those who are expected to attend the invitation performance are Mayor John F. Hylan, Will Hays, Eugene Zukor, Hugo Riesenfeld, S. L. Rothapel, Marcus Loew, Joseph Plunkett, Arthur Brisbane, Barney Baruch, James Montgomery Flagg, Charles B. Dillingham, Howard Chandler Christy, Nathan Burhan and a host of others.

Schulberg in East for Conference on Production

B. P. Schulberg, head of Preferred Pictures, is at present in New York for conference with the Lichtman executives on Preferred's schedule of forthcoming productions. It is announced that Schulberg has assembled a number of stories for picturization, including several from Europe acquired by Lichtman during his trip abroad. Mr. Lichtman is expected to return soon from Europe. The following stories will shortly be scenarized for production by the Basnier, Tom Forman and Victor Schertzinger companies:

"The Parasite," from the novel by Helen R. Martin; "Aristocracy," from the story written directly for the screen by Larry Evans; "My Lady's Lips," from the stage play by Edward Locke; "Exclusive Rights," author unnamed; "Appearance," from an original screen story; "Daughters of the Poor," a sequel to "Daughters of the Rich," for which several stories already have been submitted.

"Souls for Sale" Is Given Premiere at N. Y. Capitol

The world premiere of Goldwyn's new Rupert Hughes picture, "Souls For Sale," was held at the Capitol theatre, New York, on Tuesday morning of this week before an invited audience of between 3,000 and 4,000 enthusiastic persons. Many of these were important exhibitors from New York City and from the territory served by the branch exchanges here, in Boston, New Haven, Albany, Philadelphia and Buffalo. Representatives of the New York daily press, of the motion picture trade journals, of the fan magazines, and officials of various film producing organizations attended.

S. L. Rothafel of the Capitol theatre arranged the presentation.

"The film is going to do pictures a world of good," was the consensus of various exhibitors and producers. "It will show the public that motion picture players are hard-working, conscientious persons, who want to do their task well and earn the commendation of picture patrons. They have the same aspirations as well as the same weaknesses that do persons in ordinary walks of life. It's got great audience appeal."

Hodkinson Lists "Affairs of Lady Hamilton"

"The Affairs of Lady Hamilton," an eight-reel special production, is announced as the scheduled release of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for April 15.

"The Affairs of Lady Hamilton" taps the well of historical love stories surrounding the colorful career of Lord Nelson, popular English naval hero, and is said to be lavishly presented.

The production is the work of Richard Oswald for the Sterling Film Corporation, and features Liane Haid in the role of Lady Hamilton. Conrad Veidt plays the role of Lord Nelson. Randolph Bartlett edited the titles.

Scenes taken from "Modern Marriage," which co-stars Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. American Releasing Corporation the distributor.

Story that Charles Jones Is Leaving Fox Denied

FROM the headquarters of the Fox Film Corporation at New York comes the statement that there is no foundation to the rumor that Charles Jones is to sever connections with that company.

Jones has just completed playing the leading role in "The Eleventh Hour," a Lincoln J. Carter stage melodrama made into a photoplay.

F.B.O. Acquires Stories for New Season

"Alex the Great," a romantic adventure story with a baseball flavor, written by H. C. Witwer, has been purchased by F. B. O. from Small, Maynard and Company. Mr. Witwer's "Fighting Blood" stories have already been filmed by F. B. O., and a new series by him is now appearing in Cosmopolitan Magazine will reach the screen shortly through F. B. O. "Alex the Great" will be transferred to the screen as a feature picture.

Edison Marshall, noted writer of stories of the outdoors, will contribute "The Isle of Retribution" to the screen through F. B. O. This is a story of the Northwest. It has been highly popular as a novel.

"Life, Liberty and ——," by Wyndham Martin, which appeared recently in Everybody's Magazine, will serve as a vehicle for one of the F. B. O. male stars. It is a story moving against a background of sporting life. Martin is also the author of "The Man from the Desert," a forthcoming Harry Carey production.

Marvin Wilhite is the author of "Quemado," a western story, which will be picturized by F. B. O. It appeared as a novelette in Popular Magazine.

"The Flaming Soul," another recent purchase, is from the pen of Maravene Thompson, whose play, "The Net," enjoyed a highly successful run on Broadway recently.

$34,000 to Winners of Amer. Releasing Drive

Thirty-four thousand dollars in gold is the cash bonus to be awarded to managers, salesmen and bookers of the American Releasing Corporation who win first places in American Releasing's spring drive, which started March 19th and will last for a period of twelve weeks. This sum represents, according to the claim of American Releasing officials, the largest cash bonus ever offered in motion picture circles for a similar purpose.

Cast Named for New Metro Film "The Law-Bringers"

All the important roles in "The Law-Bringers," the next Reginald Barker production which Louis B. Mayer will present through Metro, have been cast, according to advices received from the coast studios of Mr. Mayer. Actual work on the production has already been begun, and it will follow "Hearts Aflame" as the second Barker photoplay to be released through Metro.

Barbara La Marr, who has been seen in recent Rex Ingram productions for Metro, will enact an important role. Earle Williams is likewise prominently cast. Others of the players selected are Wallace Beery, Joseph Swickard, Renee Adoree, Pat O'Malley, Pat Harmon, and George Kuwa.

The photoplay is based on G. B. Lancaster's novel, "The Law-Bringers," but this title is considered tentative.

Priscilla Dean Completes Work on "Drifting"

"Drifting," Priscilla Dean's new big Universal-Jewel production, has been completed at Universal City and soon will be shipped to New York. This is a screen adaptation of a Broadway stage success by John Colton. It was produced on the stage by William A. Brady a year ago with Alice Brady in the starring role.

Miss Dean plays the role of "Cissie," a drifter from America, who reigns as a striking figure of the underworld in a prominent Chinese seaport.

Among the players in the supporting cast are Wallace Beery, Matt Moore, Tully Marshall, William V. Mong, J. Farrell McDonald, Madame Rose Dione and Anna May Wong, a talented young Chinese screen actress. Two hundred Chinese were used in the picture. Tod Browning directed it.

Paramount Opens Second Office in Java

Arrangements have been completed for the opening of another Paramount exchange in the Far East, according to advices received by E. E. Shauer, manager of the Foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This new exchange will be located at Sourabaya, Java, and will be the second Paramount distributing center for that island. Donald H. Rodriques has been appointed general manager of the Paramount interests in this territory and will have under his jurisdiction exchanges at Singapore, Batavia, and the new one at Sourabaya. All three exchanges will be operated under the direction of Managing Director John W. Hicks, Jr., of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., of Sydney, Australia.

Melford Starts Work on "Salomy Jane"

On March 26, George Melford started his new Paramount production, "Salomy Jane," which, it will be remembered, was Paul Armstrong's play adapted from the Bret Harte story. Waldemar Young wrote the film version and Jacqueline Logan will be seen in the title role. Two other important players will be Maurice Flynn and William Davidson, the latter a well-known Eastern actor and the former already known for some excellent work in Paramount pictures.

In "Broadway Gold," the Truart Film Corporation's release, an Edward Dillon production; Elaine Hammerstein, Elliott Dexter and Kathlyn Williams appear in the leading roles.

Principal Pictures Adopts Franchise Plan

Principal Pictures Corporation announces a plan whereby its productions will be distributed on a franchise basis. Heretofore its pictures have been sold individually, but it has now been decided to distribute the productions to the exchanges collectively. Under the newly inaugurated plan the first group to be made available for local distributors will comprise a series of five productions. These pictures will be as follows:

"The Spider and the Rose," by Gerald Duffy; "Temporary Marriage"; "The Man from Ten Strike," a James Oliver Curwood story; "East Side, West Side," by Leighton Oemun and Henry Hull; and "Bright Lights of Broadway."

"Civilization" Print for Government Archives

Thomas H. Ince has sent a telegram to Senator David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts, praising his efforts to preserve motion pictures of great historical value and offering a special print of "Civilization" for the Government archives.

Senator Walsh is quoted as having said in Washington that the Government is criminally neglecting its duty to future generations by making no effort to preserve motion pictures of great historical value. Several patriotic societies have started a movement to have motion picture preservation archives installed by the Government in Washington, and Senator Walsh is backing this plan.

New Producing Company Is Launched at Stamford

John W. McKay and George Terwilliger are now prominently identified with a newly organized producing company with headquarters at Stamford, Conn. The holding company will operate under the name of Stamford Pictures, Inc.

A plot has been secured and within a month the building of a studio will be under way. According to plans, a three-story plant will be erected with room for three companies. One unit to be owned and operated by Stamford Pictures figures upon making about six pictures a year, some of which will be directed by Terwilliger.

Backers of the new project feel they have an ideal site, as many producing companies have been sending companies to Stamford for outdoor stuff.

Frank Mayo to Play Lead in "Six Days"

Frank Mayo's first role under his long-term contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will be the leading male part in Elinor Glyn's "Six Days," opposite Corinne Griffith.

Besides Miss Griffith and Mr. Mayo, the cast thus far selected for "Six Days" includes Claude King, Myrtle Stedman, and Maude George. Director Charles J. Brabin, who was signed to direct this one picture for Goldwyn and then placed under a long-term contract before he had started work on the production, is now making interiors for the film.

Harry David Is Engaged to Help Put Over "Suzanna"

Mack Sennett has engaged Harry David, formerly managing director of the Mission theatre, Los Angeles, to represent the Sennett interests throughout the country with the idea of aiding exhibitors in the presentation and exploitation of his "Suzanna," starring Mabel Normand, and the five-reel comedy special, "The Shriek of Araby," in which Ben Turpin and Kathryn McGuire are featured. Both these pictures are Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation releases.

David was still connected with the Mission when "Suzanna" was given its premiere at that house. He is carrying extensive advertising and publicity material for the picture with him.

Arthur Loew Goes Abroad for Metro Pictures

Arthur Loew, foreign manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, sailed Tuesday on the Aquitania for an eight weeks' tour of the principal European countries, in the interests of the foreign distribution of Metro pictures. Accompanied by Mrs. Loew, he will visit England, France, Italy, Spain, Sweden and as many other countries as his time will allow.

The purpose which occasioned Mr. Loew's departure is the making of arrangements abroad to release Metro photoplays in the principal Continental countries. He will endeavor to conclude pending negotiations for the presentation of the company's releases, by arranging for their distribution through the leading European mediums.

The international scope of Metro is thus being widened by his activities, the work having been inaugurated by Marcus Loew on his foreign visit last year.

Tourneur Names Cast for "Brass Bottle"

Maurice Tourneur has surrounded himself with a talented aggregation of players for his picturization of "The Brass Bottle," to be produced by M. C. Levee.

For the leading character of Horace Ventimore, the young architect, Tourneur has selected Harry Myers, who will portray a role similar to that he pictured in "The Connecticut Yankee." For the part of Fakrash-el-Aamash, the genii, the director has engaged Ernest Torrance. Tully Marshall as Professor Futvoye, Clarissa Selwyn as Mrs. Futvoye, Ford Sterling at Rapkin, Aggie Herring as Mrs. Rapkin, Charlotte Marriam as Sylvia Futvoye and Ed Jobson as Samuel Wackerbath, comprises the other portrayers of the leading characters.

Distinctive Will Produce "The Steadfast Heart"

Distinctive Pictures Corporation is making a picturization of "The Steadfast Heart," a Clarence Budington Kelland story now appearing serially in Collier's. Edith Roberts will be featured with Joseph Striker. Sheridan Hall is directing the picture.

The full cast has been chosen as follows: Edith Roberts, Joe Depew, Joseph Striker, Jerry Devine, Hugh Huntley, Wm. B. Mack, Wm. Black, Marrio Majeroni, S. Tansey, Harlen Knight, Mary Alden, Walter Lewis, Louis Fierce, Mildred Arden and Helen Strickland.

Hodkinson Employees Hold Big Theatre Party

A theatre party was recently given to its employees by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation at the performance of "Liza," a musical comedy, at the Bayes theatre. The entire organization, numbering some seventy-five department heads and employees, participated in the affair, which was one of the frequent "get-together" functions of the Hodkinson organization.

"Wolf Fangs" Changed to "The White Silence"

"The White Silence" is the title definitely chosen by the Warner Brothers for the production which has been announced under the working title of "Wolf Fangs," featuring the Belgian police dog, Rin-Tin-Tin. The production is nearing the stages of completion under the supervision of Harry Rapf. Chester M. Franklin is directing.

Pre-Release Showing Held for "The Bright Shawl"

"The Bright Shawl," starring Richard Barthelmess, an Inspiration production for First National distribution, was given its first prerelease showing last Monday evening at the Rialto theatre, South Norwalk, Conn., of which A. M. Hamilton is manager.

First Nat'l Buys Rights to "Flaming Youth"

"Flaming Youth" by Warner Fabian, has been purchased by First National and in all probability will be filmed in time for release early next season. The story was published in book form by Boni and Liveright and is running serially in the Metropolitan Magazine.

LITTLE STORIES ABOUT PEOPLE ON THE LOT

Here and There

Jess Robbins has completed the filming of his fourth subject starring Edward Horton for release by Vitagraph. The title of this subject is "The Crash."

Phil Goldstone is now engaged in the editing of "Danger Ahead," starring Richard Talmadge, and "Fighter's Paradise," starring Snowy Baker. Baker will make his next appearance in "The White Panther" under the direction of William Howard. William Fairbanks has been placed under contract by Phil Goldstone, and he will appear at the head of an all-star cast in "What Women Want."

Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge started their new subjects this week. The cast for Norma's new subject, titled "Ashes of Vengeance," now includes Conway Tearle, Wallace Beery, Josephine Crowell, Betty Francis, Claire McDowell, Courtenay Foote, James Cooley, Andre de Beranger, Boyd Irwin, Winter Hall, William Clifford, Murdock McQuarrie, Hector V. Sarno and Earl Schenenck. Frank Lloyd is directing the subject; Harry Weil is assistant director. Antonio Gaudio and Ray Burger are the first and second cameramen, respectively.

The cast supporting Constance Talmadge in "Dulcy," includes Jack Mulhall, Claude Gillingwater, Ann Wilson, Ann Cornwall, Andre de Beranger, Milla Davenport, Gilbert Douglas, Lucy Beaumont and Fred Cavena.

Robert Thornby is directing Guy Bates Post in "The Man from Ten Strike." The principal members of the supporting cast include Mitchell Lewis, Cleo Madison and Grace Darmond.

The complete cast for "The Meanest Man in the World," adapted from George Cohan's play, includes Bert Lytell, Syrant Washburn, Blanche Sweet, Lionel Belmore, Maryon Aye, Helen Lynch, Carl Stockdale, Lincoln Stedman, William Conklin, Forrest Robinson, Victor Potel, Ward Crane, Frank Campeau and Tully Marshall. This subject is being directed by Eddie Cline at the United Studios.

Charles O. Bowman and B. P. Fineman have leased space at Principal Pictures Studios and are filming "Don't Marry for Money," with Ruby de Remer, House Peters, Cyril Chadwick, Aileen Pringle, Christine Mayo and Wedgwood Nowell in the cast. Clarence Brown is directing the production.

The Forman Company, filming "The Broken Wing" for B. P. Schulberg, is back from the border south of Albuquerque, where they took the battle scenes, using fifteen hundred Indians and Mexicans. An old-time feud existed between some of the combatants and several were injured, though none fatally.

Gasnier is now editing "Daughters of the Rich" while producing the same. Schulberg has offered a $10,000 award for acceptable titles.

Warner Baxter will be starred in "Blow Your Own Horn." The production is beginning this week, though the director has not yet been named, on a continuity by Rex Taylor from the Owen Davis play.

James W. Horne has been placed under contract to direct for one year, following the completion of "Now You See It," from the original by Windham Gittens and Helmar Bergman.

Chester Bennett has completed the Jane Novak subject, "Divorce."

Emory Johnson has completed "West Bound Limited," which glorifies the railroad men.

Emile Chautard is editing "Daytime Wives."

Ernest C. Warde has been placed under contract to direct for Robertson-Cole for one year.

Patricia Palmer and "Ranger Bill" Miller have been selected to head an all-star cast which will interpret the latest original screen story written by J. Stewart Woodhouse. It will be produced in and around San Francisco by Max Miller Productions Company.

Jules Cronjager will be chief cameraman for the filming of "Tutankhamen," which is being made by William P. S. Earle. Working with Cronjager as second cameraman will be Joe Goodrich.

James Harrison is back in town after an absence of nearly two years, during which he has been playing in Eastern-made pictures. Harrison accompanied Charles H. Christie to Los Angeles this week. He was with the Christie company for three years and played in about fifty of their pictures before going West to appear in feature productions.

Another ten days will see the completion of "The Girl of the Golden West," which Edwin Carew is producing for First National release. At present the cameras are grinding away both day and night on the interiors of the Polka saloon, the set in which most of the action of the story takes place.

Dancing instructors have been added to the technical staff of Edwin Carewe's "The Girl of the Golden West." J. Warren Kerrigan and Sylvia Breamer are learning dances of seventy years ago in order to meet the demands of the script.

Betty Blythe is now completing work on "The Girl Who Got Everything," the last of her series of four starring vehicles under the banner of Whitman Bennett. The production is being filmed at the Yonkers studio.

Bert Woodruff has put his name to the dotted line on a contract to work in Frank Borzage's first production for Arthur H. Jacobs, "Sands of Time." "Uncle Chet," as he is familiarly known at the studios, will be remembered for his portrayal of Old Man Green in "Paris Green" and a similar character in "Greased Lightnin'."

Miss Dupont has replaced Betty Francisco in the cast of "The Broken Wing," the stage play by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard, which Tom Forman began this week for B. F. Schulberg. The altered cast now reads Miriam Cooper, Kenneth Harlan, Walter Long, Miss Dupont, Richard Tucker, Evelyn Selbie, Edwin J. Brady and Ferdinand Munier.

Pauline Garon, beautiful flapper of "Adam's Rib," has begun work on her role in "Sands of Time," the Frank Borzage production for First National, in which she plays the leading feminine role.

Herman and Verman, colored youngsters, who brought many a laugh in Marshall Neilan's "Penrod," are appearing in the First National cast of "Penrod and Sam," now being directed by William Beaudine.

The huge Gramercy Park set at the United Studios, for use in Frank Borzage's "Sands of Time," has been completed. Former residents of the artists' colony of New York are seen daily pointing out just where they had studios when they were in the East.

First sets for Maurice Tourneur's "The Brass Bottle," which he will make for First National release, are going up at the United Studios in Los Angeles.

Cutting and editing of James Young's "Wandering Daughters," his initial First National production, has begun at the United Studios in Los Angeles.

Kathlene Martyn is the latest stage satellite to be signed by C. C. Burr.

Scenes from "Your Friend and Mine"—the Sawyer-Lubin Production for Metro.

On the Goldwyn Lot

The screen rights for Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks" have been purchased. James Kirkwood has been placed under contract.

Jane Mathis is preparing the continuity of "In the Palace of the King," by F. Marion Crawford. Emmett Flynn will direct.

Charles J. Brabin is beginning "Six Weeks." The cast includes Corinne Griffith, Frank Mayo, Myrtle Stedman, Maude George, Claude King, Charles Clary.

"The Day of Faith," an Arthur Somers Roche story, will be the first for Tod Browning.

Charles Whittaker, scenarioist, is en route to the coast for Goldwyn. King Vidor is making the final scenes for "Three Wise ools."

Director Clarence Barger and "Red Lights" company are at Carisso Gorge on the Mexican border. Jesse D. Hampton is this week filming the fight scenes for "The Spoilers."

Edward Dillon is directing "Broadway Gold" for Goldwyn. It stars Elaine Hammerstein.

The complete cast for the Cosmopolitan production being directed by George W. Hill and Frances Marion, from the Jack Boyle story, "The Daughter of McGinn," includes Colleen Moore, Forest Stanley, George Cooper, Carmelita Geraghty and Margaret Seddon.

William Haines has joined the company producing "Three Wise Fools" under the direction of King Vidor. He is playing the juvenile lead.

Lambert Hillyer and the company producing Jesse D. Hampton's refilming of Rex Beach's Alaskan novel, "The Spoilers," have returned to the Goldwyn studios from location at Balboa Beach and will film the interiors at the studios.

Marshall Neilan has wired the Goldwyn studios in Culver City that he and his company making a sequence of scenes for his "The Eternal Three" in Mexico City have been officially received by representatives of the government and that the coming of the company has aroused a great deal of interest. After finishing the Mexico City scenes, Mr. Neilan will take his company to an immense ranch leased near Chapultepec for a week.

Erich von Stroheim started photography on "Creed," his own adaptation of Frank Norris' novel, "McTeague," in San Francisco last Wednesday.

The twenty-three members of the Congressional party investigating the Boulder Canyon Dam, including Senators Norris of Nebraska and Ashurst of Arizona, were invited by Director Clarence Badger to appear as extras in "Red Lights."

At Universal City

Herbert Rawlinson's subject originally titled "Twenty Dollars," will be released under the title of "Fools and Riches."

The "Leather Pushers" troupe, under the direction of Earl Kenton, has gone to Truckee.

Hoot Gibson, Edward Sedgwick and Blinkie Coon are on the Mexican border making cavalry scenes.

Jack Conway will direct Gladys Walton in "Sawdust," a Courtney Riley Cooper story of circus life.

Edward Laemmle has completed the "Oregon Trail" serial. He leaves for the East immediately, and on April 8 will be married in Chicago to Miss Peppi Heller.

Gardner Bradford has been appointed supervisor of the editing department by Eugene H. Roth.

Frank Messenger and J. Marchant, former assistant cameramen will co-direct the serial titled "Daniel Boone," featuring Jack Mower and Eileen Sedgwick.

King Baggot will direct the next Richard Rawlins subject, "Thicker Than Water." The cast supporting Hoot Gibson includes Esther Ralston, Dewitt Jennings, Marhilde Brundage, Donald Hatseel, Charles E. French and William Lawrence.

"Burning Words," a Northwest Mounted story by Harrison Warren Jacobs, will be the first starring vehicle for Roy Stewart, under the direction of Stuart Paton. The cast includes Laura La Plante, Harold Goodwin, William Walsh, Edith Yorke, Alfred Fisher, Noble Johnson, Harry Carter and George McDaniels.

The complete cast for the "Leather Pushers" third series includes Hayden Stevenson, Elinor Field, Gertrude Olmstead, Melbourne McDowell, Ed Kennedy, Harry Lorraine, Kid Wagner and Jack Henderson.

Edward T. Lowe, Jr., is adapting the story, "The Prisoner," and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." Conway will select his cast within a few days.

"The Self-made Wife" will be the material for the next all-star production which Jack Conway will direct.

Esther Ralston will have the leading feminine role in "Pure Grit," a Hoot Gibson starring vehicle, now being filmed at Universal City under the direction of Edward Sedgwick.

With Paramount Units

William DeMille has started work on "Only Thirty-Eight," adapted from A. E. Thomas' play. Clara Beranger wrote the adaptation. The cast included Elliott Dexter as the professor, May McAvoy in the leading role, George Fawcett, Lois Wilson, Robert Agnew.

James Cruze and his company have returned to Hollywood from New York.

Cecil DeMille will not start work on "The Ten Commandments" for at least six weeks, as preparations for actual production work will require that interval.

Director Charles Maigne has begun "The Silent Partner" with Leatrice Joy and Owen Moore in the leading roles.

Jacqueline Logan, Maurice Flynn and William Davidson are the principals in "Salomy Jane," which is being produced by George Melford. The adaptation was written by Waldemar Young.

Director Rob Wagner has left Hollywood for Pleasanton to film exteriors for "Fair Week," in which Walter Hiers will appear in the featured role. Constance Wilson, sister of Lois, who played a bit in "The Covered Wagon," has been selected as leading woman for Hiers in this subject. The rest of the cast includes J. Farrell McDonald, Bobbie Mack, Mary Jane Irving, Newt Erickson, Carmen Phillips and others.

The "Our Gang" comedy, Pathe, in which the above scenes occur, is titled "A Pleasant Journey."

Other subjects in production are: "The Woman with Four Faces," starring Betty Compson under the direction of Herbert Brenon; "The Cheat," with Pola Negri, George Fitzmaurice directing; "Children of Jazz," Jerome Storm directing, with an all-star cast; "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," starring Gloria Swanson under the direction of Sam Woods.

General Manager Charles Eyton went to San Francisco this week to bid good-bye to his wife, Kathleen Williams, who is leaving for China on a three months' vacation.

Edward S. Curtis and Bert Glennon have been appointed photographers for Cecil B. DeMille productions.

Jack Richardson is essaying the part of the sheriff in Dorothy Dalton's new Paramount picture, "Fog Bound," which Irvin Willat is producing at the Long Island studio.

With Sennett Comedians

Mack Sennett will resume production activities this week in fulfillment of his recently signed Pathe contract. By the end of the week five units will be at work.

William Seiter is directing "The Extra Girl," which is Phyllis Haver's initial starring vehicle. Ralph Graves appears opposite Miss Haver.

Roy Del Ruth is directing "Mud Pies and Puddles," with Harry Gribbon, Lila Leslie, Kewpie Morgan, Alberta Vaughn, Jackie Lucas and "Teddy."

Mel Brown is directing Ben Turpin in a special two-reel production titled "Where Is My Wandering Boy This Evening?" In the cast are Priscilla Bonner, Dot Farley, Madeline Hurlock and James Finlayson.

Chester Wallace is directing Billy Bevan, Harry Gribbon, Eugenie Gilbert, Dot Farley in a domestic economy subject.

"Mary Ann" is the title of the new subject selected as Mable Normand's next stellar vehicle.

Richard Jones has been appointed the supervising director of all Mack Sennett's comedy and feature companies. He will supervise the story material, select casts, wardrobes and conduct rehearsals.

Warner Brothers Items

Herman Raymaker and Al Santell have completed filming of six one-reel subjects showing the life of Gene Sarazen, champion golfer of the world. Julien Josephson has completed an original story titled, "Printers Devil," for Wesley Barry, who returns from a vaudeville tour this week. Direction will be by William Beaudine.

The title of "Wolf Fangs" has been changed to "The White Silence." It will require five weeks more to complete this Harry Rapf production, directed by Chester Franklin.

Gus Miller, special exchange representative of Warner Brothers, is spending the week at the studio.

Merit Film Corp. Suggests Ad for Serial

The Merit Film Corporation, distributing the new Arrow serial, "The Fighting Skipper," starring Peggy O'Day, Francis Ford and Jack Perrin, have inaugurated an inexpensive advertising stunt, based on a Tongue Twister Contest.

They have sent out a letter to all the exhibitors handling the picture, advising them of this contest and offering three prizes: the first, twenty-five dollars; the second, fifteen dollars; and the third, ten dollars; and give them a sample tongue twister as follows:

Tantalizing Thrills That Thoroughly Thrill Thankful Throngs!

This is a simple and inexpensive idea which any exhibitor can adopt and which should prove very successful.

Marshall Neilan's
Supreme Motion Picture Achievement
The Strangers' Banquet
His newest and greatest work is laid in a vast Pacific Coast shipyard. At the death of its pioneer builder his daughter, gentle, beautiful, superb, carries on the colossal enterprise. Fate hovers like a black menace over the waterfront. Scheming adventurers, luring women, demagogs of labor, seek to undermine the fabulous wealth of the Keoghs, but the lone girl, one of the most fascinating characters of picture history, fights to save the great inheritance. Those rugged dramatic qualities, the thrills, the strength, the beauty that have long been associated with the work of Marshall Neilan, are presented more grippingly than ever in this gigantic production that will take its place in your memory as one of the most strikingly entertaining film dramas you have ever seen.

: : : : "THE CHECK-UP" : : : :

"The Check-Up" is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who considered it "Fair"; the third, the number who considered it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who considered it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

WHAT SHOWMEN THINK OF CURRENT RELEASES

Exhibitors' Box-Office Reports

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The White Flower—

A very fine and unusual picture. Business very good. (Middle West.)

Adam and Eva—

Lavish production but story too light. Business only fair. (East.)

"Marion Davies always brings in the women folks. In conjunction with a fashion show put on with one of the department stores, the picture did a consistent business for us." (Middle West.)

The Leopardess—

Picture poor, business bad. (East.)

Mr. Billings Spends His Dime—

Fair picture, poor business. (Middle West.)

Picture fairly well-liked; business average. (West.)

Adam's Rib—

Came within a few dollars of reaching the house record. Packed all week. (East.)

Wonderful photography and was well liked, though the story dragged at times. Very good business. (East.)

Bad weather alone prevented it setting new house records. Went across with a bang. Everyone praised it. (Middle West.)

The usual DeMille picture; drew well; held for second week.

When Knighthood Was in Flower—

Too long and too dry for patrons of this house. Business off, especially because it was shown all over town. (East.)

Dark Secrets—

Dorothy Dalton's popularity here drew them in for this feature, but folks were not enthusiastic over story. (East.)

"Dorothy Dalton in a typical Dalton picture. While her name doesn't draw extra well with our patrons, all are satisfied with the picture. Used along with 'Thorns and Orange Blossoms' on a double feature bill we did an average business." (Middle West.)

Nobody's Money—

Jack Holt is popular here and usually draws well. This one was no exception. (Middle West.)

Racing Hearts—

Not so good, and not so bad. Average picture of the program variety. (Middle West.)

Making a Man—

Business good; picture well liked. (West.)

The World's Applause—

Picture took very well here; business excellent. (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Mighty Lak' a Rose—

A very fine and unusual picture. Business very good. (Middle West.)

White Shoulders—

One of Katherine MacDonald's best pictures. It pulled them in to the tune of S. R. O. for a six day run. Strong supplementary bill helped. (East.)

Oliver Twist—

Too high-brow for modern audiences in picture houses. Opening big on Sunday but fell way off rest of week. (East.)

Fools First—

Business excellent for the six days' run. Patrons liked this one in which there is something doing every minute. (East.)

What a Wife Learned—

The week's attendance with this one was good. (Middle West.)

Bellboy 13—

A scream. Wonderful attraction that drew the crowds like a magnet. We find that the public wants to laugh. They ate up this show. (Middle West.)

Fast moving, laugh-getting comedy, in which McLean does good work. Business good. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Driven—

One of the best pictures shown this season at this house, with the public responding to big advertising campaign in gratifying manner. (East.)

Picture good; business very satisfactory. (West.)

The Prisoner—

Fairly entertaining and receipts for the week satisfactory. (East.)

The Flame of Life—

Good thriller. They liked it. They came to see it. (Middle West.)

Intensely human, and has everything a picture should have. Proved strong drawing card. (Middle West.)

Nobody's Bride—

Just what it implies—melodrama—so it attracted only melodrama seekers, and therefore pleased the audiences which expected just what they got. Good business, which was consistently satisfactory all week. (Middle West.)

The Flirt—

"Business for us on Sunday night was good with 'The Flirt' as the feature but it dropped off.

GOLDWYN

Broken Chains—

Attendance held up well for a week's run. Played with "The Pilgrim," held over for a second week's run. (Middle West.)

Mad Love—

Didn't go as well as we expected. Pola Negri appreciated as a great dramatic actress, but the play did not fit the times. Moderately successful engagement, but nothing startling. (Middle West.)

The Christian—

Did good business on second run. (East.)

The Stranger's Banquet—

Splendid picture and good drawing card. (East.)

FOX

Youth to Youth—

Picture and business not so good. (Middle West.)

The Buster—

A mighty interesting picture. If your people like Dustin Farnum they will like this one. Excellent business. (East.)

Lights of New York—

Fair picture, fair business. (East.)

Took well and made a lot of talk. (East.)

My Friend the Devil—

A stirring picture that caught the crowd. (East.)

They Like 'Em Rough—

Bad picture. Business way off. (East.)

METRO

Your Friend and Mine—

Carries plenty of punches and thrills and went over big here. Great audience picture. Excellent business. (East.)

Jazzmania—

Divided opinions. Some thought this the best picture Mae Murray ever made. Others thought it very poor. Box-office shows that more people thought it good than otherwise, because it did well here for two weeks. (Middle West.)

Elaborate production with improbable story. Mae Murray's dancing shown to advantage. Business fair. (Middle West.)

Hearts Aflame—

Unusual picture with plenty of thrills. House filler. (East.)

Peg o' My Heart—

Nice little picture. Went over very well. (East.)

A real picture. That's what those who saw it said. Good criticism in press. Drew well. (Middle West.)

Toll of the Sea—

Best picture of its special sort yet shown. Did not do well as a feature, however. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Girl I Love—

Regarded as too long by many of Ray's admirers and did not take very well. (East.)

Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood—

Business held up well on seventh week. (East.)

Tess of the Storm Country—

This is a fine Pickford offering and pleased our patrons. Business good. (Middle West.)

ALLIED P. & D.

Suzanna—

Picture went over fairly well; business nothing extra. (West.)

WARNER BROTHERS

The Beautiful and Damned—

Went over well, with Marie Prevost drawing them in. (East.)

Only an average picture, but a good box-office attraction. (Middle West.)

AL LICHTMAN

Shadows—

Lon Chaney's admirers increased considerably after seeing him in this. A picture well liked by the public. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

The World's a Stage—

This one drew some favorable newspaper comment and consequently played to good crowds all week. (Middle West.)

Disappointed some, but measures up very well. Fair receipts. (Middle West.)

Only a Shop Girl—

Picture of poor quality. Got fair business on strength of title alone at house used for melodrama. (East.)

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 725 S. WABASH AVE.

Among the Exchanges

ASSISTANT General Sales Manager Herman Stern, of Universal, spent the week in New York, in conference with general officials of the company. Mr. Stern's birthday occurred during his absence and previous to his departure the staff gave him a surprise party Saturday night, presenting him with a handsome and fully equipped traveling bag. The presentation speech was made by Ted Schlanger, who read a poem in honor of the occasion, which was written by Salesman W. Tracy, Universal's poet laureate.

F. B. Swanson is again a member of Film Booking Offices' sales staff and has been assigned to Northern Illinois territory.

Carroll S. Trowbridge, of United Artists, is making his headquarters in Chicago for the next three or four weeks, getting in touch with the local situation and intends to make short trips to other exchange centers of the Central West Mr. Trowbridge has recently returned from London, where he had been general manager of Allied Artists Corporation, Ltd., the British branch of United.

E. C. Jensen, assistant general manager of F. B. O., was in Chicago this week for a short visit and then left for Omaha, St. Louis and Minneapolis. He expects to stop over in this city for a brief stay on his way back to New York.

George Beban spent Holy Week in Chicago, making his headquarters with Manager Manske, of American Releasing Corporation. Mr. Beban and his company are booked to make a personal appearance at Lubliner & Trintz's Senate theatre the week starting April 8th.

Jack Sampson's thoughts turned to baseball with the first signs of spring and he considered organizing a film row league, but figured it that so many sore arms and charley horses would develop that it would cripple the sales forces along the row, so has compromised on an indoor baseball league, which will play its games noon hours in nearby Grant Park. The F. B. O. team is open for challenges from any other exchange's team.

The Chicago Film Board of Trade have accepted the invitation of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners to attend the get-together dinner, under the auspices of the latter body, which will be held on the first night of the exhibitor's state convention, April 18th, at the Sherman Hotel.

Dan Roche, Famous Players-Lasky's exploitation manager in Chicago, has returned from Pittsburgh, where he has been engaged in a campaign to put over "The Covered Wagon," in collaboration with A. Mike Vogel, of the Pittsburgh exchange. Plans for the Chicago premier of this screen epic will be announced at an early date.

Another demonstration of the practicability and desirability of motion pictures on transcontinental trains was carried out by Universal last week, the Olympian Limited, of the C. M. & St. P. being the demonstration train. Picture entertainment was given each of the four evenings during the trip from Seattle to Chicago, in the dining car, immediately following the serving of dinner, the tables being removed to make room for the picture audiences. The programs were printed in the form of railroad tickets, and the feature pictures used were "Driven," "The Prisoner," and "The Gentleman From America." Current news reels, comedy reels, etc., were also made a part of each day's program. The traveling audiences gave an enthusiastic reception to each picture shown, and a large amount of publicity was obtained in the press of Spokane, St. Paul, and intermediate points. Railroad officials were much interested in the try-out, which was held to be a complete success. Negotiations are understood to be under way with several railroads, to make the showing of pictures part of their regular service to the traveling public.

W. D. Russell, of Russell Productions, is in California, conferring with Berney Russell, in charge of their West Coast studios, on coming productions, and it is understood that an ambitious program is being mapped out. Mr. Russell, Sr., will return to Chicago next week.

The marriage of Exploiteer Danziger, of Paramount, to Miss Peggy Whitmore, of La Porte, Indiana, which occurred at South Bend last week, comes as a surprise to the many friends of this popular publicity expert and brings to life a whirlwind romance, which started when Mr. Danziger and Miss Whitmore met at La Porte about three months ago when he was there handling a publicity campaign on "The Old Homestead." Mr. Danziger soon talked Miss Whitmore into moving to a new "homestead" in the form of a Chicago love nest.

Around the Trade

THE Midway theatre, at Rockford, Ill., will be taken over on April 1st by the newly-organized Rockford Theatres Company, of which W. D. Burford is president, and Charles Lamb, secretary-treasurer. The Rubens Brothers, Frank Thielan, and other prominent exhibitors are interested in the new company, which is incorporated under the laws of Illinois. A policy of high-class motion picture entertainment will be put in force at the Midway, and the first feature to be shown under the new management will be "The Hottentot." It is the intention of the Rockford Theatres Company to redecorate and remodel the house some time during the summer. . .

"One Exciting Night," D. W. Griffith's mystery film drama, will have its first Chicago showing in a motion picture theatre at the Roosevelt, where it is scheduled to open for an extended run April 2nd.

"Bella Donna," starring Pola Negri, will have its Chicago premier at McVicker's theatre next week, and exhibitors throughout the territory will watch the reception accorded this celebrated foreign star in her American-made picture, with interest.

J. J. Rubens, who is acting as Chicago representative for the promoters of the Motion Pictures Palace of Progress at the Colliseum, which will be held during the week of the national convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, reports interest is growing in this event, and that a considerable amount of space has already been contracted for. Mr. Rubens has opened exposition headquarters in the Sherman Hotel.

Musical Director H. Leopold Spitalny, of McVicker's theatre, has been in New York gathering ideas for spring presentations at this theatre, and last week the orchestra was under the direction of Pietro Cavallo. Cavallo is best known to Chicagoans as the conductor of grand opera of Ravinia Park and for the big Morris Guest productions at the Auditorium. He is concert master this season for McVicker's Symphony Orchestra.

Hoopestown, Ill., will have an opportunity of voting on whether or not the city is going to have Sunday shows at the election to be held on April 17th. The placing of this question on the ballot followed the presentation of a petition, signed by several hundred citizens, to the City Council.

At Litchfield, local ministers are agitating to have all amusement places closed on Sunday, and the Ministers' Association and several of the official boards of churches of the city, have presented a petition to the City Council asking that theatres be closed on that day. The Ordinance Committee of the Council has been instructed to draw up an ordinance covering the matter and present it at the next meeting of the Council.

Gus Trulich is again active in the motion picture business, having assumed the managership of the Orchard theatre.

Another exhibitor, who is back on the job after vacationing in a warmer climate, is Mrs. R. G. Jordan, of the Hinsdale theatre, Hinsdale, Ill., who has just returned from several weeks spent in California.

In the recent reorganization of the Home Theatre Company at Danville, Ill., Tom Ronan was chosen general manager, and already has assumed his new duties.

S. J. Gregory, well-known Hammond, Ind., exhibitor, is back home after a sojourn of ten weeks in the Sunny South. James Creiton, manager of the Parthenon theatre, Hammond, has left for San Francisco, to visit his family, and, after a short stay, will bring them back with him.

John J. Jones, eldest son of Aaron J. Jones, in charge of bookings for Jones, Linick & Schaefer, was to forsake bachelorhood this week. Plans were for a quiet ceremony, attended only by the families concerned, at which he will wed Miss Agatha Connett. The honeymoon will be spent along Broadway and at Atlantic City.

The Avenue theatre, at 3108 Indiana Avenue, which was recently purchased by W. Bedell, and thoroughly remodernized and redecorated, was opened to the public on March 26th. A large crowd attended the event at which an excellent program of pictures with orchestral accompaniment was presented.

Salesman Stover, of Universal, who has just returned from a trip through Northern Illinois, reports Warren Wendell, owner of the Gaiety theatre, Middletown, Ill., has just closed a deal whereby his old house will be closed and a new Gaiety opened in its place, giving the people of his community a most acceptable change for the better.

Maurice Rubens is back on the job, having practically recovered from the injuries which confined him to his bed for several weeks.

Douglas Rothacker and Director of Publicity P. P. Parker, of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, have gone back to St. Louis, where they are working on "The Spirit of St. Louis," a production which will exploit the progress of that city.

Eastman Theatre Uses Strong Campaign for "Robin Hood"

Rochester, N. Y.—An exploitation campaign of unusual proportions was used by the Eastman theatre for the showing of "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood."

A press campaign conducted by Fred. T. Harris of the Eastman staff brought heavy newspaper attention to the coming of the feature. In the line of exploitation a great deal more than the ordinary representation was obtained all through the city. A window display showing showing of extraordinary proportions was obtained, talking machine dealers and United Cigar stores co-operating one hundred per cent, while department stores displayed an almost equal degree of interest.

A big stunt, used for the first time in Rochester, was the participation of the 2,000 public school teachers of Rochester at a formal attendance at a presentation on Monday, March 5th. Another impressive affair was the broadcasting, on Friday evening, March 2nd, of a special "Robin Hood" program by the newly organized Radio Dealers' Club through station WHAM. After the program telephone and mail communications came into the broadcasting station highly complimenting the program and its general subject. Frederick Benton, instructor at the Eastman School of Music, sang the old song, "Brown October Ale"; Miss Edna Richardson sang "Oh, Promise Me"; a "Robin Hood" overture was played by a trio; the "Troubador's" song was sung by Hubert Senior; "The Armorer's" song by Harold King, and Miss Georgiana Speare read as a bedtime story "Robin Hood Goes to a Wedding."

Exhibitor Gets Co-operation of Schools Through Offer

RENO, Nev.—C. P. Pracy, manager of the Grand theatre, owned by the T. & D. Junior Enterprises, has brought the theatre into the limelight and increased the afternoon attendance through a school contest in which he has the co-operation of the teachers and patrons.

As an inducement to good lessons, Pracy, through the school principals, gives a free ticket for the month to the afternoon performances to each student receiving the highest grades on his monthly report card. In case several received the same marks, all get free show tickets for the month following, admitting them to the Monday afternoon shows.

"Minnie" Exploited in Novel One-Sheet Campaign

New York, N. Y.—The run of "Minnie" at the Capitol theatre was given the aid of an unusual teaser one-sheet campaign that included stands in all of the elevated and subway stations for more than a week in advance of the showing.

Poor Minnie was given a horrible requtation by the campaign conducted under the supervision of Bessie Mack, press representative for the Capitol. Such epithets as "Boxing Minnie vs. a Bunch of Cats" and "Poor Min, she wrote letters to herself" gave the fans an indication that Minnie would prove to be a most unique character. It was up to Marshall Neilan's creation to make good on the screen; but on the subway and elevated stations Minnie made good with this series of one-sheets that aroused reader interest and helped build up anticipation for the picture.

Restaurant Buys $300 Worth of "Adam and Eva" Tickets

Peoria, Ill.—Through a tie-up arranged by Norman E. Dixon, Paramount exploiteer, Manager Fred McMullen of Ascher's Palace theatre, sold $300 worth of matinee tickets for "Adam and Eva" to a newly opened cafeteria.

This restaurant was a sumptuous affair and the backers were spending a lot of money. Dixon sold them the idea of buying 3,500 matinee tickets and giving them away. This idea took and then Mr. McMullen gave the restaurant a 10 per cent. reduction.

The result was that the theatre played to three of the biggest matinee audiences in its history. A check-up revealed that nearly 3,100 tickets were used and most of these brought a paid admission along.

The restaurant also played up the theatre in its newspaper advertising on its menus, and in the display frames on the façade.

There is a suggestion for any exhibitor playing a picture with an Egyptian angle in this "Queen of Sheba" front used by Manager Albert B. Hill of the Imperial theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., which hooks up nicely with the Egyptian craze

"Jazzmania" Exploited by Means of Jazz Contest

OMAHA, Nebr.—Morris Abrams, Metro exploitation man, put over a special campaign for "Jazzmania" at the Sun theatre that included a number of novel features.

One of the most successful of these was a jazz contest held at the Sun during the week, the winners competing on Friday night for the grand prize, which was a week's engagement at the World theatre, under same management with the Sun.

Jazz instrumentalists of Omaha and Council Bluffs were awarded cash prizes each night. Another exploitation idea was a Mae Murray costume design contest promoted through The Omaha Bee.

"Broken Chains" Given Special Lobby and Window Displays

Pittsburgh, Pa.—"Broken Chains" was given a special hand-painted lobby display by the publicity staff of Rowland and Clark when it showed at the Blackstone theatre.

The signboards inside the lobby carried a painting of Colleen Moore chained hand and foot, while above the doors leading into the orchestra were paintings of the principal actors in their various roles. Oil paintings prepared by Goldwyn, photographic enlargements and stills were also used. A catch line on the theatre's own painted signs read as follows: "Love broke the chains that bound her to the brute."

Several window displays were arranged with jewelry and automobile dealers. The jewelry displays consisted of watch chains and the automobile one of motor chains. A perambulator with hand-painted 24-sheet posters and with bits of broken chains nailed to the boards was sent through the streets for several days preceding the showing and attracted a great deal of attention.

Uses Apology to Turnaways as Ad on "The Christian"

Bridgeport, Conn.—The management of the Capitol theatre published a public apology to its patrons for having been obliged to turn many of them away from the showing of "The Christian" the night before. This was taken in the form of a paid advertisement, in addition to the regular four-column theatre ad. It served notice on the public that "The Christian" had caught on so strongly that people were being turned away.

"An apology. The capacity of the Capitol theatre last night was insufficient to take care of the demand for seats for 'The Christian,'" read the display ad. "To the hundreds who were unable to obtain tickets, the management offers an apology. Phone Noble 962 for reserved seats!"

In the same issues were published other display ads in the form of a warning from Edward D. Turner, managing director of the Capitol theatre, that any advertisements of any Bridgeport theatre management, other than his own, that "The Christian" would be shown in their theatres was misleading, and that he would prosecute to the fullest extent of the law any manager who made such an announcement. That created additional talk.

"The Third Alarm" Tied Up with Clean-up Day

PEORIA, Ill.—Strong exploitation cooperation for "The Third Alarm" was obtained by the Ascher theatre, when the Boy Scouts were enlisted for a "clean-up" day as a tie-up on the picture.

All of the rubbish found in various parts of the city was brought to a spot at the foot of Main street, and a parade was organized that later marched to the spot, where a big bonfire was made of the debris. The marchers carried banners and motor trucks were put in line carrying announcements of the presentation of "The Third Alarm" at the Ascher.

Gets Out Special Bulletin on "Message of Coue"

HAMILTON, Ohio—Managing Director Fred S. Meyer of the Palace theatre, always quick to take advantage of a timely tie-up, issued a special bulletin to his patrons, printed on the regular letterhead, on "The Message of Emile Coué."

The Hamilton Evening Journal printed an item on the editorial page commenting on the demand for Coué's book at the public library, and Meyer reprinted this, together with an ad on the picture, announcing a special private showing to those to whom the bulletin was sent. This showing, in turn, insured ample word-of-mouth publicity for the regular showing.

Sign Painting Stunt Is Used to Exploit "Adam's Rib"

Hartford, Conn.—An outdoor ballyhoo that got a large turnout in front of the Princess theatre for "Adam's Rib," was used by Jim Clancy of the theatre and Russell B. Moon, Paramount exploiteer.

Two members of the Princess staff, not sign painters either, were put on top of the theatre in front of the big 24-sheet stand that stays there permanently.

White paper covered the stand, and the men, dressed as cavemen, were equipped with mops and buckets of black paint. They scratched the title and funny little illustrations on the paper, and scheduled their work so the crowd had to hang around for a while before the sign made sense.

They pulled this stunt three days in succession. Afterwards the board was covered with the stock Paramount 24-sheet.

Typewriter Tie-Up Is Made on "Tailor Made Man"

FORT SMITH, Ark.—In addition to his teaser advertising and a full page tie-up ad on "A Tailor Made Man," manager Hugo Plath of the Palace theatre obtained an advantageous typewriter tie-up.

The Corona Typewriter people helped Mr. Plath advertise this picture by running a two column twenty inch ad stating that Charles Ray used a Corona typewriter. The authority for this last tie-up was an ad that ran in the Corona Magazine showing a picture of Charles Ray seated and writing upon one of Corona's product.

Something like ten telegrams were wired from the Dallas office to the different merchants in Fort Smith. These telegrams endorsed the different clothing shops and were signed by Charles Ray. Permission to send these wires was given by United Artists.

Campaign on "Oliver Twist" Is Directed at Children

Columbus, Ga.—Beginning two weeks before "Oliver Twist" opened, Manager I. C. Holloway of the Grand theatre got the librarian to place bookmarks, imprinted with an announcement of the picture, in all books leaving the library.

A large book was made of beaver board, painted in proper fashion, and used on the streets as a ballyhoo five days in advance, one hour each day while the crowds were thickest. During the engagement of the picture it was kept on the streets for about three hours each day.

On the Saturday before opening, Mr. Holloway personally announced the picture to 900 kids attending the children's matinee. He told them this was one picture they just couldn't afford to miss.

For a prologue Mr. Holloway secured a local boy, just about the size of Coogan, who had made quite a reputation as a singer.

"Nobody's Money" Is Put Over on One Day's Notice

Pottsville, Pa.—A sudden switch in bookings made it necessary for Edgar Brown of the Garden theatre to put over "Nobody's Money" in one day's time.

Vernon Gray, Paramount exploiteer, got up a ballyhoo for him at the cost of two gallons of gasoline.

Gray borrowed Mr. Brown's second-best automobile and painted the title on the glass window. He then borrowed eight money bags from the bank and stuffed them with sawdust and hung them all over the car.

Big dollar signs were also calcimined on the body, which cost nothing at all.

Restricted Essay Contest on "Back Home and Broke"

BELLINGHAM, Wash.—An essay contest that was unique was used by the American theatre on "Back Home and Broke."

Harry C. Eagles, Paramount exploiteer working on the picture, picked out in advance the people he was going to allow to participate. He limited the list to about twenty-five business men and women, all of whom were solicited to write essays of their early experiences. These were published in the paper.

The winner received a box for one of the night showings and was invited to bring 25 of his employees with him. Eagles reports, "it created a lot more interest than a free-for-all essay contest, and the people were keen for a bit of gossip of the early life of the local celebrities."

Elaborate Style Show Put Over with "Look Your Best"

Toledo, Ohio.—The management of the Pantheon theatre, in conjunction with Goldwynner Eddie Carrier, put on an elaborate exploitation campaign on "Look Your Best," the outstanding feature of which was a fashion pageant staged in co-operation with the Thompson-Hudson Company, a leading department store.

A bevy of beautiful mannequins was assembled, and a runway was built far out into the audience, on which they promenaded with the latest fashion creations. Special lighting and scenic effects were used and a musical score was provided for the occasion. The department store co-operated with a double-page ad, seven full window displays and 2,500 letters to its customers.

Seattle Rose Society Ties Up to "Mighty Lak' a Rose"

Seattle, Wash.—When "Mighty Lak' a Rose" played at Manager Frank Steffy's Coliseum theatre here, Mr. Steffy and J. L. Johnston, First National exploiteer, tied up with the Seattle Times and the Seattle Rose Society and put across a campaign that was of direct value to the city, as well as the theatre.

Five thousand packages of rose seeds, furnished by the Rose Society and the newspaper, were distributed by the theatre. Each envelope containing the seeds on one side bore general directions for the planting and culture of the roses, and the other side bore advertising matter for the theatre and "Mighty Lak' a Rose."

In addition to the distribution of the thousands of seeds, the Times, in co-operation with the theatre, conducted a contest for the best newspaper articles on the subject of rose culture. The articles ran for one week, and at the end of the contest prizes were awarded to the winners.

"Brawn of the North" Stunt Turned into Parade

HAMILTON, Ont. — Manager H. Morgan of the Temple theatre, by turning a "Brawn of the North" contest into a parade, won front page space.

The usual Strongheart collection of canines was supplemented by awards for the best trained dog, the dog most resembling the film star and the owner of the best groomed dog. When all the contestants had arrived Manager Morgan surprised them by making them parade the streets with banners.

Cashes in on Klan Crosses to Exploit "Christian"

SANDUSKY, Ohio—When Eddie Carrier, Goldwynner, arrived to assist George Schade in putting "The Christian" over at the Schade theatre, he found the town very much interested in a huge fiery cross which had been erected about a hundred feet out on the ice in Lake Erie. Interest was still further aroused when on the following night another fiery cross appeared on the top of the hill on West Madison Street. It turned out that the two fiery crosses were the work of the Ku Klux Klan. Mr. Carrier decided to cash in on all this discussion and interest.

He sold Manager Schade on the idea of building a huge cross 30 feet high above the theatre. There were 74 lights on this cross and when it was lighted up the public naturally associated the other two blazing crosses with this one on the theatre and decided that it was all publicity for "The Christian."

In all the newspaper publicity, Mr. Carrier kept away from anything touching on the religious angle of the film. But the newspapers carried stories on the fiery crosses as a publicity stunt and it turned out to be most effective.

Boys of Chivalry Organized to Exploit "Robin Hood"

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Unusual attention was drawn to the Pittsburgh engagement of Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood" at the Pitt theatre through the organization of the "Robin Hood Boys of Chivalry," ostensibly a new boys' organization, but in reality a group of boys engaged to exploit the picture.

Wearing picturesque Robin Hood hats, rented from a local costumer, the boys appeared on the business corners of Pittsburgh's downtown district. They escorted elderly women through heavy traffic, carried bundles for tired shoppers, helped women onto street cars and performed many little acts of kindness.

The stunt was tied up with the Pittsburgh Evening Leader, which newspaper gave the scheme good space from day to day. The first day the boys appeared they wore just the Robin Hood hat, and in reply to questions made no reply except to say they were "Robin Hood Boys of Chivalry." This created mystery and speculation. On the second day the Evening Leader explained the reason for the sudden appearance of the "Boys of Chivalry," say they had seen "Douglas Fairbanks in 'Robin Hood'" and had been thus inspired by the deeds of chivalry seen on the screen. On this day the boys wore badges in their coat lapels, in addition to the Robin Hood hats, and this acted as a direct advertisement for the film. The boys were engaged to work the busy street corners after school for fifty cents an hour, and were used for an entire week.

Every day the boys paraded to their particular "beat" in a body, much as a group of policemen march out to their various posts.

Florists and Music Stores Aid "Mighty Lak' a Rose"

CHICAGO, Ill.—As an instance of the tie-up possibilities of the picture, the Chicago theatre, during the run of "Mighty Lak' a Rose," tied up with all florists within a radius of five blocks. Cutouts of Dorothy Mackaill in the leading feminine role featured the window displays. Some showed the orphaned girl playing the violin while others used a straight portrait.

In addition to florists, music stores evidenced a keen desire to come in on the advertising possibilities offered by the picture. Victor and Columbia dealers furnished limitless ammunition in the way of window space, the tie up with the records being so obvious it couldn't be missed.

Inexpensive Campaign Put Over To Aid "East Is West"

Greenwood, S. C.—Manager W. A. Byers of the Liberty theatre opened his campaign on "East Is West" twelve days in advance by starting a series of slides. These slides played up the picture with the personal endorsement of the management. The wording was changed with every change of program. Several days in advance small ads were started, using copy along the same lines as the slides.

An attractive lobby display was worked up at very little expense. The sides of the lobby were completely masked in with yellow and black crepe paper. Special mats of the star were displayed against this background. In the center of the lobby was a cut-out of a Chinese god and incense was kept burning in front of it. Rows of Chinese lanterns were strung overhead and extended out across the sidewalk at each side of the lobby. Incense was burned in the theatre as crowds were entering and leaving.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

"Trimmed in Scarlet"

Universal—Five Reels

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

THE situations used by William Hurlburt when he wrote "Trimmed in Scarlet" for Maxine Elliott may have been new at that time, but the screen has used them so often and with so little variation since that it is difficult to find much of interest in the material.

There is a constant feeling throughout the picture that the players are struggling against the handicap of situations which they know to be unreal, and though they do their best the result is extremely theatrical and bears little semblance of reality.

A young girl, of such firm character that she leaves the shelter of her wealthy father's roof and goes to work, rather than remain with a loose woman whom he has married, suddenly turns thief and steals $5,000 in Liberty bonds to pay off a blackmailer threatening her mother. A woman, who has remained unsmirched through a long and spectacular career on the continent, compromises herself in the eyes of her fiance to get the money to make good her daughter's theft, Mistrust, misunderstandings, threatened ruin—yet an explanation from any one of several people would clear up the whole tangle, yet no one explains.

Logical, human motives are lacking in many instances, and the unreal effect is heightened by the trite subtitles, many of which might better be eliminated entirely.

"Trimmed in Scarlet" seems to us to hark back to the earlier days of mechanical melodrama.

The picture has been given an all-star cast, including such interesting players as Kathlyn Williams, Roy Stewart, Lucille Ricksen, Robert Agnew, Raymond Hatton and Philo McCullough, and this will probably put the picture over as a program release, but such a cast deserves story material more worthy of its mettle.

The production, as a whole, is capable, and Jack Conway, the director, has probably done the best that could be expected.

The Cast

Cordelia Ebbing / Mme. De La Fleur ..... Kathlyn Williams
Revere Wayne ..... Roy Stewart
Faith Ebbing ..... Lucille Ricksen
David Pierce ..... Robert Agnew
Charles Knight ..... David Torrance
Peter Ebbing ..... Phillips Smalley
Fifi Barclay ..... Eve Southern
Duroc ..... Bert Sprott
Molly Todd ..... Grace Carlyle
Ruth Kipp ..... Gerrard Grassby
Mr. Kipp ..... Raymond Hatton
Count DeSigneur ..... Philo McCullough

Adapted by Edward T. Lowe, Jr., from the play by William Hurlburt. Directed by Jack Conway. Photographed by Charles Kaufman.

The Story—Woman leaves unfaithful husband and goes abroad. Her daughter grows up and leaves father, because of further offenses. The mother is suspected of murder, of which servant can clear her. She flees to America and servant follows, for blackmail. Daughter meets him, and steals $5,000 from office to meet his demands. She is reunited with mother, who finds new happiness in love of old admirer. To get money to make good theft, mother compromises herself in his eyes, but at the end this is straightened out.

Classification—Heart interest melodrama.

Production Highlights—The sets and production. The excellent cast. The work of such players as Raymond Hatton, Kathlyn Williams and Lucille Ricksen.

Exploitation Angles—The title suggests ideas for lobby displays and ballyhoos. The cast. The play on which it was based.

Drawing Power—Suitable for program use in second class downtown and neighborhood houses.

"Slippy McGee"

First National—6600 Feet

(Reviewed by Eugene Carlton)

THERE have been scores of master screen crooks reform and later use their cunning for robberies to some good advantage, but few have been dumped off a freight train to the audience as an opening scene of "Slippy McGee." It is the minor events leading up to the climax of the production that gives it sufficient difference in twist to make it interesting.

Not until the threshold of the closing scene is neared can it be foretold that the hero-crook will furnish the "punch" of the story by executing a somewhat second-handed stunt—that of opening the safe of an unscrupulous man to obtain some letters that will save the name of a good girl. However, the story runs along so smoothly up to that point, carrying with it more than the average interest, that a little bit of stereotypic stuff can be overlooked.

The story has been well handled, the cast well adapted to the respective roles and the photography could not be much improved upon. There is a love story; or, at least, the audience realizes that it has been viewing a love story as the film nears its end, despite the fact that the feeling existing between the hero-crook and the girl is more of the father-daughter type and bursts out like a rainy day in the climax. There also is a good moral to the picture, which should not meet with the disapproval of even the most severe censor.

The Cast

Slippy McGee ..... Wheeler Oakman
Mary Virginia ..... Colleen Moore
Father De Rance ..... Sam De Grasse
George Ingelsby ..... Edmund Stevens
Madame De Rance ..... Edith Yorke
Howard Hunter ..... Lloyd Whitlock

By Marie Conway Oemler. Directed by Wesley Ruggles. Produced by Oliver Morosco.

The Story—Celebrated cracksman breaks leg alighting from freight train, it being necessary to amputate the leg. He is cared for by a priest. He reforms and obtains honest occupation, making butterflies. He eventually is touched by the loveliness of a village maiden, but is grieved when he learns she is to wed another. The girl is threatened to be made victim of a scandal by a banker unless she marries. Everything depends upon some letters, forgeries, in a safe, which the cracksman, using his old cleverness, obtains, thus clearing up the whole situation.

Classification—Human interest drama, involving the finer qualities of a reformed crook, tinged with a love story.

Production Highlights — Natural settings, showing interior of San Gabriel Mission of California. The dramatic climax. Good direction and photography.

Exploitation Angles—A small safe with a lobby display of suitable cut-outs. Get the police department to lend you a collection of crook tools and weapons.

Drawing Power—Should go over well in either the large or small houses as it is confined to no certain type of audiences.

"Crashing Thru"

F. B. O.—6500 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HARRY CAREY has another of his typical offerings in "Crashing Thru," which, while it presents nothing new in westerns, packs sufficient action and color and atmosphere to please most any patron—even of the hard-boiled variety. The plot revolves around considerable cattle rustling and all the familiar characters are in their proper places. But it keeps moving and as it moves one is able to drink in as good a background of exceptional scenery as has ever adorned a western. The title is rather compelling and Carey still has a firm hold upon his following.

Here we find him in several conflicts one of which has to do with romance. The half-breed Indian girl, with the aid of a few desperadoes, plots to embarrass him because he refuses to fall for her charms. With his cattle stolen he is unable to meet a note owed to the richest man in the community. The tale becomes complicated when the wealthy rancher is murdered and suspicion is cast upon the hero. But the latter has entered a partnership with the villain's father and in due time the young desperado becomes conscience-stricken and confesses. Meanwhile a humorous note is injected when it is shown that the hero has carried on a romance with a girl via a matrimonial agency. The girl arrives with her mother which provides the occasion for the invalid partner, who had become crippled in rescuing his friend in the forepart of the story, to look romantically upon the latter. Then it's up to the hero and the girl to look for a parson.

The picture doesn't stand still a moment. One might say that it carries too much action for the purposes of the plot. It should have presented more intimate scenes of character acting and detail. Yet it is a satisfactory western and interpreted by a competent cast that includes Vola Vale, Myrtle Stedman, Cullen Landis, Winifred Bryson, Joseph Harris, Charles LeMoyne and Donald MacDonald.

The Cast

Blake ..... Harry Carey
Cons ..... Cullen Landis
Celia ..... Myrtle Steadman
Diane ..... Vola Vale
Saunders ..... Chas. LeMoyne
Gracia ..... Winifred Bryson
Holmes ..... Jos. Harris
Allison ..... Donald MacDonald

By Elizabeth Dejeans. Scenario by Beatrice Van. Directed by Val Paul. Photographed by William Thornley and Robt. De Gerasse. Produced by F. B. O.

The Story—Treats of cattle rustling with the hero a rancher who wins the enmity of half-breed Indian girl because he does not fall for her charms. With the aid of several desperadoes she succeeds in rustling the cattle away from the rich rancher. He is killed but the hero proves his innocence when the villain reforms. The hero meets the girl with whom he has corresponded. And thus to the romance and happiness.

Classification—Western melodrama, featuring cattle rustling and romance.

Production Highlights — The exceptional backgrounds. The sincere work of Carey and the others in the cast. The fairly good action.

Exploitation Angles—Star is still able to draw them in. Feature him in a typical western. Play up title and use it for a teaser campaign.

Drawing Power—Good for any program or neighborhood house. Also suitable for second class first run theatres.

TRADE MARK

"The Queen of Sin"

Ben Blumenthal-State Rights—Eight Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

AN Austrian importation is "The Queen of Sin," with which is interwoven "The Spectacle of Sodom and Gomorrah," and according to the program announcement has been cut from eighteen reels to eight to meet the view of American minds and which elaborates upon the vital statistics of its production—such as the mention of 200,000 costumes, 13,000 wigs, 38,000 pairs of foot coverings, 700 rugs of medieval weave, 500 pairs of curtains which were assembled, manufactured or rented for the picture. And after absorbing these figures, one naturally sits back, anticipating a gigantic spectacle.

Unfortunately the spectacular side of the picture is burdened with a poorly constructed story which features one of the oldest formulas of the screen—that of the mercenary mother who marries her daughter off to the highest bidder, thus bringing tragedy into her life. The motivation is unsound, for there is no indication that the girl is a vampire in the introductory shots—when she indulges in romantic expression with her lover, a poor and humble artist. The moment that she is married she plots extreme vengeance. She will strike the multi-millionaire spouse through his son.

The story, having been edited and re-titled, loses its force and logic. And many of its captions miss the mark being burdened, as they are, with high-sounding morals and dramatic values which do not belong. The story would have registered better had it been intrusted to skillful interpretation. Lucy Doraine in the title role is not able to suggest any of the emotions which she is called upon to express. Later, however, as the queen of the ancient capitals which were destroyed because of their sin, she is much more in character—disguised as she is in regal splendor and not called upon to register anything but passion.

The spectacular scenes are not introduced until the second half of the feature—and they do much to compensate for the modern story and its bad interpretation. Many of the sets are positively stupendous in design and one catches the spiritual note as the cities fall. A vast horde of extras are employed and seeing them run for their lives as the temples and columns topple over and fire and brimstone descending upon them, one is carried along in quite a fervor of excitement. Doubtless fear of censorship made the modern story incoherent. Taking ten reels out of a picture might almost indicate disaster for it.

The Cast

Jackson Harber.....George Reimers
Edward Harber / A Goldsmith from Galilea.....Walter Slezak
Miss Mary Conway / The Wife of Lot / The Queen of Sin.....Lucy Doraine
Mrs. Agathe Conway, her mother.....Erika Wagner
A Priest Tutor at Cambridge / The Unknown Wanderer.....Michael Varkonyi
Harry Lighton, a Sculptor / Lot.....Kurt Ehrle

The Story—Treats of girl who is sold by her mother to highest bidder, thus causing her lover to attempt suicide. The girl plots vengeance against her rich husband, striking him through his son. But in a dream she discovers a conscience. The story carries a parallel with the ancient downfall of Sodom and Gomorrah.

Classification—Modern triangle based upon daughter-sold-to-highest-bidder theme. Linked up with spectacle of downfall of Sodom and Gomorrah of Biblical history.

Production Highlights — The spectacular scenes of the ancient story. The impressive sets, most of which are massive and colorful.

Exploitation Angles — Play up its spectacular appeal. Use title for a teaser campaign.

Drawing Power—The spectacular side of picture will appeal to any crowd.

"Suzanna"

Allied Producers and Distributors—6500 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

MACK SENNETT wrote this one as well as supervising the production. Naturally, anyone familiar with the producer's comedy values might wonder if he is not having some fun on an old theme. The story is a variation of the ancient and accepted locket formula. The child who grows up a social outcast is not identified through the gold or brass emblem but through an obliging servant coming forward and relieving himself of the secret that the babies were exchanged at birth. There it is in a nutshell.

Sennett tells his story against a Spanish setting in the early days of California and tells it well, notwithstanding its familiarity. You may know what is coming far in advance, but he gives it enough Spanish sauce and paprika to interest most anyone not too far advanced in the technique of the screen.

Mabel Normand has the title role and while she doesn't suggest a Spanish peon or one of the F. F. V.'s of early California aside from her picturesque attire she does manage to inject enough of her distinctive comedy touches to make it an acceptable drawing. To be frank it is the humor which provides the saving grace of this picture the story of which features two Spanish dons who have pledged their son and daughter to one another. But the youth rebels and falls in love with the lowly peon who works on his father's ranch. And so to the conflict when a toreador, played with adequate color by Leon Bary, attempts to win the picturesque peon for himself.

Meanwhile the spectator is being treated to some typically Spanish customs—such as the fiesta, the bull-fight (taken from a news strip) and the courtship via the guitar. The characters are dressed accordingly. The stage is all set for the wedding of the toreador and the don's daughter. Mind you the peon has learned that she is of noble birth, but the conventions of the Noble Sacrifice must be obeyed. The rebellious son steals the girl from the altar and carries her away on horseback. Which introduces a vivid thrill when the two rivals fight on the edge of a cliff. Not so much in its story, but produced with a typically Sennett touch. George Nichols doesn't have much opportunity to act as one of the dons.

The Cast

Suzanna.....Mabel Normand
Don Fernando.....George Nichols
Ramon, his son.....Walter McGrail
Dona Isabella, his wife.....Evelyn Sherman
Pancho, the Toreador.....Leon Bary
Don Diego.....Eric Mayne
Dolores, his daughter.....Winifred Bryson
Ruiz.....Carl Stockdale
Alvarez.....Lon Poff
Miguel, his son.....George Cooper
Indian Minnie.....Herself
Black Hawk.....Himself

By Mack Sennett. Directed by F. Richard Jones. Produced by Mack Sennett. Released by Allied Producers and Distributors.

The Story—Treats of days of Spanish colonization in California. Suzanna is the daughter of Spanish don but is ignorant of fact that she was kidnapped during infancy and reared as peon on ranch of Don Fernando. The latter's son is pledged to the daughter of Don Diego, but he rebels and kidnaps Suzanna. Her identity is established and the other girl weds the toreador.

Classification—Romantic comedy-drama carrying theme of girl kidnapped in infancy and brought up as servant.

Production Highlights—The atmosphere and color. The settings. The good work by George Nichols. The thrill when rivals fight on edge of cliff.

Exploitation Angles—Give picture a Spanish setting in prologue, featuring dancers and musicians. Play up cast. Bill it as a Mack Sennett production.

Drawing Power—Should draw in most any house.

"Souls for Sale"

Hughes-Goldwyn—7864 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

YOU might call this, Rupert Hughes' latest, a feminine "Merton of the Movies"—you might call it a hodge-podge of every conceivable camera trick which goes into the composition of a picture—and after you are through trying to define or describe it, you will find yourself up a tree. It defies being called anything but a tricky novelty—a take-off one moment of how photoplays are made, and shifting into a sort of grotesque eternal triangle.

Hughes is surely the magician here—and he pulls the tricks out of his hat or rather his megaphone with all the easy hokum of a Hermann. It is our opinion that he directed this picture with his tongue in his cheek for back of it all is a satirical thrust aimed at heavy villainy as it is exposed in too many of our sexational (to quote the author) dramas. He never becomes intimate. His scenes are too crowded for such a touch. And though he points a moral at the end, it seems unconvincing in view of the maze of sequences in which the characters are piloted before the climax.

Mr. Hughes starts off by showing a runaway bride who, after leaving her husband in a Pullman, accidentally meets a picture company making a "sheik" story in the California desert. What follows is her rise to stardom, punctuated with her spouse's adventures in evading the law. He is painted as a criminal whose profession is matrimony. He marries his wives, insures their lives, then kills them off. And the couple do not meet again until the climax.

Meanwhile Hughes is kidding the picture people, kidding himself, kidding the public, kidding the idol-worshippers who write to the stars, and having a lot of fun out of it. He takes us on various sets, introduces us to a galaxy of celebrities during their luncheon hour and follows through with some humorous thrusts aimed at the society drama and a few other formulas, not forgetting the circus story which he employs to furnish a highly melodramatic climax. A real storm washes out the artificial storm and lightning strikes the big top, setting fire to it. The murderous husband expiates his crimes by saving his runaway bride from the wind machine. The huge propeller strikes him and he lives just long enough to seek forgiveness and receive it. There is so much in this picture that it resembles a three-ring circus. Consequently the story is often lost. It could stand editing, thus making the scenes more compact. The camera work is splendid and there are some exceptional shots of the desert—as well as some intimate scenes of studio atmosphere.

The Cast

Remember Steddon.....Eleanor Boardman
Robina Teele.....Mae Busch
Leva Lemaire.....Barbara Le Marr
Frank Claymore.....Richard Dix
Tom Holby.....Frank Mayo
Owen Scudder.....Lew Cody

And twenty-eight other players. Written, adapted and directed by Rubert Hughes. Produced by Goldwyn.

The Story—Girl, a newly-wed, has intuition that husband is a sinner, so runs away and stumbles upon moving picture company taking scenes in the desert. She is given encouragement and soon rises to the top. Her husband returns after a colorful career in crime to save her from death.

Classification — Humorous and melodramatic novelty of picture life in Hollywood.

Production Highlights — The comedy moments. The titles. The exceptional photography. The good work by Lew Cody. The climax showing the burning of the circus tent.

Exploitation Angles—Feature the author and director, placing stress upon efforts towards originality. Make a play upon little and feature the large cast. Play up the Hollywood atmosphere.

Drawing Power — Should go big anywhere.

In and Out of the Butte Branch-Offices : :

CONGRATULATIONS are in order over the high efficiency of the Universal manager of the Butte office, Jack W. Rue, who, since coming here last September, has increased the business for his company 140 per cent. Before coming to Butte to take the executive office for the Universal Exchange, Mr. Rue was the special representative for "Foolish Wives," the exploiting of which won new laurels for him. Formerly he was salesmanager in the Denver district. Butte has had several exchange managers, and it is safe to say that never has there been a more popular or more efficient executive in the Butte department. There are three Universal salesmen in the field most of the time, and at all times the key cities are made by Mr. Rue. Mr. Rue has just returned from Great Falls, where he booked "Flame of Life," "Driven" and Baby Peggy comedies to Mr. William Steege, Manager of the Liberty theatre there.

P. C. Hurst, formerly owner of the Rialto theatre at Bozeman, has replaced H. McLaren, as publicity director for Universal in the Butte and Spokane territories.

Anaconda ministers of the Gospel who have complained because their parishoners fail to arrive at services on time will now have the solace of knowing they are not the only ones who suffer dire punishment for such procrastination. Certain of the movie fans are standing up on their toes in righteous indignation. Nothing, they say, spoils a picture show so much as a continuous ingress and egress of patrons during a performance. They claim that it has reached a stage where a spectator may be sure of viewing a film in peace only after every seat in the house has been filled and the overflow is standing ten deep in the rear. Even then there remains the possibility that some inconsiderate wretch may decide to scramble out from the very center of the row because the picture has just reached the stage where he happened to enter. Or possibly some lady has to stand up in front of her seat, powder her nose, adjust her hat and slowly put on her wrap and gloves, and then calmly move to the aisle all the while there is the picture moving on to dramatic climaxes. Nothing quite so exasperating!

Miss May Robson, the disinguished actress, was the guest of Marle Davis, General Manager of the Ansonia Theatre Amusement Company, at a pre-view of the film production, "Down to the Sea in Ships," and also a vaudeville act that was given as a try-out. The pre-view was directly after her engagement closed at the Broadway. Butte is always glad to welcome Miss Robson and this visit was no exception for she was accorded one of the most enthusiastic ovations ever given an actress in Butte.

O. W. Herwig is registered at the Grand Hotel. He is in Butte at the Pathe Office auditing the books for that exchange. Mr. Herwig is registered from the Pathe office, San Francisco.

B. T. Cale, formerly with the First National, has gone back to the Pathe organization as salesman for the Denver territory. He has been one of the live wire salesmen in the Montana district, identified with the Pathe interests and later accepted a similar position with the First National.

Jack Sullivan is covering the key cities of the state representing the Fox interests. Mr. Sullivan is branch-manager of the Fox corporation of this city.

Manager M. J. Dunn, of Greater Features, is touring the state for his corporation. Mr. Dunn has his main office at Salt Lake City, but is in Butte every few weeks to look after the branch office.

Harry Sigmund, recently identified with the First National in Seattle as a salesman, is now at home in Butte as the chief executive of the Butte Branch office of the Associated First National.

Milwaukee Briefs and Film Row Personals

W. K. LENDON, general service manager for Universal, has been in the city a number of days helping with the plans for Universal's quarters in the New Film Exchange on Wells Street, to which they will move April 1. Universal plans to have new fixtures and furniture, and will have one of the most up-to-the-minute exchange offices anywhere, according to George Levine, local manager.

Sam Miller has been added to the local Universal staff and will have charge of handling Universal attractions in this territory.

M. Edwards, who was formerly with Goldwyn at Buffalo, is now working out of the Milwaukee office, and has charge of western Wisconsin. Jack Hurschman has been transferred from the Chicago office and will represent Goldwyn in the northern part of the state.

Goldwyn's Milwaukee office, of which Sam Shurman is manager, in the two months since it was opened, has made such strides that additional stenographers and inspectors have been required.

The Milwaukee Sentinel recently received recognition from Julius Stern, of the Century Film Company, for the splendid handling of the Baby Peggy contest in Milwaukee, just previous to the showing of "Peg of the Movies," in which Peggy Montgomery starred. Said Mr. Stern:

"May we have the privilege of expressing our delight and pleasure in the manner your Baby Peggy contest was conducted? We wish to advise you that the entire contest was run in such an able manner that it eclipses any yet run throughout the country. Further, we believe your choice of the starlet, Harriet Ahrendt, is excellent, and we join in commending your entire staff behind this contest on the efficient and perfect way it was handled."

In conjunction with Henry Walthall's visit in person to the Palace theatre in a playlet, the week of March 12, Tom Norman of Fox screened Walthall's last picture. "The Face On the Bar-room Floor," which Mr. Walthall has not as yet seen. The screening was made in the Merrill theatre and a crowd of movie folk attended. After the screening, Mr. Norman arranged a small banquet to newspapermen to introduce Mr. Walthall. Mary Charleson, Walthall's wife, a favorite in Milwaukee, accompanied him.

Joe Brandt of C. B. C. was in Milwaukee last week on his way to the coast.

Local exchange managers report that Milwaukee's seven days of blizzard, the week of March 12, seriously hampered the efficiency of their service departments, in making shipments out of the city. Three severe snow storms in seven days held up train traffic, and resulted in many dark houses throughout the state. Not a train left here March 18 and 19 for the northern part of the state.

The new radio motion picture, "The Wizardry of Wireless," will be shown in Milwaukee April 5 for the benefit of radio fans, it was announced by L. S. Baird, manager of the Milwaukee Amateur's Radio Club. The picture is described as a two-reeler dealing with the history of distance communication, and by the aid of animated drawings, the why and wherefores of radio are explained in a clear and understandable manner.

J. H. Silliman, owner of the Downer, Murray, Miramar, and Astor theatres, has added the Jackson to his chain.

Tom Furness, a Hancock, Mich., exhibitor, and E. Hoefer, Sheboygan, owner of the new Rex theatre, were in the city last week.

The Appollo theatre, Teutonia Avenue, has changed hands. M. Mark Miller is the new owner.

The ban placed on children under 12, prohibiting their attendance at motion picture theatres, has considerably upset neighborhood house attendance. The Milwaukee Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, co-operating with the Health Department, asked individual managers to enforce the restriction, owing to the severe scarlet fever epidemic among school children.

Booth arranged by J. C. DeWalt, branch manager for Hodkinson at Oklahoma City, during the state convention of exhibitors.

Toronto and East Canada Branch-Office Notes

MRS. MARY E. GODARD, 87 MacDonnell Avenue, Toronto, known as "The Mother of Toronto," and a quaint old lady, passed away on March 22 from a heart attack. Her passing caused much regret among local theatre-goers. The deceased had officiated at the opening of various moving picture theatres, being the first one to buy a ticket at a number of the Allen theatres. She was also the hostess at the Allen down-town house when Mary Carr, the actress, was making personal appearances in connection with the presentation of "Over the Hill." Mrs. Godard had lived in Toronto for fifty years and had conducted a grocery in the section of the city where Mary Pickford and the other Pickfords were born and lived.

The Capitol theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, one of the leading houses of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, has undergone considerable change in the installation of a full-size stage, this replacing the prologue stage facilities. The new stage was used for the first time in the presentation of a novel specialty along with "Adam's Rib" during the week of March 19.

St. John, N. B., now has a fine large film exchange building in the Marr Building, 158-162 Union Street, and the city, thereby, joins the list of important key cities of the Dominion which boast extensive film centers, these including Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

Canadian Universal Films, Limited, has just moved its St. John offices from Prince William and Union Streets to the Marr Building. Other distributing companies having their exchange headquarters for the Maritime Provinces in the same structure include the Fox Film Corporation and the Associated First National.

Manager Arthur Bugg, proprietor of the Model theatre, Midland, Ontario, and the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Limited, Toronto, through C. H. Weeks, exchange manager, have been engaging in a controversy which finally found its way into Midland's newspaper, the Midland Free Press. The Toronto exchange circularized every resident in Midland to point out that all Paramount releases were not being shown in Midland. This letter eventually found its way into the Midland paper along with a reply by Mr. Bugg in which he listed various Paramount pictures which he had screened locally and he also gave a lengthy list of productions of various other companies which he had offered. Mr. Bugg pointed out that he was one of the few remaining independent exhibitors of Ontario and that he intended to reserve the right to book pictures on the open market.

The result was that the Model theatre obtained considerable space in the reading columns of the paper and the argument got everybody talking.

The proposed theatre ta of 50 cents a seat per year by the Winnipeg, Manitoba, City Council, has been shelved for a year, owing to the stubborn opposition of the theatre managers. It was pointed out that Winnipeg exhibitors already gave one-twentieth of their gross revenue to the Municipality of Winnipeg or the Provincial Government of Manitoba in taxes.

In and Out of the San Francisco Branches

MONTE BLUE, handsome six-foot four star of Warner Brothers' productions, arrived in San Francisco and quickly got acquainted with local exchanges and managers. The actor has completed "Brass" and "Main Street" for Warner Brothers and will commence work in three or four weeks.

As guests of H. L. Rothchild, Fred Stone and the members of the "Tip Top" company, together with local theatrical folks enjoyed a special screening of H. A. Snow's film, "Hunting Big Game in Africa" at the Portola. Among those who attended the presentation were those from the Columbia, Alcazar, Orpheum, Golden Gate, Rivoli, Casino, Hoppe-drome and others.

Completion of one of the largest theatre sales in San Francisco and the Far West in recent years was recently announced when Superior Judge E. P. Shortall gave formal legal sanction to the transfer for $1,675, of 90% of the stock of the firm of Turner & Dehnken to the West Coast, Inc. The theatres cover motion picture houses in San Francisco, Oakland, Richmond and six other cities. Leading figures in the purchasing Company are: A. Ramish, A. L. Gore and M. Gore and Sol Lesser and J. M. Schenck.

A theatrical deal has just been consummated whereby the entire holdings of Kahn and Greenfield, operating a chain of six big motion picture houses, pass into the hands of Louis R. Greenfield. The latter has bought up the interests of his late partner, L. L. Kahn, and all other shareholders.

The deal is one of the largest motion picture deals ever transacted in this section, representing about $1,000,000. The actual cash paid when the deal was made was $250,000. J. E. Levin has retired from the position of managing director of the Fillmore in order to devote his entire time to real estate holdings and the management is now in the hands of Greenfield, M. S. Vidaver, with Citron as executive director.

Lionel H. Keene, managing-director of Loew's-Warfield's big motion picture house and director of Lowe's interests in the far West, is feeling proud of the crowds that are packing the house. Dorothy Jordon, the "Carmen" of the United States, received hundreds of bouquets of flowers. A couple of them stated: "This bouquet is also for Mr. Keene, for he directs everything so keenly."

News Notes and Trade Bulletins from Florida

A MEMORY music contest, with the Women's Clubs backing it up, is being conducted in Tampa. All of the theatres are playing memory music, and slides are shown each show announcing the special musical numbers for that show.

Eustis now enters the field as a production center, with the establishment there of the Seminole Films, Inc. With their buildings all completed, the company started to work last Wednesday on their initial production, which will be called "Bacchus." The corporation will specialize on dramas of an educational character, on the order of their first production, which is the story of the beloved Greek god. Dr. Banks is the director-general of the corporation.

The Sunrise theatre, Fort Pierce, are figuring on enlarging. The plans call for quite a little additional space. The building will be done during the summer, so as to be ready for the opening of the fall season.

Harry Griffin, and his charming wife, of St. Petersburg, were visitors on Tampa's Rialto this week. Mr. Griffin is resident manager in St. Petersburg for the Southern Enterprises, besides having a farm, with chickens, a cow, running water and radio.

G. E. White, who operates the theatres in Mulberry and Dade City, has a new one up his sleeve. He won't tell just where, at this time, but he isn't looking up equipment for nothing, so that's that.

Jack Frost, manager of the Strand, Tampa, put on the D. W. Griffith Feature, "One Exciting Night," for a six day run, at 50c prices. This means just double the regular admission price and about the same on the length of the run, but Jack put it over with some clever advertising.

Trade Bulletins from the Carolina Territory

PERCY W. WELLS, of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, Wilmington, N. C., has just returned home from a business trip in connection with one of the various corporations with which he is identified.

James M. Sulke, now of New York City, but formerly owner and proprietor of the Grand and Victoria theatres, Wilmington, N. C., before they were taken over by the Howard-Wells interests, is spending several days in the Carolina seaport on business.

The many friends in Wilmington, N. C., his home townfi of Marx S. Nathan, for several years identified with the various distributing concerns sponsored by Fred B. Warren, and for some time New York exchange manager for Associated Producers, were greatly interested to learn during the past week that Nathan, in association with his brother, had "struck it rich" in oil in Arkansas, having brought in a gusher in a new virgin territory developed by themselves. Marx was in Wilmington en route to the newly discovered oil fields.

John F. Carroll, who has managed the new Imperial theatre, Asheville, N. C., since its first opening, has left that position to accept one with the Victory and Bonita theatres, Tampa, Florida, in a managerial capacity. These theatres are being operated by C. D. Cooley.

Joe Adams, of the Fairfax, Miami, Florida, is vacationing in Asheville, N. C. He reports vaudeville for three days a week is registering a great hit in his theatre.

Phelps Sasseen, of the Lyric, Ensley, S. C., has left the theatre in charge of Mrs. Sasseen and has accepted a traveling position with the Al Lichtman Corporation.

The young son of Ralph H. DeBruler, manager of the Broadway, Charlotte, will have active charge of Craver's new Broadway just opened at Columbia, S. C. Young DeBruler is reported to be a "chip off the old block," and will undoubtedly develop into just as keen a showman as Ralph Sr.

Buffalo Briefs and Western New York News

GEORGE E. WILLIAMS is remaining at the Linden theatre temporarily as manager. The house has been sold by Nelson T. Barrett to William Kuzon of Buffalo. Mr. Williams, who is president of the Western New York Motion Picture Theatre Owners, Inc., was given a farewell party by business associates in the vicinity of theatre, in Jefferson Hall. The operating staff will remain the same under the new proprietorship. Mr. Williams expects to make a new connection soon.

A. G. McCallum, who for almost a decade managed the old Buffalo Golden Palace on Main Street, is the new manager of Fay's theatre in Rochester, succeeding John J. O'Neill, who has been appointed house manager at the Eastman.

Victor A. Warren, manager of the Strand theatre in Messina, N. Y., postcards Henry W. Kahn, Metro exchange manager in Buffalo, that he is having the time of his life, touring in Europe.

A. W. Root, formerly manager of the Palace theatre in Olean, N. Y., has returned from Kalamazoo, Mich., to this neck of the woods and is seeking to get back into the exhibition game.

Fred M. Schafer, managing director of the Lafayette Square, made a trip to New York city last week to line up some of the biggest attractions in the theatre world for Buffalo this spring and summer. Going to keep them coming, says Fred. The Lafayette packed them in this week with Pola Negri in "Mad Love." Billed Pola as the future Mrs. Charlie Chaplin. Bob Finlay, who has appeared in screen comedies with Turpin, Murray, Conklin et al, received an enthusiastic reception at the Lafayette last week in his Cinema Girls Revue offering.

Manager Vincent McFaul is making preparations to handle the biggest crowds in the history of Shea's Hippodrome when "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" opens at the Hipp, Sunday, April 1, for a indefinite run.

O. T. Schroeppel

Folks, meet O. T. Schroeppel, one of the pioneers of the motion picture business in Western New York, a man who has gone "through the mill" in both the exchange and exhibiting end of the game and who is now manager of the Strand and Andrews theatres in Salamanca, N. Y., where he went after successfully managing the Rivoli in Fairport, N. Y. Mr. Schroeppel is enthusiastic over the prospects of Associated Theatres, Inc., who control the Strand and Andrews and a string of houses through this end of the territory. Mr. Schroeppel is giving his patrons "the Goods," having booked such attractions as "Adam's Rib," "Knighthood," and other equally big features. Mr. Schroeppel has a wide acquaintance in the business and has won many friends during his long connection with Universal, Realart, Hodkinson and other Buffalo exchanges. We expect to see O. T. at the top of things someday soon.

Nothing doing on Sunday motion picture shows said the voters in Sidney, N. Y., at the election last week, when the proposition was defeated by an overwhelming vote.

The Rex theatre in Geneseo, N. Y., is being completely remodeled and redecorated and will be reopened about April 15 under the management of Frank Aprile. On April 1 the Castile theatre in Olcott Beach will be opened by J. S. Bachman, and on the same date the Arcadia in Newfane will close.

Ross A. McVoy has appointed H. E. Jenner manager of the Fisher theatre in Seneca Falls, N. Y., succeeding Clifford G. Groat, who has resigned. Mr. Jenner was formerly associated with Mr. McVoy at the Glen theatre in Watkins Glen, N. Y.

Al Becker of the Becker Theatre Supply Company of Buffalo is knocking 'em for a row of lonesome pines. Al is installing Simplex machines all over this neck of the woods. Two at the Lumberg, Niagara Falls; two at the Rex, Geneseo; two Sunlight arc lamps in Shea's Court street theatre, etc., etc. No wonder this fellah always wears a smile and has a bulging pocketbook.

The Elk theatre in the famous "First Ward" was robbed one evening last week, but the yeggs only got something like five bones. Earlier in the week, the playful boys entered the Seneca theatre, formerly the Red Jacket, where they also got a small sum.

Johnson City, N. Y., officials are determined to stop the cake eaters from getting too playful in the picture houses of the Southern Tier town. A youth who was arrested last week received only a small fine for creating a disturbance in the Endwell theatre, but hereafter, says the justice of the peace, it will be nothing less than the little room with the iron bars on the window.

Maurice Cohen of Warner Brothers tells this one. Said an exhibitor was arrested downstate last week for having his scale doctored. What do you mean, scale doctored, asked J. H. Michael, manager of the Regent. Why, he bought his film by the pound, replied Maurice as he left hurriedly. Mr. Cohen also claimed that he met up with an exhibitor last week who wanted to buy his feature, comedy and news reel for $11.75, holding out the hope that when business picked up he'd jump the price to $12.

The second week at the Criterion theatre finds business a trifle better, but Holy Week, of course, is keeping receipts down. Next week will be the real test of the new policy under the Strand management.

Some class to the girls in the Paramount inspection department. Had a private show one night last week, when "Vic," the famous projection expert, screened "Bella Donna," in the screening room for their entertainment.

Buffalo film men are planning a benefit at the Elmwood theatre for the widow of Bobby Matson, veteran exchange salesman, who died recently following an extended illness.

Albany Briefs and Eastern New York Items

FINDING that decreasing prices of admission did not pan out as well as expected towards stimulating business, both the State in Schenectady, N. Y., and the Barcli, of the same city, have now jumped their prices. When the State was opened in December, it represented a construction expense of about $500,000. The general admission was placed at forty cents. Business was slow in coming. Prices dropped to twenty-five cents, but they have now gone back to thirty-five cents for the orchestra, twenty-five cents for the balcony, and fifty cents for the loges. At the Barcli, J. J. Walker, owner of the house, found that twenty-two cents was too low a figure for first-runs, and so he has raised his price to twenty-five cents.

Robert Harris has come to Albany from Buffalo, and will handle the Al Lichtman exchange here. He was one time in the employ of Pathe.

Having won a handsome bonus, Bert A. Gibbons, managing Vitagraph's exchange in Albany, entertained the office force of seventeen at a chicken dinner and dance a few nights ago.

The Strand, of Newburgh, N. Y., recently acquired by W. W. Berinstein, opened last week with "Manslaughter." It will be handled by Harry Berinstein, formerly of the Palace, in Troy.

With business breaking well, Frank Bruner, managing the Pathe exchange in Albany, has bought a touring car. Later on, he expects to take up golf.

A new house to be erected in Little Falls, N. Y., by W. W. Berinstein will get under way about April 15. It will cost $150,000 and seat 1,400 persons.

It is said that Lew Fisher, who now owns three houses in eastern New York, is dickering for a theatre at Fair Haven, Vt.

The Astor, remodeled from the Majestic, in Troy, N. Y., will open on March 31. The New Rose of the same city, a block away, will also open the same day.

Vitagraph, working out of Albany, has just named L. B. Rozell, of Buffalo, to cover the northern territory.

Paul Alberts, of the Albany, in Schenectady, N. Y., asserted recently that of all the pictures shown this winter "The Hottentot" made most real money for him. It was heavily exploited, and the fact that Saratoga is but a few miles away, and everybody plays the races during August, probably helped out.

A. J. Leonard, of Syracuse, formerly with the National Screen Service, has replaced E. F. Johnson in the Pathe exchange in Albany.

Following an illness of several days, Edward Lewin, salesman for the First National out of Albany, has returned to his territory.

The State theatre, in Schenectady, N. Y., put on a style show last week, with one of the department stores in that city, and made money. "Dr. Jack" was shown along with the models.

A change of organists will be made at the Barcli, in Schenectady, during the next two or three weeks.

Ben Stern, who had been acting as house manager of the Empire in Albany, until that house closed, has gone in a similar capacity with the State in Schenectady, succeeding Herman Vineburg, who has been transferred to the Troy, the latest of the Mark Strand theatres.

Harry Buxbaum, of New York, district manager for Famous Players, was in Albany one day last week. George Balsdon, Sr., assistant general manager for Vitagraph, is also in town for a conference with the State Conservation Commission in an effort to tie up "Ninety and Nine."

"The Pilgrim" has been chosen by William Shirley, manager of the Strand, in Schenectady, N. Y., for Easter Sunday and the six following days. At the State "The Christian" will be featured Easter Sunday.

J. J. Walker, of the Barcli, in Schenectady, is alternating "The Leather Pushers" and "Fighting Blood" each week, and making money by doing so.

Frank Bruner and Marvin Kempner, two of the best known exchange managers in Albany, N. Y., made a four days' swing through northern New York the past week, and in spite of the fact that they are competitors booked much business and returned with a smile.

N. I. Filkins, of Merit, was in Albany a day or so this week, conferring with Miss Marie Wheeler, who has the distinction of being the only woman exchange manager in New York State, and who is incidentally proving herself a bang-up good saleswoman.

Exchanges report excellent bookings for June, July and August from the summer resort towns in the Adirondacks and Catskills. Some of these towns really make more money in the fall and spring than they do during the winter, although, of course, the banner months are in midsummer.

Picture Happenings in and About Cleveland

A PROMINENT local exchange manager recently made a trip through the territory. Upon his return to the city he was asked what type of motion picture theatre is making money, in his opinion. Is it the big downtown house that is getting the business, he was asked, or is it the first-run neighborhood houses, or is it a little of both? "It's the house that has the biggest picture that gets the business," this exchange manager, who does not want to be quoted, answered. "The public does not discriminate among theatres. It goes downtown just as readily as it stays uptown. Everything depends upon the picture. The public is shopping for entertainment. Extraneous matters, like location, convenience, luxury and so forth, do not count. The answer is, give the public good pictures and they'll come to the picture theatres."

J. A. Koerpel, division manager for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, is just back from New York, where he went to attend a two-day conference with F. J. Godsoll and all Goldwyn division managers. The object of the special meeting was to discuss autumn distribution plans. One of the chief events of the conference was a special screening of the Rupert Hughes story, "Souls for Sale." A messenger brought a print of the picture all the way from Los Angeles for the occasion, and immediately after the screening took the first train back to the coast. Koerpel says the representatives present were unanimous in their praise of the production.

F. G. Conklin, personal representative for Mr. Brulatour, spent several days in Cleveland last week.

Paul Mooney, in charge of the New York offices of Louis B. Mayer Productions, Inc., started out on a cross-country trip to visit all the exchanges handling Mayer-made productions. His trip was interrupted this week by an attack of ptomaine poisoning. Fortunately this all happened near Cleveland, so he stayed over in the old home town until he was sufficiently recovered to continue the journey.

Jack Mooney, representing the Oliver Morosco interests, has been spending the week in Cleveland.

Robert Cotton, manager of the Cleveland Fox exchange, succeeded in booking "The Town That Forgot God" for twenty-three simultaneous runs in Cleveland beginning Sunday, April 1st. It has been Mr. Cotton's policy right along to follow the first run with a bunch of simultaneous neighborhood runs. And it has been a satisfactory and highly remunerative policy.

T. J. Conners, assistant general salesmanager for Metro, arrived in Cleveland on Friday of this week in company with District Manager W. C. Bachmeyer. Conners and Bachmeyer have been making a tour of the central division exchanges, just to get acquainted with local people and local conditions. Conners left Saturday for New York.

Harry Charnas, president of the Standard Film Service Company of Cleveland, left Saturday of this week for New York and Atlantic City.

Lou Thompson, well known in the territory through his long association with Universal and later with Associated Exhibitors, is now with the M. Shea Booking Exchange, Inc. Thompson is handling special feature attractions used in connection with a feature picture program. Among his specialties are Eva Tanguay and a ten-piece band; Yvette, Mayme Gehrue and company, and Vera Sabina with the Spanish Marimba band. Eva Tanguay played at the James theatre, Columbus; Orpheum, Detroit, and Mozart theatre, Canton. Thompson booked the Hollywood Studio Orchestra in the Liberty theatre, Youngstown, for a week. Christie Deibel liked to see the way the crowd elbowed its way into the house, so he held the attraction over for a second week. This is right in line with the opinion expressed by many local prominent exhibitors that the public is looking for specialty numbers in addition to a feature picture to complete a program these days.

J. E. Beck, local Vitagraph exchange manager, got lonesome for the exhibitors this week. There have been so few around the Film Exchange Building that he boarded a suburban and went over the nearby territory to see the specimen in their native haunts.

C. L. Peavey, manager of Hodkinson's local office, has arranged for the state premier of "Down to the Sea in Ships" to take place at the Alhambra theatre, Toledo, on April 7th. The picture is booked for an indefinite run.

Sam Lichter, whose name has been identified with the Angella and Nemo theatres of Cleveland, has, according to the wise ones, leased the Grand and State theatres in Salem, O.

George Schenker of the Pearl theatre, South Lorain, made the local Fox exchange happy this week on a visit to Cleveland by signing up for the company's entire 1922-1923 product.

Joe Schagrin separated himself from the Park theatre, Youngstown, long enough to pay Cleveland a few days' visit last week.

Peter Rettig of the Mystic theatre, Galion, was observed signing a Goldwyn contract while in town the other day.

John Kessler, of the Alhambra theatre, Canton, paid Cleveland the compliment of a visit this week.

J. A. Bradshaw, manager of the Grand theatre, Crestline, signed his name in the visitors' book of the Film Exchange Building this week.

Dick Deutch, associated with Samuel R. Bradley in the Bradley Feature Pictures Company, was the leading man in a matrimonial event which took place in Cleveland last Sunday. Deutch was co-starred with Miss Lillian Green, also of Cleveland. Best wishes of friends and competitors are following them on the honeymoon trip in the East.

It is reported that John Pekras of the Dreamland theatre, Elyria, has purchased a half interest in the Grand theatre, also of Elyria. Pekras was in Cleveland the greater part of the week booking pictures for the entire summer. The reason for his haste is that he is sailing early in April for an extended trip to Europe.

Trade Jottings from Spokane and Vicinity

THE first change of program for the moving picture theatre de luxe of the crack Olympian transcontinental train of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway was made last on March 20th by R. C. Hudson, assistant manager of the local Universal exchange. The Olympian moving picture car, which is a dining car transformed in to a screen showhouse, started with the train at Seattle showing "Driven" and a Herbert Rawlinson picture, "The Prisoner."

At Spokane on the night of March 20th Mr. Hudson tossed the reels aboard for the show to continue until the train arrived at Butte, Mont., where another change was made. The films taken on at Spokane were "The Ghost Patrol," a Baby Peggy comedy and a one-reel Mirror film.

Sale of "Safety Last," the latest Harold Lloyd comedy, has been announced by C. M. Van Horn, local manager of the Pathe exchange, handling the Lloyd comedies.

According to reports from the Liberty the theatre managements, of which Ray Grombacher is the head, paid the highest price it has paid for a picture in Spokane, for "Safety Last," not excepting "Robin Hood." The picture will be shown early in April.

Lionel Dobell, well known in Los Angeles screen circles, associated with his father-in-law, D. E. Lakin, of the Lakin Milling Company of Spokane, has taken a lease on the studios at Minnehaha at the northeastern city limits. The studios are controlled by the Pan-American Film Corporation.

Dobell has started studio shooting on three pictures which he started here last summer without a studio. His organization is known as the North American Photoplayers, Inc., and holds the lease on the studios for a 22-month period. Dobell's films are comedies, child films and Indian pictures.

"Russia Through the Shadows," a film said to be backed by the Friends of Soviet Russia and which is to show at the Auditorium theatre here in April, is receiving little support locally. It is rumored that Maurice Smith, police commissioner, is not overly enthusiastic over the film.

The Nell Shipman Producing Company, which recently released "The Grub-Stake," is in no way opposed to organized labor, Bert Van Tuyle, manager, told delegates at the Central Labor Council meeting last week. In his talk Manager Van Tuyle assailed J. C. H. Reynolds, secretary-treasurer of the Nell Shipman Productions Syndicate, formed to finance the making of the film, "The Grub-Stake," and blamed him for the hostility of labor toward the picture after it appeared for exhibition.

"Our contract with the finance corporation was that it should provide the funds for making the picture up to a limit of $150,000," said Mr. Van Tuyle in addressing the labor delegates. "The finance syndicate was to pay the bills and receive 65 per cent of the net proceeds, and we were to receive 35 per cent. From the start we were handicapped by two things—Reynolds and the lack of money. Day after day we were tied up for lack of funds, until in all some 52 days were lost. Last July when the picture was nearing completion and the finance company refused to produce any more money we canceled the contract.

"Just as we were about to leave for Los Angeles, S. J. M. Smith and F. O. Berg came forward and agreed to advance $6,500 each of the $16,000 needed to finish the picture, and we put up the balance and at the same time agreed that the people who had previously invested their money in the production should be reimbursed. I will say that the motion picture studio at Minnehaha and the scenic advantages of this district are ideal for the production of pictures that should bear the name of Spokane."

"Dr. Jack," starring Harold Lloyd, returned to Spokane last week for a second run, and is making a phenomenal box office showing at the Rex theatre, according to reports. "Dr. Jack" showed to record houses at the Liberty theatre late last year. The Rex is a second run house with 450 seats, and the first day, with seven shows, brought in 3,100 admissions.

Late News Bulletins from the Des Moines Exchanges

Miss Stella Hughes, stenographer at the Universal Film exchange, Des Moines, is suffering from a sprained back received in a fall on Thursday of last week.

Mr. L. R. Brager, exploitation man at the Associated First National exchange, left Friday for New York, called on business by the New York office. It is probable Mr. Brager will locate in New York.

Edward Grossman, of New York, special representative for the Al Lichtman corporation, was in Des Moines last week conferring with A. H. Blank.

Harry M. Weinberg, manager of the Associated First National, will return Sunday, March 25, from a business trip to New York.

Portland Exchange Items and Oregon News

CHARLES FELDMAN, for three years manager of the Portland First National exchange, is now in charge of the Seattle office in a field with which he is thoroughly acquainted. Feldmar, one of the oldest exchange men in the Northwest in point of service, is succeeded in Portland by C. W. Koerner, formerly with Universal here and more recently manager of the Butte, Mont., First National offices.

L. W. Barclay, exploitation representative from the Goldwyn studios, Los Angeles, was in Portland last week putting over "Mad Love," the Pola Negri feature opening at the Liberty theatre March 24. Barclay succeeded in landing some valuable "Mad Love" features with the newspapers.

All pictures heretofore sold to the Columbia theatre, under Jensen & Von Herberg management, have been booked for exhibition at the People's theatre, where Charles E. Couch is house manager. The Columbia, now owned and operated by Universal Film Company, is booking independently.

First National has sold its "Mighty Lak' a Rose" to Manager Paul Noble of the Liberty theatre, where the production will be exhibited during Easter week.

George Jackson, for several years identified with Metro and Vitagraph, being manager of Portland and Seattle exchanges for the latter, is now road man out of Portland for Universal.

The Majectic theatre has booked for a return engagement "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," which the same theatre put over for four weeks first run.

A. C. Raleigh, best known as former manager of the Columbia theatre here, but more recently in charge of the three theatres in the Guthrie chain at Salem, is the new manager of John Hamrick's Blue Mouse theatre. He succeeded Fred W. Teufel, who was transferred to the Astoria Blue Mouse. Raleigh, also known as "Zack Moseby" has, under that name, titled many films shot in Portland, the most notable of which are the W. L. Finley nature pictures. He was for some time editor of Screenland magazine, the Jensen & Von Herberg house organ, and also editor of Screenland News, a local news weekly.

Mrs. Frances Knight and her ladies orchestra, has been engaged to replace Antone Stechele's orchestra in the Blue Mouse theatre pit. Mrs. Knight and her musicians are more than locally popular, for they spent 18 months recently on a tour of the nation. The innovation of an all-women's musical unit has proved a big attraction.

H. H. Brownell, Oregon cameraman for International News, is in Alaska as a cameraman for the American Lifeograph Company, shooting "The Great White Silence" under contract for the Alaska Motion Picture Company. The work will keep the company in the north for three months.

Mayo Methot, who grew up on Portland stages as a stock actress, has left the company at Malden, Mass., to join her husband, John La Mond, cameraman for Robert C. Bruce, who is, for the present, shooting a Lionel Barrymore picture at Banff, Canada, according to word to her family here.

Premium Production, Inc., whose huge studios at Beaverton, a Portland suburb, have been inactive since last fall, will resume production on a feature picture early this spring, according to Local capital controls Premium Productions, the announcement of President J. J. Fleming. which has sold its first three features to Independent Pictures of New York.

Wesley Barry arrived in Portland Saturday morning, March 24, and spent the week making personal appearances at the Rivoli theatre. Barry has been in the Northwest for six weeks, visiting the leading cities on his personal appearance tour. From Portland he returned to the studios to commence work on "David Copperfield."

Mrs. Frank Lacey, wife of the manager of the Majestic theatre, is recuperating after a serious operation at Good Samaritan hospital.

Gus A. Metzger, managing director of the Rivoli theatre, has engaged Francis Richter, Portland's blind pianist, for a special concert on Easter Sunday.

Trade Flashes from Washington Film Circles

THE Pictorial Photographers of America have placed on exhibition in the northwest gallery, Arts and Industries Building of the National Museum, a selection of 70 original prints, where they can be viewed daily until April 15. They are representative of the best work of the year in pictorial photography. Such scientific camera men and art experts as Dr. A. D. Chaffee, John Paul Edwards, G. W. Harting, Dr. Arnold Genthe, color photo and movie producer of distinction; Gertrude Kasebier and O. C. Reiter are on the committee.

Ralph de Foix Edmunds of the First National, Washington, is severing his connection and is going to the New York office.

The Saint Patrick Players of Washington, now producing the Passion Play at the President theatre here, announce the sale of film rights in their production to the Pathe Exchanges, Inc. Henry Duffy of the President Players, who arranged the billings of the Catholic Amateur Thespians, announces that he will tour the youthful Passion Players in nearby cities, so screen and stage will co-operate. Funds from this enterprise will go towards a new stadium for outdoor stage dramatic productions.

Holy Week, always an unknown quantity to theatre managers, brings out the announcement that following the week of George Arliss in "The Green Goddess" Manager Leavitt will close the Poli's for a week. Mr. Leavitt is well known in New York's Rialto and Film Row, as he gave up connection there last fall to represent the Shuberts and Erlangers in the operation of the Washington interests of the theatre trust.

A visitor from the Al Lichtmann offices in New York to Washington, Baltimore, Carolina and Atlanta offices of the Lichtmann exchanges was V. P. Whitaker, formerly of the Thomas Ince units, Culver City, and since last January with the Preferred Pictures.

J. A. Bachman and his staff in the local Educational exchanges moved into their new suite over the Fox and Vitagraph sections of the new Kirbey-Fox building on New Jersey and K street, N. W., Saturday, March 24. The new suite is decorated in Parisian gray enamel, simply and effectively, and is well illuminated by large east windows, supplementetd on dark days by numerous light fixtures. Mr. Bachman's suite is located at the rear of the office room with a door direct to the shipping and poster sections and film vaults.

Mr. Parker, formerly of Pathe and with Universal the past two months, has been promoted to be service manager in charge of the service department of the Universal here.

Virginia Exhibitors are to have their annual convention and get-together at Washington April 16 and 17, 1923. Eugene T. Crall, of Newport News, prominent Hampton Roads exhibitor and member of the executive committee of the Virginia Exhibitors' Association, who was here last Friday, negotiating with Washington hotel men for space for the convention sessions and accommodations for the two or three hundred Virginians and their wives.

The Washington Paramount Club is to hold its annual invitational Subscription Dance April 7 at the City Club. The original Peacock Orchestra, brought to New York by its Deauville reputation, is to provide the music. The home office announces the attendance of several stars, including Tom Meighan, and probably others. Officers of the Paramount organization from the New York home office are expected to be down to join in the after-Easter gaieties. Invitations have been extended to the leading exhibitors and exchange men of the territory, according to announcement of Exchange Manager Harry Hunter and Jerry Boucher of the Paramount Club's social committee.

Other new faces on film row are Miss Ruth Simpson of the First National, who now presides over the console of the P. B. X. phone board once operated by Mrs. Reed; and Miss Herbert of the secretarial staff at Vitagraph.

D. H. Thomas of Strand Features has just returned from a successful trip to Wilmington, Del. He reports great satisfaction by exhibitors in that part of the territory with his product.

John J. Payette, assistant manager of the Crandall theatres, returned from a three-day trip to Martinsburg, W. Va., and Cumberland, Md. The policy of these theatres, the Apollo and Strand at Martinsburg and the Strand at Cumberland, was determined for the rest of the current season.

F. J. Monroe, former film showman in the Washington field, is now classed as an inventor, coming capitalist and successful manufacturer. His invention, a parking and headlight device, is being manufactured and sold from his offices and plant here in Washington.

The annual stockholders' meeting of the Crandall Theater Company was held last Wednesday at the office of Harry M. Crandall, being followed immediately by the regular monthly meeting of the board of directors. Frank L. Wagner, Washington contractor and builder, was elected to the vacancy caused by the resignation of Secretary Barry Bulkeley. The remainder of the board was re-elected, including H. M. Crandall, Captain C. C. Calhoun, A. E. Beitzel, Peter E. Drury, Joseph P. Morgan, William Henry White, Nelson B. Bell, Augustus Gumpert, Fritz D. Hoffman, Howe Totten, and F. L. Wagner. Messrs. Crandall, Calhoun and Beitzel were re-elected, thereafter, as president, vice-president and secretary-treasurer, respectively.

Crandall's music department, headed by N. Mirskey, announces special Holy Week and Easter Week programs at the Crandall theatres. Messrs. Breeskin, Rhoades and Thompson will assist Mr. Mirskey of the Metropolitan in carrying out the program at the respective theatres, the Savoy, Apollo and Central.

Harry M. Crandall and Mrs. Locher are to entertain two tables of film stars and authors at the Authors' Breakfast, to be given in the large ballroom of the Willard Hotel by the League of American Pen Women, Saturday, April 21. Mrs. Locher of the League of Pen Women was appointed to its Motion Picture Committee by Mrs. Louise N. Geldert, the national president of the league.

Miss Rachel Sewell, a Marionette disciple of the Tony Sarg-Alice Owens school, was a guest of Mrs. Locher's recently, speaking on the revival of puppetry, the most ancient form of mechanical amusement enjoyed by man.

News of Boston and the New England States

APRIL 9 has been definitely named as the opening date for Locatelli's Ball Square theatre, Somerville, Mass. The house will seat 1,400, will cost more than $200,000 when completed, and is said to be the largest in Middlesex county. Albert J. Locatelli, the general manager, has planned some program for the first night, and in this connection is confronted with a large guest list, through a strange coincidence. You see, the entrance to the theatre is in Somerville, but the auditorium is in Medford, which furnishes abundant material for complications. He will invite the officials of both cities, among other guests. Mr. Locatelli is a son of the contractor who built the new house as well as his other Somerville theatre.

Manager Morris, of Loew's Orpheum theatre, Boston, made a single-reel picture of the activities of a troupe of lilliputians which feature his vaudeville bill, starting with their arrival March 26th, and including visits to the office of Mayor Curley at City Hall and of Gov. Cox at the State House. The reel was shown at Loew's State and Orpheum theatres the last three days of the week.

Frank A. Repetto has joined the ranks of Pathe in Boston, and has been assigned to the Boston territory. The starting gun went off March 19.

Negotiations are going on in Boston for the transfer of a property near Maverick Square, South Boston. They are planning to erect a magnificent motion picture theatre, costing around $250,000. The project is sponsored by a number of prominent men, one of them being Andrew Di Pietro, well known business man of the Italian colony. Mr. Di Pietro is also seeking a site for a motion picture theatre in the North End, Boston, an idea which to date has met with stiff opposition from residents of that district.

Independent Films, Inc., which is handling Arrow's "The Streets of New York" in the New England territory, secured the services of Edward Earle for personal appearances in Springfield, Lawrence and Lowell, where the picture opened the 19th of this month. Both Earle and the picture went over big everywhere, and the star had to play return engagements. He was good for long interviews and two-column cuts in many papers. In a Lawrence paper a page tie-up was effected, in which the missing word stunt was used. Fifty tickets went to the first twenty-five correct answers. The contest was announced on the front page of the paper with a two-column box.

Enthused over the array of talent which recently appeared for Loew's Orpheum Frolics, Mr. Douglas Flattery, director of the Loew theatres in Boston, has announced the forthcoming presentation of Gilbert & Sullivan's comic opera "Pinafore." The play will be produced at the State theatre some time next month, and applications have flooded the offices of Managers Morris and Brennan of the Orpheum and State respectively. Mr. Brennan said that a notable feature of the applicants was the number of professional men and women who want to try out their voices.

A six-reel picture taken on the Sir Douglas Mawson Antarctic Expedition in 1913 was shown to members of the New Bedford Yacht Club last week at their last chowder supper of the season. Many of them took part in "Down to the Sea in Ships," but they all declared that the movie of the frozen wastes matched it for thrills, outside of having remarkable scenery.

Word comes from Portland, Maine, that Donald B. MacMillan expects to get away early in June for his next Arctic trip. The schooner Bowdoin will take the adventurers as far as Etah in Greenland for a series of educational motion pictures he said in a letter to George F. Cary, of Portland, treasurer of the MacMillan Arctic Association. MacMillan is now in Michigan and will return to New England next month.

Stars of the silver screen, including Bebe Daniels, Dorothy Dalton, Agnes Ayres, and Edward Earl, have signified their intention of being present in the Auditorium, Springfield, Mass., April 18, when, under the auspices of the Theatrical Stage Employes and Motion Picture Operators' Union, Local 186, the movie ball and concert will blaze forth. John M. Gaielee and E. B. Webber, chairman general, and chairman of the entertainment committee, respectively, were in New York last week digging up some more stars. The Kleigl Theatrical Lighting Company of New York will have charge of the lighting, and startling and novel effects are promised.

Fox's "If Winter Comes" has already played three weeks in Springfield at Fox's theatre, a run that is unusual for that city. The picture has revived a big demand for the book, and has started quite a bit of discussion also in the city over the value of an idealist like Sabre to the community.

The Strand theatre, Cumberland, R. I., had a small blaze in the basement under the stage last week, fire department officials declaring that they believed it started from a cigarette stub dropped in rubbish. It was put out with chemicals before much damage resulted, though one fireman was overcome by smoke.

Eugene Simpson, 52, superintendent of janitors at Gordon's Olympia theatre, Lynn, Mass., and famous locally as a breeder of canaries, dropped dead early last week in the office of Manager Finn at the theatre. He dropped from his chair after sitting there but about five minutes. Death was declared due to heart failure by the medical examiner. Simpson had been superintendent for fourteen years, and is survived by a widow, his mother and two sisters, living in Boston.

A beautiful and timely production of the Life of Christ in motion pictures was presented in the Auditorium, Lowell, Mass., on Palm Sunday night. It was taken in the Holy Land by the Societa Italiuena Cines, and was shown under the direction of the Rev. J. B. Labossierer, of St. Louis' church.

Dr. Rudolf Stawowezyk has purchased the Bijou theatre at Bridgeport, Conn., from Peter Dawe. Thomas P. Gleeson will book and manage this house. Plans for remodeling the Bijou have been drawn up. Work will start this spring.

Manager Moxley Hill, of the Boston branch of Metro, has appointed G. M. Brooks assistant salesman for Metropolitan Boston territory, C. W. Weiner special representative for New Hampshire and Vermont, E. J. McIntyre eastern Massachusetts, M. C. Hilf assistant salesman for Connecticut. L. D. Kahn has been appointed publicity and exploitation director. Sammy Schultz has returned to the Maine territory after a serious illness of two months.

Kansas City Exchange and Exhibitor Items

"CHILDREN of to-day need not know of dance hall beauties and their illicit loves or of the underworld," says Mrs. Gertrude Sawtell, newly-appointed chairman of the Kansas State Board of Review. "We will try to encourage the type of stories that may be discussed around the family dinner table," she continued.

Other chairmen of Kansas censor boards have made similar statements before becoming actively engaged in their work and learning that the screen was not a fancy, but an industry. Therefore, Kansas exhibitors are not worried much.

The following changes in management and opening of new theatres in the Kansas City territory have been announced:

De Luxe theatre, Hutchinson, Kan., purchased by H. Norton from Fred Savage; Isis theatre, Brunswick, Mo., purchased by William Owens; Realart theatre, Flippin, Ark., opened by Earl Morrison.

A. R. Zimmer, of the Liberty theatre, Marysville, Kan., has introduced a new line of displaying posters. He has established a system of shadow boxes, which are made of regular lumber and a little electrical material, along with the ability to see the possibilities of displaying certain posters in the most effective manned., His shadow box of Lorna Doone attracted wide attention in his community. He rubbed oil all over the cutout front of the shadow box with an ordinary paint brush.

A new Robert Morton pipe organ has been installed by William P. Cuff in his Strand theatre at Chillicothe, Mo. A soloist, who between numbers acts as house hostess, also is another improvement.

Lawrence E. Goldman, council of the M. P. T. O. Western Missouri, returned to Kansas City Monday from New York and Chicago, where he combined business and pleasure. As to what Mr. Goldman means by "the big story that will break soon," he alone knows.

The rebuilt Century theatre, Kansas City, was turned over to Lee and J. J. Shubert Monday by the J. W. McCallum Construction Company, but what the house will be used for is a problem, despite the fact that several thousand dollars have been spent in remodeling the house, which formerly was a burlesque theatre. Originally it was the intention of the Shuberts to use the Century for legitimate productions, but that idea has been abandoned as the Shubert theatre, which was to have been the home of Shubert vaudeville, is housing legitimate plays this year. Therefore, the Century will be a combination motion picture and vaudeville house, a motion picture theatre, or a legitimate house, the latter being almost improbable.

As S. Nusbaum, manager of the Mozart theatre, Kansas City, closed his theatre Monday night and started home with the receipts in his pocket, two bandits drew up to the curb in a Ford sedan and robbed him of $25, the receipts for the night.

A whistling contest at the Pantages theatre, Kansas City, a combination motion picture and vaudeville house, this week drew liberal space in the daily newspapers as well as good crowds. Hazel Stallings, appearing in a whistling act, served as the judge of the contests.

At a regular monthly meeting of the department heads of the First National branch office, Kansas City, it was decided to organize a club, limited to employes in the office. The club will be known as the First National Club, and will be exclusively of a social nature. At the suggestion of Manager E. C. Rhoden it was agreed that the first meeting of the organization would be Saturday. At this meeting officers will be elected and a program outlined. A small membership fee, which will be placed in a general fund and expended only in the interest of the club, will be assessed.

Bernard C. Cook has resigned as manager of the Standard Film Company, Kansas City, an independent exchange. Frank J. Warren, owner of the company, will take over the active management of the concern, temporarily at least. Mr. Cook's plans for the future are not definite, as he has several attractive offers, he says.

Harry Graham, manager of the Kansas City Pathe office, has announced that he will extend to all small town exhibitors a box office insurance plan this summer, starting about June 1. The plan involves the booking of Pathe subjects, to be sure, but Mr. Graham asserts that to profit by the insurance plan will not necessitate booking more than one Pathe subject for fifteen weeks.

Trade Events Around the Seattle Exchanges

CHARLES H. FELDMAN arrived in the city recently to take over the management of the Seattle First National Exhibitors' exchange, succeeding Guy G. Maxey, manager since November, 1922. Before coming here, Mr. Feldman was manager of the Portland First National office, having opened that branch two and a half years ago. It was while in charge of that office this year that Mr. Feldman and the Portland staff received first prize for business during First National Week. Before joining First National, Mr. Feldman was with the General Film Company and George Kleine.

Chas. H. Feldman

In conjunction with his arrival here, Mr. Feldman announced that C. Frank Harris, First National representative formerly working out of Portland, will come to the Seattle territory, and B. A. Stover, formerly of Butte, will replace Harris in Portland. C. W. Koerner, former Butte manager, is now in charge of the Portland office, and Harry Sigmund has taken over the management in Butte. Sigmund was formerly a representative out of Seattle.

Leroy V. Johnson, manager of the Liberty theatre, has been appointed by Mayor Edwin J. Brown to membership on the board of theatre censors. He will replace Frank L. Steffy, manager of the Coliseum theatre, whose term has just expired. In addition to Mr. Johnson, three other persons were appointed to the board, including Mrs. W. K. McFarlane and Mrs. H. O. Stone, prominent club and organization women, and Rev. W. Ashe-Everst, Seattle pastor. George Bouckaert is present chairman of the board.

Changes in the management of two of the Blue Mouse theatres was announced recently by John Hamrick, president and owner of the circuit. Art Hile, manager of the Astoria, Oregon, house has resigned, and will return to Salem, where he will enter the exhibitors ranks. He will be succeeded in Astoria by Fred Teufel, formerly manager of the Portland Blue Mouse. Mr. Teufel will be replaced by Al Raleigh, who, before joining the Hamrick organization, was manager of the Jensen-Von Herberg Columbia theatre in Portland, recently purchased by the Universal Film Company.

A $5,000 oil painting of Brownie, the Century Comedy dog, was on exhibition recently at the Columbia theatre here. The picture is the work of Miss Graziella Boucher, a Northwest artist and critic of note who lives in Seattle. She painted the portrait from life recently when she was in Hollywood, and was complimented by Julius Stern, president of Century Comedies, upon the work. In connection with the exhibition of the picture Mr. Case booked and ran a Brownie Comedy, especially for the "Brownie Week."

An investigation recently conducted by E. S. Wideman, superintendent of schools at Bellingham, a town of 40,000, among the 8,000 school children of the city, revealed the fact that Charles Chaplin, Jackie Coogan and Norma Talmadge were the three characters best known to the students as famous people. Charles Chaplin received five times as many "votes" as did George Washington or Abraham Lincoln. Further statistics proved that education through motion pictures was remembered by the students long after facts learned through lectures or reading has been forgotten.

"Racing Hearts" and "Mad Love" are two coming features that have been booked by the Jensen-VonHerberg circuit and are announced for early showing in this city. "Mad Love" opened at the Liberty theatre in Portland on March 24, and was expected to play in Seattle shortly after that.

George Nyckelseck has just come to the Blue Mouse theatre as assisting organist, succeeding Paul Cowen, who has left the Hamrick organization after a year in their service. Nyckelseck, before coming here, was head organist at the Strand theatre in San Francisco and following that represented the Robert Morton organ company in opening the Blue Mouse at Astoria, Oregon.

The first print of "The Fourth Musketeer" arrived at the Film Booking Office exchange and was reviewed by Manager A. B. Metzger, who has begun to show the picture to exhibitors around the territory. "If I Were Queen" and "Heedless Moths" were recently sold by Mr. Metzger to the Blue Mouse theatres, the latter picture having been booked to open at the Tacoma house on April 7.

J. A. Gage and Wallace Rucker, manager and salesman of the local Educational Pictures exchange returned to Seattle recently after a short trip around the territory, working especially on bookings on "The Message of Doctor Coue."

W. E. Bamford, manager of the Goldwyn exchange was a recent visitor in Portland, where he established Dave Farquahr as head of the sales department working in the Oregon territory. Before joining Goldwyn Mr. Farquahr was manager of the Select exchange at Salt Lake City.

"Just Tony," when it played at the Blue Mouse theatre in Tacoma a few weeks ago, broke all house records for attendance, according to an announcement made by Guy F. Navarre, manager of the Fox Film exchange. The Tom Mix feature, which was the first to ever get first run bookings in the larger Washington and Oregon cities, filled Manager J. W. Houck's theatre practically to capacity for the seven days that it ran.

"Quicksand" has just arrived at the local American Releasing Corporation exchange, and Manager Louis Amacher is arranging exhibitions for the theatre men of the territory. He recently returned from Portland and other large cities in the territory where he has been working on several propositions in regard to engagements for "The Bohemian Girl," which has been in the city for a few weeks now.

Trade Jottings from Southern Pennsylvania

AS he was taking the receipts home at the close of the night performances at the Strand and Family theatres, Mt. Carmel, Manager James J. Quirk was held up by a highwayman. Quirk, however, proved more than a match for the robber and repulsed him and subsequently caused his arrest.

The Anthracite Amusement, Inc., circuit, of which Al. Gottesman, of Shenandoah, is head, is planning to build three motion picture theatres in Pottsville, Tamaqua and Mahanoy City, respectively. Plans, it is announced, are being drawn by Horn & Sons, architects, of New York.

The company plans also to remodel the Strand, in Shenandoah, at an expenditure of $40,000, work to start in June when the theatre will close.

The Pottsville theatre will seat 2,000 persons and the Mahanoy City and Tamaqua houses, 1,400 each. It is proposed to spend about $1,000,000 on the buildings to house these three new theatres.

The Stegmaier interest, widely known brewers of Wilkes-Barre, are said to be large investors in an enterprise which proposes the erection of a hotel and a theatre with 2,000 seating capacity, on the Laning Harvey property, near the Grand Opera House in that city.

Edward Richards, for many years a member of the famous Setzer's orchestra, of Pottsville, has been engaged as pianist for the Strand theatre, Shenandoah, by Al. Gottesman, manager.

A new theatre for motion pictures will be erected this spring at Dushore, by Nicholas Tate, owner of the Tate theatre, of Mildred.

Floods in the West Branch of the Susquehanna River, caused by ice gorges that formed when the ice broke up for the winter, caused serious inconvenience in the business section of Lock Haven, and compelled several motion picture theatres to suspend performances. Fire engines were required to pump the water from the cellars.

George Fabel has sold the Grand theatre, one of the oldest amusement places in Stroudsburg, to Victor Austin, for $9,000. Mr. Austin, who has been acting as manager of the house, plans to continue it as a motion picture theatre after making extensive alterations.

Exchange and Exhibitor Items from Indiana

YE ELM GROVE AMUSEMENT COMPANY, of Terre Haute, has increased its capital stock from $20,000 to $30,000.

The Katsaros Motion Picture theatre, at Rushville, Ind., has been traded to a Cincinnati syndicate represented by John R. Neely, for an apartment house in the Ohio city. Michael Katsaros and George Katsoras, proprietors of a candy kitchen, had remodeled the theatre out of a flat building last fall, since which time it had stood idle. It is understood the Cincinnati syndicate will lease the house to some one who will operate it for the first time.

It was said last week that negotiations of the Central Amusement Company, operating the Lyric, Isis and Apollo theatres with the William H. English Estate for leasing of the Crystal theatre, now operated by Gustav G. Schmidt, have failed. Schmidt's lease has two years to run. Several months ago he leased property to the north of the Crystal from the Thompson heirs and enlarged the Crystal. The front part of the Thompson property is occupied by a candy store. The Central Amusement Company has leased the entire property effective when the present lessee's holdings expire. The property in question has twenty feet of frontage on Illinois Street, and is 120 feet deep, adjoining the Lyric on the south.

Charles M. Olson, president of the Central Amusement Company, said that the entrance to the Lyric would be shifted to the twenty-foot frontage, immediately south of the present foyer, and the rear of the theatre remodeled so as to provide additional seating capacity. The Lyric was built only two years ago.

Comedies, Short Subjects & Serials

"Sky High" Is Next Century Comedy

Al Herman and Edward I. Luddy have written a new comedy and are casting for it. Herman claims the gags come quicker and funnier in this than in any preceeding Century he has directed.

The story jazzes Hollywood's second best occupation, that of the real estate operators who beset one on every corner. These "realtors" as they are called in sunny California have a recently developed tract up in the mountains. Dirty work is involved such as bungalows which disappear in the night, the selling of homes so high up in the hills that the tenants have to be pulled up there by means of cables and other troubles not familiar to Easterners but which will be appreciated by them.

Jack Cooper will play the leading role and Joe Bonner, Jack Earle the giant, Ford West and vampish Marjorie Marcel will contribute to the merriment.

Baby Peggy to Make Five Reeler

Elsie Jane Wilson Will Direct Young Star in Century Film Production

THE announcement comes from Julius and Abe Stern, heads of Century. Film Corporation, that their little star, Baby Peggy, is to make her first five-reel—full length—production. It will be made at Universal City and to insure its success the Stern brothers have chosen as her director one of the cleverest women directors in the motion picture industry—Elsie Jane Wilson, in private life the wife of Rupert Julian—the Universal director of "Merry-Go-Round."

The first run exhibitors who have booked her recently released bloc of six two-reel pictures, were unanimous in saying that they could easily book five reelers of this wonderful little girl, according to Century.

The Stern Brothers have given Miss Wilson full power to go ahead regardless of expense and to duplicate her former successes when she was one of the most promising women directors of the screen. For the last three years she has been content to act in an advisory capacity to her husband, but from 1915 to 1920 she directed some thirty features and a large number of smaller subjects. She did some splendid work for Universal. In addition to all star pictures she directed such stars of that day as Ella Hall, Ruth Clifford, Zoe Ray and Carmel Myers. Many of the pictures she directed were written by herself.

The story of Baby Peggy's first five-reeler is now under consideration by Miss Wilson and will be announced shortly. It will be largely written by herself.

Use of Pathecolor in Review Now Increased

It is announced that in forthcoming issues of Pathe Review, the use of Pathecolor has been extended to further distinguish its popular American Scenics section. It has already been used consistently in Pathe Review, applied to scenics photographed in foreign countries. Critics and exhibitors have commended it highly for the valuable eye-resting effect it produces when introduced midway of a long screen program, as well as for its own particular entertainment value.

Among the American Pathecolor subjects announced to appear in Pathe Review, beginning in the near future, is one picturing the much-visited old California Mission. Another is prehistoric cave dwellings of the Pueblos. The Grand Canyon of the Colorado, in color and sublimity considered by many to excel all other natural scenes of America. Pathecolor views of Niagara Falls and of Catskill Mountain scenery also are now in process for issues of Pathe Review.

Good Receipts Reported on "Shorts" Program

With "The Message of Emile Coue," forming the nucleus, exhibitors are successfully showing all short subject programs. The Curran theatre, Boulder, Col., and the Wray theatre, Wray, Col., report very satisfactory business on two such programs.

The program at the Curran theatre consisted of "The Message of Emile Coue," the Educational African hunt special, "Man vs. Beast," a Hamilton comedy and the Lyman H. Howe picture, "A Ride on a Runaway Train." The program at the Wray theatre consisted of "The Message of Emile Coue," "Man vs. Beast," a Hamilton comedy, "Extra! Extra!" and the Lyman H. Howe Hodge Podge, "Garden of the Geysers."

"Where Pavement Ends" Excites Moline

What is claimed by Metro as the biggest theatrical event in the history of Moline, Ill., was a special showing of the Rex Ingram production of "Where the Pavement Ends," which has not yet received general release. The Moline Daily Dispatch made a big spread with the news that the Le Claire Theatre would hold a public preview of Metro's version of the famous John Russell story. "A Scoop for Moline," it was called.

An effective tie-up was made by Richard R. Doerling, Metro exploitation representative, with Moline's best bookshop, displaying copies of "Where the Pavement Ends," with attractive placards announcing the run of the picture at the Le Claire Theatre.

"Rob 'Em Good" Highly Praised

Bull Montana Travesty Shares Honors With Metro Washington Feature

BULL MONTANA in "Rob 'Em Good," a travesty on "Robin Hood," shared honors with another Metro photoplay, "The Toll of the Sea" for an entire week's engagement at Loew's Columbia theatre in Washington, where it won high praise. Critics gave equal prominence to the burlesque on chivalry and the remarkable natural color film, the first to be photographed by a new process.

R. L. B., photoplay critic of the Washington Post, praises "Rob 'Em Good" in the following terms:

"Bull Montana as the Earl of Nothingdone, Chuck Reisner as King Richard, James Quinn as Prince John—these and all the rest of the cleverensemble kept the audience yesterday in a constant state of merriment. The sets and scenery are almost duplicates of those which were used by the blithe Doug; and in every detail—from the continual eating of King Dick to the merry bounding of the Sherwood Forest outlaws — delicious travesty abounds. The actors have caught the spirit of the thing and have given it an atmosphere as drolly ridiculous as 'Robin Hood' was interest-compelling."

The Washington Post is equally commendatory in its review:

"Bull Montana as 'Rob 'Em Good,' in a comedy by that name, brings his cauliflowered ears and belligerent countenance through all the scrapes of a crusader. The comedy is a travesty on Fairbanks' 'Robin Hood,' and follows the original very closely in situations. A side-splitting burlesque on the original is the result."

The picture presenting Bull Montana in "Rob 'Em Good" was produced by Hunt Stromberg, and is released by Metro Pictures Corporation.

"Head Hunters" Draws in Sunday House

The Associated Exhibitors' attraction, Martin Johnson's production of "Head Hunters of the South Seas," was the feature at the George M. Cohan theatre, New York, last Sunday, and drew large audiences, afternoon and evening.

"Head Hunters" ran for a week at the B. S. Moss Broadway theatre, recently, and since he secured possession of the Cohan theatre for Sundays, Mr. Moss has been repeating in that Broadway house the features which had scored the biggest triumphs during the longer runs.

"Fare Enough," Century Comedy Finished

Al Herman has just finished "Fare Enough" the Century Comedy on which he has been working for the last four weeks. Jack Cooper has the starring role in this comedy of rural life mixed in with the clash between a jitney bus concession and a street car franchise.

The cast is composed of Marjorie Marcel, Jeanne Hope, Joe Bonner, and Ford West. The story is by Herman Sandrich, his assistant and Edward I. Luddy.

"Ex-Kaiser in Exile" Proven Genuine

L. N. Kniskern, assistant to the vice-president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, in a memorandum sent to all branches, sets forth in detail, proof of the authenticity of the film, "The Ex-Kaiser in Exile," released through the Hodkinson organization.

A statement has been sent to each branch manager and salesman telling the whole story of how the film was obtained. It is said that the film itself contains actual evidence of the genuineness of the motion picture, including a photograph of the Dutch military pass used to gain entrance.

It further verifies the fact that Baron Von Radowitz, who secured the film, was actually a guest of the ex-Kaiser for three days, and got the photos after securing permission to photograph the house and grounds.

Vitagraph Releases Two More Urban Classics

Two more of Urban Popular Classics were shipped to Vitagraph branches this week for immediate release. They are "Pirates of the Air' and "The Staff of Life." The former is a particularly attractive feature for children showing birds that prey upon others. Among the strange fowl are the great horned owl which kills game birds and the condor, the largest of all birds of prey. "The Staff of Life" shows the progress of a grain of wheat from the sowing to the baking in a modern bread-making establishment.

Jazz Music Effects in Aesop Cue Sheets

A new departure in thematic music cue sheets is produced by Fables Pictures, Inc., for use with Aesop's Film Fables, released by Pathe. In addition to the usual cues and music themes, queer and comic effects by the orchestra, with their cues, are indicated on the sheet—for the first time, it is said, in connection with motion picture performances.

James C. Bradford, compiler of the thematic sheets, has so prepared his cues that the trap drummer can tell at a glance all the effects he will need during the showing of the film. The same sheet contains both music and effect cues, with the themes. The leader and members of the orchestra therefore can play the picture without having to refer to a dozen different sheets of varied numbers.

"One Hard Pull," scheduled for release on April 15, is the first of the Aesop's Film Fables to be supplied with this elaborated effect and music themes cue sheet.

Ruth Roland Serial Has N. Y. Trade Showing

Exhibitors of New York and vicinity crowded the large projection room at the Pathe home office last Wednesday at the first trade showing of Ruth Roland's latest Pathe serial, "Haunted Valley." The first three episodes were seen and were pronounced highly effective in the qualities of mystery, suspense, dramatic action and daring encounters with strange perils.

"Haunted Valley" is produced by the Ruth Roland Serials, Inc., from the story and scenario by Frank Leon Smith, and directed by George Marshall—all under the supervision of United Studios, Inc.

The action and locations of "Haunted Valley" are typically western, with much hard riding and hard fighting.

It is on Pathe's release schedule immediately to follow the release of the final episode of Pearl White's "Plunder"—some time in May.

Children Have Chance to Name Animals

"Bobbie's Ark" and "Bare Facts Concerning Bears" are the two current Urban Popular Classics released by Vitagraph. "Bobbie's Ark" is said to be particularly attractive for children. Bobbie goes to sleep and dreams that his toys have come to life and there are screened about fifty strange and familiar animals which are not identified on the screen. Exhibitors are offering prizes to those who can guess the names of the fifty animals shown.

Fox Shows Middies in Intimate Views

The first moving pictures giving intimate views of the 2,500 middies at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, appear in release No. 49 of Fox News.

The pictures show the rigid training that the naval cadets are forced to go through for their athletic contests of the Spring. They also show the first interior views ever taken of the cadets at mess.

Christie Studios Hard at Work

New People Engaged and Activity Will Continue Through Summer Months

"THE approaching warm weather has not lessened the activities at the Christie Studios; in fact we are working harder than ever, and have no intention of letting up for the so-called summer slump. We have engaged several new comedy people and intend to work right through the summer." This is the statement of Charles Christie, business manager of the Christie Film Company, producers of Educational Christie Comedies, on his return to Los Angeles after a trip to New York, and an investigation of the conditions in the East.

Within the past two months Christie has been adding to his staff and has acquired three new leading ladies: Hazel Deane, Duane Thompson, and Kathleen Clifford. Miss Thompson is supporting Neal Burns, and will be seen in "Hot Water," and Charlotte Stevens is now working with Bobby Vernon in "Take Your Choice." Kathleen Clifford is being starred in a comedy, the title of which has not as yet been announced.

Bobby Vernon, Neal Burns, and the new Christie star, Jimmie Adams, are hard at work on current productions, and will continue through the summer. Vernon is playing the lead in "Take Your Choice"; Burns has just completed "Hot Water" and is now working on the next picture of his series, and Adams is completing "Green As Grass," his first picture under the Christie banner. Dorothy Devore is at Truckee with Al Christie and a company making the snow scenes for her next production, "Winter Has Came." Harold and William Beaudine, Scott Sidney and Al Christie, directors, are working their respective companies, producing comedies on schedule.

Even the studios have been enlarged and many improvements added in the last few months. A two story brick building has been completed, and will house some of the mechanical departments. A third motor generator set has been added to the already extensive lighting equipment of the studios, and the foundation has been laid and building is in progress on a new studio and office building. The new building, when completed, will contain a stage 100 by 175 feet.

In addition to extensive building and additions to the producing force, the Christies are sparing no expense in making their comedies. Al Christie's recent trip to Honolulu and return, a trip of 4,500 miles to secure the proper backgrounds and atmosphere for "A Hula Honeymoon," and his present trip to Truckee with Dorothy Devore and a company of twenty people to get the snow scenes for "Winter Has Came," are indications of the expense and detail with which these comedies are made.

Pathe Shows Baseball Stars in Training

In Pathe News baseball training pictures, "home team fans" are enabled to get vivid views of their heroes tuning up for the great struggle of the coming season. It is announced that every team in the National and American League has now been filmed on the training field.

Newspaper Argues For Short Subjects

Following up Pathe's widely published symposium in which newspaper editors almost unanimously declared their preference for short pictures, the Indianapolis Sunday Star prints a strong two-column argument along the same lines. It reads in part:

"The fault of modern picture-making lies in the ever present tendency to make a full length (that is, five or six reel) picture out of material that would make scarcely a two-reel film if all the padding were left out.

"Not infrequently does it happen that the shorter subjects save a picture program from the ignominy to which its feature picture condemns it. Just a few weeks ago honors on a bill at a local house went, not to the chief film that was based on a contest-winning scenario, but to a short, merry comedy. . . . A picture should occupy no more of the spectator's time than the story deserves."

Pathe Shows Welcome to Seaplane Heroes

What convinces the beholder as the most extraordinary public demonstration in honor of a daring human achievement are the scenes in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, welcoming Lieut. Hinton and his companions at the end of their speaplant flight from New York City. These scenes are exclusively pictured in the current issue of Pathe News, No. 23, by its staff cameraman, who was a member of Lieut. Hinton's party.

The streets of the Brazilian capital are packed with wildly enthusiastic multitudes. They are seen carrying on their shoulders the heroes of this first flight linking the two Americas.

In actual flying time the 5,641 miles of the air voyage were covered in 126 hours.

Jimmy Adams Comedy Is Completed

"Green as Grass," the rural comedy which introduces Jimmie Adams as a Christie Comedy star has been completed under the direction of Scott Sidney, and will be released in April through Educational Film Exchanges. In the cast with Adams are Charlotte Merriam, William Irving, Earl Rodney and William Chapman.

The story introduces a wonderful horse, declared to be a "find" by the director. The plot, which was written by Walter Graham, centers at a county fair.

Hugh Fay Will Direct Hamilton Comedy

Lloyd Hamilton has engaged Hugh Fay to direct the sixth Educational-Hamilton Comedy of the present series for Educational release.

Fay is responsible for the production of two of Hamilton's previous successes of the present series, "The Speeder," and "No Luck." Since the last of these he has been directing Bull Montana in several comedies for Metro. The forthcoming comedy will be his eighth for Hamilton.

"Our Gang" Tops Pathe Program

"Boys to Board" Heads Nine Subjects Scheduled for Release April 8

MICKEY DANIELS, Jackie Condon, Jackie Davis, Sunshine Sammy, Little Farina and their loyal "Our Gang" bulldog, in the comic juvenile riot called "Boys to Board" head Pathe's list of nine releases announced for April 8. This 2-reeler is a characteristic Hal Roach screen story of what happens when "Our Gang" mutinies in avaricious "Mother" Malone's Dickensesque boarding school. The down-trodden husband of the ogress joins the small mutineers—and after the dust clears away "Pop" Malone is boss and there's "chicken with gravy."

"Plunder" reaches its 11th episode called "Spunk," in which Pearl White, disguised as a "tough girl" thrills in her episode role of a fearless heroine in a frightful sailor's lodging house free fight, after finding the man she loves maddened by poison-fumes, in the torture scheme of three strange enemies.

Paul Parrott is the hero of the Hal Roach book agent 1-reel comic spasm called "Keep Smiling."

The Aesop's Film Fable release is called "Day By Day In Every Way." Henry Cat believes every word of it. He tries it on a hen on her nest—wtih highly profitable results.

The latest big world events are pictured in Pathe News Nos. 30 and 31, and Topics of the Day No. 14 supplies its standard quota of witty flashes.

In Pathe Review No. 14 there is a novel section showing the entire process of presenting to ordinary view the strange things "seen" by "The Camera Eye"—of deep interest to everyone owing to the fad of photography. In the new Pathecolor series with the process applied to American Scenics, the Missions of California are screened with highly realistic and charming results. "Adventures in Dreamland" are pictured in the form of "Silliettes," and "Wood-Workers of Syria" shows remarkable things achieved where machines are unknown.

Screen Snapshots No. 23 shows these picture favorites in varied scenes: Directors Hugo Ballin and George Walsh in military action; Claire Windsor, Patsy Ruth Miller, Helen Ferguson and Eleanor Boardman spend a quiet evening at home; Theodore Roberts brings a pet home to his wife, Lew Cody and Bert Lytell are interrupted at a duel, and Gaston Glass and Marion Mack introduce a new game.

Pathe Announces Two Kiser Art Releases

IN response to inquiries from exhibitors, Pathe announced the forthcoming release of two more Kiser Art Films in the Oregon Trail Series. Patron interest in these beautifully photographed stories dealing with great industries and the picturesque scenery of the far Northwest is said to have gained steadily since the first release, "The Price of Progress," with its realistic drama of the timber industry. "Fleeced for Gold," with its sheep range scenes, and "The Royal Chinook," picturing the life of Columbia River salmon, are credited with a record equally popular.

Two other releases announced in this series are: "The Crystal Ascension," picturing the wonders revealed in a journey through the snows and mists to the summit of Mount Hood, and a Pacific Coast Indian Legend entitled, "Weeping Waters."

Christie Cast Returns With Snow Scenes

After suffering about all the ills that might happen to a motion picture company in the snow country, Al Christies and his cast and staff are back from Truckee, where they have been making "Winter Has Came," a story of life on a New England farm and a daughter returned from Paris.

Dorothy Devore plays the daughter and is surrounded by an unusually big cast of well known people, including Earl Rodney, Babe London, William Irving, Lydia Yeamans Titus, William Chapman, Victor Rodman, George French and Bob North.

The new picture will be ready for release in May and will follow such Christie pictures as "A Hula Honeymoon," "Babies Welcome," "Hot Water," "Green as Grass," and "Take Your Choice," which

Mickey Daniels Signs Long Contract

Genuine screen talent plus championship in the freckles class has won a five-year Hal Roach contract for seven-year-old Mickey Daniels. Mickey is best and most widely known as one of the stars in the two-reel Our Gang Comedies distributed by Pathe. He also comes out strong with Harold Lloyd in "Dr. Jack"—the "sick" schoolboy who recovers instantly when the shrewd young doctor hero remarks that "the school house has burned down."

Creation of Life in Bray Romance

The "Romance of Life" is the title of the Bray Romance to be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. It presents the creation of life from the very beginning, passing through all of the stages of plant and animal life until the development of man.

"The Mystery Box," the first of the series of Bray Romances, is said to have been meeting with widespread success throughout the country.

Sarah Bernhardt Views Shown

International News Rushes Memorial Sujects to Broadway Theatres

LESS than seven hours after the announcement of the death of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt reached New York the International News Reel Corporation had prepared a 200-foot Sarah Bernhardt Memorial, of varied and exclusive shots, showing the famous actress in many striking pos s. These memorial subjects were used by the Capitol, the Rialto, the Rivon and the Strand theatres in New York City.

International's Film Obituary of Mme. Bernhardt was ready in negative form, awaiting word of her death. As soon as that was received it was rushed to the factory, where prints were made.

The Bernhardt Memorial is being included in International News No. 27, which was shipped to all Universal exchanges Tuesday. This establishes one of the most efficient records in the news reel field.

Marguerite Courtot, appearing in "Down to the Sea in Ships," distributed by Hodkinson.

Novel Exploitation on Arrow Serial

An extremely novel and effective means of advertising Arrow's serial, "The Fighting Skipper" was issued by that organization this week. This consists of a card showing a newsboy offering an "extra" for sale. Tucked under his left arm is a miniature newspaper devoted to "The Fighting Skipper," which serial, by the way, is reported by Arrow to be doing splendid business throughout the country, there being but a few territories remaining unsold, although the picture has just been released.

This serial was produced by Francis Ford and stars Peggy O'Day, Jack Perrin and Francis Ford.

Production-Distribution Activities

"Hero" Proves Worth in L. A. House

"The Hero," the Preferred Picture released by the Al Lichtman Coryporation, has closed a highly successful run at Miller's Theatre in Los Angeles where it had its western premier. Box-office receipts reached a proportion that persuaded the management to hold over the attraction a second week.

Grace Kingsley in the Los Angeles Times reviewed "The Hero" with "The Famous Mrs. Fair" heading them, "They are human." Speaking of "The Hero" she said: A man of ideals, Gasnier is not afraid to deal with human nature as it is. . . . And then the climax. Griffith himself never did anything finer."

The Los Angeles Examiner classified it as follows: "Louis Gasnier has gone and done it. He has directed a picture that tells a story, tells it well and clearly, tells it dramatically and gets it over without recourse to extraneous hokum. Gasnier has given himself something ot live up to in 'The Hero.'"

President Harding Sees Goldwyn Features

President Warren G. Harding telegraphed Goldwyn Pictures Corporation last week asking that prints of three of its most recent productions be sent to him in Florida so that they could be screened for him on the train en route from Florida to Washington, according to the Goldwyn office.

The three pictures were Maurice Tourneur's production of "The Christian," the Pola Negri film, "Mad Love," and R. A. Walsh's South Seas picture, "Lost and Found."

Arrangements were made by wire from Goldwyn headquarters whereby prints of the three pictures were placed aboard the Presidential train.

"Fun from Press" Drive Winner

Hodkinson Branch Offices Hang Up Remarkable Record in Sales Returns

MUCH satisfaction is expressed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation over the results of their recent concentrated drive on The Literary Digest's "Fun from the Press." Some remarkable records were hung up, and tabulations of the returns, which have just been completed, indicate that the high score for the period went to the Denver office, in charge of Mr. H. O. Bartels. Mr. R. E. Nehls, Branch Sales Manager of the Cincinnati office, ran a close second.

The quota assigned to each office was based upon the amount of sales of "Fun from the Press" made by each office during the preceding six months, so that each office was, in reality, competing with its past record.

Some remarkable percentages were turned in during the four weeks of the drive. During the first week, Mr. L. J. Hacking, Branch Sales Manager of Boston, sold 135 per cent. of his quota; Mr. H. O. Bartels, Branch Sales Manager of Denver, sold 283 per cent., and Mr. R. E. Nehls, Branch Sales Manager of Cincinnati, 142 per cent. During the second week, Cincinnati achieved 130 per cent., while Cleveland (C. L. Peavey, Branch Sales Manager) subsequently turned in 160 per cent., and New Orleans (Mrs. A. H. Sessions, Branch Sales Manager) 128 per cent.

Reports indicate that exhibitors throughout the country are strongly appreciative of the nation-wide advertising and exploitation given "Fun from the Press," by The Literary Digest. This campaign embraces advertising in some 600 daily newspapers throughout the country, with an approximate circulation of twenty million. The campaign conducted by The Literary Digest in conjunction with the Hodkinson efforts is considered to be one of the most extensive and far-reaching exhibitor-helps ever launched in the motion picture industry.

As evidence of the enormous benefit to the exhibitor derived from this campaign, Mr. Post of the Hodkinson offices, states that figures have been compiled showing that the cost of booking the film is less than the cost of circularizing readers of The Literary Digest in the exhibitor's own community.

"Crashin' Thru" F.B.O. Release

Romantic Western Drama Is Fourth Production Starring Harry Carey

"CRASHIN THRU," the fourth Harry Carey F.B.O. production, is the current feature release of the Film Booking Offices of America, following "The Fourth Musketeer," H. C. Witwer's-Cosmopolitan Magazine story, starring Johnnie Walker, on the F.B.O. schedule. "Crashin' Thru" is adapted from the Blue Book Magazine story by Elizabeth DeJeans, which was published under the title "If A Woman Wills."

According to the announcement issued by F.B.O. "Crashin' Thru" rises above the ordinary Western drama by presenting an unusual romantic story developed with smashing thrills and climaxes. Carey, whose popularity is steadily increasing and who is a prime favorite among lovers of outdoor photoplays, is suited perfectly to the romantic and adventuresome role afforded him, it is claimed.

"Crashin' Thru" is essentially a drama of rapid-fire action, including among its thrills such spectacular scenes as a stampede of horses; the burning of a ranch house, and a battle scene in which the dynamiting of an entire mountainside is shown.

Cullen Landis, the popular lead-ing man of a score of big productions, has an important role. It is said to be distinctly different from anything in his motion picture career. His appearance as a lazy and weak-willed young cowpuncher should interest his large following of screen admirers. Vola Vale plays the leading feminine role and other principals in the cast are Myrtle Steadman, Charles LeMoyne, Nell Craig, Joseph Harris and Donald McDonald. Val Paul, who is responsible for all the Carey-F.B.O. productions, directed, and Beatrice Van, adapter of "Fighting Blood" and many past F. B. O. successes, scenarized the story.

Equity Closes Another Foreign Deal

Continual progress was reported in the Equity Sales Organization during the past week, in the disposal of the foreign rights on their latest "Special" production, "Has The World Gone Mad."

The latest foreign sale to be announced on this production is that one closed for the territory of Belgium with Soleil Levant Films, Brussels, Belgium.

First National Issues Three Press Books

Because of the magnitude of the productions, First National is issuing special press books on three coming releases, Maurice Tourneur's "The Isle of Lost Ships," "The Bright Shawl," starring Richard Barthelmess, and "Within the Law," starring Norma Talmadge. These press books will be delivered to First National exchanges and to exhibitors this week.

One of the features of "The Bright Shawl" book is a full-page drawing of Richard Barthelmess by the famous artist, Franklin Booth. This drawing is being used in one of First National's Saturday Evening Post pages which start with the issue of April 7.

The requirements of all classes of exhibitors were considered in the preparation of the advertisements, exploitation suggestions and newspaper stories. Full campaigns are outlined in detail for showmen in small towns as well as those in the larger cities.

"Is Divorce a Failure," Approved by Women

Following a special preview in the educational department of the Crandall theatres in Washington, a few days ago, club women, representing a large number of organizations, gave hearty endorsement to the Associated Exhibitors feature, "Is Divorce a Failure?" the first of the Leah Baird 1923 Specials.

The women invited to the screening are enthusiastic advocates of Senator Arthur Capper's bill for national marriage and divorce laws, and it was with the picture's possible influence on the proposed legislation in mind that the special showing was arranged. The guests, who were received by Mrs. Harriett Hawley Locher, director of public service and of the educational department of the Crandall theatres, included: Miss Lida Hafford, director-general, Federation Headquarters; Dr. Amy Rule, District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs; Miss Park, National Woman's Party, and Mrs. Jean Bond Chandler, Mrs. G. G. White,

King Tut Rights Go to Shipman

After months of negotiations Ernest Shipman is enabled to announce the exclusive rights for exploitation of the Pharaoh Tutankhamen animated pictures throughout the United States and Canada.

The world-wide interest already created by this subject suggests that in this picture Shipman has landed a sensational "scoop."

Ernest Shipman says: "Add to the regular fan about twenty millions who rarely, if ever, darken the doors of a picture house, and you will get an idea of the vast number of people who will view this exposition."

"Why Women Re-Marry" Sale Announced

A. Canter, sales manager of Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., announces the sale of the first Milton Sills picture to be released by Associated Photo-Plays to Sam Zieler, president of Commonwealth Film Company.

The first of the series of new Milton Sills pictures made by the John Gorman Producing Company has been titled "Why Women Re-Marry," and is said to be novel in theme and excellently cast. It was made from an original story by Van A. James.

Mr. Canter announces that the sale of foreign territory is going forward rapidly.

Another Milton Sills picture will be ready in two weeks, according to Mr. Canter.

In addition to Milton Sills the cast of "Why Women Re-Marry" includes Ethel Grey Terry, Carol Holloway, William Lowery, Clarissa Selwynne, Wildred Lucas and other well known stars.

"Little Old New York" Nears Completion

Work on Marion Davies' next Cosmopolitan production "Little Old New York" is nearing completion. With the filming of the street scenes in Ireland next week at the Jackson Studio and some which are to be taken aboard ship the week following the big production will be practically finished.

Work was begun on "Little Old New York" about the middle of December. In spite of the fire which destroyed the stages at Cosmopoltian studios a few weeks ago the picture will be finished on schedule time. The Tilford studio on Forty-fourth street and Jackson studio in the Bronx have been used for the remaining scenes.

The big Twenty-Third Regiment Armory in Brooklyn was engaged for the filming of the street scenes showing the Battery and Bowling Green as they were a century ago.

"The Lure of Egypt" Takes New Spurt

"The Lure of Egypt," according to Pathe, has taken on a recent strong spurt of new and re-booking, perhaps as a result of the volume of King Tut publicity. In addition to being based on an all-popular subject at the present time it has the advantage of a cast headed by Claire Adams, Robert McKim and Joseph Dowling.

Its story is based on archaeological explorations on the Nile in the region of Luxor, and the plot centers in trouble with the native chiefs over the actual opening of the tomb and the securing of the treasures buried with the father-in-law of Tut-ankh-amen—the young religious innovator, King Akhnaton. The parallel is thus extremely striking, and extends even to photographs taken at the opening of the tomb of Tut-ankh-amen.

At the present stage of the renewed activity of more than twenty Pathe features which have been before the public continuously for upwards of two years, "The Lure of Egypt" is reported to be outstripping them all.

"Bell Boy 13" Approved in N.Y.

Critics Praise Production with Douglas MacLean at Strand Showing

"BELL BOY 13," a Thos. H. Ince Production with Douglas MacLean as the star, which is being released through First National, scored a big success at the Strand Theatre, New York, when it was shown there during the week of March 25. Motion picture critics of the New York dailies were unstinting in their praise of "Bell Boy 13." Following is what some of them had to say:

Tribune—"Bell Boy 13" is one of Douglas MacLean's funniest pictures. It moves swiftly and is consistently amusing.

E. V. Durling in the Globe — Yesterday's audience found "Bell Boy 13" highly amusing. Douglas MacLean, who this writer insists is Mr. Fairbanks' only logical successor, performs in his usual breezy and highly capable fashion.

Evening Mail — There are two motion pictures at the Strand this week. The first one is just an ordinary photoplay * * *. The second is more interesting. It is a comedy called "Bell Boy 13," with Douglas MacLean furnishing the laughs. "Bell Boy 13" is a relief after the artificialities and crudities that permeate the other picture * * *. It is worth while because of MacLean. This comedian has a contagious smile and a quiet manner of acting that is pleasing.

Evening Telegram — "Bell Boy 13," starring Douglas MacLean is a farce comedy and was presented by Thos. H. Ince. It is one of the most humorous of films in which Mr. MacLean dons a bell hop's uniform to prove to his millionaire father he is capable of earning his own livelihood, with the result that his father consents to his marriage to an actress. The situations are very funny.

"Shriek of Araby" Real Shriek

Los Angeles Reviewers Say Sennett Comedy Fairly Reeks With Shrieks

"BRING on more just like this," says Guy Price in his review the Los Angeles Evening Express of Mack Sennett's new feature length comedy, "The Shriek of Araby," starring Ben Turpin and Kathryn McGuire, while this Allied Producers and Distributors' Corporation release was playing to capacity business in an extended run at the Symphony theatre.

"All the favorable things that many moviemanics told me about this picture before I saw it are true. I went to the theatre expecting to laugh, and I laughed a lot more than I expected to. And I laughed because I couldn't help it.

"It is a perfect picture of its kind. The burlesque is adroitly and grotesquely done; the titles have a very humorous, satricial slant; the comedy action is natural. If you have any more like this, Mr. Sennett, for the love of Allah, trot them forth. The screen needs such capital, wholesome entertainment."

"Ben Turpin has never done anything funnier," said another writer for the Express. "There are many gags that are new. It is a first-class burlesque."

"It is a whole crowd of shrieks," said the reviewer for the Times. "Ben is the king-pin shriek and the gags make another shriek, and the sub-titles are a procession of shrieks. If you want to laugh and forget your troubles, see this shriek."

"It is a shriek of mirth," said the Examiner's critic.

"It's a shriek, yes, in both description and appellation," said the writer of the Herald. "Ben Turpin's picture is all that the title implies."

Reviewers Acclaim "Jazzmania"

Newspaper Critics All Over Country Approve Mae Murray's Latest

JAZZ-LOVING Americans have completely capitulated to the charm of Robert Z. Leonard's presentation of Mae Murray in "Jazzmania," her latest and most gorgeous photoplay, released through Metro Pictures Corporation. East, south, west, north—newspaper reviewers as well as photoplay patrons have succumbed to Miss Murray's alluring motion picture, according to Metro.

New Yorkers were among the first to fall, when the famous star and her photoplay were displayed at the Capitol theatre. "Mae did some of the stuff we thought nobody but Mrs. Mary Pickford Fairbanks capable of," wrote the Globe. "The very last word in gorgeous and tasteful clothes," said the Post.

Not a whit less emphatic were the reviews of other sections of the country. "Mae Murray proves an adorable queen, captivates audience," said the Dallas News. The Los Angeles Times declared the photoplay "the most spectacular, if not altogether the dizziest excursion of the star . . . interest well sustained." The San Francisco Call-Post calls "Jazzmania" Mae Murray's newest gilt edged, Tiffany-set luxury drama . . . "more gay and gorgeous in setting than its predecessor." "The best settings wherein she has ever been featured are presentd in "Jazzmania," is the opinion of the Cleveland News. "Beautiful production and novel story make it a certain hit," is the judgment of the Bellefontaine (Ohio) Index.

Arrow Concludes Big Pittsburgh Deal

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, announces the consummation of a deal with the Progress Pictures Company of Pittsburgh, whereby that concern acquires a number of Arrow's greatest releases.

The deal, which was negotiated by P. W. Hamilton and Harry C. Simeral, representing Progress, and W. Ray Johnston of Arrow, gives Progress Pictures the following product for Eastern Pennsylvania and West Virginia: "The Little Red Schoolhouse," a Martin J. Heyl production with Martha Mansfield, E. K. Lincoln, Sheldon Lewis, Edmund Breese, Paul Everton and Harlan Knight; "The Rip Tide," an A. B. Maescher production with Stuart Holmes, Rosemary Theby, Russell Simpson, J. Frank Glendon, George Rigas and Diana Alden; "Man and Wife," an Effanem production with Gladys Leslie, Robert Elliott, Maurice Costello and Norma Shearer; "None So Blind," a Burton King production with Dore Davidson, Zena Keefe, Maurice Costello and Gene Burnell; and "The Broken Violin," an Atlantic Features production with Reed Howes, Zena Keefe, Dorothy Mackaill, Rita Rogan, Gladden James, Henry Sedley and Jack Richardson.

"Man Next Door" Ranch Scenes Finished

Victor Schertzinger has finished the scenes of "The Man Next Door," by Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon," at Palo Verdi ranch near Victorville, Cal., and is now working in the Vitagraph studios at Hollywood.

The director staged a roundup scene and used 5,000 head of cattle. The Palo Verdi ranch is one of the largest in Southern California and covers 3,800 acres.

Alice Calhoun and James Morrison have the juvenile leads. Frank Sheridan will play Curley. David Torrence plays Colonel Wright, Alice Calhoun's father in the picture. John Steppling and Adele Farrington play David Wesner and his wife. Mary Culver is Katherine Kimberly. Bruce Boteler is Tom Kimberly, while Harry Todd plays the butler.

"Trifling Women" Held Over in Baltimore

"TRIFLING WOMEN," Rex Ingram's production for Metro Pictures Corporation, was held over for a second week at the big New Theatre in Baltimore by public demand according to Metro.

John W. Vandercook, critic of the Daily Post, wrote in part: "'Trifling Women' is bang-up entertainment. An absorbing film. Excellent cast and direction."

In the Evening Sun, Q. E. D. said: "Barbara La Marr is excellent as Zareda. Ramon Navarro is Valentinish Ivan. Rex Ingram is at his best."

Norman Clark, photoplay critic of the Baltimore News, commented as follows: "Rex Ingram knows how to direct a photoplay. . . He makes of 'Trifling Women' a weird, tragic tale. It suggests Poe more than once."

"Rex Ingram scores again in 'Trifling Women,'" is the sentence with which Robert Garland sums up his impression of the film.

This photoplay was written, adapted and directed by Rex Ingram. The photography is the work of John F. Seitz. In the cast are Ramon Navarro, Barbara La Marr, Lewis Stone and Edward Connelly.

Goodman Finishes Story for Equity

Daniel Carson Goodman announced to the Equity Pictures Corporation this week that he has practically completed the story and continuity of his next Special production, and the story will be submitted very shortly to the officials of that corporation for approval and for all necessary changes.

The present title selected as a working one is "You Get What You Give."

Moore Takes Goldwyn Output

Washington Exhibitor Signs Contract Covering Eighteen Months Period

THE exhibitors of the country are not only talking about the big things in store for them through Goldwyn's rapidly expanding program, but are acting on the hint that they should get busy and make sure of the Goldwyn product for their own theatres. Tom Moore, the popular theatre owner of Washington, D. C., didn't stop to talk, when he learned of the Goldwyn program for the coming season, but acted.

He learned from James R. Grainger, Goldwyn's General Manager of Sales, about the productions now underway and those slated for next season, on Mr. Grainger's visit to Washington on his recent trip to the Coast. Then, as soon as the latter had returned to New York, Mr. Moore came to the Goldwyn home office and signed a contract covering a period of eighteen months.

This contract means that Mr. Moore will present the entire Goldwyn product, for the rest of this season and for all of next season, at Moore's Rialto theatre in Washington.

"To keep in the race nowadays," says Mr. Moore, "it takes the best brains and the best screen products —whether the entrant is exhibitor or producer. Goldwyn is growing, and growing fast; it has prepared a gigantic program. Money, brains, stars, directors, coupled with team work and tremendous resources, are at their disposal. No wonder they are doing big things. Bigger things are to follow. That is why I have signed this eighteen months' contract."

The current Goldwyn pictures which this contract ensures an early showing at the Rialto are "Vanity Fair," "Lost and Found," "Mad Love," "Souls for Sale," "The Eternal Three," "Red Lights," "The Spoilers" and "Three Wise Fools."

Some of the pictures embraced in the coming year's product which will be shown at the Rialto are Erich von Stroheim's "Greed," based upon Frank Norris' "McTeague"; Marshall Neilan's "Tess of the D'Urbervilles"; Emmett J. Flynn's "In the Palace of the King"; Elinor Glyn's "Six Days" now being directed by Charles J. Brabin; Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man"; Victor Seastrom productions; pictures to be made by Tod Browning, Hugo Ballin, and others.

"Bavu" Ready for Early Release

Earl Carroll Russian Melodrama Production is Received in New York

STUART PATON'S weird Universal-Jewel production of Earl Carroll's Russian melodrama, "Bavu," has been received in New York and reviewed by Universal executives. It is pronounced as one of the most exotic pictures ever produced and one which will cause much talk.

It will reach the exhibitor at an early date with an intriguing exploitation campaign behind it.

During its production at Universal City, "Bavu" is said to have been the talk of the film colony, because of its unusual aspect and because of the atmosphere of mystery and melodrama Paton built up around his sets.

"Bavu" is a story of the Soviet, of an illiterate peasant raised to great power and of his attempts to exploit the people for his own gain. The picture shows vivid flashes of "Red" Russia, and the revolutionary risings of the proletariat.

It was made with an all-star cast, with Wallace Beery playing the title role. The other players are Estelle Taylor, Forrest Stanley, Sylvia Breamer, Mickolai de Ruiz, Martha Mattox, Joseph Swickard, Harry Carter and Jack Rollens.

Stuart Paton long has been noted as the director of unusual pictures. He is especially good at weird lighting effects and melodramatic thrills. All this he has taken advantage of in "Bavu." It was Paton who directed Priscilla Dean's remarkable thrill picture, "Conflict."

Earl Carroll, who built the Earl Carroll theatre in New York, wrote and produced "Bavu" as a stage melodrama. It created a sensation because of its unusual theme and treatment. The play was adapted to the screen by Raymond L. Schrock, scenario editor at Universal City, and Albert G. Kenyon.

Although formerly scheduled for release in June, Universal will place "Bavu" in the hands of exhibitors long before that date. It probably will be released within the next fortnight. The Universal factory at Fort Lee, N. J., is busy making prints of the Jewel so that each exchange center may get its early prints without delay.

Exciting Flying Scenes in "Going Up"

That the flying scenes of "Going Up," Douglas MacLean's first starring vehicle for Associated Exhibitors, will be unusual is indicated by reports which Associated Exhibitors has received from the west coast. With the high-powered Italian Ballila, formerly belonging to Captain "Eddie" Rickenbacker, celebrated ace, and a speedy French pursuit plane seen in an actual race, picture-goers are certain to be treated to a most realistic aerial performance.

In his first starring feature MacLean is supported by a notable cast, including Marjorie Daw, Arthur Hull, Hallam Cooley, Edna Murphy, Hughie Mack, Wade Boteler, John Steppling, Lillian Langdon, Francis McDonald, and Mervyn LeRoy.

"Ninety and Nine" Has Forestry Approval

The United States Forest Service in Denver has sent letters to all the exhibitors in the Denver territory urging them to book "The Ninety and Nine" because of its sermon warning against the dangers of forest fires. The department is sending also to the exhibitors government slides to be used before the showing.

The Pennsylvania Department of Forestry is urging all the citizens of that State to see "The Ninety and Nine." They have put out 125,000 tack cards which read "The Ninety and Nine"—everybody loses when timber burns—Prevent Forest fires—It pays."

U. S. Commander Likes "Masters of Men"

"Masters of Men," the picturization by C. Graham Baker of Morgan Robertson's sea story, was submitted to the acid test when Lieutenant-Commander Foster of the Naval Recruiting Bureau, New York City, saw the picture. The United States Navy had lent to Vitagraph all possible aid in shooting those scenes dealing with life on board a man-of-war.

Lieutenant-Commander Foster praised the picture highly for its admirable fidelity to the United States Navy manners and customs and praised equally the scenes on board the four-master, where the two naval men are shanghaied. The picture will be shown on board every ship in the United States Navy.

"Masters of Men" is a David Smith production. The principal roles are played by Earle Williams, Alice Calhoun, Cullen Landis and Wanda Hawley.

C. B. C. Sells More Foreign Rights

A big deal was made this week, whereby the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation disposed of the entire world foreign rights on all its output, present and future. This gigantic transference of foreign rights was made by C. B. C. to Joseph Simmons, with offices in New York City, and provides that Mr. Simmons buy distribution rights to all the C. B. C. feature productions throughout the entire world, excluding the United States, Canada and Argentine.

It is announced that the four C. B. C. productions which are ready will be launched at once in the foreign market. These include "Her Accidental Husband," the first Edward Belasco production, and the first three C. B. C. Box Office Winners, "More to be Pitied," "Only a Shopgirl" and "Temptation," in the territory not disposed of already.

Horne Starts "Itching Palms" for F.B.O.

James W. Horne has begun work at the Film Booking Offices studio in Hollywood on "Itching Palms," a comedy drama, adapted by Wyndham Gittens and Helmer Bergman, F. B. O. scenarists, from the play "Jerry Comes Home," by Roy Briant. The story is laid in a small rural community and country types are said to provide many humorous moments.

In the cast are Tom Wilson, who was recently signed to a long term contract by F. B. O.; Virginia Fox, formerly leading woman with Buster Keaton and having her first dramatic role in this production; Tom Gallery, Victor Potel, Monte Collins, Tom Lingham and others.

The plot of "Itching Palms" centers about the theft of a large sum of money, and a sprightly and venturesome grandmother is one of the chief characters. This role is portrayed by Gertrude Claire, whose seventy-one years weigh lightly on her shoulders.

At left: Princess Thais Valkonsky, who appears in "Wandering Daughters," produced by James Young for First National. At right: Maurice Canonge, French comedian, who is cast in "Trilby," which Richard Walton Tully is to make for First National. Canonge will play "Zouzou."

"Suzanna" Praised at Capitol

N. Y. Reviewers Acclaim Mabel Normand in Mack Sennett Comedy Drama

MACK SENNETT'S comedy-drama feature, "Suzanna," starring Mabel Normand, made a distinct hit with public and critics when this Allied Producers and Exhibitors Corporation release had its Broadway premier, March 25, at the Capitol theatre, New York.

"Mabel Normand's appearances on the screen are regrettably infrequent," says Robert E. Sherwood in the Herald. "She has a remarkable flair for impudent comedy and the sparkle of her wit cannot be dimmed. 'Suzanna' is further enlivened by some beautiful scenes, beautifully photographed, and by a typical Mack Sennett chase at the finish."

"The next time any one raises the question, 'What is the matter with the movies?' we will suggest an answer. It is that Mabel Normand doesn't make half enough of them," said Beauvais Fox in the Tribune. "After seeing the picture we inclined to join the ranks of the select, many who look on Mack Sennett as the master mind of the movies."

"The principal features of this picture play are the uncommonly fine scenes showing horses racing in the distance, the remarkable ability of Mabel Normand to hang on behind her sweetheart while the chase is under way, and a horseback fight on the edge of a bluff made for the purpose of chilling the chillable," said Quinn Martin in the World.

"Mack Sennett's latest attempt at being serious," said the reviewer for the Times, "is a very good little love story of Spanish California in the early eighties. The bullfight scenes are quite effective."

"There's an exciting duel between the men, their horses never slackening their turious pace," said Grena Bennett in the American. "Mabel Normand acted Suzanna. Her art is flawless."

"Mabel Normand, under the excellent direction of Mack Sennett, made another hit at the Capitol in 'Suzanna,'" said the critic for the Evening Telegram.

"We've always contended that Mabel Normand was about the greatest screen comedienne and see absolutely no reason in the world for changing that opinion after sitting through her performance in 'Suzanna,'" said Don Allen in the Evening World.

"If Winter Comes" Is Close Adaptation

"If Winter Comes," which will be seen on Broadway shortly when the William Fox screen version opens an engagement in Times Square, promises to upset at least one of the rules for turning a "best seller" into a picture play, by being a faithful reproduction of the Hutchinson work.

There has been a general outcry against the way many producers have altered the plots of widely read novels. The scenario writer and the director of "If Winter Comes," have, it is claimed, put the English writer's work on the screen exactly as he wrote it.

"Wonders of the Sea" for Washington House

J. E. Williamson's undersea picture, "Wonders of the Sea," will be presented in Washington, D. C., by Harry Crandall, at the Metropolitan theatre, April 15. The showing will continue for one week.

"Wonders of the Sea" was exhibited, by request, before the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum on December 13, and the presentation was attended by Secretary of the Navy Denby and prominent staff officials.

Special Song Number to Exploit "Gimme"

One of the many exploitation aids for the Goldwyn-Rupert Hughes picture, "Gimme," is a song number of the same name written by Eddie Bonns, director of exploitation for Goldwyn, Lou Marangella, and George Fairman.

The song is described as a "Fox-trot" melody, and it is being successfully used by exhibitors throughout the country in advance of and during the showing of the picture. Goldwyn exploiteers are securing tie-ups with local music dealers in their respective territories, and a sweeping publicity and exploitation campaign is being carried on by the publishers in order to make it one of the outstanding song hits of the year.

"Gimme" is published by Jack Mills, Inc., New York.

F.B.O. Effects Tieup with Buick

Another exploitation tie-up has been put into effect by Film Booking Offices of America with the Buick Automobile Company in behalf of the "Fighting Blood" series now in course of filming at the F. B. O. studios in Hollywood.

When Gene Sarazen, American professional golf champion, and Jack Hutchison, former champion of Great Britain and the United States, recently visited the F. B. O. lot with Gene's brand new Buick sport model touring car, they posed with Ann Perdue, now appearing in "Daytime Wives," and Clara Horton, female lead in "Fighting Blood," with the young women seated in the auto and the golf champions on the running board.

These photographs, enlarged for window display, have been placed in the windows of more than 5,000 Buick distributors throughout the United States.

"Close Deal on "Little Red Schoolhouse"

W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Film Corporation, announces the closing of a contract with Messrs. Neufeld and Luchese of the DeLuxe Film Company, Philadelphia, whereby that company secures the rights to the Martin J. Heyl production, "The Little Red Schoolhouse," for Eastern Pennsylvania Southern New Jersey and Delaware.

"The Little Red Schoolhouse," made from the famous old stage play by Hal Reid,

Washington Sees Metro Features

Four Out of Five First Runs for Entire Week's Showing in Capitol Houses

FOUR feature attractions released by Metro Pictures Corporation were presented in first-run theatres of Washington during the week of March 5, each engagement being for a full week. Only one first-run theatre, the Metropolitan, showed a motion picture not a Metro attraction.

At the Columbia was "The Toll of the Sea," the first motion picture to be made by a new natural color process; Reginald Barker's production, "Hearts Aflame," was presented at the Rialto; Viola Dana in "Crinoline and Romance" was the feature at the Palace, and "The Forgotten Law," a Max Graf production, was shown at the Strand.

"The Toll of the Sea" was thus appraised by the Washington newspapers: "Marks a step toward perfection in the motion picture industry."—Star. "A marvelous achievement."—Post. "Anna May Wong, a Chinese actress of extraordinary promise."—Times.

Technicolor Pictures Corporation are the producers of this film, which is based on Frances Marion's story.

Reginald Barker's production, "Hearts Aflame," received equally laudatory notices: "One of the most impressive spectacles of its kind ever filmed."—Star. "A thrilling photoplay . . . really startling episodes."—Post. "Should be remembered long by all who see it."—Times.

This photoplay is a Metro-Louis B. Mayer production, based on Harold Titus' novel, "Timber."

Viola Dana in "Crinoline and Romance" was the subject of the following critical appraisals: "A worth while picture . . . enjoyable."—Times. "A very pleasant evening's entertainment." — Post. "An entertaining picture."—Star.

Bernard McConville prepared the story and scenario of this photoplay, which Harry Beaumont directed.

"The Life of Reilly," is the title of the C.C. Burr all-star two reel comedy, Charles Murray the principal comedian.

To Film Arabian Nights Tale

C. S. Clancy to Take Unit Abroad to Do "Ali Baba and 40 Thieves"

C. S. CLANCY, whose recent production "The Headless Horseman," featuring Will Rogers, is being shown throughout the country, has now completed arrangements to film an elaborate screen edition of that famous old Arabian Nights' tale "Ali Baba and Forty Thieves."

During the past six months Mr. Clancy has been preparing a continuity said to be filled with the dramatic excitement and emotional punch that the story itself lacks, and has picked out what he considers to be ideal exterior locations in the colorful city and province of Tunis in Northern Africa. The interiors will be taken in the Tec-Art Studios in New York.

While in Europe this winter Mr. Clancy arranged with agents in Paris and in Rome to send actors for the minor parts and "extras" direct to Tunis, but he will take all his principals and a large technical staff with him from New York when he sails for the Mediterranean the latter part of April.

Ned Van Buren, the cameraman who is responsible for the beautiful photographyin "The Headless Horseman," has been artistic scenes that have been planned for "Ali Baba," and Lejaren Hiller is to be art director.

To avoid climatic dangers in deferred negative development Mr. Clancy has arranged to take a complete laboratory equipment, laboratory men and cutters from New York to Tunis and will also carry projection and printing machines so that the exterior scenes will be completed and cut by the time the company returns to New York in June.

Negotiations for the members of an all-star cast are now in progress. A release contract is soon to be signed with one of the four largest distribution concerns and will be announced soon.

The production is expected to cost around $150,000 and will be released next fall.

Boast Strong Cast For "This Way Out"

Jack White is working an exceptionally good cast in the Educational-Mermaid Comedy, "This Way Out," now in the course of production at the United studios.

Commend Florence Vidor's Work

Reviewers of Fan Magazines Praise Interpretation of "Alice Adams"

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS' production, "Alice Adams," starring Florence Vidor, which has been scheduled for release on April 8, has been made the subject of considerable discussion in the columns of some of the fan movie publications. Miss Vidor's interpretation of the character created by Booth Tarkington has met with the approval of the reviewers who have already witnessed showings of the production. The favorable reception accorded the picture as well as Miss Vidor's past achievements have resulted in a heavy demand for first-run bookings, it is stated by Associated Exhibitors' home office.

In April issue of Photoplay Delight Evans lists this as "one of the six best pictures of the month," and Miss Vidor's individual work as "one of the six best performances" in recent pictures. Miss Evans places particular stress on the fact that the star and her director have taken absolutely no liberties with Mr. Tarkington's text. "A Prize Story has become a Prize Picture," says this commentator. "The photoplay is true to Tarkington and true to the highest film standards. Rowland Lee, in directing and adapting, has not transplanted Virgil Adams and his whining wife and their two children to the screen; he has simply made portraits of them. They are excellent likelinesses; there si no retouching to remind you that you are not really sitting in on the Adams family councils and quarrels. Florence Vidor understands Alice, and resists all temptations to make her a motion picture heroine. Miss Vidor has never done finer work. Claude Gillingwater plays her father, and what a performance!"

In Motion Picture for May Florence Vidor receives yet further recognition, Neysa McMein, well known as a painter and designer of magazine covers, placing her in a carefully selected list of "the six most beautiful women on the screen."

Choosing Gelatins for Various Color Harmonies for Effective Stage Presentation

Articles by Lee S. Ferguson

THE use of colored lights for effective presentation of prologues and the creation of atmosphere for the motion picture is an art in itself. To secure modified lighting in the theatre is extremely simple thru the use of colored gelatines, yet the selection of the proper combinations of colors to secure the desirable results, requires a great deal of care and study.

In the series of articles which have been presented on this page on the methods employed by Edward L. Hyman, it is possible to attain a general idea of the fundamentals and practices employed to work out proper color effects. In this article, Mr. Hyman brings out the way the different gelatines are standardized in use in his theatre.

Modified lighting lends an excellent opportunity for the individual exhibitor to display his individuality and gain much popularity for his theatre at relatively no outlay of expense. It may well be predicted that in the near future, effective colored lighting will be a demand that no motion picture exhibitor can ignore and the practical self-education along these lines is an excellent investment.

ON the desk of Edward L. Hyman there is a card about five by ten inches in size that shows about two dozen samples of colored gelatin. It is always within arm's reach, and serves its purpose when new sheets of the material must be ordered. Observation would disclose that the chief operator has an exact duplicate of this sample card in the projection room, and a third would be found in the sanctum of the stage manager. This triangular arrangement cuts down the chances of getting the wrong shade of gelatin when colors are bought. An inharmonious lighting effect is considered as disastrous by Hyman as a musical discord is to Bodanzky, and thus the very simple but particular system through which gelatins are bulletined and recorded when needed.

Of course there are several colors that Hyman does not use. Through experimentation and rehearsals he has discovered those which can evolve the best effects and has eliminated those that jar or do not offer contrast. Those which he manipulates to good advantage are amber, orange, red, magenta, dark violet, light blue, medium blue, dark blue, medium green and dark green. A blue-green or moonlight blue is used for flooding purposes quite often.

Certain Colors Not Used

Those colors which Hyman has eliminated are light lemon, dark lemon, medium and dark amber, light and dark red, rose pink and rose purple. Amber serves the purpose of the light and dark lemon; orange does the work of medium and dark amber; light and dark red offer nothing that cannot be brought out with plain red, and magenta answers for rose pink and rose purple.

Through the use of those colored gelatins which he has placed on the eligible list, and with lamps dipped in corresponding shades of colorine, Hyman has developed about fifty harmony combinations, offering variety enough to form an apparently endless parade of colors and shadings before the eyes if all were used at once. By using scrims and an assortment of curtains, and through various devices worked out from time to time the effects are changing constantly. Recently a complete orange combination was used for a number, with an almost unnoticeable degree of contrast. This contrast was in the foot lights of the small, or presentation stage, which were blue. All other stage and orchestra lighting was orange, as follows: Mestrum covering entire stage (flood); Kliegl flood on the orchestra; a huge transparent window at either side of the orchestra stage, lighted from behind; four 2,000-watt overhead spots on the orchestra; four arch spots, two up and two down, focused on the draw curtains, and two entrance spots focused on the ceiling and over the windows. As explained, all this lighting was orange with the exception of the blue foots on the small stage, and the effect was striking, to say the least.

Good Color Combination

An overture combination used not long ago had medium blue and green arch spots on the draw curtains, medium green transparent windows, light pink entrance spots on ceiling, four 2,000-watt overhead spots light green, one red and two blue coves, blue foots and green borders on the stage, magenta X-rays three-quarters, Mestrum deep pink flooding entire stage, and Kliegl flood medium blue on the orchestra. This more complex lighting idea is in many respects as fascinating to an audience as any combination that may be worked out, although a straight combination such as the orange described above draws and holds the attention because of its beauty.

For the week of March 18, orange was brought into play for the overture, which was "Tannhauser." This number started with the Pilgrim's Chorus from the well-known opera, and at about the center of the overture, as time goes, went into "Evening Star," the curtains parting on a special set with basso singer putting on the song. At the close of the song the orchestra took up the last part of the "Tannhauser" overture, which closes strong. The lighting at the beginning and leading up to the song number, and then to finish the overture following the song was as follows: Mestrum orange from the projection booth covering the entire stage, Kliegl orange on the members of the orchestra, borders on large stage (orchestra stage) full reds and whites one-half, transparent windows either side of the orchestra were orange, four orange 2,000-watt overhead spots on the orchestra, blue foots on small stage, magenta X-rays on small stage, and red cove lights.

Use of Tab Curtain

As the tab curtains parted for the vocal number, this front lighting was dimmed off, concentrating the attention upon the set and artist. Through a round opening in a black mask curtain mountains were seen on a back drop, lighted deep blue for night. Stars were in the sky, made possible by transparencies, with the Evening Star most prominent. The artist, in correct operatic costume, was lighted by a steel blue spot from the side.

The method of using the mask curtain offers much to any exhibitor who wishes to use a vocal number or tableau. The size of opening in the curtain may depend upon the space available for the number, and the shape of the opening may be round, oval, square, rectangular, star shaped or most anything wanted. All lighting may be back of the mask curtain, the gelatins on two or three spot lights giving the desired effect.

Description of the Motion Picture Camera

Explanation of the Basic Principles and Salient Feature of Apparatus

CHAPTER IV.

LONG before motion pictures were dreamed of, philosophers and medical men were conscious of persistency of vision. They knew from their experiences and the experiences of others, if they looked at a bright object, such as the sun or a lighted lamp and turned their eyes to a dark corner the image, or at least a bright spot, would remain before their eyes for a few moments. The brain retained the illumination that the eye had sent to it for a few moments. Experiments proved that this persistency of vision did not occur in the retina of the eye. Close inspection of the retina showed that the picture projected thereon by the lens of the eye vanished the instant the entering ray was cut off. Therefore scientists stated definitely that the illusion was centered in the brain. No further explanation has been made.

No human being or animal has ever been known to be without this peculiar trait. No human being or animal has been known to lose this persistency of vision. If a mortal could be found who did not possess it, when looking at moving pictures, he would see not pictures in motion but a number of "still" or inanimate pictures following one another very rapidly, each one perfectly still for about a sixteenth of a second.

What Motion Pictures Actually Are

Motion pictures are simply a number of snapshots run before a strong illuminating light and projected, by means of a powerful lens, upon a white screen or surface. Each picture is arranged so that it will stop for a fraction of a second and then move on, succeeded by another slighly different in appearance. The brain retains the image of the first picture and when the image of the second is telegraphed to it, by the sense of sight, the two blend and overlap and the spectator imagines he has seen but one image.

The camera in which the pictures are taken is similar to the projecting apparatus but instead of the light rays being emitted from the machine, as in the the case of the projecting machine, they are gathered in or admitted through the lens. The rays fall upon a long strip of sensitized film, the same as that used in small hand cameras, made into a continuous roll which is fed past the lens intermittently at the rate of sixteen exposures a second. A revolving shutter is used in both camera and projector to cut off the light while the film is moving and a new section is being drawn into position before the lens.

The motion picture camera is similar to the ordinary camera with the exception that it is provided with a mechanism for making exposures in rapid success on a ribbon of film. Sixteen pictures per second has been adopted as the standard speed for taking and projecting motion pictures. This rate was adopted after a long series of experiments to ascertain the least number of pictures necessary to produce upon the screen a moving picture which would not offend the eye by the flicker or pulsation due to the intermittent succession of light and darkness which produces the illusion of motion. If the number of pictures thrown upon the screen is less than sixteen per second, the persistency of vision is not sufficient to carry the impression of light over the intervening period of darkness. Although the eye may not be able to distinguish that the light is completely cut off while the next succeeding picture is being drawn into place, there is an unpleasant pulsation commonly called "flicker" which is very fatiguing and annoying. By increasing the number of alternate dark and light periods per second the persistency of vision is able to bridge the gap between the successive periods of light thrown on the screen. As the flashes increase in their rapidity, they gradually merge into a sensation of continuous light upon the screen without perceptible pulsation or flicker.

Flicker Perceptible at Sixteen Per Second

At sixteen pictures per second flicker is very perceptible so that many of the first cameras made were constructed to take many more than sixteen pictures per second. Some of them made as many as sixty-four exposures and used a film four times the area of the present standard. With the small returns obtainable from the exhibition of motion picture films in those days, this rendered the expense of taking motion pictures almost prohibitive. The present narrow width of film was adopted to cut down expense.

It was also found that it was not necessary to take so many pictures to produce satisfactory illusion of motion. However, flicker is unpleasant when the number of light flashes is less than thirty per second. Sixteen pictures per second produce a satisfactory illusion of motion so instead of taking and projecting thirty or more pictures per second, a second blade or flicker blade was placed upon the shutter of the projection machine. This intercepted the light for an instant while the individual pictures stood still upon the screen so that there were two flashes of light for each picture.

Any camera mechanism which records the successive pictures upon the sensitive film is satisfactory—there is no need of a flicker blade except to make a perfect record for reproduction.

It is highly desirable that the pictures be accurately spaced at the standardized distance of three-quarters of an inch from center to center or sixteen pictures per foot. Each successive picture when thrown upon the screen will be as nearly as possible in perfect register, that is in exactly the same place upon the screen. If this is not done an unpleasant jumpiness or wavering of the picture will result.

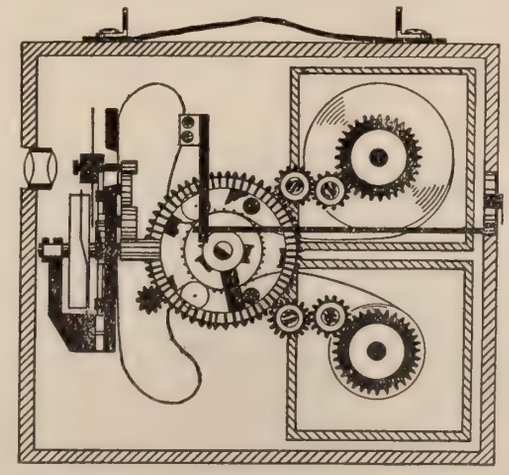

Diagram of the mechanism of the Universal Camera. A single sprocket camera with harmonic cam movement

In recording, that is in photographing, a motion picture at the rate of sixteen per second, there are several operations in making each frame or picture which must be accomplished in one-sixteenth part of a second. It is not possible to utilize all of this sixteenth part of a second in making the exposure because the film must be drawn down into position for a succeeding epxosure before the next sixteenth part of a second. During this very short period of time, it is necessary to cut off the light from the lens by means of the shutter, draw the film down accurately just three-fourths of an inch, hold it in place, and expose it to the image from the lens long enough to impress that image upon the sensitive surface, then completely cover the film exposed in the frame aperture before repeating this cycle of operations. All must take place in the sixteenth part of a second.

It will be appreciated that a mechanism which fulfills these conditions must be accurately and substantially constructed and be able to perform this cycle of operations many thousands of times without appreciable wear. It is possible to construct an intermittent mechanism which will draw the film down so rapidly that only a fifth or sixth part of this sixteenth of a second is used in changing the film, but such a mechanism wears out many times more rapidly than one which takes a longer time to pull the film down for the next exposure.

Accepted Practice in Camera Construction

In constructing a camera, therefore, it has been the generally accepted practice to use an intermittent mechanism, comparatively slow in moving the film up and to make up for its slowness by increasing the "rapiidty" or "speed" of the film. Although these words are not correct, they are often used to indicate the sensitiveness of the photographic emulsion. Sensitiveness of the film is its ability to record the lens image in a given time.

There are many types of camera movement, but the best of these is probably the harmonic cam. This is often called the Lumiere, or the Lumiere-Carpentier movement, as it was first used in a camera of that name. The harmonic cam is a triangular cam with curved sides, working between two guides which it moves up and down as it revolves. As it accomplishes the downward movement of the fingers in a third of a revolution, it permits of a larger shutter opening than any other movement in general use.

The Geneva, or Maltese Cross movement, has been used in camera construction, and while it gives a quicker downward pull of the film than the harmonic cam, it has several disadvantages which preclude its use. In the Geneva movement the downward draw of the film is accomplished in about an eighth of a revolution, but, as this movement has four bearing surfaces which are liable to wear unevenly it has not found much favor as a camera

Direct Current Circuits

Lesson III—Part II

An electric circuit is the means whereby energy, in the form of electricity, is carried from the point where it is generated to another point where it is changed to a different form of energy.

There are three essential parts to every electric circuit. These are: The Generator Circuit, which consists of the generator, together with its resistance, switches and the necessary connecting wires; the Feeder Circuit, consisting of the wires which carry the electricity from the point where generated to the point where it is used; the Local Circuit, which consists of the apparatus required to change the electricity into directly useful energy, the auxiliary apparatus, such as resistances (where motors are used) and the local connecting wires. Fig. 21 shows an electric circuit divided into these three fundamental parts.

It must be understood that the circuit shown is a very simple one, devoid of much of the special auxiliary apparatus ordinarily used in such circuits. In the figure, G is the generator; S and S_1 are the switches controlling each end of the main circuit; M is a motor being supplied current by the generator, and R is its controlling resistance.

Polarity of the Generator

The direction in which a current flows through a circuit depends upon the direction in which the armature of the generator turns. If the armature revolves in a certain direction current will flow one way; if the direction of the armature is reversed, the current will flow the opposite way. This gives rise to what is known as polarity of generators (direct current only). For a certain given direction of revolution, one brush of the generator is called positive (marked +) and the other is called minus (marked —). If the direction of the armature is now reversed so that the positive changes to negative and the negative changes to positive. Outside of the generator the current always flows from + (positive) to — (negative).

The circuit wires connected to the brushes of the generator take the same polarity as the brushes. Thus, the wire connected to the positive brush would be the positive of the circuit. In order to determine the polarity of the wires of a direct current circuit put both wires into a glass of water. Do not touch them together. Little bubbles will be seen to come off of one wire. This is the negative. The polarity of the wires should always be marked on the switch or switchboard and should then never be changed. It is very important, in the case of the direct current projection arc, that the positive wire be connected to the top carbon.

Resistance of Feeder Circuit

An electric circuit can be looked upon as being composed of a number of resistances connected up in different ways. Besides the electrical machinery connected in the circuit the resistance of the connecting wires also plays an important part. This is particularly true in the case of the wires connecting the Generator and Local Circuits; i. e., the Feeder Circuit. Since these wires are sometimes very long the voltage drop due to them must be considered when planning a circuit.

In last week's article we saw how to calculate what might be called the absolute resistance of a conductor. We will now apply this newly acquired knowledge to calculating the resistance of the Feeder Circuit shown in Fig. 22. In this illustration, G is the generator with the polarity of the brushes marked as shown; E_g is the voltage at the brushes of the generator; S and S_1 are switches controlling the circuit; E_t is the terminal voltage of the local circuit; i. e., the voltage across the local switch; A is a projection arc drawing 50 amperes from the generator, and R is its controlling resistance.

Now the voltage E_t will not be as great as E_g of the generator because of the drop in the feed wires. It is our problem to find out what this voltage drop is so that E_t may be known.

The first step will be to find what size of wire is necessary to carry the 50 amperes flowing through the line. Table IV (page 1712) shows that for rubber covered insulation, a No. 6 wire (extreme left hand column) is required to carry 50 amperes. The area of the wire in circular mils is shown in the third column. It is 26,250. Our problem is now to find the resistance of two copper wires, each 200 feet long and having an area of 26,250 circular mils.

The resistance formula will appear as follows (assuming a temperature of 20° C.):

$$R = \frac{2 \times K \times L}{A}$$

$$R = \frac{2 \times 10.37 \times 200}{26{,}250}$$

$$R = 0.16 \text{ ohms}$$

The voltage drop through these wires, when each is carrying 50 amperes, will be

$$E = I\,R$$

$$E = 50 \times 0.16$$

$$E = 8.0 \text{ volts}$$

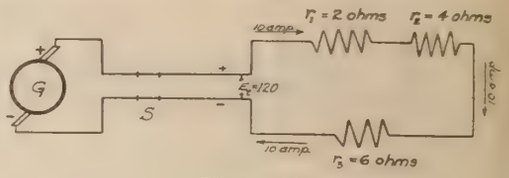

Figure 23

so that E_t will be equal to $E_g - 8 = 110 - 8 = 102$ volts. The power loss in the wires will be

$$P = I^2\,R$$

$$P = 50 \times 50 \times 0.16$$

$$= 2{,}500 \times 0.16$$

$$= 400 \text{ watts (0.4 kw.)}$$

Resistance of Local Circuit

Wires are also required in the Local Circuit to connect the various pieces of apparatus together electrically. The resistance of these wires, however, can usually be neglected, as they are seldom long enough to cause a serious drop in voltage.

We are more concerned, in the local circuit, with the resistances of the various pieces of apparatus forming it. In Fig. 23 is shown such a circuit together with the generator supplying it with power. This latter item can be forgotten for the moment and only that portion of the diagram to the right of the switch S need be considered. It is also assumed that the generator is so close at hand that the resistance of the feeder circuit can be neglected.

The thing we wish to find out is, "What effect will the three resistances r_1, r_2, and r_3 have upon the voltage of the circuit ($E_t = 120$ volts)? In other words, what current will flow as a result of these resistances being connected as shown?

Thanks to the efforts of early scientists a law is known which governs this relation and tells us what we wish to know. This law, known as Kirchoff's Law, says, "The algebraic sum of all the voltages acting in a closed circuit is equal to zero." By algebraic sum, as used above, is meant the following. Every voltage acting in a closed circuit has a sign placed before it which tells the direction in which the voltage is acting. Thus all the voltages acting in one direction have a plus (+) sign before them, while all the voltages acting in the opposite direction have a minus (—) sign before them. It is somewhat similar to polarity of wires in a direct current circuit. When no sign is shown it is understood that the voltage has a plus sign before it.

Applying this law to the circuit shown in Fig. 23 we see that E_t, the terminal voltage, acts in such a direction as to force current through the resistances. Suppose we call this voltage plus. We also know that each resistance trys to prevent current from flowing and causes a voltage drop, e = ir. Since these voltages buck the terminal voltage they must all be acting in the opposite direction to it and hence have the opposite sign which is minus. Now Kirchoff's Law says that the sum of all these voltages, with proper regard to their respective signs, is equal to zero.

This can be expressed as an equation as follows:

$$(-Ir_1)+(-Ir_2)+(-Ir_3)+(+E_t) = 0 \quad (1)$$

and since $e = ir$,

$$(-e_1)+(-e_2)+(-e_3)+(+E_t) = 0$$

removing the brackets we have

$$-e_1-e_2-e_3+E_t = 0$$

adding $-e_1-e_2-e_3$ to each member

$$E_t = e_1+e_2+e_3$$

In order to determine the final sign when the voltage is enclosed in brackets the following rules can be used:

$$-[-e] = +e = e$$
$$+[-e] = -e$$
$$-[+e] = -e$$
$$+[+e] = +e = e$$

Now the first equation (marked (1)) can also be written

$$E_t = Ir_1 + Ir_2 + Ir_3$$

Since I is present in each term of the right member we can factor as follows (the word factor means to take the same quantity from each term):

$$E_t = I\ (r_1 + r_2 + r_3)$$

Now $(r_1 + r_2 + r_3)$ is the total resistance, R, of the local circuit so we can also say remembering that R (total resistance) $= (r_1 + r_2 + r_3)$.

Thus in order to find the current flowing in Fig. 23 when $r_1 = 2$ ohms, $r_2 = 4$ ohms and $r_3 = 6$ ohms and when $E_t = 120$ volts, we proceed as follows:

$$E_t = I\ (r_1 + r_2 + r_3)$$

divide each side by

$$(r_1 + r_2 + r_3)$$

$$\frac{E_t}{(r_1 + r_2 + r_3)} = I$$

$$\frac{120}{(2+4+6)} = I$$

$$I = 10 \text{ amperes}$$

Since this is a series circuit (all the resistance are in series, one behind the other) the same current flows through each resistance so that the drop across each is as follows:

$$e_1 = Ir_1 = 10 \times 2 = 20 \text{ volts}$$
$$e_2 = Ir_2 = 10 \times 4 = 40 \text{ volts}$$
$$e_3 = Ir_3 = 10 \times 6 = 60 \text{ volts}$$

and since

$$E_t = e_1 + e_2 + e_3$$
$$E_t = 20 + 40 + 60$$
$$E = 120 \text{ volts}$$

also, in order to check Kirchoff's Law

$$-e_1-e_2-e_3+E_t = 0$$
$$-20-40-60+120 = 0$$

Big Demand for Slide-O-Graph Reported

The Standard Slide Corporation of New York City reports exceptionally heavy sales on the new "Slide-o-Graph," the automatic advertising machine for theatre lobbies. This apparatus permits the showing of the most interesting scene of each coming feature and also vaudeville acts in the front of the lobby, thus keeping all those who pass the theatre informed concerning the daily program and feature attractions at an exceptionally low advertising cost to the exhibitor. "Slide-o-Graphs" use attractively colored slides and are effective both day and night.

Predict J. J. Harner's Return to Industry

Many expressions of hope that the Sun Light Arc Corporation which went into bankruptcy early in the year, would resume business activities, have reached J. Justice Harmer, president of the company, and these expressions have laid emphasis upon the belief that Mr. Harmer, who made the Sun Light arc the factor it is in this industry, would be especially welcome as the head of a stronger and more solidly established Sun Light Arc Corporation.

The Sun Light Arc Corporation was organized with Mr. Harmer as president in 1918, and found itself confronted with many adverse business conditions, due to the general situation of the country at that time. The Sun Light arc has been of vital importance for the economic production of pictures.

Westinghouse Develops New Type of Heater

A new type of heater, known as the Type MP heater, to be used especially in ticket booths, has been designed by the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company.

The heater, which is 20 inches in length, is easy to install and requires little space as it can be attached to the side of the booth by screws. The resistance units are mounted inside and the heater is of all-steel fireproof construction, making it safe and reliable. It will serve also as a foot rest for the person occupying the booth and the danger of damage to footwear is eliminated by reason of the foot rest on the heater being sufficiently removed from the cover protecting the resistance units by an air space. A three-heat snap switch also insures the right amount of heat.

The heaters are of black Japan finish and are supplied for 110 and 220 volt circuits.

Davidson of Norwich, Ct., to Build

Indications are that Willimantic, Conn., is to have another motion picture house, as a result of the Abe Davidson of Norwich, Conn., buying from Joseph Giraca a lot on Main street, in the former city, having a frontage of 40 and depth of 169 feet. For some time, Mr. Davidson has been looking over available sites in this city, with the admitted intention of building another screen-program playhouse.

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

The skill of the camera man must not be sacrificed in printing—Eastman Positive Film carries the quality of the negative through to the screen.

Eastman Film, both regular and tinted base—now available in nine colors, is identified throughout its length by the words "Eastman" "Kodak" stenciled in black letters in the transparent margin.

movement. Should one side, for instance, wear a trifle more than the other three sides, every fourth picture in the negative would be slightly out of register with the other three. In addition to this, slight variations in the thickness of the negative film, or its pliability, cause it to ride the intermittent sprocket more or less snugly, causing a variation in the frame line, or an up and down movement of the picture.

The Revolving Cam

The harmonic cam, on the other hand, revolves once for each frame taken. Any small amount of wear, being the same for each successive picture, is not appreciable. This wear may be readily taken up in most constructions by loosening two screws which hold one of the guides between which the cam runs, and the guides may be adjusted firmly against the cam. The shutter opening with the Lumiere movement may be greater than 180 degrees, which is much more than any other mivement in common use. The shutter blade could be reduced to 120 degrees were it not for the fact that it must have an additional width sufficient to cover the aperture opening, so that the smallest shutter blade that can be used in any movement is that fraction of a revolution during which the film moves downward plus a segment wide enough to completely cover the aperture opening from corner to corner. The Pathé, Prevost, the Universal, the Gillon, and many other makes of cameras, use the harmonic cam.

Almost all other movements are some variation of the rod and crank principle. That is, a rod, or other connection, fitted to a crank pin on the shutter shaft actuates the up and down movement of the claws. Since the downward movement of the crank is one-half of a revolution, no rod and crank motion can have as wide a shutter opening as the harmonic cam. Some of them decrease the time in which the film is moved down by having a crank whose throw is greater than the distance from picture to picture, and use only a portion of the crank throw for drawing the film down, the engagement of the pins or claws witih the film taking place after the crank has commenced to move downward and releasing before the crank reaches the bottom of its throw.

There are many variations of the rod and crank movement. In the Pittman model the fingers are upon springs actuated by a crank. The fingers move in a circular path except when drawing down the film, where they are forced to subtend a chord of the circle by a friction plate in the plane through which the film moves. This friction plate being struck 16 times per second by the revolving spring claws makes this movement a very noisy one. In the Williamson movement a small arc-shaped slot guides the pins in an approximately straight line during the period of their engagement with the film. In other movements a double crank is used, giving both the in and out and up and down movement to the claws. A third variety of movement which was much used a few years ago was called the slip claw movement. In this movement the claws were ratchet-shaped and in their upward travel slipped along the perforation as a pawl slips over a ratchet.

Faults with a Particular Movement

The Pathé Frères formerly made an amateur model which used the slip claw movement. The slip claw movement has almost entirely gone out of use because it could not be reversed. No matter in which direction the crank of the camera was turned the slip claws would pull the film down in the same direction. An inadvertent throwing back of the crank, for even a fraction of a revolution, would cause the film to lose its upper loop. Unless there was a great nicety of adjustment between the friction at the gate and the pressure of the spring claws they were liable to push the film backward on their upward travel, causing the frames to overlap, thereby making what is called a creep in the film.

The in and out movement, or the movement of the pins in and out of the perforation, is accomplished in various cameras by many different methods. A positive in and out movement is much to be preferred over one which is accomplished by some sort of spring pressure. A positive in and out movement is one in which the pins are pressed in and withdrawn by a mechanical movement, such as a cam or drunken screw. In the Pathé or Gillon types the in and out movement is accomplished by a drunken screw. A drunken screw is a thread having an irregular pitch, the thread used for the in and out movement being a continuous one with the contours so placed as to force the pins into the perforations at the beginning of the downward throw of the cam and withdraw them at the bottom of the throw. In the Prevost movement the in and out throw of the pins is accomplished by small harmonic cams of the same design as the larger cam which produces the up and down movement. Most of the rod and crank types of movement have a cam working against a spring to push the fingers in and out, the cam pressing the fingers in and the spring pushing them out when released by the cam. It is possible to operate a movement of this type so fast that the spring does not have an opportunity to withdraw the fingers quickly enough, thereby causing creeping and losing of the loop. The Ernemann camera has a rod and crank movement with cam and spring for the in and out finger movement.

As nearly all parts of a camera movement, shift backward and forward 16 times per second they are subjected to a great deal of wear. All of these parts subject to wear must, of course, be kept constantly but lightly lubricated, and should be provided with means for adjustment so that there is the least possible amount of play between bearing surfaces. The finger shuttle, that is a frame bearing the fingers, which moves up and down, is carried in some sort of guides which should be provided with adjustable gibs for taking up wear.

The shutter is the revolving blade which cuts off the light from the lens while the film is being moved downward for the next picture, or exposure. The circular revolving shutter is so universally used in motion picture cameras that it is almost unnecessary to take any other type into consideration. The shutter should consist of two blades, one of which is set immovably with a minimum area for keeping the aperture closed during the downward movement of the film. Another blade should be provided which may be adjusted so as to decrease the opening in the shutter by revolving it past the fixed blade, so that the opening may be entirely closed if necessary. While it is preferable to use the maximum opening of the shutter in most instances, there are many times when it is desirable, for various reasons, to cut down the exposure by means of the shutter opening instead of a smaller diaphragm opening.

The Shutter Dissolve

A means for decreasing the shutter opening while the camera is in operation is called a shutter dissolve. By its employment are obtained such effects as fade-outs, fade-ins, dissolves, etc. There are two types of shutter dissolve, the automatic and the hand operated. In the automatic dissolve the pressure of a button on the camera throws a clutch into operation that closes the movable shutter blade gradually in a predetermined number of feet of film. With the hand operated dissolve the shutter may be closed gradually by hand in any length of film desired. Generally neither one of these features is provided by camera manufacturers, one of the few exceptions being the Bell & Howell camera, which has an automatic dissolve incorporated in the camera mechanism. So desirable is this form of dissolve that most professional cameramen have had them installed in their cameras by some mechanic who makes a specialty in cinematographic machinery. It is to be expected that most manufacturers will meet the demand for this device in their later models of cameras.

Choosing the Camera

One of the hardest problems for the student motion picture photographer is the choice of a camera. The popularity of motion pictures has caused many inventors and promotors to place miniature or toy motion picture outfits on the market. While such cameras and projectors may have a field of their own among amateurs who have no serious intention of coming professional motion picture photographers, they are of little use for any other purpose.

The reason for their existence is the decreased cost in the operation, by reason of the very small film which they use. This puts them within the reach of those who could not otherwise afford the expense of private production. In some cases, they may be a boon to a student with professional aspirations whose financial position will not permit the purchase of apparatus using standard film. In general, however, the use of toy or miniature picture apparatus by those for whom the contents of this book are intended, is strongly deprecated. In the first place, cheap cameras using standard film may be purchased for the same price as a good miniature camera. In the second place, there is always a chance that the owner or user of a standard camera may be able to dispose of his production in some commercial way. On the other hand, there is no chance for the operator of the miniature camera to obtain any financial return of the expenditure which he has made.

By judicious forethought, the owner of a standard camera may conduct his experiments with very short lengths of film, using only a foot or two at a time. The cost of material need not influence even those whose financial restrictions are most stringent.

Buying Cheap Camera for Serious Work

It must be understood that the purchase of a cheap camera for serious work is not recommended. By all means, purchase the highest grade of camera that your means will allow. Generally speaking, the price of a camera is in fairly direct proportion to the quality of work which it will produce. A cheap camera produces poor work because the manufacturer cannot afford to put accurate workmanship into it. On the other hand, some of the better makes of the cheaper cameras will produce pictures for certain purposes, which are almost, if not quite, as satisfactory as those made by a much higher priced instrument. It would be ridiculous for a man who expected to use his camera only for taking a few topical events for exhibition in a local theatre to buy an expensive studio outfit with an equipment of lenses, diaphragms, hoods, and dissolves, when a cheaper camera would do perfectly well for his purpose.

So many different types and brands of cameras have been placed on the market that it is not possible to give a description of all of them here, but most of the principal types are shown in the illustrations and the reader must depend upon his judgment in selecting the type of instrument best adapted to his requirements.

Ease of Threading Important

The ease or difficulty with which the film may be threaded through the camera has an important bearing upon its usefulness. As a rule, a camera of a straight line threading, that is, one in which there are no twists in the film in its passage through the camera, is the simplest and most desirable. On the other hand, the more compact models, in which the retorts are placed side by side, cannot be threaded without a twist in the film.

The general rule for threading the camera is as follows:

Place the feed retort in position.

Pull out as much film as is needed to thread the camera.

Pass the film over the feed sprocket and open the gate.

Place the film smoothly between the side guides with the emulsion towards the lens.

Close the gate carefully and latch, leaving a loop of film between the feed sprocket and the upper portion of the gate large enough so that pulling the film down in the gate for six perforations will not draw the loop taut between the sprocket and the top of the gate, and yet not so large that the loop will strike any portion of the camera mechanism.

Then leave another similar loop at the bottom of the gate.

Carry the film around the take-up sprocket beneath the rollers through the light trap in the retort to the spool in the take-up sprocket and the take-up spool.

Fasten the cover of the take-up magazine

Give the handle a turn to see that the film is feeding through properly and close the camera.

The film in the feed retort must be wound so that when the retort is in place the film is threaded properly, the emulsion side of the film in the gate toward the lens. In straight line threading the loop is not a true loop but only slackness in the film to provide for a quick downward movement of that portion of the film within the gate when it is dragged down by the claws.

In cameras with the magazines side by side a true, or return, loop must be made in the film between the feed sprocket and the gate and between the gate and the take-up sprocket Types of the double return loop threading are found in the DeBrie, Pathé Portable and Newman & Sinclair cameras.

The Prevost, carrying its magazines side by side on top of the camera, is an exception, the feed magazine being directly above the feed sprocket and gate, feeds downward in a straight line and simple loop into the gate. From the bottom of the gate it goes upward and to the right in a long single loop, without a twist, to the take-up sprocket, where it feeds directly into the take-up retort. The return, or true, loop is the same sort of a loop as would be formed by wrapping a piece of film in a spiral direction about a round object, while the simple loop of straight threading is merely a slackness in the film without any other twist or turn.

In addition to the simple directions given here there are a number of variations in different cameras which provide rollers for guiding the film in various directions. For example, in the old style Gillon a roller is provided which brings the film in a straight line from the reed retort, from whence it passes over another roller before passing to the feed sprocket; the object of the second roller being to engage the film around a greater part of the circumference of the feed sprocket, in which only two teeth would engage the film around a greater arc of the sprocket's circumference.

H. F. O'Brien Now with Electrical Products Corp.

H. F. O'Brien who was formerly with the Los Angeles branch of the Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co., and later electrical engineer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is now sales engineer for the Electrical Products Corporation of Los Angeles, Cal. Mr. O'Brien has had exceptional opportunities to study all the various engineering phases of the motion picture industry and is probably one of the best informed men in this industry. J. K. Brady who was foreman under Mr. O'Brien is now electrical engineer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The Electrical Products Corporation is now entering the motion picture field for the purpose of supplying complete electrical equipment.

The accompanying photograph shows views of their 150 K.W. portable sub-station which was built by Mr. O'Brien for the Lasky studios. This is the largest and most complete portable sub-station in the motion picture industry. The tower is of Shelby steel tubing and can be raised and lowered by one man. The manner in which the 2,200 volt wiring was made eliminates any bending of the 2,200 volt cables.

Simplex

A WORD TO THE MAN IN THE SMALL THEATRE

The Simplex projector used in the largest theatres in the big cities offers the finest sort of an investment to the owners of the smaller type of out-of-town theatres.

The original cost of the Simplex is no greater than that of other machines.

Its construction qualifies the Simplex for years of service.

Its operating and upkeep costs are surprisingly low.

Simplex improvements adaptable to machines already in use assure you of an up-to-date machine for years to come.

Simplex distributors in the larger cities provide Simplex service to you.

WHY NOT INVEST IN A SIMPLEX NOW?

Gentlemen:

It gives me great pleasure to write you this unsolicited letter commending the work of your organization on the release prints of "The Christian", which I photographed for Maurice Tourneur at the Goldwyn studio.

It is an inspiration to the man at the crank to know that whatever of beauty he gets on the negative will not be lost, but enhanced, in the laboratory.

The motion picture is, necessarily, the product of many minds and hands, and its effect can be marred by any one weak link in the chain. I commend your work to the confidence - and the patronage - of my fellow craftsmen.

Sincerely yours,

Charles J. Van Enger

"The COVERED WAGON"
A JAMES CRUZE PRODUCTION
ALMOST unbelievably stupendous was the task that Paramount undertook in making "The Covered Wagon." The possibilities of the story and the theme are so great that Paramount felt justified in making it without regard to cost, time or any limitations.
An entire studio had to be transported into the desert, eighty miles from a railroad.
On the following page you will find further FACTS about this picture.

"The COVERED WAGON"

Fording the River

One of the many thrills in "The Covered Wagon"

THE scenes in which the 300 wagons ford a mile-wide rushing torrent were made at great risk, for men and horses actually had to swim for their lives. This episode provides such thrills as are seldom seen on the screen. It is REAL—and shows it.

This is one of the things which make "The Covered Wagon" the greatest show in all screen history.

IN

"PRODIGAL DAUGHTERS"

The greatest box-office picture Gloria Swanson ever had! A tremendous heart-drama, with the dizzy pace set by our modern jazz-mad daughters as a background. Theodore Roberts, Ralph Graves, Vera Reynolds, Robert Agnew, and Louise Dresser in the cast.

A SAM WOOD PRODUCTION

A Paramount Picture

Screen version by Monte M. Katterjohn—From the sensational novel by Joseph Hocking

Another advantage in being a Paramount exhibitor is that you don't have to worry about accessory service.

The Paramount Press Sheets on every Paramount picture offer you the work of the best advertising brains in the industry at a purely nominal cost.

Above is the 4-column Press Sheet ad on "Prodigal Daughters." Your Exchange has mats and electros.

Chicago Patrons Roll In Seats At Turpin Comedy

"'The Shriek of Araby' is a delightfully funny farce comedy and Ben Turpin is just as amusing as ever," says Exhibitors Herald. "At Barbee's Loop theatre, Chicago, patrons rolled around in their seats.

"Will prove satisfactory entertainment with audiences.

"There are bathing girls and swimming pools and everything a Mack Sennett comedy usually has, and the action is fast and furious."

"Worth Watching For" National Board of Review

"Mack Sennett again, with Ben Turpin staring out of focus," says Exceptional Photoplays, under the head "Worth Watching For." "A great team.

"'The Shriek of Araby' drives the nails of satire with such accuracy into a certain type of picture that it leaves it a ludicrous hide flapping on a public fence.

"Lovers of good jokes must cry again, Hail, Sennet and Turpin!"

"THE GIRL I LOVED"

By James Whitcomb Riley

Direction by Joseph De Grasse

A Star and a Picture For All Audiences!

The inimitable Charles Ray in the kind of role that made him a great star and a wonderfully popular favorite with all kinds of audiences.

"The Girl I Loved" is that sure-fire type of film that combines romantic drama, tear-compelling heart appeal and thrilling melodrama. It wins!

"Ray's Stock Ought To Climb Several Points"

"Charles Ray's remarkable acting makes 'The Girl I Loved' one of his very best pictures," says M. P. World. "Charles Ray stock ought to climb several points as a result.

"It is a success from a production viewpoint and ought to prove a financial success for exhibitors.

"For fine suppressed acting one hardly can expect a better style than that exhibited by Ray; and for melodrama one must give him due credit in the scenes where he is in the runaway, and afterward. The settings are beautiful."

A photoplay made to order to please the most discriminating audiences in the world, " CAN A WOMAN LOVE TWICE " has won its way into the finest theatres in the land. In bookings and in its power to draw capacity houses everywhere it is proving its peerless quality.

Its sheer photodramatic qualities make it a thing far apart from the average run of ordinarily good pictures. It is more than a good picture—it is an offering of such a degree of excellence that it stands out as a beacon of de luxe showmanship in a foggy sea of mediocrity. It is the ONE picture in a thousand.

You, Mr. Showman, know that your audiences appreciate the finer things of life. You know that the public always pays for excellence. Here it is—a truly excellent photodrama with an appeal that will add prestige to your house and big profits to your till. Show it—NOW!

"I AM truly enraptured at the magnificent and artistic manner in which you have interpreted my novel. I consider it superior to any film I have ever seen. It is better in many respects than 'The Four Horsemen' because of the excellence of the actors and the magnificence of the sets. No author could desire anything finer for his work. I am sure it will be a great success.

SPEAKING of April showers—

If the rain keeps up, it'll be raining lilies all over his chest—and he won't even know that it's raining.

Of course, he can't control the weather. But he can do one of two things:

He can cut out the French pastry of Super-Specials that mean excess baggage and no nourishment. That will reduce his waste and his waist line.

Or he can get an umbrella big enough to keep the rain out. If he's a real wise bird, he can do both by booking the First Eight PREFERRED PICTURES. Good in any weather.

The Big Box-Office Picture of The Year!

Variety:

This is a picture Goldwyn could have taken and shown for a run in some legitimate house on Broadway during the coming summer, and put it over for three months at least.

Danny Says:

This is a clean-up. An enormous amount of real audience appeal in the picture. The novelty of the idea and the manner in which it has been carried out will put it over for you with a bang.

Morn. Telegraph:

You can please some of the people some of the time with some of the pictures, but you can please all of the people all of the time with "Souls for Sale."

Ranked in the Year's Best 12

When J. O. Spearing of the New York Times came right square out and "liked" a motion picture, the distributors in New York got up and cheered. He was that "tough" as a critic. Look in the panel below and see what he did to "MILADY"—put in as one of the year's best. E. V. Durling of the New York Globe repeats Spearing's comment and says "everybody agrees with it." Says further "it is acknowledged as being one of the best films of the year." We say to exhibitors that this great romantic melodrama is better than eight out of every ten pictures you play in your theatres.

SOMEWHAT ahead of time, but occasioned by circumstances which make its immediate appearance seem suitable, the report of this department on the motion-picture productions of the first quarter of 1923 is herewith presented, the period covered being considered as closing on March 15.

The year has made an encouraging beginning. There has been a depressing amount of cheap and stupid stuff, of course, but of such is the film world largely filled all the time.

The present writer ventures to recommend the following as the most worthwhile of the longer films seen by him in and around the Broadway district between Jan. 1 and March 15, 1923, the order being alphabetical:

DANGEROUS AGE, THE—The story of a middle-aged man whose fancy wanders—and comes

DRIVEN—The outstanding photoplay of the year so far—and probably further Except for the end-

HEAD HUNTERS OF THE SOUTH SEAS—Martin Johnson and his wife go among the HOTTENTOT, THE—Douglas MacLean, Raymond Hatton, a horse, an exceedingly expert camera.

HUNTING BIG GAME IN AFRICA WITH GUN AND CAMERA—The entertaining, as well

MAD LOVE—The vivid Pola Negri convinces you that she is a real person in an erotic Camille-

MILADY—Further and exciting adventures of the Three Musketeers, but not in the style of the Fairbanks film—less spectacular but more Gallic. Appreciatively directed by Henri Diamant Berger. Produced in France. (American Releasing.)

MR. BILLINGS SPENDS HIS DIME—A light and trivial farce, stretched beyond its

PEG O' MY HEART—The stage play too literally reproduced but vivified by the re-

PILGRIM, THE—Charlie Chaplin, that's all—that's enough. As an escaped convict,

OTHELLO—This German film is heavy, and it is not Shakespeare, but there is SECOND FIDDLE—A Film Guild production, which falls below "The Cradle Bus

A First National Picture

The story of a girl who married a beggar to save a kingdom and found herself a princess - One of the most thrilling tales of love, romance and adventure ever presented.

B. P. Schulberg presents

Katherine MacDonald

The prince sprang to the rescue – from "REFUGE"

"Will you forgive me?" from "MONEY-MONEY-MONEY"

"Someone had loaded the revolver" from "HEROES & HUSBANDS"

"Stop! how dare you bring my name into your quarrel" – from "WHITE SHOULDERS"

"Refuge"

The American beauty in her latest picture, a melodramatic tale of adventure in a mythical kingdom on "The Prisoner of Zenda" type. A most unusual love story set in a gorgeous background and with action that is fast and furious every minute. If your patrons like straight from the shoulder thrills and strong melodrama, this is what you want.

"Money, Money, Money"

A story with a Main Street setting, a most timely topic as you know. A happy combination of a good story, a beautiful star and good direction makes this one a big success. Adapted by Hope Loring from the story by Larry Evans. Directed by Tom Forman. It should appeal to every lover of good, clean screen entertainment.

"Heroes and Husbands"

A beautiful romance of high society with the up-to-the-minute question of a woman's sphere in life. One that is sure to appeal to the women, and one which the men will enjoy as thoroughly. A love story with a deep mystery angle and plenty of thrills in gorgeous settings. Story by Charles A. Logue. Directed by Chet Withey.

"White Shoulders"

Many critics have called this Miss MacDonald's best picture. It is the story of a beautiful Southern girl placed on the auction block of marriage by her mother; taken from the famous Saturday Evening Post story by George Kibbe Turner and read by millions. It is one they all know and love. Directed by Tom Forman.

"The Woman Conquers"

A wondrous tale of a society girl's battle for life and love in the snow wastes of the far north. A colorful story of red blooded men and women with the primitive instinct of fighting for their own. The kind every audience will thrill to. An artistic and entertaining photodrama by Violet Clark and directed by Tom Forman.

In addition to the list of representative members of the profession listed last week, who have already made their reservations for advertising and who have provided us with accurate biographies, are:

EDDIE CLINE—	His name is Edward Francis Cline—and he now directs Buster Keaton Comedies.
SYDNEY D'ALBROOK—	Who is making a "screen name" for himself, such as he earned for his splendid work upon the speaking stage.
FINIS FOX—	Among his recent scenarios was "The Bishop of Ozark."
MICHAEL DARK—	One of the principal players in "On the High Seas."
D. R. O. HATSWELL—	In "Peg o' My Heart" he played Alaric Chicester.
HOBART HENLEY—	An established director—and who made "The Flame of Life."
JUNE MATHIS—	Whose adaptation of "The Four Horsemen" is easily remembered.
KALA PASHA—	Recently seen in "Racing Hearts."
SAM RORK PRODUCTIONS—	We will not presume to identify further.
HARRY MYERS—	Pictures in which he has appeared in the past year are many; one in particular was "The Beautiful and Damned."
ROBERT FRAZER—	Climbing higher with every picture—with a performance in "Jazzmania" much to his credit.
CHARLES A. LOGUE—	Again in Hollywood—after playing in "The Woman Who Fooled Herself," made in Porto Rico.
BERT SPROTTE—	In the recent release, "The Prisoner."
EDWARD LAEMMLE—	Directing for Universal.
MARION AYE—	A newcomer in pictures—with evident possibilities.
GEORGES BENOIT—	Prominently cast in "The Masquerader."
PHILLIP DE LACY	A promising, if very youthful juvenile.
KIT GUARD—	A newcomer who threatens prominence.

Having Just Seen the First Print of "The Bright Shawl"

We Congratulate You—

INSPIRATION PICTURES, INC., Charles H. Duell, president, on your consistently fine productions starring Richard Barthelmess. With your very first picture, "Tol'able David," there was an artistic quality in every detail of production that made this picture stand out as one of the best of the year. There seemed little likelihood of equalling it, yet we believe that with each succeeding picture you showed an unmistakable determination to strive for even higher perfection in artistry and in entertainment values. And "The Bright Shawl" is, in our opinion, your most sterling achievement.

RICHARD BARTHELMESS, on the many fine characters you have created, and especially on your interpretation of the American boy in "The Bright Shawl," which we believe to be the most appealing of all.

MISS DOROTHY GISH, on your exceptionally fine delineation of the character of the impetuous Spanish Dancer who died for Cuban liberty.

JOHN S. ROBERTSON, on your unusual artistry and understanding in weaving together all the separate elements into a perfect ensemble, making a picture which we believe will be pronounced one of the finest productions of the season.

JOSEPH HERGESHEIMER, on a most colorful romance upon which the photoplay is based.

EDMUND GOULDING, on your fine screen adaptation, in which you have preserved the characters of the story with truth and fidelity and the spirit of the romance with a nicety seldom equalled.

EVERETT SHINN, on your exceptional skill in art direction.

GEORGE FOLSEY, on the wonderful photographic values, and the entire supporting cast for their splendid character studies.

We congratulate you for your sincere efforts in producing pictures that build up theatre patronage and bring results at the Box Office.

BELL

a Real Box Office Star

Here's something you are looking for—a short snappy feature comedy. It has played to big success in first run houses in New York, Chicago, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Des Moines, Omaha, Brooklyn, San Francisco, Washington, Dallas, Milwaukee, St. Louis, Portland.

FULL OF PEP; GOES OVER WITH A BAM

"'Bell Boy 13' is sure to make you giggle. If you don't laugh at this you must be enveloped in a cemeterialic atmosphere that no merriment can pierce. I laughed and so did everyone else from start to finish. We chuckled. We haw-hawed. We snickered. We grinned. You'll find it funny. It is full of pep. The personality plus of MacLean puts it over with a Bam!"—Mae Tinee in the Chicago Tribune.

VERY AMUSING; FULL OF VERVE

"A sprightly story. Extremely amusing. Full of spontaneity and verve."—Washington Herald.

ONE OF THE MOST HUMOROUS FILMS

"One of the most humorous films. The situations are very funny."—New York Telegram.

FULL OF LAUGHS; WORTH WHILE

"There are two motion pictures at the Strand this week. The first one is just an ordinary photoplay. The second is more interesting. It is a comedy called 'Bell Boy 13,' with Douglas MacLean furnishing the laughs. It is a relief after artificialities and crudities that permeate the other picture. It is worth while because of MacLean. This comedian has a contagious smile and a quiet manner of acting that is pleasing."—New York Evening Mail.

MORE LAUGHS THAN CHAPLIN

"THE ISLE OF LOST SHIPS"
Maurice Tourneur Prod.—Asso. First Nat'l. Pict
DIRECTOR ..... Maurice Tourneur
AUTHOR ..... Crittendon Marriott
SCENARIO BY ..... Charles Maigne
CAMERAMAN ..... Arthur L. Todd
AS A WHOLE ..... Decidedly unusual, a novelty with considerable that is fascinating and interesting STORY ..... Highly improbable fiction but makes an absorbing picture that will please a great many DIRECTION ..... First rate especially in creating unusual atmosphere
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Splendid
LIGHTINGS ..... Very good
PLAYERS ..... An excellent cast that includes popular favorites such as Anna Q. Nilsson, Walter Long, Milton Sills and Frank Campeau, the more important roles and other capable players including Bert Woodruff, Aggie Herring Hershall Mayall SETS ..... Unusual settings; an occasional CUTS ..... drop a bit obvious
MASTER OF STORY ..... Adventures of ship-wrecked trio who drift into the "Isle of Lost
DEGREE OF PRODUCTION ..... 7,425 feet

Variety of preferences and should offer and A1 entertainment, particularly to those who constantly demand something new and different.

The basic situation of Crittendon Marriott's story is not what makes his theme different but it is the distinctive treatment and by plot that give it individualty. You have a hero and heroine and what, minus its familiar twists and by the popular island formula but trimmings, would be the following sequences completely dispel novelty of the all similarity.

Maurice Tourneur had more than an ordinary task upon his shoulders when given the production of this story, especially in view of the difficulties that must have presented themselves when it came to picturing the actual "Isle of Lost Ships." And with the exception of an occasional painted drop being obvious, his work is splendid. The atmosphere of this episode is mighty fascinating and the scenes so entirely different from the usual, that it can hardly fail to prove interesting. The storm is a wonder and the shots from the rear of a vessel ploughing through a rough sea create the feeling of actual experience.

There is action in the picture and thrills of an unusual order, together with a suspense in the latter reels that will be sure-fire with the majority of audiences. The submarine sequence in which the escaping islanders are trapped in a sea of kelp, a form of water vegetation, and the subsequent rescue brings the story to an exciting conclusion.

Milton Sills, as the escaped convict whose innocence is finally proven, gives a capital performance and will surely please his many admirers. Anna Q. Nilsson is excellent as the girl. Walter Long is the villain, as usual,—this time as the ruler of the unique island colony. With Long's introduction there is a sex appeal episode that might be toned down to advantage

Should Go Well In View Of Its Unique Atmosphere, Production And Cast

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors who are looking for a novelty will surely not want to miss "The Isle of Lost Ships." The production is one of the most unusual that has been released so far this year and it certainly supplies a novel entertainment for those constantly in search of something that gets off the beaten track. You can talk about the fantastic nature of this, the unique atmosphere and the action and thrills. Promise them a sea story that is totally different. The highly improbable character of it should easily be overcome by the novelty of it.

The title is good and can be used in connection with special announcements and whatever exploitation you can give it, or stunt advertising which should also be worth while. Use the producer's name and you have a splendid cast to talk about with the names of Milton Sills, Anna Q. Nilsson, Frank Campeau and Walter Long to interest them. Play up the novelty angle of the production in particular

Sounds Like Business

THERE'S a solid and hopeful ring to the meeting of exhibitors in Chicago last week at which it was proposed to lay the financial foundation of a national exhibitors' organization.

We are taking the meeting at its own straightforward statement, assuming that its purposes have no political nor commercial objectives, nor affiliations whatever.

A national exhibitor organization cannot serve such ends and serve itself and its members. That, of course, is understood.

The men back of this meeting have names that command respect for sincerity and ability.

And so does their stated plan.

We need not discourse upon the need of exhibitor organization.

With excessive taxes, censorship and unfair legislation on the one side and on the other such trade conditions as producer-owned first runs, high rentals, etc., the need of a protective organization is more than plain.

The lines are not only closing about the group of independent exhibitors but even piercing their ranks.

These are the days of combines—for good or ill. It is up to the exhibitor to combine or be combined—to preserve his own strength by aggregating it or let someone else use it and destroy it piecemeal.

It's just a practical business situation—to be met in a practical business way, by practical business men.

Politics, personalities, promises, publicity, resolutions, oratory—have nothing to do with it. Subterfuge will destroy it. It is business—or nothing. It is a situation to be tackled just as each exhibitor tackles his own individual business problems.

It is proposed to have at least 1,000 exhibitors contribute at least $100.00 each; this to finance the groundwork of a national organization comprising field work and business management.

Again, argument pro and con seems unnecessary.

If a total theatre investment of hundreds of millions isn't worth this annual premium for protection when protection is so plainly necessary, then this investment, however huge, is a mighty shaky one. Bankers and legislators will so regard it.

And if national exhibitor organizations cannot be adequately financed in this way—that is, by its own members—then there is no hope for national exhibitor organization.

Just recently group insurance has been contracted for by several and various organizations in New York City, organizations quite similar to a national exhibitor organization. The saving effected is a large one. Here, offhand, is an economy that, in itself, would justify an organization with a sound budget.

This, however, is a small item compared with a modification of the oppressive admission tax —a tax that can only be adjusted by an organization with compelling figures and membership.

We heartily favor, too, the idea of putting such a national organization, soundly financed, into the hands of capable business managers, men who can and will run it on strictly sound business and unselfish and non-political principles.

* * *

Such an exhibitor organization can talk to Congress, to State Legislatures, to bankers and to the aggressor within this industry.

And the time has come to talk—with sanity and facts but also with strength.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

GRAVE menace is contained in the bill now before the New York State Assembly in Albany, authorizing the use of standard width motion picture film in portable and home projectors, the only restriction being that the use of non-inflammable (cellulose acetate) film is required.

This offers a rather striking contrast to the recent procedure in the convention of fire underwriters held in Ottawa, Canada, where the reverse extreme was considered for the enactment of a law to prohibit the use of all inflammable film, the contrast being that the proviso in the New York legislature bill for use of acetate film only gives absolutely no assurance that this provision will be followed, there being less than 1 per cent non-inflammable film now in circulation. There is no question but what inflammable film will be used in 99 per cent. of the machines in the portable or home projectors, providing these machines are built with the proper mechanical specifications to permit the use of standard width film. A bill such as this either bespeaks of utter ignorance on the part of its originators and sponsors or else indicates that there is material commercial gain to be made. This bill would submit the amateur motion picture user to extreme fire hazard and permits no grounds for defense of such legislation.

THE uses to which a motor electric light plant may be put was demonstrated in fine form in Providence the other night when the electric light plant went out of commission. The Hotel Biltmore needed juice to keep the basement dry, to light exits, the lobby and manipulate the electric apparatus in the kitchen. A resourceful engineer thought of the mounted equipment of the Coronet Film Company. Gordon Burnham, the manager, was pulled out of bed at 2 a. m., took his automobile equipment to the hotel, hooked onto the main cable in the hotel and furnished electricity for six hours, until the electric lighting company had the power on again.

JACK CUNNINGHAM had his Big Night recently at the Criterion, New York. He started in at eleven-thirty and spoke right into St. Patrick's Day and dwelled upon the monumental task of adapting "The Covered Wagon." He explained the scenario was of such large proportions that the pages, if laid end to end, would reach from Broadway to the Three-Mile Limit in the Pacific.

LEON J. Bamberger of Paramount postcards from Mexico City that the National theatre will be the finest in the world if it is ever finished. Work started during the Diaz administration and was interrupted by every revolution which has swept over Mexico. Equipment includes $40,000 Tiffany glass curtain. Mr. Bamberger is in the Mexican capital on an intensive exploitation campaign in behalf of the Olympia theatre, a three thousand seat house. The exploiteer says that this theatre would put many of our first run theatres in the shade. The picture of the National certainly shows it up as a rare piece of architectural splendor.

Mr. Gross brought each exchange manager a pair of Alaskan moccasins as a souvenir of his visit. At his theatre he accepts the moccasins in lieu of money as an admission charge, and in addition to the pair which he gave to each manager, he brought in over one hundred other pair, which he sold to an Alaskan curio shop in the city—thus getting his admission price from the sale of the footwear.

NANOOK is dead! Word has just been received through Robert J. Flaherty, producer of "Nanook of the North," that the Eskimo has succumbed to the rigors of his harsh environment. The information came to Mr. Flaherty by the overland Hudson Bay route in a short letter from a fur trade companion in his arctic exploring expedition. Nanook had especially endeared himself to the explorer by his faithful services as guide through the trackless wastes of North Labrador.

Screengoers fortunate enough to see one of the most vivid and vital pictures of all time will remember Nanook as a mighty hunter, a skillful nimrod, and a natural born actor. May his soul rest in peace.

CHARLES C. BURR has returned to New York after a brief vacation at divers and sundry watering places.

LET us pay tribute to Robert McGowan, the sponsor for Hal Roach's terrible cut-ups, who are creating a big noise in the films these days. The "Our Gang" series of comedies places Mr. McGowan somewhere near the top as a dispenser of real unadulterated humor. Here is a man who has caught the true psychology of what constitutes the pre-adolescent days of tender childhood.

Hal Roach picked the youngsters with rare discrimination, giving us Sunshine Sammy and his lil' side-kicker, Farina, Mickey Daniels (of freckle fame), the Condon kid and Mildred Davis' brother—as well as the fat boy whose name slips our memory. But it has taken Mr. McGowan to assemble them in a realistic manner that never for an instant is a camera suggested.

It is as if we were looking unobserved upon a group of lively youngsters playing on a sand lot or the sidewalks of the city. What these kids do is entirely natural and spontaneous. They are not prococious, so they never irritate with their mischievous pranks. They execute their high jinks entirely unconscious of the camera and the ideas behind their efforts are truly juvenile of theme. If it's a take-off of a circus, they'll do it to the queen's taste; if it's a sample of how to avoid hard work they can pass the examination with the easy abandon of a tramp. The spirit of youth is abroad in these comedies.

At the Capitol last week, the audiences were shrieking with laughter over one of the series, "The Big Show," which takes the spectator on a trip through an infantile circus. A neat little number, but no better than "A Pleasant Journey," and "Giants vs. Yanks." The pieces are maintaining a high standard. Every child under ten and grown-up children will find instant response with Our Gang.

BETTY BLYTHE is sailing for Algiers sometime next month where she will be featured in the Graham-Wilcox production, "Chu-Chin-Chow," which will be filmed abroad. It is understood that many of the interiors will be made in England and, of course, the exteriors will be made with the original Oriental settings in and about Tunis. Miss Blythe has had experience with atmospheric pictures of the Far East, having been featured in "The Queen of Sheba."

THEODORE ROBERTS has had a wide variety of roles since he faced the camera many years ago, but never has he shown a finer cameo characterization than Grumpy in the picture of that name. Some may say that he isn't a perfect choice because Cyril Maude, who first interpreted the role upon the stage, could not be improved upon. Just because Roberts doesn't look like Maude, nor act like him should not be marked up against him. The point is he gets into the character of the irascible old man in such a realistic manner as to make you feel like walking up to the screen and shouting: "Hello, old-timer!"

It is a different Roberts from the man you've seen in "The Old Homestead" or Wally Reid's auto stories. Only an actor endowed with the highest expression of pantomime—one able to understand and feel a role—can establish his are so thoroughly. Our respects to Theodore Roberts.

Then the movie house closed up, until Old Man Winter, censor extraordinary, decided that they had had time to digest that picture. He eased up a little and permitted the S.S. East Missouri M. P. T. O. A. Elects

I. W. Rodgers, Popular Exhibitor, Named Division's First Permanent President

I. W. RODGERS, who owns picture houses in Poplar Bluff, Mo.; Cairo, Ill., and other points, was selected as the first permanent president of the newly formed Eastern Missouri division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at the organization convention held in the Elks' Club, St. Louis, on Tuesday, March 27. About seventy exhibitors were in attendance, a very large number being from out of town.

Unlike some gatherings of exhibitors the Eastern Missouri convention did not waste much time on inconsequential matters, and politics occupied a rear seat. A resolution favoring the repeal of the Federal tax on admissions below 50 cents was passed, and another resolution places the organization on record as against permitting singers who boost songs controlled by the Society of Authors and Composers to appear in the theatre of the members. Congress will also be asked to knock out the music tax.

A third resolution was directed against the deposit system and the national organization is requested to work for the repeal of the present methods of requiring deposits on films.

Joe Mogler, president of the St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and a national vice-president, presided at the opening of the convention, and in a short talk told of the aims and objects of the new body. He said that the national officers believed better results could be obtained by dividing Missouri into two districts, because the exhibitors of the state purchase their films from both Kansas City and St. Louis.

At noon business was dispensed with long enough to enjoy a bountiful repast prepared by the St. Louis league for their guests.

In addition to Rodgers the other officers elected by the convention were: First vice-president J. F. Rees, Wellsville; second vice-president, Charles Goodnight, De Soto; third vice-president, J. E. Smith, Eureka; fourth vice-president, Mrs. M. J. Moore, St. Charles; fifth vice-president, R. Stemple, St. Charles; treasurer, Fred W. Wehrenberg, St. Louis; secretary, L. C. Hehl, St. Louis, and sergeant-at-arms, Charles Warner, St. Louis.

The executive committee will be composed of the president, vice-presidents, secretary, treasurer and Spyros Skouras, St. Louis; W. O. Reeves, St. Louis; Tommy James, St. Louis; Hector M. E. Pasmezoglu, St. Louis; W. A. Boyd, Louisiana; Jack Truitt, Moberly; Joe Mogler, St. Louis; A. C. Norwein, Bonne Terre, and Oscar Lehr, St. Louis.

National convention delegates are: Joe Mogler, Hector; M. E. Pasmezoglu, Oscar Lehr, F. N. Hoelzer, St. Louis; L. C. Hehl, I. W. Rodgers, Fred W. Wehrenberg and Spyros Skouras. Alternates: Mike Nash, St. Louis; A. C. Norwein, R. Stemple, Charles Goodnight, Mrs. William Young, St. Louis; J. M. Pratt, Fulton, Mo.; Jack Truitt and W. O. Reeves.

Film Stealing Increases Around Albany

The stealing of film in Albany and vicinity has reached serious proportions. At least one exchange has decided to make no more film shipments, unaccompanied, by trolleys out of Albany. Owing to the fact that interurban service reaches many neighboring towns, exhibitors in this section have formed the habit of telephoning the exchanges for short subjects, and requesting their shipment on some outgoing car. The conductor on these cars invariably refuses to sign a receipt, and as a result, several reels have turned up missing during the last few weeks.

The Pathé exchange last week lost a seven-reel feature, "Silas Marner," as it was being brought from Troy, by light truck. The film had been shown at the Troy Orphanage, and left at the Lincoln theatre for convenience. It was picked up there, but disappeared from the truck which the driver had left for a few minutes while he was getting a lunch in a nearby restaurant. The theft was reported to the police.

Adverse Oklahoma Bills Retire with Session

THE Oklahoma Legislature adjourned sine die, Thursday, March 29th, without having passed the Sunday closing law or the outlaw law, known as the Clara Smith Hammon, on the Jesse James-Dalton Brothers type of films.

The Legislature may reconvene in special session and pass both bills; otherwise they are dead for the next two years.

Bill Would Place Ban on Traveling Carnivals

Under the terms of a bill recently introduced in the Pennsylvania Legislature at Harrisburg by Assemblyman Franklin Spencer Edmonds, of Philadelphia, traveling carnival companies would be prohibited from exhibiting in that State, as being "detrimental to the public peace, public health and public morals."

The bill has the backing and earnest support of the State Department of Health, which believes it would be more effective than the self-imposed censorship proposed by the carnival companies themselves.

Motion picture interests in Pennsylvania long been opposed to the traveling carnivals, many of which have introduced gambling and other catch-penny devices.

The bill defines a traveling carnival company as "any itinerant organization or aggregation by whatsoever name, moving about the country on railroad cars, motor or horse propelled vehicles, giving performances or exhibitions for pay in one or more tents, wagons or other enclosures and having with it concessions such as are commonly called doll, blanket, knife, umbrella and Teddy bear racks, games of chance or games of so-called science and skill, whether or not all or part of such shows or devices are under separate ownership or under one ownership or under one control."

The bill makes it a misdemeanor for anyone to operate such a company in the State, and upon conviction a violator is subject to a fine of not less than $100 or more than $300, or to undergo imprisonment of not more than six months for each offense.

S. M. P. E. Convention Program to Provide for Members and Guests

INTERESTING information comes to the editor concerning the Spring Meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to be held at Atlantic City, N. J., May 7th-10th, 1923, which promises four days of instructive as well as entertaining sessions, for both the members and their guests.

Excellent hotel rates have been obtained for the members of the society, and their families who will attend the convention. Registration cards for the hotel will go forward within a very short time. The ladies will have a special program prepared with a final farewell tea at the Country Club Thursday noon.

It is expected that the promise to produce a radio transmitted picture by some of the members will be fulfilled at this meeting. For the Educational Field, we can say that the Symposium on Home Motion Picture Equipment will be held on Tuesday, May 8th, at which session ten papers will be discussed.

The tentative program begins Monday, May 7th, with registration, the President's address, reports of the various committees and the reading of papers concluded by a get-together luncheon at about 5:30 P. M. Tuesday, the 8th, brings forth the symposium on home motion picture equipment which will be followed by the reading of ten papers which will possibly carry the sesson well into the early part of the afternoon after which the Society will adjourn for the afternoon to visit the Million Dollar Pier and witness a net haul. Wednesday will include the reading and discussing of papers with a banquet in the evening. Thursday is the last day of the convention, the business session closing at noon.

Ohio Sunday Opening to Be Put Up to Voters

After the House Judiciary Committee of the Ohio lawmaking body had refused to hold a public hearing on the Ramey Bill providing local option on the question of Sunday motion picture performances, Samuel Bullock, Cleveland, of the public service department of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, declared that Ohio motion picture exhibitors intend now to carry their campaign for legalized Sunday movies before the voters of the Buckeye State.

The bill is slated for death before the committee. It would prevent the stopping of Sunday shows in municipalities where theatres are now open, except through referendum, and would prohibit Sunday shows where there are now none without legislative action.

In regard to the action to be taken by Ohio motion picture men Samuel Bullock is reported as saying: "Initiative petitions will be circulated and the matter of Sunday movies put to voters of the state."

Exhibitors Lay Plans To Finance M.P.T.O.A.

Chicago Meeting Arranged by Michigan Owners Urges Strengthening Organization

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan assumed the initiative last week in an effort to weld together all forces of the M. P. T. O. A. and those not now connected and make of it a really all-powerful organization which will function as a well-oiled machine in every city in the country. The move was a non-political one, and the action was taken only with the idea of re-establishing the organization on the same high plane or even more extensively than it operated at the time of the Cleveland convention three years ago.

Representative exhibitors from seven states were called together by the Michigan organization at the Sherman House in Chicago for the purpose of discussing plans for re-financing the body and to submit those plans to the national organization at its coming annual session in Chicago. The states represented were: Minnesota, Wisconsin, Indiana, New York, Nebraska, Illinois and Michigan.

There was no criticism directed at any of the present officers, nor were politics discussed. Michigan exhibitors, realizing that the national body was not functioning as effectively as it might under better financial conditions and a more extensive organization, suggested renewed efforts to create or revive interest in those cities which have been lax or entirely inactive in the affairs of the parent organization.

It was the sense of the meeting that the financing of the national organization must be done by exhibitors of the country who are convinced of the necessity of the parent body. The statement was also advanced that there were one thousand exhibitors in the United States who will pay a minimum of one hundred dollars each for the first year to give the national officers something to work with, and a chance to do the many things that must be done.

The necessity of an experienced organizer to work with the president and board of directors was also emphasized. This organizer, it was suggested, need not necessarily be of the motion picture industry, but a man thoroughly experienced in his own line, whose duty it would be to circulate among exhibitors of the United States and among them arouse interest in or perfect organization for the benefit of the national body. This man, who would have the assistance of a business manager, would spend his entire time in the field.

Under the plan assistance can be given states not now organized so that they will function efficiently as state bodies, and in turn support the national organization.

The meeting was opened by W. S. McLaren, president of the Michigan organization, who was elected permanent chairman. He made it plain that at no time during the meeting could personalities or politics enter into the discussion. He introduced H. M. Richey, general manager of the Michigan organization, who outlined the plan that was later indorsed.

It was the intention of those present that the meeting be constructive, that they should go back to their respective states to get to the National Convention at Chicago representative exhibitors who, realizing the vital necessity of national organization, should make the idea a reality.

Before the meeting closed, a resolution was adopted unanimously thanking the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan for taking the initiative for so worthy a purpose.

Those present were Claude Cady, James C. Ritter, W. S. McLaren, A. J. Kleist, J. R. Denniston, E. S. Brewer, Glenn Cross and Harvey Lipp, of the M. P. T. O. of Michigan; Howard Smith, of Buffalo, N. Y.; Fred C. Seegert and Joseph G. Rhode, of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin; J. J. Rubens, Louis Frank and W. W. Watts, of the M. P. T. O. of Illinois; W. A. Steffes, Theodore L. Hayes and C. H. Hitchcock, of the M. P. T. O. of Minnesota; G. G. Schmidt, of the M. P. T. O. of Indiana; and A. R. Pramer, of the M. P. T. O. of Nebraska. Invitations were extended to other representative exhibitors in other states, who found it impossible to be present.

Reports that the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have been called to meet in Chicago on April 18th and 19th to consider action taken by exhibitors at the meeting of March 28th are unfounded.

The Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners will hold their annual convention at the Sherman Hotel, Chicago, on these dates, but no call has been issued to the national directors to meet at that time.

Thos. H. Ince Personally to Direct One Film a Year

WORD from the Coast advises that Thomas H. Ince will direct personally one production a year. The first subject which will receive the personal handling of Ince is to be "Country Lanes and City Pavements," written by John Fleming Wilson. Madge Bellamy will head an all-star cast in this picture. Bradley King will write the continuity. The production will be released by First National.

At the same time that he is directing, Mr. Ince, it is stated, will retain supervision as in the past over the remaining pictures being made under his auspices. Ince's resumption of the megaphone is noteworthy in view of the fact that for the past seven years he has confined himself to executive administration and supervisory capacities. His last personally-directed work was "Civilization."

Besides "Country Lanes and City Pavements" the following subjects are scheduled for production under Ince's auspices during the coming season:

"Her Reputation," by Bradley King and Talbot Mundy, featuring May McAvoy under the direction of John Griffith Wray; Vaughan Kester's "The Just and the Unjust," also to be directed by Wray; and "Unguarded Gates," with Madge Bellamy in the stellar role.

Golf Bug Hits Industry as Spring Arrives

THE Spring golf fever in the industry has already set in and clubs are being tuned up. The annual handicap event of the Western Motion Picture Golf Association is set for April 8th at the California Country Club course at Culver City. President Nat Deverich and Secretary Jessen announce eighteen holes of medal play for the championship cups.

The eastern contingent is looking further into the future and has set the date for the annual Spring event for June 5th at the Belleclaire Golf Club course at Bayside, Long Island. Details of the latter event have not yet been worked out but will be announced shortly.

Knickerbocker Defendants Get Adverse Ruling

Motions by Architect Reginald W. Geare, John H. Ford and the Union Iron Works to dismiss complaints naming them co-defendants in about fifty suits resulting from the Knickerbocker tragedy last year, were dismissed in the circuit division of District Supreme Court by Justice A. A. Hoeghling at Washington Wednesday last. They must plead to these suits, and all others, on the calendar, resulting from the same accident, he ruled.

"A cause of action is stated in the declarations of damages," the court held, "and defendants must plead to these causes." This decision held the theatre company that promoted the building prior to getting H. M. Crandall to operate it, and the District of Columbia, equally responsible with the above named defendants. All defendants had pleaded a mis-joinder of causes and actions in their demurrers.

Attorneys Charles A. Douglas, Joseph W. Cox and Conrad H. Syme, for the victims, maintained "there was a continuing and successive liability among the architect, iron man, and building inspector, and that all contributed to the defective building, whose collapse had caused the deaths and injuries."

As matters stand now, the defendants are forced by the court to fight out every one of the fifty damage claims.

Standard Time League Is Milwaukee Winner

The Standard Time League organized by theatre owners in Milwaukee for an active campaign against daylight saving was victorious in the election April 3 when the referendum vote to repeal or retain the ordinance was the issue.

The vote favoring the repeal was 34,610; against, 24,510. The big majority of the victory came as a surprise. The Federated Trade Council, Milk Producers and others lined up with the league to oppose the daylight saving committee working with local clubs and stores.

Operator Gets 3 Years in Iowa Acid Throwing

Mayo W. Paden, president of the Omaha lodge of motion picture machine operators, was found guilty last week of conspiracy in connection with the throwing of obnoxious chemicals in the lobby of the Liberty theatre at Council Bluffs, Iowa. He was sentenced to a term of three years in the Fort Madison penitentiary. A motion for a new trial was denied, and his bond fixed at $3,000 on appeal. The penalty is the maximum one.

W. Missouri, Kans. May Consolidate

Convention of M.P.T.O. Considering Proposition to Amalgamate Forces

MACHINERY which may result in the consolidation of the Western Missouri and Kansas units was set in motion at the semi-annual convention of the M. P. T. O. at Kansas City, Wednesday. The convention, although only a one-day affair, was one of accomplishments and was attended by Sydney S. Cohen, W. A. True, Connecticut; W. D. Burford, Illinois; Charles A. Lick, Fort Smith, Ark., third vice-president of the national organization; and Michael O'Toole, chairman of the public service committee of the M. P. T. O. A.

A motion to adopt a resolution urging Mr. Cohen to enter the field for re-election, was introduced by Lawrence Goldman, former secretary of the Missouri body. No sooner had the motion been introduced than Mr. Cohen sprang to the floor and asserted that he had made it plain he did not desire to run for office again. Mr. Cohen took the floor alternately, making short talks at intermittent times.

"I hope there will be ten good presidential candidates at the national convention," Mr. Cohen continued, "and I suggest you enter the names of Charles Sears and R. G. Liggett, presidents of the Western Missouri and Kansas organizations respectively, as candidates. Don't be fooled at Chicago by those opposed to independent theatres."

A committee appointed by the Missouri body will meet with a committee to be appointed by the M. P. T. O. of Kansas at the Kansas convention in Wichita, April 16 and 17, to consider the consolidation of the two units. The same committee, composed of Jack Truitt, Sedalia, Mo., chairman; A. M. Eisner, Kansas City; W. P. Cuff, Chillicothe, Mo.; T. C. Goodnight, Warrensburg, Mo.; and S. E. Wilhoit, Springfield, Mo., was appointed to frame a constitution and by-laws for the Western Missouri body, as well as to name a business manager. It was voted that President Sears be empowered to name eight delegates to the national convention.

Resolutions endorsing the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation, the action of the M. P. T. O. A. in refusing the uniform contract, the work of Sydney Cohen and other national officers and the Motion Picture Palace of Progress to be at Chicago, were adopted.

Due to the fact that Cohen and his party were forced to leave early for the Nebraska convention at Omaha, Thursday, the banquet was called off. No officers were elected, an election not being due until the next convention.

M.P.T.O. Kansas Prepares to Incorporate

INCORPORATION papers are being prepared for the M. P. T. O. of Kansas by Samuel Handy, attorneys for the organization, and will be ready to submit to the semi-annual convention when it convenes at Wichita, Kans., April 16 and 17.

The Kansas association previously has experienced some difficulty in having corporation papers completed, but this time there will be no "hitch," according to C. E. Cook, business manager. No theatre owner can be a stockholder unless he is a paid up member in the organization which, of course, will become a protective organization upon incorporation. Stock certificate shares may be ready for distribution at the convention. Shares will be sold at a nominal price. Many prominent legislators will attend the convention, several of them being speakers.

Congress May Establish U. S. Picture Bureau

Fred E. Hamlin, newspaper editor, who brought the motion picture of the "Ex-Kaiser in Exile" to this country last winter, and is distributing through the Hodkinson exchanges, tried to get a print of it accepted by the U. S. Government for the permanent historic record of the late war. President Harding, as the nation's chief and as a publisher, publishing the Marion Star, attended a private view of the film at the National Press Club last fall, approved the picture, but regretted the Government's inability to accept the film, because there is no custodian or suitable storage place for films.

The Government film production and distributing units at Washington and in the field are inadequate, widely scattered, and devoid of any facilities for the storage and duplication of historic films. All this led to a statement by Senator Walsh of Massachusetts Monday last, in which he said that "Legislation authorizing the Federal Government to collect and preserve motion pictures of historic events, may be introduced by me, in the 68th Congress."

Washington Fire Causes $250,000 Damage

Damage estimated at $250,000 resulted from fire in the Army Air Service hangars and photographic laboratories at Bolling Field Saturday, March 31. The fire is reported to have been caused by the spontaneous combustion of a roll of films, bursting into flames, while in the process of being developed. The spool of celluloid was blown from its spindle, the 500 feet of film filling the laboratory of Aerial Photo Section No. 3 with fire and smoke.

The flames quickly spread to hangar No. 8, destroying the hangar also. Several new airplane engines on testing blocks, in the hangar for experimental purposes, were destroyed before the fire department arrived.

O'Reilly in Albany for Balance of Session

Charles L. O'Reilly, of New York, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, and Samuel I. Berman, secretary of the same organization, arrived at the Capitol in Albany, N. Y., last Monday night, and from now until the present session of the legislature concludes will be more or less along legislative corridors. During Monday night's session of the Senate, Mr. O'Reilly and Mr. Berman occupied seats on the floor of the Chamber, watching the proceedings with much interest.

Mr. O'Reilly stated that he was primarily interested in two bills affecting the motion picture interests.

So. California Exhibitors Elect Officers

FRED MILLER, of the California theatre, Los Angeles, was elected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Southern California at the meeting held April 3rd. Voting by acclamation the following were placed in office:

Fred Miller, president; W. W. Whitson, San Diego, and James Sams, Ocean Park, vice-presidents; Glenn Harper, Vermont theatre, Los Angeles, secretary; Ben Bernstein, Savoy theatre, Los Angeles, treasurer; C. E. Walker, Santa Ana; D. D. Vanderlip, Inglewood; H. J. Siler, Whittier, and Harold C. Arthur, West Coast theatre, directors.

Brookline May Open Door for Pictures

Brookline, wealthy and exclusive suburb of Boston, which has banned motion pictures since they were first heard of, bids fair to open the doors and grant license for theatre construction. Commercial pictures have been turned down time and time again.

There are two petitions for the construction of theatres before the Board of Selectmen, one from Horace Gray, who wants to build a theatre at Coolidge Corner, and another from Daniel J. Daley, who wants to put up a house at Brookline Village, as the official centre of the town is called. A third petition is expected any day.

At a meeting last week the Selectmen voted to put the question to a referendum at a special election which had been called to fill a vacancy in a town office for April 24. They have provided that the result of the referendum shall not be absolutely binding on them, but they have stated that if the citizens vote to let them in it will practically clinch the matter.

Serials Much in Favor Among Chinese

Although British and French interests control practically all the motion picture trade in Peking and Tientsin, 80 per cent of the films shown in these two cities are American, according to the Specialties Division of the Department of Commerce. Patrons of the movies in these two cities are made up of the better class of Chinese as well as the foreign population.

News reels are shown at almost every program, and the drama and comedy are very to be one of America's foremost artists, will devote his time to the preparation of some artistic lobby displays.

Would Put Censors Under Public Instruction

The new Code for the State of Pennsylvania, designed by Governor Pinchot for the reorganization of the State government, as just made public, would place the State Board of Motion Picture Censors under the department of Public Instruction. The code has just been introduced in the State and it likely will be the subject of much controversy.

At present the Board of Censors, which examines and passes judgment on all films shown in the State is a separate agency not under control of any department.

New Regulations to Aid Industry in Russia

State Orders Radical Reforms in Order to Establish Country Among Film Leaders

THROUGH new State regulations imposed on the industry in Russia that country hopes to become established among the leading nations as a selling and producing market. Radical changes have come about, according to the Deutsch-Amerikanische Film Union, that will purify the atmosphere that has been surrounding conditions there and properly organize the producing and distributing units. Although the Russian film industry has been growing with extreme rapidity lately, nevertheless it proved unable even to create a somewhat suitable organization, or to keep out undesirable elements. Thus it was possible for 500 firms who hire out films to establish themselves in Moscow where, in consequence of its traffic conditions, there are scarcely 1,500 picture theatres.

Henceforth a decree, issued by the Council of People's Commissary, places the Russian film industry on a new legal basis. One of the reasons for this order was the frequent infringement of the license law, such as smuggling and other offenses. This decree aims at the consolidation and sane development of the Russian film trade by a new arrangement that will also enable the foreign industry to cooperate.

The new law and the order for putting it into effect decrees: The film should be considered as means of instruction and as a work of art. Hence the All-Russian Photo-Cinema Co. will be placed under the Commissary for Art and Education as a central organization for film renting and for adjusting all the matters of the picture theatre. It acquires (under the name of Goskino) the right of a legal body and will pursue its work by attracting the local and district educational organs.

A central office will be established at the Commissary for Art and Education with the principal object to investigate the origin of the films. For showing uncensored films the renter, as well as the owner, will bear responsibility, according to provisions in the penal code. Uncensored films, if shown, are, as it is the case with smuggled ones, confiscated and become state property without compensation; also the copies and the license, if such are in possession of the smuggler or lender.

Henceforth a permit from the Goskino is necessary for private enterprises, and must be renewed monthly. The permit, however, if granted, can only be revoked if the private enterprise has repeatedly violated the laws, applying to kinomatograph theater and if it was lawfully sentenced.

Private enterprises that are producing in Russia or perform suitable work for the production process have forthwith the right to hire foreign films and those belonging to others to an extent many times exceeding the value of their own production.

Where theatres are not leased by private enterprises, they are run by the Goskino, or by local educational institutions.

Import and export are directed conjointly by the Commissary for Foreign Trade and by the Commissary for Art and Education. Negotiations for concessions with foreign firms must be approved by these commissaries. The film administration for Soviet Russia appointed the "Industry and Handels—A. G." The International Workers' Relief Committee for Soviet Russia, through its general agency, the Deutsch-Amerikanische Film Union A. G., to enter into negotiations with American and West European firms, and the negotiations are progressing favorably.

Prominent representatives of the Russian Film Trade—representatives of private undertakings, as well as those of state organizations—have already arrived in Moscow, and others are on the way. According to the spirit of these negotiations the Dafu will endeavor to set right, as far as the law permits, the difficulties which might have arisen to foreign firms owing to the former ignorance of the conditions of the Russian film.

Within the next few weeks the first new films from Moscow will be shown in western Europe picture theatres. They will present a new attempt to reach a high artistic level of art on the screen. The members of the Moscow Art Theatre have endeavored to transfer that to the screen, which may be considered the supreme attainment of their dramatic art; the portrayal of real life, and to depict it with all the special means at the disposal of the screen.

The actors have drawn on Russia past and present, on sagas and fiction for the material of their films. But they endeavor to avoid rendering the original characters trite, by concentrating their acting on the essential of each conflict and epoch. It has been of great value to them that they were able to develop a completely harmonious style during the years of their mutual work. And thus in Europe they are perhaps the first to possess a real "ensemble" for the screen also.

Hitherto Russia and the Russian character have often been imitated in films, but hardly shown correctly. The first of these films screened by the Moscow Film Co. "Russ" under the stage management of Shelyabushsky, Sanin, and Starewitch are "Polakushka" (after Leo Tolstoi), "Peter the Great," and the two legends of "Yola," and "Satan's Defeat."

The exclusive rights are vested in the Soviet Film Department, which disposes of them through their general agents, the Deutsch-Amerikanische Film Union A. G.

Cohen Again Endorsed for M.P.T.O.A. Presidency

AT a meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, held at the Hotel Vendig, on March 16, Sydney S. Cohen was unanimously endorsed for re-election as President of the M. P. T. O. A. This territory, which has always been a strong Cohen supporter, and last year at Washington cast the largest vote for his election, is the first exhibitor body to come out for his re-election at Chicago in May.

In the face of Mr. Cohen's often repeated declaration that he is not a candidate for re-election, Pennsylvania is grooming a native son in the person of M. E. Comerford, should Mr. Cohen adhere to his decision. Mr. Comerford controls over 50 theatres in Northeastern Pennsylvania and Southern New York and, although he has always shunned the limelight, is today looked upon as one of the leading exhibitors in the country.

N. Y. Musicians Strike, But Return to Work

Internal strife in rival musicians' unions in New York City caused a one-day strike in the Capitol and Criterion theatres last Monday. Neither house was responsible for the walkout.

The battle was brought on largely in a desire of the two unions to gain control over the 13,000 musicians in the city. The Musical Mutual Protective Union and Associated Musicians of New York, Local 810, are the rival organizations. The latter has an agreement with managers that does not expire until September. The M. M. P. U. has no such agreement. The M. M. P. U. was suspended from the American Federation of Musicians two years ago and the two have been rivals since.

The immediate cause of the strike was the discharge of the Capitol drummer by Conductor Erno Rapee at the request of the Federation local. The other members of the orchestra walked out on instructions, as did those of the Criterion, six of whom had been discharged for non-payment of dues.

It is contended that the strike was forced in an endeavor to discredit the Federation with the managers and to bring about a breach in their agreement. The men returned to work Tuesday pending a meeting which will probably result in an amalgamation of the two unions, many of the musicians already being members of both.

New Companies File with State Secretary

Motion picture companies filing papers with the secretary of state during the past week show the following directors and capitalization: East and West Trading Corporation, $50,000, Samuel Silver, J. Berdais, New York; A. R. McDermott, Jersey City; Baron Film Sales Co., Inc., $500, Alexander Baron, Rae Baron, Brooklyn; L. H. Allen, New York; United Theatrical Producers' Corporation, $10,000, Mark Nathan, Brooklyn; H. L. Jacobson, Alexander Aaronson, New York; American Institute for World News, $50,000, L. F. Brown, M. Peters, E. J. Powers, New York City; DeForest Phonofilms, Inc., $50,000, Herman Bogdish, Aaron Powsner, H. A. Deimel, New York; Ogden Operating Corporation, $20,000, Emanuel and E. J. Glick, Max Berger, New York.

New Montreal House For Famous Players

Famous Players are adding to their holdings in Montreal, Canada. The Loew theatre has come into their control, and they also have the Capitol and St. Denis. The Pantages franchise for Montreal is held by N. L. Nathanson, managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, and it is thought Pantages vaudeville will supplant Loew's.

Penn. Measure Affects Operators

Penn. Solon Would License Operators And Regulate Projection Conditions

RADICAL changes in the Pennsylvania code governing the use and operation of motion picture machines and the licensing of operators are proposed in a bill offered in the lower House of the Legislature at Harrisburg by Representative John E. Kunkel, of Westmoreland County, with the backing of Dr. Royal Meeker, State Commissioner of Labor and Industry.

The measure calls for changes in the code of May 1, 1909, whereby the State will receive fees for the examination of operators. Under the plan now in force the State examines operators and grants licenses in all parts of Pennsylvania except Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Scranton. These cities are exempted in the new bill because they have their own electrical bureau that examines operators.

The Kunkel bill eliminates all provisions relating to the construction of booths in theatres where pictures are regularly shown and provides for projection rooms of fireproof construction. In cases where there are no projection rooms portable enclosures instead of portable booths, now permissible under the law, are allowed.

The bill provides that where carbon arc lights are used operators must be examined by the department, and they will be granted a projectionist's license if found competent. The fee for the examination is fixed at $4, and successful candidates must pay $3 additional. The license is issued for one year and renewals will cost $2 annually. Operators now holding licenses will be granted new licenses for $3 without examination. No operator can be under 18 years old.

The fee for apprentices, who cannot be under 16 years old, is one dollar, with 50 cents for renewals. Where incandescent lamps are used the fee is $2 for examination and $2 more for successful candidates, with $1 fee for annual renewals. The minimum age limits for these operators also is 18 years. All fees are to be paid to the Commissioner of Labor and Industry, who will turn the money over to the State Treasurer.

FAKIR FORGES WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON'S SIGNATURE

WE are advised by E. O. Smithies, manager of the Allen theatre, Kingston, Ontario, that a salesman representing the "Monarch Feature Films" of Rochester has been victimizing theatre managers and merchants in and about Kingston on a fake film advertising proposition and that he was aided in selling his idea by what purported to be a letter from William A. Johnston, editor of Motion Picture News, endorsing the proposition.

Mr. Johnston never wrote such a letter, never heard of the concern or the salesman and warns all exhibitors to be on the lookout for the man.

It is assumed that Mr. Johnston's signature has been forged by use of the signature cut appearing in connection with the editorial in each week's Motion Picture News.

According to Mr. Smithies, warrants for the arrest of the fakir are now out, the charge being trying to obtain money under false pretenses.

Information concerning the man or concern will be appreciated at this office.

Penn. Senate Prohibits Daylight Saving

The Derrick bill, favored by the motion picture interests of Pennsylvania, and prohibiting the establishment of daylight saving time anywhere in the state, has been passed finally by the State Senate in Harrisburg, and has been sent to the lower House for consideration.

This bill prohibits the passage of local ordinances in any city or other municipality of the State establishing any except standard time. Efforts, vigorously supported, to amend the bill so as to exempt Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Scranton, and to exempt Allegheny and Philadelphia counties from the provisions of the proposed act were rejected in the Senate.

All-Star Cast Talks at A.M.P.A. Meeting

At the weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers held on Thursday, an all-star cast was presented.

Vice-president Shapiro was in the chair, and among the many who responded to his introductions were Professor James Melvin Lee, director of the School of Journalism at New York University; George E. Redman, of London; "Danny," of the Film Daily; Jack Bachman, of the Al Lichtman Corporation, and Ben Schulberg, of Preferred Pictures.

St. Louis Suit Settled Out of Court

William Goldman's suit against Famous Players-Lasky for possession of the Kings theatre, St. Louis, has been settled out of court. Goldman is remodeling the theatre and intends to open it as a picture house with 20 and 30-cent admissions on May 1. He originally planned to open on Easter Day, but the legal trouble held up his program.

He also has plans drawn for a $1,000,000 picture palace at Grand boulevard and Morgan street. He has announced that house will be completed in time to open on September 1.

Vice President of Loew's Theatres, Inc., Dies

C. E. DANFORTH, senior member of C. E. Danforth & Co., vice-president of Loew Theatres, Inc., director of several banks and large corporations and one of the leading financiers of the country, died at his residence in New York last week after an illness of several months. All in this industry who knew him deeply regret his passing. He was one of the few bankers who understood this business and his exceptional ability and sympathy were given freely to its problems.

Naked Truth Dinner Plans Well Under Way

With the final session of the entertainments committee of the A. M. P. A. extending well past midnight, and with rehearsals in full swing, all is now stripped and ready for the Naked Truth dinner scheduled for Saturday, April 28th, at the Biltmore, in New York. Extra fuel was added to the fervid rush for tickets when it was announced that Harry Raichenbach, the slender-formed young benedict, will act, or rather be himself, as master of ceremonies, and that S. L. Rothapfel has been corraled as director general of presentation.

Report has it that this year's Naked Truth is set to outstrip any previous A. M. P. A. effort. The big bosses and other executives of the infant industry are already on the list of those who have secured tickets to eat with the boys and "see themselves as others see them."

Exhibitors Wait Decision on Daylight Saving

Motion picture theatre owners in many cities and villages of New York State are anxiously awaiting some decision these days on the part of the respective municipalities over the question of daylight saving. According to R. V. Erk, who paid a visit to the Film Row in Albany the past week, a continuance of daylight saving in Ilion will probably result in a loss to all houses. Last year there was a twilight baseball league in full swing in Ilion for five nights a week, with the result that the theatres played to but slim crowds during the major part of the summer.

It is understood that Watertown has decided against daylight saving, but that Utica is still at odds, with the probability that whatever decision Utica makes, it will be followed by Ilion and other surrounding places.

Washington Children See Red Cross Pictures

Children from the Force School, Washington, were the guests of Harry Crandall and Mrs. Locher at a private view of the Red Cross, 1922, films showing child life and relief work in many lands. A number of diplomats were present and were introduced by Mrs. Locher to the children.

Views of American relief work in Czecho-Slovakia and views of the 1920 athletic congress or Sokol, the first in free Bohemia, were shown. One of the new native film producers, a rehabilitated war veteran, took all the Sokol pictures shown.

Fox Announces Releases for Week of April 8th

FOX FILM CORPORATION announces three releases for the week of April 8th, two of which are feature productions and the other a Sunshine Comedy.

"The Madness of Youth" is the title of the John Gilbert picture which is scheduled for release on April 8th. Jerome Storm handled the story which comes from the pen of George F. Worts, magazine writer. Billie Dove is in the role of the feminine lead, and the rest of the cast includes Dorothy Manners, Donald Hatswell, George K. Arthur, Wilton Taylor, Ruth Boyd, and Luke Lucas.

Shirley Mason will be seen in "Lovebound," previously announced under the working title, "Inside the Door" and "Balance Due," released April 15th. The story was written by George Scarborough and adapted by Josephine Quirk and Jules Furthman. Henry Otto directed. Albert Roscoe, star of many Broadway stage productions, will support the Fox actress.

"The Three Gun Man" will be the Sunshine Comedy for the week.

Six Metro Specials Will Star Viola Dana

A new series of six special photoplays, starring Viola Dana, will soon be produced at the Metro studios, stories having already been selected for the star. In addition, work on six new productions will be begun. Technicolor Pictures Corporation, makers of the first natural-color picture, "Toll of the Sea," will soon undertake another photoplay, using the same new color invention.

The foregoing program of activities was announced upon the arrival at the Metro studios in Hollywood of Milton B. Hoffman, Metro production manager, who recently returned to the Coast after an extended visit in New York, where he conferred with Metro executives regarding further production.

Scenes from Pathe's western, "When Fighting's Necessary," starring Leo Maloney.

Scenes showing Jack Mulhall in "The Social Buccaneer," a Universal Serial.

What Pictures Does Public Want?

First National Survey Brings Varied Response Regarding Pictures in Demand

DURING a three months' tour that included every First National exchange west of Chicago, F. M. Brockell, manager of distribution for First National, talked to hundreds of exhibitors, owners of chains of theatres, managers of big city houses and managers of small-town theatres.

He asked each exhibitor a question—the question that has been awaiting an answer these many years: "What type of picture do your patrons want?"

As a result of this canvass, Mr. Brockell returned to the New York office last week with an interesting and significant collection of opinions.

For the purposes of tabulation Mr. Brockell made the following classifications: Society drama, melodrama, crook or underworld drama, society comedy, rural plays, spectacles, costume plays, western, European, famous stage plays, famous books, star plays.

Mr. Brockell summarized his survey in the following conclusions:

Society comedies and dramas are first in demand in the large cities. Spectacles are not wanted, especially when they run beyond the usual feature length. Crook dramas and melodramas are popular in the smaller theatres of large cities and in small towns, but as a rule they are not favored for first run houses.

The western picture made on an elaborate scale appears to be gaining in popularity.

The tendency is to avoid star plays, unless the drawing power of the star has been thoroughly tested and found adequate in the exhibitor's locality. The prejudice against costume plays is passing, because of the number of recent successes classed as costume plays.

Adaptations of famous books and plays are popular, owing to the advertising behind them and the exploitation possibilities they offer. Rural plays are popular only in certain sections, usually the part of the country used as a background for the story. Everywhere exhibitors want pictures with what is characterized as human appeal.

In discussing this survey Mr. Brockell said: "It appears from these varied expressions of preference that there is not any ideal type of motion picture for the country at large. A really big picture must override all local conditions and prejudices, and for the others, it all depends upon what class of audience or section of the country you want to reach.

"I was particularly interested in learning that the fears felt for any story of a period necessitating the use of costumes were not well grounded. In fact, there has been a considerable change in this respect during the past twelve months, due, I think, to the pronounced success of a number of our favorite stars in pictures of this type. It is being proved that as long as a story is gripping and human, the audience does not object to clothes of an earlier period."

Lichtman Lists Releases for April and May

The Al Lichtman Corporation has listed the following Preferred Pictures for release during April and May: "Daughters of the Rich," a Gasnier Production from Edgar Saltus' novel; and "The Girl Who Came Back," a Tom Forman production, and an adaptation of the well known stage play by Charles E. Blaney and Samuel R. Golding. The cast for "Daughters of the Rich" is Gaston Glass, Miriam Cooper, Ruth Clifford, Ethel Shannon, Stuart Holmes and Joseph Swickard. The players in "The Girl Who Came Back" include Miriam Cooper, Kenneth Harlan, Gaston Glass, ZaSu Pitts, and Joseph Dowling.

Reports Normal Conditions Abroad

D. J. Mountan, Arrow's Foreign Manager, Submits Interesting Data

D. J. Mountan, general manager of the foreign department of the Arrow Film Corporation, this week submitted some interesting data, which show that the situation abroad is greatly improved.

"Foreign conditions," said Mr. Mountan, "are back to normal in practically all territories, with the exception of Germany and Austria-Hungary. These two territories, however, have lately been showing great interest in American productions and are doing some buying despite the very unfavorable rate of exchange. It is interesting to note the figures regarding the number of pictures made outside of Germany that were shown in Germany in the period of 1920-1921. The following figures, compiled by the Film Express, published in Germany, are of interest:

1920

Country	No. Film	Reels	Meters
U. S. A.	17	76	21,118
Denmark	3	14	4,041
France	3	6	2,911
Italy	14	73	25,530
Austria	29	132	43,812
Russia	2	5	1,176
Spain	1	6	2,078

1921

Country	No. Film	Reels	Meters
Argentine	1	2	537
U. S. A.	204	788	213,352
Denmark	87	282	86,192
France	33	51	11,658
Great Britain	4	11	2,903
Italy	92	434	133,617
Austria	173	757	262,431
Sweden	29	86	26,903
Switzerland	1	1	388
Spain	2	11	3,724
Hungary	42	183	60,165

"These figures show that the inevitable has happened and America jumps almost to the lead of the list, being second only to Austria, Germany's next door neighbor and one whose exchange is even lower than Germany. With any sort of break in exchange there is no question but what America will forge to the top.

"Another territory that is now open for the American market is China. This territory has heretofore used nothing but used prints and the American producer and distributor has received little or no profit. With the advent, however, of the new Peacock Motion Picture Corporation and the ambitious plans of the very capable executives of this organization, American producers and distributors are now beginning to realize a fair return from this territory. I, for one, am sure every man in the industry received the news of the formation of this corporation with great delight. Mr. F. V. Chamberlin and his associates, J. Drexel Biddle, Jr., and R. C. Patterson, Jr., are positive proof that the contemplated plans will be carried to a successful conclusion, and that American film men may expect to sell a large percentage of their pictures in China territory."

Work Begun on "The Talisman" by Assoc. Authors

Associated Authors, the Frank Woods, Thompson Buchanan, and Elmer Harris triumvirate have started production work on "The Talisman" at the Thomas H. Ince studios. The subject will be released through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

Chester Withey is directing the subject. Wallace Beery will be featured in the role of King Richard. John Bowers has been cast as Sir Kenneth; Marguerite de la Motte as Edith Plantaganet; Tully Marshall as the Hermit; Charles Gerrard as Saladin; Kathleen Clifford as Berengaria and Wilbur Higby as Deveaux. Others of the cast have not yet been decided upon.

Magnificent sets are being built for the production under the direction of Mrs. Una Nixon Hopkins, art director; Claude H. Mitchell is announced as production manager.

Beaumont Signs Long Term Warner Contract

Harry Beaumont was placed under a long term contract as director by the Warner Brothers, following the completion of "Main Street," the popular novel by Sinclair Lewis, according to an announcement made this week by Harry M. Warner.

Scenes taken from "Glimpses of the Moon," which appears on the Paramount schedule.

Commerce Chambers to See "Souls for Sale"

The entire cast which appeared in "Souls for Sale" attended the Monday evening performance at the California theatre in Los Angeles and received an ovation from the packed house. The Chambers of Commerce of both Los Angeles and Hollywood have arranged for special showings of the photoplay for their members, and will send messages concerning the film to other chambers of commerce throughout the country.

"Souls for Sale" will receive its first performance outside of Los Angeles at the Capitol theatre, New York, for the week beginning Sunday, April 8, with a S. L. Rothafel presentation.

Metro Ready to Release Big Game Picture

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION has concluded arrangements to release immediately Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's "African Big Game," showing wild animals as they exist in their natural state in the jungles and on the plains of the African continent.

For two years Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, accompanied by a large number of natives who formed the "safari" or expedition, braved the dangers of endless deserts and treacherous forests for the purpose of making a photoplay of big game. Many of the species caught by their watchful cameras are even now verging toward complete extinction.

Martin Johnson's efforts as a naturalist have received the commendation of Carl E. Akeley of the American Museum of Natural History and other eminent authorities, both in the United States and abroad.

College Students Pursue Study on Sets

One of the early results of Carl Laemmle's College Endowment Contest, under the rules of which students in more than 125 colleges and universities are competing in scenario writing, is the recent interest of the faculty of Pomona College, Claremont, Cal., in the value of motion pictures as aid to the study of romance languages.

Sixty students of romance languages in that college have just completed a visit to Universal City for the purpose of studying the sets and characterizations being developed for the screen adaptation of Victor Hugo's classic, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

New Harry Carey Subject Well Under Way

At the F. B. O. studios Harry Carey is progressing on his new picture titled "The Miracle Baby," which is a screen adaptation of a magazine story by Frank Pierce. The Carey company returned this week from Truckee.

The F. B. O. star is supported by Margaret Landis as leading lady. Others in the cast are Charles J. LeMoyne, Edward Hearn, Hedda Nova, Edmund Cobb, Alfred Allen and Bert Sprotte. Val Paul is directing and William Thornley is behind the camera. The screen adaptation was made by Bernstein-Jaccard.

King Baggot Will Direct Rawlinson

King Baggot has been chosen by Universal to direct Herbert Rawlinson in his next starring vehicle, "Thicker Than Water."

This was adapted to the screen by Harvey Gates from the magazine story, "Richard," by Margaret Bryant.

Shots from "Wandering Daughters," James Young's initial release for First National.

Big Features Australasian Demand

United Artist Representative Tells of New Conditions in Industry Abroad

THAT conditions in the exhibitor end of the motion picture industry in Australasia today are very similar to those existing in the United States in that the big feature photoplay largely has taken the place of the ordinary "program" picture, is the report brought to New York by Maurice Silverstone, special representative in Australasia for United Artists.

Mr. Silverstone is in New York for a series of business conferences with Hiram Abrams, president, and other executives of United Artists' home office. In addition to the above statement Mr. Silverstone says there has been a very splendid improvement in the picture industry in general.

"Naturally this public demand for big pictures has been felt by and had its effect on the exhibitors everywhere in Australasia," says Mr. Silverstone, "and the net result is that new theatres have been built, other theatres remodeled and the extensive preparations were made to meet the wishes of the public in the matter of bigger and better pictures.

"As an illustration of the wonderful growth of the industry and the appreciation of and demand for better features nothing could be more forceful than the fact that Mary Pickford's old 'Tess of the Storm Country' opened eight years ago at the Crystal Palace, Sydney, Australia, at an admission price of six pence (twelve cents). Miss Pickford's personal and brand-new production of 'Tess of the Storm Country,' recently released, opened not long ago at the same theatre—which has been remodeled into the most up-to-date house—at four shillings ($1.00), and is certain to run there for a minimum season of two months."

Lytell Coming East for "Lone Wolf" Series

Bert Lytell, now starring for Sol Lesser in the film production, "The Meanest Man in the World," is due to come East within the next few weeks to carry out the terms of his new contract recently signed with Cosmopolitan Pictures.

Mr. Lytell will play the title role in "The Lone Wolf" series. The character is a reformed international crook, whose fight against the underworld, which tried to get him back, is tense and dramatic.

Louise Dresser Added to "Salomy Jane" Cast

George Melford's forthcoming Paramount picture, "Salomy Jane," will have a cast of unusual strength. The name of Louise Dresser is the latest to be added to those of Jacqueline Logan, Maurice Flynn and William Davidson.

"Salomy Jane" will be taken in the famous old mining district of Northern California, whence have come Bret Harte's greatest stories.

F. B. O. Boston Franchise Bought by Grand

Word has just got out that the franchise for the F. B. O. office in Boston has been bought out as of April 1 by Federated Films of New England, of which Samuel V. Grand is president. The final arrangements are still up in the air, but it is generally understood that Mr. Grand will continue in his present capacity and that Joseph Roth will also continue as General Manager.

The matter is expected to be all planned out in the near future, though whether the present offices of the F. B. O. will be used in favor of the Federated quarters is still undecided. Steve Fitzgibbons, F. B. O. Boston manager, has not decided just what he is going to take up in the way of future connections, though he will locate here. He is, however, going South for a month for a well-earned rest.

Strong Cast Seen in Paramount's "Hollywood"

With James Cruze's production, "Hollywood," nearing completion at the Lasky studio, Paramount has announced the complete list of players who will appear in the picture.

The list of prominent players eclipses even that of Cecil B. DeMille's "The Affairs of Anatol." "Hollywood" includes Thomas Meighan, Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt, Betty Compson, Leatrice Joy, Walter Hiers, Lila Lee, Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett, Nita Naldi, J. Warren Kerrigan, Elliott Dexter, Charles Ogle, Lois Wilson, Mary Astor, Hope Hampton, Will Rogers, Gertrude Astor, Laurence Wheat, Ben Turpin, Kalla Pasha and Jim Finlayson.

New Lichtman Exchange Is Opened in Albany, N. Y.

Al. Lichtman has opened a new exchange in Albany, N. Y., at 676 Broadway. This office will handle all of the Preferred Pictures released by the Al. Litchman Corp., beginning with "Poor Men's Wives." The first four releases, "Rich Man's Wives," "Shadows," "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," and "The Hero" will remain in the hands of the Bond Photoplay Corporation.

"U" Signs Jack Hoxie, Roy Stewart, Wm. Desmond

THREE popular players have just been engaged for Universal feature productions, the Universal home office announces. They are Roy Stewart, William Desmond and Jack Hoxie. Stewart and Desmond have been playing in Universal serials and short features for several months. Hoxie, who is a western star, is a newcomer to the Universal lot. His recent productions have been with Arrow.

This addition gives Universal a full complement of six stars for the Universal Attraction schedule of five-reel features.

Cuba First to Broadcast Paramount Week

Cuba is the first country to broadcast its Paramount week celebration via the radio. Advices received by E. E. Shauer, director of the Foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, tell of elaborate plans for the celebration to be held in honor of the fifth annivarsery of the Caribbean Film Company and of Paramount Pictures in Cuba.

Cuba is the si th country outside the United States and Canada to hold a Paramount Week celebration, Australia, New Zealand, the Philippines, Panama and Trinidad having celebrated last year. All have planned celebrations for this Fall also. The program for the celebration in Cuba and Porto Rico will open on Saturday night, April 7.

Tourneur Names Cast For "Brass Bottle"

Maurice Tourneur has selected his players for his picturization of "The Brass Bottle," to be produced by M. C. Levee for First National release.

For the character of Horace Ventimore, the young architect, Tourneur has named Harry Myers. Fakrash-el-Aamash, the genie, will be played by Ernest Torrence. Tully Marshall as Prof. Futvoye, Clarissa Selwyn as Mrs. Futvoye, Ford Sterling as Rapkin, Aggie Herring as Mrs. Rapkin, Charlotte Marriam as Sylvia Futvoye and Ed Jobson as Samuel Wackerbath, comprise the other portrayers of the leading characters.

Sills Assigned to "Lady of Quality"

Milton Sills has been assigned by Universal to play the leading male role in "A Lady of Quality," a forthcoming Hobart Henley-Universal-Jewel production, starring Virginia Valli.

Scenes taken from "Alice Adams," starring Florence Vidor. Associated Exhibitors.

Good Supporting Cast for New Post Pictures

The completed cast for "The Man From Ten Strike," starring Guy Bates Post, will include Cleo Madison, Grace Darmond and Mitchell Lewis in the principal supporting roles. The company has just returned from the snow lands in the Yosemite Valley, and work on the filming of the James Oliver Curwood story is rapidly nearing completion. Robert T. Thornby is directing the production at the Thomas H. Ince studios. Principal Pictures Corporation are sponsoring its making and will release and distribute the feature in the near future.

D. W. Griffith Party Returns From Florida

D. W. Griffith, accompanied by a number of his leading players, is back from Miami, Florida, where some of the scenes for the forthcoming production, "The White Rose," were made. In the party were Carol Dempster, Mae Marsh, Ivor Novello, Neil Hamilton, Porter Strong and other featured players.

The picture will be finished at the Griffith studios in Mamaroneck, and probably shown to the public before the summer time sets in.

"Eleventh Hour" Nearing Completion

"The Eleventh Hour," from the stage success by Lincoln J. Carter, is nearing completion in the Fox Film Corporation West Coast studio. Charles Jones and Shirley Mason are the featured players. Included in the cast are June Elvidge, Alan Hale, Edward Martindale, Richard Tucker, Walter McGrail and Frederick Kelsey.

The scenario is by Louis Sherwin. Bernard J. Durning is directing. Release date will be announced during the summer.

Charles Jones in his new vehicle for release by William Fox, which is titled "Snowdrift."

Fred Clay, Pioneer with Lasky, Goes to Fox

FRED CLAY, business manager at Lasky's since the inception of the Jesse Lasky Pictures Play Company, has resigned to accept a contract with Fox as the general studio manager. The contract becomes effective April 16th.

Judge Goes to England as Publicity Chief

Horace C. Judge, for the past three years assistant to C. L. Yearsley in the advertising and publicity department of First National, sails for London on the "Homeric" April 14 to assume the management of the London and British advertising and publicity department.

On returning to his native land he will be associated with Ralph J. Pugh, managing director of the English branch of First National. His broad experience in motion picture and theatrical activities in this country, combined with a thorough knowledge of English business methods, makes him an ideal man to publicize pictures in England.

Scenes taken from the new William Fox production, "Lovebound," in which Shirley Mason plays the stellar role.

Staff Completed for New Jackie Coogan Picture

The completed staff engaged for Jackie Coogan's new production, which will be based on Mary Roberts Rinehart's story, "Long Live the King," will comprise the following: C. Gardner Sullivan as screen adaptor, with Eve Unsell collaborating on the continuity proper; Edward Biby as studio manager; Ollie May Baker as financial secretary of the present company; Frank Good in charge of the photography, assisted by Robert Martin; and Irene Morra as film editor.

Penn. Senate Would End Daylight Saving

The Senate of Pennsylvania, in session at Harrisburg, has passed a bill which would dispose of daylight saving. It would prohibit all municipalities from passing daylight saving ordinances.

"Backbone," Goldwyn Release, Set for April 30

"Backbone," the first of the twelve 1923 specials of Distinctive Pictures Corporation, will be released on April 30th by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation under the terms of the new contract signed between Arthur S. Friend and F. J. Godsol last week.

This is the first production of Distinctive since its expansion late in 1922.

Alfred Lunt takes the male lead. In addition to Lunt there is Edith Roberts and a good cast. Edward Sloman directed the picture.

Principal Acquires "The Spider and the Rose"

Principal Pictures Corporation will distribute "The Spider and the Rose." The deal providing for the distribution of this picture was closed this week in New York between Principal Pictures Corporation, Bennie Zeidman and Mike Rosenberg. The cast includes Alice Lake, Gaston Glass, Baby Richard Hendrick, Joseph J. Dowling of "The Miracle Man" fame, Robert McKim, Noah Beery, Edward Stevens, Frank Campeau, Hector Sarano, Otis Harlan, Alec Francis and Louise Fazenda.

First National Books Four in N. Y. Strand

Four First National pictures are booked for early showing at the Strand theatre, New York City. They are the Thomas H. Ince production, "What a Woman Learned," due April 15; Jackie Coogan in "Daddy," April 22; Norma Talmadge in "Within the Law," April 29, and Ince's "Scars of Jealousy," May 15.

Universal Buys Rights to Western Novel

Universal has just bought a western story, "The Red Lock," a novel by David Anderson.

It is likely the picture will be used as a vehicle for Hoot Gibson, although it may be selected as a Jack Hoxie feature.

Shots from Arrow's serial, "The Fighting Skipper," featuring Jack Perrin, Francis Ford and Peggy O'Day.

"The Fighting Blade" Is in Production

John S. Robertson started production last week on "The Fighting Blade," a Cromwellian cloak-and-sword romance from the pen of Beulah Marie Dix. Richard Barthelmess is starred, and Dorothy Mackaill plays opposite him. The interiors are being filmed by Mr. Robertson at the Universal studios, Fort Lee, New Jersey, although the production is being made for Inspiration Pictures. Some of the exterior scenes will also be made in New Jersey.

"Lovebound" Release Is Due April 15

It is announced by Fox Film Corporation that Shirley Mason's latest feature, "Lovebound," will be released April 15th. The picture was previously known as "Inside the Door," then changed to "Balance Due," and finally "Lovebound." The story, an original from the pen of George Scarborough, was especially written for the star. Henry Otto directed, and the cast includes Albert Roscoe, leading man; Richard Tucker, heavy; Joseph Girard and Edward Martindale.

"Covered Wagon" Opens in Chicago April 22

James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," will open in Chicago April 22 at the Woods theatre. John C. Flinn is in Chicago this week making the preliminary arrangements for the presentation.

Goldwyn Purchases Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks"

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has purchased the screen rights to Elinor Glyn's widely read novel, "Three Weeks," and will make a feature production based upon it.

The film rights to "Three Weeks" were purchased by Goldwyn after Miss Glyn's original screen story, "Six Days," now in production at the company's studios, under the direction of Charles J. Brabin, began to shape up. Negotiations for the rights were engineered by Edward Bowes, vice-president of Goldwyn, while he was in Europe.

Associated Exhibitors Name New Salesmen

C. L. Brentlinger has joined the Associated Exhibitors' organization as a salesman at the Des Moines, Iowa, branch. Mr. Brentlinger formerly was manager of the Orpheum at Terre Haute, one of the houses in the circuit owned by his father, A. F. Brentlinger.

W. B. Frank, general sales manager of Associated, has announced also the appointment of Charles W. Glett as a salesman at the Double "I" branch in Illinois.

James W. Horne Signed by F. B. O. to Direct

James W. Horne has signed a contract to direct for one year for the Film Booking Offices of America, according to Emile Offeman, general manager of the studios.

Horne has just completed "Itching Palms," a comedy drama adapted by Wyndham Gittens and Helmer Bergman, F. B. O. scenarists from Roy Briant's play, "Jerry Comes Home."

"Only 38" Is Under Way for Paramount

William de Mille began work last week on his Paramount production, "Only 38." Lois Wilson is playing what might be called the title role and is featured together with Elliott Dexter, May McAvoy and George Fawcett, all of whom have splendid roles.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 725 S. WABASH AVE.

Around the Trade

ORCHESTRA LEADER RHEINGOLD HALLE, of the Riviera theatre, Chicago, has left the city to become director of the Victory theatre orchestra at Evansville, Illinois, and assumed his new duties April 2. Otto Geiss, who has been directing the Victory orchestra, is now wielding the baton at the Strand, and Director Zachary, of the Strand, has been transferred to the Victory as assistant to Director Halle.

Word comes from Mason City, Iowa, that our old friend, R. Ravenscroft, well known in Chicago theatre circles as an exploitation and advertising man, is making a fine record as manager of the Palace, one of Mason City's leading moving picture theatres, and is becoming well known for the exploitation work he is doing on behalf of his house.

A number of changes in the ownership of Indiana motion picture theatres has been reported during the last few days. F. J. Rembusch has taken over the Crump theatre at Columbus, making it a closed town; the Hornbaker Amusement Company, of La Fayette, has purchased the Colonial at Logansport from Manager Byrely, who has run it for many years, and the latter has secured the Strand and Alhambra at Knightstown. Charles Sweden is now operating the American at Evansville, which he took over from P. Holzman, which gives Mr. Sweden two houses in this city.

Manager McCurdy, of the Randolph theatre, made a flying trip to New York last week, where he conferred with home office officials of Universal on the forthcoming showing of "Hunting Big Game In Africa," which is booked to open at the Randolph on April 22. An unusually extensive exploitation and advertising campaign, including many window tie-ups, will be conducted previous to the opening of this feature, and the numerous accessories which are being put out by Universal will be used in this connection.

Rebuilding of the Auditorium theatre at South Bend, Indiana, is to start at an early date, and the Auditorium Amusement Company is selling all its old equipment anticipatory to this work.

The names of seven persons recommended for appointment as deputy moving picture censors were placed before the city civil service commission by representatives of nine civic organizations, including the Woman's City Club, the City Club, the Catholic Woman's Club and the Council of Jewish Women, last week. The names are: Mrs. Irvin McDowell, Mrs. William S. Hefferan, Mrs. E. E. Smith, Alderman U. S. Schwartz, Mrs. Thomas Burns, Maj. M. L. C. Funkhouser and Mrs. Moses L. Purvin.

A new company, of which Mr. H. Lathrop is president, Oscar Swan, secretary, and W. E. Breed, manager, has taken over the New Bedford theatre at New Bedford, Illinois. The house opened under the new management on March 27, and, according to Salesman Armgardt, of Universal, is booked one hundred per cent. Universal. E. M. Spratt, former manager of the New Bedford, is devoting all his time to his recently opened general store.

Charles Morton, of the Family theatre, Mount Carroll, Illinois, on March 27 reopened the Grand theatre at Galena, Illinois, which has been closed for some time.

Abe Wallerstein, manager of the Tivoli theatre, Michigan City, Indiana, is enjoying a ten days' pleasure trip to Baltimore, Maryland.

Madge Bellamy, star of "Lorna Doone" and many other pictures, is scheduled to arrive in Chicago the latter part of this week with her gold-plated motion picture camera, with which she will appear at a number of motion picture theatres and "shoot" the audiences. It is planned to have the pictures developed at once and shown on the screen of the various houses where she will make personal appearances. Publicity Director Sobler, of First National, arranged the appearances at the request of Thomas Ince, who recently secured Miss Bellamy's signature to a long-term contract.

Hal Oliver, who recently severed his connection with First National's publicity and exploitation department, is now a circus exploiteer traveling with the Sells-Floto Shows.

Among the Exchanges

JOHN FLYNN has arrived from New York headquarters of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to arrange for the showing of "The Covered Wagon" at the Woods theatre, opening April 21, the theatre having been leased for six months by the Paramount organization. It is understood that Dan Roche, who has exploited this picture in several cities, will take up the reins when Mr. Flynn returns to New York. Elaborate presentation and an advertising and exploitation campaign, which will include the use of four hundred 24-sheet billboards and hundreds of 3-sheet posters will mark the opening of this great picture in Chicago.

Johnny Hines passed through Chicago this week en route to California, where he will start work on the picturization of George Cohan's famous comedy, "Little Johnny Jones." Mr. Hines met a large number of exhibitors when he visited Film Row and made a decided hit with a short speech he made in First National headquarters to a gathering of forty or fifty theatre men.

Manager Otto Bolle and Salesman Herb Haymen, of Paramount, made what they claim as a record-breaking trip in the interests of Paramount's "39" last week when they visited fourteen suburban theatres in one evening. Results were gratifying, as when Messrs. Bolle and Haymen arrived at the exchange the next morning they found four exhibitors already there waiting to book the pictures.

Joe Friedman, who has been vacationing in Atlantic City for the last ten days or two weeks, is expected back in Chicago about April 9. Mr. Friedman jumped over to New York to attend the Schulberg dinner and also looked after some business matters while in the East.

Mr. A. J. McCabe, formerly engaged in film sales work in Michigan territory, started special work for Universal, Monday the 19th. While in South Bend he was taken to the hospital seriously ill and left the 29th for Cheyenne, Wyoming, his mother's home, where he will submit to a surgical operation in the hope of securing permanent relief. It is not expected he will be able to resume his work with Universal before May 1.

Herman Stern, assistant general sales manager of Universal Film exchange of Chicago, has returned from a meeting of Universal executives in New York. There has, perhaps, never been greater activity about Universal exchanges than is noticeable these days of one big picture monthly and, in addition, short product and special feature releases. The Jack London story, "The Abysmal Brute," featuring Reginald Denny, was ready for screening to the trade this week, and four or five other Jewels are soon to be in the exchange's hands for advance showings. Mr. Stern is making arrangements for the release of the "Hunting Big Game In Africa" picture, which has been showing to capacity houses on Broadway for more than fifteen weeks at $1.50 admission, and regards the securing of this picture by Universal as one of its big achievements.

L. B. Golden, manager of Celebrated's Indianapolis exchange, was visiting Chicago headquarters last week. He reports business in his territory as good and that the Al Lichtman production, in particular, is going over in great shape. Just before leaving Indianapolis he signed up the Consolidated Realty and Theatre Circuit for "Shadows," the circuit recently having put "Rich Men's Wives" into all their houses to good business.

Announcement of the engagement of Edward Laemmle, nephew of Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation and one of the Universal directors of production, to Miss Peppi Heller was made this week upon the arrival of Mr. Laemmle in Chicago. Miss Heller is the sister of Mrs. Louis Laemmle, of Chicago. The wedding will take place in Chicago, Sunday, April 8.

The F. I. L. M. Board of Trade is now located on the third floor of the Standard Oil Building, Ninth and Michigan, having moved from its old offices in Wabash avenue. J. D. Williams is in charge of the offices.

James Schofield, who has been connected with Paramount's accessory department for some time past, is out working with Eddie Rosecan in Northern Indiana, learning the fine points of salesmanship, and it is expected will soon have a regular field position with this company.

R. Schrader, Pathe's divisional manager, paid the local exchange a visit last week.

Two of Metro's well-known features have been booked into the Chicago for May showings. They are "The Famous Mrs. Fair" and Rex Ingram's "Where the Pavement Ends," the picture based on stories by John Russell.

District Manager R. C. Seery, of First National, called seven branch managers into Chicago to meet Mr. Henderson, of the Lesan Advertising Agency, of New York, and confer with him over First National's proposed national advertising campaign. Those who attended the meeting, besides District Manager Seery, included: Clayton Bond, manager of Chicago office; Harry Wiess, St. Louis manager; E. L. Alperson, manager of the Omaha office; Harry Weinberg, manager of the Des Moines office; E. C. Rhoden, manager of the Kansas City office; H. J. Fitzgerald, of the Milwaukee office, and R. E. Bradford, of the Indianapolis office.

LITTLE STORIES ABOUT PEOPLE ON THE LOT

At Universal City

STUDIOS in Universal City are busier now than for months past. There are six feature companies engaged on new subjects besides the unit filming "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

King Baggot is directing Herbert Rawlinson in "Thicker Than Water," from an adaptation made by Charles Kenyon.

Hobart Henley is preparing for the filming of "A Lady of Quality," a costume production laid in the seventeenth century.

Jack Conway begins work this week on "Saw-Dust," in which Gladys Walton has the stellar role. This subject is based on Courtney Riley Cooper's story adapted by Hugh Hoffman. Members of the cast are to be chosen this week.

George Marshall has been engaged to direct Jack Hoxie in a Western drama titled "Don Quickshot of the Rio Grande." Elinor Field will appear opposite Hoxie. The cast includes Emmett King, William Steele, Robert McKenzie and Fred C. Jones.

The cast supporting Roy Stewart in "Burning Words," which Stuart Paton is directing, includes Laura LaPlante, Harold Goodwin, William Wilson, George McDaniels, Eve Southern, Harry Carter, Noble Johnson, Alfred Fisher and Edith Yorke.

William Desmond is being starred in a feature production, titled "McGuire of the Big Snow," with a supporting cast that includes Louise Lorraine, Willard Louis and Vera James. Richard Stanton, who recently arrived from the East and Europe, is directing this subject.

Jack Dillon has been engaged to direct a series of all-star features. The first will be "The Self-Made Wife," based on a story by Elizabeth Alexander. Ethel Grey Terry and Crauford Kent will appear in the leading roles. Dillon has just returned to Los Angeles from the East.

Edward Sedgwick is directing the Hoot Gibson subject from a wheel chair. The ligaments of his leg were torn on Saturday of last week as result of a jump from a bank at San Diego while appearing in a bit as a sheriff. The title of the Gibson vehicle is "Blinkie."

Lloyd Bacon is beginning a series of comedy subjects featuring Walter Ford, an English comedian. The first will be titled "Radio Romeos." Two other comedy units are preparing new stories under the supervision of Tom Gray.

The serial built around the exploits of Daniel Boone has been started with Eileen Sedgwick and Jack Mower in the leading roles. Frank Messenger is directing this chapter-production. Jay Marchant is assisting in the direction.

In the Goldwyn Studios

Victor Seastrom's first production for Goldwyn will be Hall Caine's latest novel, "The Master of Man." Paul Bern, who adapted "The Christian," has been engaged to write the continuity for this subject.

George D. Baker and Charles Whittaker are preparing the continuity for "The Magic Skin," taken from Balzac's story, for Achievement Films, Inc., who will produce at Goldwyn studios for Goldwyn distribution.

James W. Graham has been added to the staff of the Marshall Neilan Productions as assistant to Leeds L. Baxter, the general manager. Graham formerly was with the Neilan company in a similar capacity, but for the past six months has been in charge of one of the technical departments of the Service Bureau.

Tod Browning is preparing for the first production under his Goldwyn contract, a picture to be based upon Arthur Somers Roche's novel, "The Day of Faith."

"The Eternal Three" company returned on Friday from its trip to Mexico City and Chapultepec, where a number of important sequences were made.

Work on "Greed," the picturization of Frank Norris' "McTeague," was halted for nearly a week in San Francisco, due to the illness of Director Erich von Stroheim, who had an acute attack of tonsilitis. He has recovered sufficiently to resume production.

The "Red Lights" company is still on location of Carisso Gorge, where Director Clarence Badger is making rapid progress.

With Paramount Units

Jesse Lasky is working with the production department in arranging the fall schedule, which will be announced about May 15.

"A Gentleman of Leisure" by John Stapleton and P. G. Wodehouse, starring Jack Holt, will be started this month. Joseph Henaberry will be the director.

Work was begun this week on "Children of Jazz." Eileen Percy appears in a featured role. Jerome Storm is directing.

The cast of "The Woman With Four Faces" has been augmented by Joseph Kilgour, Theodor Von Eltz, George Fawcett, Guy Oliver, James Farley and Charles Stevenson. Betty Compson appears in the stellar role with Richard Dix opposite. Herbert Brenon is directing.

Sada Cowan has completed the continuity for "The Silent Partner," which Charles Maigne will direct with Leatrice Joy and Owen Moore in the leading roles.

The complete cast for "Salomy Jane," which was started this week by George Melford, includes Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett, Maurice Flynn, William Davidson, Charles Ogle, William Quirk, Raymond Nye, Louise Dresser, James Neill, Tom Carrigan, Clarence Burton, Barbara Brower, Jack Padgen.

In production are the following subjects: "Only Thirty-eight," with William DeMille directing an all-star cast; "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," starring Gloria Swanson under the direction of Sam Wood; "Hollywood," presenting an all-star cast with James Cruze directing; "Fair Week," with Walter Hiers as the star and Robert Wagner the director; and "The Cheat," starring Pola Negri under the direction of George Fitzmaurice.

James Shelley Hamilton, for the last two years editor of the Exceptional Photoplay Bulletin, issued by the National Board of Review, has been added to the editorial department of the Paramount Long Island studio.

East and West with Fox

Jack Gilbert will next appear in the title role of "Cameo Kirby" under the direction of Jack Ford.

New subjects are being prepared for William Russell and Dustin Farnum. In production are: "The Eleventh Hour," co-starring Shirley Mason and Charles Jones under the direction of Bernard Durning, and "Tempered Steel," a comedy drama starring Tom Mix with Jack Blystone directing.

J. Gordon Edwards is at work again at the New York studios of Fox Film Corporation on a production to be released in the fall. Edwards returned from Panama early last week after a four week sojourn filming many of the exteriors of the new picture. In the cast of the new production, title for which has not been selected, are Edmund Loe, Bela Lugosi, Carl Harbaugh, Martin Faust, Jack Edwards, and Bryon Douglas. The scenario was written by Anthony Paul Kelly.

F. B. O. Production Notes

The Harry Carey Company has returned from Truckee after filming exteriors for "The Miracle Baby" under the direction of Val Paul.

Warner Baxter, Ann Perdue and Ralph Lewis are cast for the leading roles in "Blow Your Own Horn," the Owen Davis play, which will be directed by James Horne. Production work is to be started this week.

Mal St. Clair is now directing "The End of A Perfect Fray," one of the "Fighting Blood" series.

Chester Bennett has completed "Divorce" with Jane Novak in the leading role. Ralph Lewis has been placed under a long-term contract by P. A. Powers.

Around the Metro Studios

Rex Ingram has completed the exteriors for "Scaramouche" and is now directing interiors at the studio.

Max Graf has completed work on "The Fog" under the direction of Paul Powell.

Edward Sloman has been engaged by Metro to direct "The Eagle's Feather," Catherine Newlin Burt's story adapted for the screen by Winifred Dunn. This is the first of a series of all-star productions which will be made during the year under the supervision of Milton E. Hoffman, manager of production.

Harold Shaw will begin the direction of Viola Dana's new vehicle April 9th.

Jackie Coogan Productions Company will begin production work on May 1.

Barbara La Marr is cast in one of the leading roles in Reginald Barker's picturization of G. B. Lancaster's novel, "The Law Bringers." The photoplay went into production this week at the Louis B. Mayer studio.

On the Sennett Lot

Mack Sennett's first comedy made for Pathe release was scheduled for shipment East on Tuesday of this week. The original title of this subject was "Domestic Economy" but has been changed to "She Loves Me Not." Billy Bevan, Harry Gribbon, Dot Farley, and Eugenie Gilbert appear in the cast.

"Mud Pies and Puddles" will be directed by Roy Del Ruth with Harry Gribbon, Lila Leslie, Kewpie Morgan, and Alberta Vaughn in the cast.

Alberta Vaughn has been placed under a three year contract by Sennett for featured leads in comedies.

Bertram Bracken has been contracted by Mack Sennett to direct comedies and features.

Here and There

An airplane will be wrecked for the staging of the punch scene in "The Broken Wing," which is being directed by Tom Forman. The machine will be wrecked when it is dropped from the ceiling to the floor of the set.

Gasnier will complete work on "The Daughters of the Rich" this week. The production is scheduled for release in May.

Sets are being built for Victor Schertzinger's "The Mansion of Aching Hearts."

More than ten thousand titles have been suggested as a result of Ben Schulberg's offer of ten thousand dollars a word for acceptable titles.

For Director Frank Borzage's initial picture "Children of Dust" replica of Gramercy Park, New York City, is being built. The cost will be $50,000.

WHAT SHOWMEN THINK OF CURRENT RELEASES

Exhibitors' Box-Office Reports

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Nobody's Money—

Jack Holt is gaining in popularity by leaps and bounds and this vehicle held up very well for a six-day showing. (East.)

Glimpses of the Moon—

This picture showed up poorly (West.)

The Siren Call—

Good picture of its type. Business fair for Holy Week. (Middle West.)

Dark Secrets—

Very Dorothy Daltonish, and those who like Dalton liked the picture. Nothing much to it, and, consequently, got little consideration from the public. (Middle West.)

Adam and Eva—

Business was good all week with this one. (Middle West.)

Pleasing, but very frothy entertainment that didn't do much business. It took a big picture to get over this week—the week before Easter—and this picture was not big enough to draw crowds against odds. (Middle West.)

Racing Hearts—

Theodore Roberts is usually a good card here. This one drew good crowds all week. (Middle West.)

Picture pleased audiences and good business was realized.

Adam's Rib—

Drew well during a two weeks' run. (Middle West.)

Critics thought this a ridiculous plot, but people went to see it in spite of adverse notoriety. (Middle West.)

Mr. Billings Spends His Dime—

A real comedy, and Walter Hiers deserves his stardom. Went strong. Excellent business. (East.)

Light and a good drawer. (East.)

Did excellent. Well received. (Middle West.)

The Leopardess—

Stood up well in a bad week preceding Easter. (East.)

A lively attendance for a week's run, as Alice Brady has a good following here. (Middle West.)

Java Head—

Unusual and interesting with splendid settings and acting. Proved good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Business not good. Picture wonderfully cast and wonderfully done, but people did not like the story. (Middle West.)

Picture excellently produced and we did good business with it. (West.)

Grumpy—

This is a splendid comedy drama in which Theodore Roberts is at his best. Played to big crowds Holy Week. (Middle West.)

Well liked and made a very absorbing story. Theodore Roberts is great. Excellent business. Holy Week made no appreciable difference. (East.)

The Nth Commandment—

Poor picture. Bad business. (East.)

ASSOC. EXHIBITORS

The Woman Who Fooled Herself—

Did good business. Settings were commented upon favorably, as well as work of the cast.

F. B. O.

The Third Alarm—

Thrilling and sensational picture. Went well. Suited house. (East.)

Fighting Blood—

This is a series worth running. All the characters are well drawn, there's plenty of action and a dash of romance in all the "rounds." We are getting lots of fans who visit our house just to see this subject, regardless of the feature attraction. (East.)

Just the kind of picture to show in a house that features melodrama. Our patrons liked this one from start to finish. (Middle West.)

Thelma—

Did nice business and patrons were well satisfied with the picture. (Middle West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

The Light in the Dark—

Beautiful film, but over the heads of the crowd. (East.)

Daddy—

Another triumph for this child actor. Sure-fire audience picture. (Middle West.)

A great picture. Played to good business in a poor theatrical week. (Middle West.)

Jackie Coogan's best. Went across big. Fine receipts. (Middle West.)

Bellboy 13—

Pleasing light comedy. Went over fairly well. (East.)

FOX

Brass Commandments—

One of the season's best. Many said they regarded it as Farnum's very best. He is universal favorite here. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

Mad Love—

In spite of Holy Week this one pulled them in for very satisfactory figures. Avalanche of publicity recently given Pola Negri helped a lot. (East.)

Souls for Sale—

Brought them in and left them pleased. Did exceptionally big business with this one. (West.)

The Christian—

Finely done, but too heavy for our patrons. Business fair. (Middle West.)

LICHTMAN

Poor Men's Wives—

An improbable, poorly constructed picture, just full of hokum. Wasn't worth the week's run we gave it. (East.)

It was a knockout all the week. It carried a punch and is a generally worthwhile film. Very good business. (East.)

Business fair on account of Holy Week, which affected the attendance. Picture liked very well. (Middle West.)

METRO

Youth to Youth—

Considering fact was pre-Easter week, proved good attraction. Very interesting and entertaining. (Middle West.)

Peg O' My Heart—

Miss Taylor's performance was creditably commented on in comparison with the stage production and business was satisfactory.

Where the Pavement Ends—

Reports were very satisfactory on this one and did an excellent business. (West.)

Success—

One of the best of its kind we have had for some time. Papers called it timely because of interest now in this sort of thing. Very good business. (East.)

Toll of the Sea—

Beautiful picture that is a novelty and was well liked. (East.)

Hearts Aflame—

Did not get over at all on second-run showing. (East.)

Jazzmania—

A mediocre picture. Business fair, aided by special show of fashions. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood—

Eighth and final week held up well. Best run at this house. Picture previously reported as excellent. (East.)

Fine business on four weeks' run.(Middle West.)

ALLIED PROD. & DIST.

Garrison's Finish—

Well liked, but failed on account of bad calendar week. (East.)

Suzanna—

Held up excellently on second week's presentation.

UNIVERSAL

The Bolted Door—

Just an average program picture that failed to attract even an average business. Holy Week and strong competition nearby partly to blame. (East.)

The Prisoner—

A splendid picture. Good cast and plot. Good receipts. (Middle West.)

Good picture and as Herbert has a following here we did a fair business with this one.

Nobody's Bride—

Admirers of Rawlinson seemed to be pleased, but business was poor. (Middle West.)

The Flirt—

Went over very nicely on second run. (East.)

VITAGRAPH

Nice picture. Did not get the business. (East.)

WARNER BROS.

Brass—

Consensus of opinion is that picture is much better than the book from which it is adapted. Popularity of the book brought the people into the theatre and merit of the picture kept them entertained. Did well for Holy Week. (Middle West.)

The Beautiful and Damned—

A good attendance for a week's run with this one. (Middle West.)

"Down to the Sea in Ships" Is Effectively Exploited

Baltimore, Md.—Although the time at their disposal was very limited, Thomas D. Soriero, managing director of the Century theatre, and Ralph Faulkner, branch manager for the Washington Hodkinson exchange, put over "Down to the Sea in Ships" with excellent effect.

Managing Director Soriero used a silhouette line drawing of a square rigger with the title of the picture lettered on the sails in all of his advertising copy preceding the showing of this production at the Century.

An attractive prologue was arranged by Director Soriero. A cyclorama effect was used, showing a picture of a lighthouse in the distance with a light flashing on and off. A square rigged sailing vessel was shown in the distance with lighting effects near the footlights of the stage to give the impression of flowing water. Two sailors came out and sang a couple of sea songs. Just as the songs were finished the lights were dimmed and two young ladies representing the sweethearts of the sailors kissed them good-bye and bid Godspeed to the men who go "Down to the Sea in Ships."

"Strangers' Banquet" Gets Tie-Up with Railroad

DULUTH, Minn.—A somewhat unusual tie-up, in the way of a hook-up with a big railway system, was arranged for by the manager of the Lyceum theatre with the Northern Pacific Railway and resulted in a large "Strangers' Banquet" card in the window of the Duluth offices of the railroad company.

The tie-up was in connection with the meals served in Northern Pacific dining cars. The printed matter on the card read: "Because of their uniform excellence our dining car meals have often been called 'the strangers' banquet.' Marshall Neilan's photoplay of that title is now playing at the Lyceum."

Well Balanced Presentation Is Given "The Hottentot"

Brooklyn, N. Y.—In mapping out his program to use in connection with "The Hottentot," Managing Director Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre, decided upon a 50-50 arrangement, which would divide the two-hour performance equally between comedy and heavier stuff. This, it is figured, has the best chance of pleasing the most people, as those who like only comedy get it, and those who prefer classical music and artistic dances get them—and everyone is satisfied.

The overture was a specially staged tabloid version of "Cavalleria Rusticana." Five numbers were used, one of which was the Intermezzo for orchestra alone, and the other four vocal numbers as follows: "Siciliana," for tenor; "O Il Signore vi Manda," duet for soprano and baritone; "Voi la Sapete," for soprano, and "Regina Coeli," for soprano and mixed quartette. Following the opera, the soprano numbers noted were sung by two artists, the first appearing only in the duet.

Another vocal number was "O Promise Me," from Robin Hood, sung by Florence Mulholland, and the ballet number was by Mlle. Francelli, with violin accompaniment. The music used for the dance was "Melodie," by Tschaikowsky.

"Prisoner of Zenda" Exploited Through Ring Contest

Clarksdale, Miss.—There have been numerous contests in which a prize was awarded to the woman whose foot a certain shoe fitted, but a new angle was devised by the management of Saenger's Marion theatre in exploiting "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Announcement was made by Clyde C. Platt, manager of the Marion, that the ring would be awarded by the theatre in conjunction with a local jeweler to the woman whose small finger of the left hand measured exactly the size of the ring. The handsome prize was given to Mrs. G. F. Maynard, the actual award taking place in the lobby of the theatre. Other contestants received passes to see "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Considerable newspaper space was awarded to the ring contest, the names of the final winners being published in the dailies. In addition an attractive and inexpensive lobby decoration was used above the theatre's marquee, consisting of cut-outs from the twenty-four sheet poster, mounted on compoboard.

Three Newspaper Features Are Planted on "Racing Hearts"

Rockford, Ill.—In exploiting "Racing Hearts" at the Palm theatre, Bill Danziger, Paramount exploiteer, put over three different newspaper features, giving the papers the "low-down" in each instance.

Danziger framed an interview with Agnes Ayres in which the Paramount star was quoted as remarking that women would never make as good automobile drivers as men. The newspaper followed this up by sending a reporter to interview women known to drive cars. They protested in vigorous terms, and the copy was worked into a two-column front-page spread.

The next gag was a Saturday matinee for the blind. The management invited every sightless person in town to "see" "Racing Hearts." They got about forty responses and so Danziger invited forty school teachers to attend and act as the "eyes" of the victims. During the progress of the picture, the teachers leaned over and whispered the entire story. This made an interesting experiment and the newspapers took it up for a three-column spread under a big head.

The third stunt was a faked interview with "Jimmy Murphy" who, Danziger said, was one of the greatest racing drivers in the country. Murphy spoke on the line that gasoline as a fuel was nearly exhausted and the only thing that would save the industry woud be a new alcoholic substance made from potatoes.

"Little Church Around the Corner" Heavily Billed

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—Abe H. Kaufman, of the exploitation department of the Dixie Amusement Company, put over a heavy campaign for "The Little Church Around the Corner" at the Daisy theatre, that included the use of one, three, six and 24-sheets, special half-sheets, photos, trailer and window cards.

For a lobby display, a miniature church was built, illuminated from the inside, and a large church bell was rung at regular intervals in the lobby.

On the street, a coupe was driven about, with a bride and groom inside, and a card reading: Just Married and on our way to the Daisy theatre to see "The Little Church Around the Corner" today.

"Gimme" Is Made Popular By-Word Through Stunt

Los Angeles, Cal.—For several weeks prior to the run of "Gimme" at the California theatre, "gimme" was made a popular by-word throughout the city, through the advance publicity used for the picture.

First, the town had something to talk about when Mrs. Rupert Hughes publicly advocated the organization of an "Anti-Gimme League" of women, the members of which would insist upon a share in the family income and the elimination of necessity for continually saying "Gimme" when hubby was expected to produce. A little later, "Kid" McCoy let it be known that he was to be married for the tenth time, and that he had finally solved the question of happy marriage. An allowance for the better half was the answer, of course. "No more 'Gimme' wives!" Both stories made the wires, in addition to getting liberal space in the Los Angeles papers.

A tie-up was made with the Owl Drug Company, and "Gimme" sundaes were placed on sale at their twelve stores in Los Angeles, two cards bearing 8 by 10's of Helene Chadwick being used on the soda fountain in each store. All the store employes wore the "Gimme" buttons furnished by Goldwyn.

Engraved Announcement Used to Exploit "The Christian"

New York, N. Y.—Manager Edward Lewis of B. F. Keith's 81st Street theatre used a simple exploitation measure for the showing of "The Christian" that proved highly effective.

He had prepared engraved announcements in the form of an invitation, and mailed them out to his entire list of patrons. The announcement consisted of four pages, three of which were blank.

Mr. Lewis arranged a beautiful and effective prologue, which was much praised by his clientele. It was very simple and much of its appeal doubtless lay in that fact. Through a silk curtain was seen the silhouette of a Christian crusader of old, in a magenta flood light, standing on a cliff overlooking a city which was bathed in blue lights. A singer back of the curtain rendered "Onward, Christian Soldiers." Toward the finish of the song the lights were brought up and over the city appeared a large cross of light, which was gradually brightened. As the song ended, the cross faded out and the picture was flashed on the screen.

Well Varied Campaign Put Back of Showing of "The Flirt"

Austin, Texas.—In spite of extremely unfavorable weather conditions during the showing of "The Flirt," Manager E. B. Roberts of the Majestic theatre and Jack Meredith, special exploitation representative, put over a heavy exploitation campaign that netted satisfactory results.

The advance ads consisted of a series of teasers, based on the Flirt's Book of Proverbs. A series of these was also run on the screen. Special Flirt sundaes were advertised at four leading drug stores in Austin during the week the picture ran. The fountain mirrors were frosted and painted with attractive signs.

Several stores in town allowed signs to be placed in their windows, also cut-outs and still photos. The Edison Company decorated their windows with paper streamers, 11x14 lobby cards and other announcements. This location was the largest and most pretentious display of all.

Meredith also succeeded in putting over a half-page newspaper tie-up with the local real estate firms. The half-page was headed: "Don't Flirt With Your Earnings—Invest In Real Estate."

"The World's a Stage" lobby display used by Manager Frank C. Strozier of the Rev theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., giving the effect of a stage

Milk Bottle Tops Exploit "Strangers' Banquet"

WORCESTER, Mass.—Elmer R. Daniels, manager of th Olympia theatre, and Buddy Stuart, Goldwynner, put over a thorough campaign for "The Strangers' Banquet," for which they billed the town heavily.

The toast books, the bottle heralds, and such accessories were used extensively, as well as the imprinted paper napkins.

A special feature was the imprinting of 80,000 milk bottle tops, at a total cost of only $40. These were used by the dairy company and were especially good, since they went right into the homes. The top read: "See 'The Strangers' Banquet' at Olympia Theatre. Now!"

The remainder of the space was taken up with ads advertising the different firms and new residential sections of the city that had recently begun to be exploited to the home-seekers.

Fake Money Bags Wake Interest in "Nobody's Money"

Fort Smith, Ark.—Following an advance campaign of posters, heralds and typewritten slides on "Nobody's Money," on the day before the picture opened, Manager Hugo Plath hired three boys to carry large money bags stuffed with paper and washers out of the back door of the theatre around three blocks through the business part of the town, then back to the entrance of the Palace theatre, where the bags were piled up.

This same stunt was repeated about every five minutes during the day. They were instructed to say nothing on their route through the town. On the opening day they followed out the same plan, only this time carried small signs on their backs to read—Nobody's Money. This stunt attracted considerable attention.

In the lobby of the theatre were four large piles of money bags, some small and some large, which were filled with paper, sand and washers.

Breaks Ice on Co-operation in "Oliver Twist" Campaign

Grand Island, Neb.—Manager S. A. Hayman of the Lyda theatre broke through the ice of conservatism and established several new lines of merchant co-operation through his campaign on "Oliver Twist."

A department store that had never before given its windows to theater co-operation, used the "Oliver Twist" stills and paper, featuring the Jackie Coogan suit. The store was Wolbach's, the largest in Grand Island.

Drug stores, music shops, confectionery emporiums and contractors, formerly strangers to the meaning of exploitation, came in and helped the campaign, while the walking book of "Oliver Twist" went about the streets.

One of the most effective mediums used, however, was the newspaper agency which put stickers on all the Omaha papers received in Grand Island and heralds inside of them, advertising "Oliver Twist." With a daily circulation of 1,500 and a Sunday distribution of 3,000 this meant real value to the theatre at no expense other than the cost of furnishing the stickers and heralds.

"Adam's Rib" lobby designed and constructed by Floyd D. Morrow, publicity manager of the Palace theatre, Washington, Pa.

Ten Stock Heralds Admit to See "Nobody's Money"

ERIE, Pa.—The Columbia theatre, in exploiting "Nobody's Money," distributed more than a thousand of the stock money heralds. On each was imprinted the information that ten of these bills were good for one free ticket to see "Nobody's Money."

In distributing, the theatre sent a man all over town to drop a bill on a hotel counter, at a soda-water fountain, in the gutter, on an automobile seat until they were all gone.

About fifty sets were presented for free tickets, showing that many more must have been after them.

Food Ads and Menu Contest On "The Strangers' Banquet"

Battle Creek, Mich.—A page of co-operative advertising with the line, "If you were giving a Strangers' Banquet what would you serve?" across the top, was used in the Inquirer and Evening News in a tie-up with the showing of "The Strangers' Banquet" at the Bijou Arcade theatre.

A contest followed in which prizes of $3, $2 and twenty-five pairs of tickets to the showing of the film were offered for the most tempting menus prepared from the foods advertised on the newspaper page. The contest was judged by the foods instructor in the Battle Creek Vocational School.

The Busy Bee Cafe also offered one free ticket to the showing for any day except Saturday and Sunday to every customer who spent a dollar or more in the cafe.

This contest proved of great value in Battle Creek, the home of many of the prepared and patented foods. The Inquirer and Evening News ran an announcement of the winners and printed a number of the menus.

Archery vs. Golf Contest Is "Robin Hood" Exploitation

San Francisco, Cal.—A competitive match between exponents of the art of archery and the game of golf, under the auspices of the San Francisco Chronicle, was an effective bit of advance exploitation for Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood" at the Curran theatre.

The contest was similar to a four-ball foursome, the flight of the archer's arrow to count the same as the drive of the golf ball. Dr. Warren B. Allen and Donald R. Smith, well-known archers, and both members of the National Association, constituted the archery team, while Ray Chapman, golf editor of the Chronicle, and Arthur Tait, the California club pro, were named as their competitors. This modern Robin Hood contest was to be played over the links of the California Golf Club on an eighteen-hole course.

Rules governing the contest were the same as for golf, the golfers to drive off, and the archers to shoot their arrows as in a regular golf foursome. From the fairway the archers were to shoot for the green. On the approach the distance the arrow is from the cup was to be measured off to one side of the fine green to avoid cutting the turf. To "hole out" the archers were to shoot at a target the exact size of the cup, the best score, ball or arrow, to count.

Schools Declare Holiday to See "The Third Alarm"

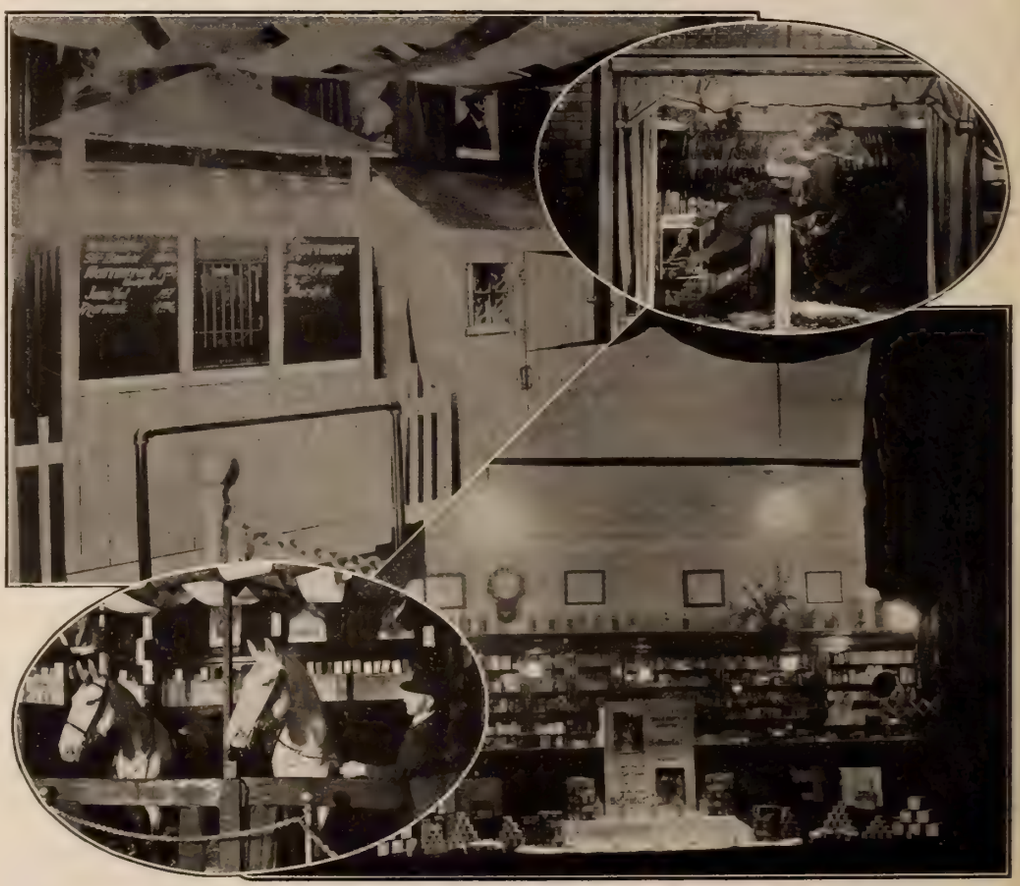
HOOD RIVER, Ore.—Manager Art Kolstad, of the Liberty theatre, obtained excellent local co-operation in his campaign for the showing of "The Third Alarm."

He not only obtained the usual fire department aid, but got the public school officials to declare a half holiday. He then organized a parade of the regular firemen and the school children, which was seven blocks long when it reached the main section of the town.

Teaser Ads Make Herald on "Believe It, It's So"

MARION, Kans.—Mrs. William Clark, who manages the Garden theatre in a manner that would shame many a male exhibitor, got out an inexpensive and attention-winning herald on "If You Believe It, It's So," with the co-operation of John J. Friedl, Paramount exploiteer.

Mrs. Clark used the five teaser ads found in the pressbook, showing some preposterous proposition like the Statue of Liberty on a souse or Woodrow Wilson shaking hands with Henry Cabot Lodge and remarking, "I agree with you perfectly." This had never been seen in Marion before and interested the townfolks greatly.



Highlights in the campaign on "The Hottentot" put over by the management of the Arcade theatre, Ann Arbor, Mich., showing lobby displays and special window tie-ups

Manager Al G. Bush of the Princess theatre, Denver, Colo., prepared this lobby display for "Drums of Fate," carrying out the tropical atmosphere

Novel Automobile Parade Wins Publicity for "Driven"

Seattle, Wash.—A tie-up with one of the city's largest Ford dealers in putting over a "Driven" parade was one of the principal stunts used by Robert Bender, Universal exploiteer, in putting over an engagement of "Driven" for Manager R. W. Case, of the Columbia theatre, in this city.

The "Driven" parade consisted of a parade of about two dozen vehicles of all types, beginning with the old horse-driven carriage and ending with the modern car of the present day. Following the police escort in the parade came the horse and buggy, bearing a big sign saying, "In 1890 You Were Driven Like This." Following this came the oldest type of motor car, also bearing a banner with the words, "In ——You Were Driven in This." In this manner each succeeding car in the parade was a little later model, and the final car bore the words, "Now If You Are Up-to-date, You Are Being Driven in One of These."

In addition to this stunt, the Columbia made arrangements for a large truck to be entirely enclosed and at the rear of the truck was placed a small frosted glass screen. From the inside of the truck were projected motion pictures, and the vehicle parked on downtown streets every day attracted enormous crowds. A short trailer on "Driven" and a news reel made up the program that the truck offered, with the exception of several slides advertising the theatre and picture. Girl ushers on the truck sold tickets to the theatre after every "show" given by the truck.

Small automobile cards were printed and distributed by Mr. Bender for the occasion. The cards, about three by five inches in size, across the top bore the words, "Mileage Record. Is your car economically Driven? Use the following handy economizer." And then the following space was ruled off for the date, amount of gasoline in dollars and gallons, amount of oil in quarts and gallons, number of miles traveled, amount of repairs, and a total cost of maintenance. At the bottom the card said, "And Be Sure You Have Driven to 'Driven' at the Columbia Theatre." These cards were mailed to several thousand members of the automobile clubs and organizations in the city. The cards, serving the purpose of dodgers, were useful, and were not thrown away by the persons receiving them. Opposite the space on the card for the address of the party it was sent to were included several press comments on the picture.

A full-page tie-up with automobile firms, accessory houses and general business firms in the city was also used by Mr. Bender in the Sunday Post Intelligencer. The page was full of small ads of the business firms, each ad, in large letters, emphasizing in some way the word "Driven." "Driven" in each ad was printed in red, and was an unfailing source of publicity that cost nothing but a little time to arrange.

Firemen Sell Tickets from Booths for "Third Alarm"

OIL CITY, Pa.—The Lyric theatre, having tied up the showing of "The Third Alarm" with the local fire department, carried it a step farther by putting improvised booths on prominent street corners, from which firemen sold tickets to the picture. On a few of the most prominent corners, several of the booths were grouped together to take advantage of the shopping crowds.

The Standard Oil company also came in on the exploitation, when they were induced to allow a three-sheet stand on 'The Third Alarm" to be placed at the main entrance to the Standard Oil Bank building.

Business Girls' Club Ties Up to Put "Christian" Over

Minot, N. D.—Richard Baasen, manager of the Strand, and William H. Branch, Goldwynner, induced the Business Girls' Club to tie up with the showing of "The Christian," which was shown during Holy Week.

The Business Girls' Club is the livest women's organization in the town, and they were glad to sponsor the picture and to sell 1,500 tickets in a house to house canvass. They were given a percentage on the tickets they sold, and they made a big affair of the campaign. They mailed out 1,000 "Christian" heralds in addition to their house to house calls. They asked Mr. Branch to give them a talk on "How to Present a Picture to Prospective Patrons," and nearly a hundred young business women gathered to hear his talk.

The daily newspaper was induced to put on a "Christian Act" contest under the conditions of which five pairs of seats to "The Christian" were given away daily to persons performing kindly acts. The newspaper printed half a dozen front page stories on the contest and there was much public interest aroused. Readers of the newspaper wrote in giving instances of kindly actions which they had observed.

Hearts and Autos Played Up in "Racing Hearts" Campaign

Sumter, S. C.—Manager Oscar White, of the Rex theatre, in exploiting "Racing Hearts," played up both the automobile and the heart angles.

Banners were put on a Ford racer and run all over town, the car had a muffler cut-out on it and the racket it made attracted attention.

This car was then placed in the lobby. Heart cut-outs with good sales dope on them were placed on the wheels on the outside. A larger cut-out heart rested on the running board.

A cut-out heart covered the box office, this heart carrying play date, stars and title. Hearts were also over the entrance and exit doors featuring Agnes Ayres and Theodore Roberts.

A mechanical display was devised and set up on the seat of this racer. From this advantageous position it attracted much attention. The display was a large heart through the center of which was a shaft of a small motor. On the outside of this shaft a cross was attached with arms about 2 feet long. On the ends of these arms were tacked small cut-out hearts. The motor was started and these hearts revolved. The large background was red, the hearts on the arms were white and smaller hearts painted on these were red.

Uses "Plant" in Audience as "Dr. Jack" Stunt

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—As an exploitation feature on "Dr. Jack," Manager Fdc. Leopold of Nixon's Colonial theatre hired a "plant" closely resembling Harold Lloyd and placed him in the front row. During the performance, between subjects, Manager Leopold stepped to the stage, apologized for the interruption and announced an urgent phone call for Dr. Jack.

The "plant" then rose and said, "I am Dr. Jack." "Will you step to the phone, doctor?" asked Leopold. The "plant," a spotlight on him, then replied, "Indeed I will, and I thank you for calling me. If I am wanted again I will be grateful if you will notify me, as I will be here all next week." Laughter and applause followed as the patrons caught on.

Novelty Throwaway Used On "They Like 'Em Rough"

HOUSTON, TEXAS.—Manager E. E. Collins, of the Capitol theatre, used a novelty throwaway to good advantage in exploiting "They Like 'Em Rough." It consisted of a small card with a sulphur match attached to it. The copy on the card read as follows:

"Most matches are failures! See why in Viola Dana's latest comedy romance, 'They Like 'Em Rough.' Capitol theatre now showing."

Street Car Advertising Is Used for "Lorna Doone"

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—Manager Edgar Weill of the Strand theatre uncovered a new angle for exploiting "Lorna Doone" through the National Biscuit Company tie-up when that picture played his house.

The countless window displays available to the picture as the result of the tie-up with the National Biscuit company have been fully utilized. The fact remains that the other advertising done by the biscuit makers has been overlooked. In Syracuse, Manager Weill considered this factor. As a result the company changed its street car advertising to feature Lorna Doone products the week the picture was shown at the Strand.

The picture had a highly successful exploitation campaign due to a complete utilization of the recognized forms of merchant co-operation from book shops, music shops, apparel stores and department emporiums.

"Minnie" Tied Up with Jewelry in Advertising Hook-Up

Bridgeport, Conn.—Co-operative advertising along an angle susceptible of use anyhere was used in a hook-up between D. A. Parker, jeweler and optician, and Poli's theatre, on "Minnie," when he told readers of the Bridgeport Evening Star that he had been transforming "Minnies" for a generation.

The story of the ugly duckling was told in jewelry, for Parker's copy on the attraction read:

"We have been transforming 'Minnies' for a generation. Our stock of rings, necklaces, watches, lorgnettes, bangles, etc., is so complete and varied as to satisfy any prospective 'Minnie' and our prices are so modest as to make it possible for every woman in Bridgeport to capitalize her beauty. We shall welcome and be glad to advise any prospective 'Minnie.'"

Resemblance Contest Put Over on Baby Peggy Picture

Seattle, Wash.—A "Baby Peggy" contest, to find doubles for the diminutive screen star, was an idea employed with good results recently by Publicity Manager Robert Bender, when the latest series of Baby Peggy comedies began running at Manager R. W. Case's Columbia theatre.

The contest was put over in conjunction with the Seattle Star. A coupon printed each day in the paper, in conjunction with a story about the contest and photoplays, entitled any child under seven years of age to enter the contest. The coupon, when clipped from the paper, entitled the child and mother to a free admission to the theatre between 11 a.m. and 5 p.m. any week day, when they could see the Baby Peggy comedy, "Sweeties," which was running at the time.

Each child that entered the contest was obliged to leave a photo at the box office as she went into the theatre. The judging of prize winners was from the photographs of contestants. The competition ran for two weeks, with pictures of aspirants for the prizes running each day in the paper, in conjunction with a story about the contest and photoplays.

At the end of the two weeks a board of judges picked the winning photograph, and the lucky girl was awarded a cash prize of $25 and a complete baby outfit. Second, third and fourth prizes were also awarded, consisting of cash and merchandise gifts, donated by Seattle stores, and several more awards of dollar bills were made to children who showed a resemblance to the Universal comedy star.

Letter Contest Is Used to Aid "Ghost Breaker"

VALPARAISO, Ill.—The management of the Premier theatre, aided by Bill Danziger, Paramount exploiteer, turned the showing of "The Ghost Breaker" into a memorial for the late Wallace Reid.

Danziger tied up with the Messenger, newspaper, offering a pair of prize pigeons to the youngster writing the best 250 word letter of condolence to Dorothy Davenport Reid, the star's widow. The letters were not to be sent direct to Hollywood, but to the contest editor of the Messenger, who was to forward the prize-winning letter with an explanation to Mrs. Reid.

The pigeons were chosen for the prizes because they hooked up with press stories mentioning that they were Wally's hobby.

Pola Negri Kisses Given Out to Exploit "Mad Love"

Portland, Ore.—Manager Paul Noble of the Liberty theatre, and L. W. Barclay, Goldwynner, distributed Pola Negri's kisses freely in Portland when "Mad Love" played at the Liberty.

Through a tie-up with a local candy concern, 14,000 Pollyanna kisses were distributed in small glassine envelopes carrying a picture of a pair of lips, and labeled "A Kiss from Pola Negri." The envelope carried the theatre announcement.

Distribution was made through local hotels, restaurants, cafes, and drug store lunch counters. Four pretty girls in white uniforms worked the principal downtown corners on the opening day. Armed with baskets loaded with the envelopes, they passed the kisses out to pedestrians. Nine downtown drug and confectionery stores joined in the drive and used window displays of the kisses, with production stills and special cards that carried the Pola Negri kiss angle.

The regular theatre electric sign extends entirely across the street. A huge circular sign, illuminated, was made up six feet, four inches across and suspended in the middle of the street below the theatre sign. Over the marquee another special electric sign was placed. This carried the name of the star and picture, and stood eleven feet high and eight feet wide.

"Down to the Sea in Ships" Is Given Extensive Campaign

Minneapolis, Minn.—The showing of "Down to the Sea in Ships" at the New Garrick theatre was aided by an extensive publicity and exploitation drive, put over by Milton D. Crandall, special representative of Hodkinson, working in conjunction with the management.

A summary of the campaign contains the following highlights:

Broke into the front page of the Minneapolis Daily News with picture of large loving cup awarded by W. W. Hodkinson for best essay on whales.

Co-operated with Massolt Bottling Company and popularized Whale brand ginger ale, using thousands of labels advertising Elmer Clifton's picture.

Projected trailer on "Down to the Sea in Ships" on wall of building at prominent intersection of main thoroughfare, holding crowds at night and advertising the coming of the feature.

Landed a big story in the "spectator" column of the Journal.

Broke into the editorial section of the conservative Journal for a half-page story with illustrations.

Streets and buildings conspicuously displayed "ship" flags advertising production.

Even King Tutankhamen was not overlooked and the line, "If he had lived to-day he would have ordered carried to the tomb of Luxor the Hodkinson film treasure of all time," was used effectively.

Pleasing window display for "East Is West," obtained by the Strand theatre, Marshalltown, Iowa

C. W. Irvin, manager of the Imperial theatre, Columbia, S. C., obtained this department store window tie-up for "The Flirt"

Plaster Horses' Heads Used for "Hottentot" Lobby

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla.—Since "The Hottentot" showed at the Empress theatre during the big barbecue festival for an incoming governor, and the city was crowded with sightseers.

Despite this fact he did want one or two small ideas to exploit the picture and was at a loss as to just what to do until he saw half a dozen plaster horses' heads in a department store. He borrowed them and had two painted black and used alongside a specially made horseshoe in a nifty "Hottentot" decoration placed in front of the box office.

Apples Well Tied Up To "Fury" in Novel Campaign

Seattle, Wash.—When the State of Washington celebrated Apple Week recently Manager Frank Steffy, of the Coliseum theatre here, lost no opportunity to tie up the idea with his showing of "Fury."

During the week each patron of the theatre, as they passed out of the house, were presented with a large red apple. The apples were wrapped in fancy paper covers advertising "Fury" at the Coliseum theatre. Apples were also passed out on the street. The covers, after being removed, were usually thrown on the street, where they served as a dodger to attract the attention of many other pedestrians.

Another apple stunt was the tie-up with the Seattle Star which Manager Steffy put across. In conjunction with the newspaper, the theatre conducted a contest to find the person in the city who could bake the best apple pie. The pies submitted were turned over to charitable organizations and cash prizes were awarded to the winners.

Anti-Gimme League Formed As "Gimme" Exploitation

Chicago, Ill.—Another exploitation stunt with nation-wide possibilities has been put over by Eddie Bonns, exploitation manager for Goldwyn, aided by Walter D. Nealand, Chicago Goldwynner, this time in connection with "Gimme."

Three men were selected as president, vice-president and secretary-treasurer, and papers of incorporation of the league filed with the Secretary of State for Illinois. The purpose of the league was declared to be the doing away with the various forms of begging prevalent in Chicago—commercial, household and sidewalk begging—and the tipping nuisance. Hat-check girls and boys are under the taboo.

The Chicago Examiner-Herald published a two-column story on the incorporation of the league and it was sent out over the various press wires to practically all of the newspapers of the country. It has been printed in at least one newspaper in nearly every large city and in hundreds of small town papers.

Among the objects of the league as set forth in the by-laws was the elimination of tag-days of every sort; abolition of tipping in hotels, cafes, etc.; eliminating street corner beggars and "moochers."

Doorknob Hanger Is Revived for "The Eternal Flame"

GRAND ISLAND, Neb.—Manager Hayman of the Lyda theatre revived the doorknob hanger stunt for the run of "The Eternal Flame," the hangers, which were hung on all the stores, reading. "Closed. Gone to see 'The Eternal Flame' at the Lyda Theatre."

Manager Hayman's astuteness came in in that he hung the signs on the Saturday evening after the stores had closed.

Plays "Penrod" During Barry Personal Appearance

NEWBURGH, N. Y.—When William P. Fleming, manager of the Academy of Music, heard that Wesley Barry was to appear at a motion picture ball, he switched dates and arranged to play "Penrod" on that date.

He co-operated in the welcome given to Barry, and had a Boy Scout company out to meet the young star.

He announced over the radio, at a big dance and at his theatre that a Wesley Barry picture was playing at his house and exploited the young star's appearance to his own advantage. As a result, Barry made a personal appearance at the Academy of Music.

Advance lobby display, in purple and gold, used by Manager A. B. Morrison of Loew's Palace, Memphis, for "Trifling Women"

Novel effect in "East is West" front at the Modjeska theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., with 24-sheet cut-out surrounded by frame of special art panels

"Bellboy 13" and "Pilgrim" in Double Street Ballyhoo

Omaha, Neb.—A Charlie Chaplin impersonation as a street stunt is not new, but it was given a clever twist that made it new by the management of the Rialto theatre, in connection with the showing of "The Pilgrim" and "Bellboy 13," when Charlie and Bellboy 13 joined in a street act starting with an old hook and ladder fire wagon and a team of mules as "props" and ending with a formal presentation to each other in front of the theatre after having covered every part of the city.

Their act was marked as a headliner. Chaplin would lose his hat, chase it along for several blocks, kicking it each time he stopped to pick it up, and finally announce that he had beaten the fire wagon (mule led) in a fair race. "Bellboy 13" would retain his seat at the driving post, turning a deaf ear to all calls for "front." While the act was on the big fire bell on the wagon rang continually and drew the crowds from all sides.

Of course "Bellboy 13" couldn't be two places at once. While he was staging his act with "The Pilgrim" his patrons throughout the local hotels received cards announcing "Do not call for 'Bellboy 13.' He is at the Rialto theatre all this week with Charlie Chaplin in 'The Pilgrim.'"

Sign painting stunt used by Manager Clancy of the Princess theatre, Hartford, Conn., on "Adam's Rib"

"Knighthood" Gets Space On Angle of Local Pride

OTTUMWA, Iowa—Playing upon the angle of local pride proved a strong aid in getting newspaper space and awakening interest in "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

Manager W. E. Matlock of the Strand theatre corresponded with John E. Kennebeck, Paramount exploiteer, Des Moines office, who went on record as saying that Ottumwa was the first city in Southern Iowa and the second in the entire state to show "The Paramount success."

The letters were reproduced in full and filled a column and a half.

Airplane Used in Many Ways to Exploit "Racing Hearts"

Jacksonville, Fla.—Manager Albert B. Hill of the Imperial theatre obtained an airplane at a reasonable figure to do stunt flying and to distribute novelty heralds in the interest of "Racing Hearts."

The title was painted in big letters on the bottom wings of the plane. Frequently the plane swooped down near the ground and the title could be read by the watchers.

At different times about five thousand heralds were thrown out of the plane, broadcasting the coming of "Racing Hearts" to the Imperial. The plane also dropped about one hundred toy parachutes to many of which passes had been attached. People had been advised through the newspapers to look for the parachutes and get the passes. So there was always a scramble.

A contest was run offering prizes for the best outline of the picture, stating what was the biggest thrill, the heartiest laugh, the best acting, and giving an opinion of the co-stars, Ayres and Dix. The first prize was a ride over the city in the aeroplane or a three months' pass. The second prize was a two months' pass and the third a one month's pass. A Fan Foto of Agnes Ayres was offered every entrant in the contest. The newspaper cooperated by giving lots of free publicity to the contest and to the stunt flying over the city.

"Knighthood" Is Exploited in Well Planned Campaign

Fort Smith, Ark.—Manager Hugo Plath of the Palace theatre started "When Knighthood was in Flower" off with an advance campaign about three weeks before the picture opened. On the theatre's screen a series of slides was run and a shadow box showing the entrance to a castle with a small announcement card about the picture was placed in the foyer.

Also about three weeks in advance of play date, Mr. Plath had made a hand-painted cut-out of Marion Davies, which was placed in an archway just over the door to the foyer. Regular poster paper was on display two weeks in advance of play date, not only in Fort Smith but on all roads leading into the city and in the small neighboring towns.

On the day the picture opened the Southwest American gave a double page hook-up on the picture in their paper. In the center of the lobby stood a miniature display representing a medieval castle. This display was illuminated from the inside and the lights shining through the bar windows gave a very pleasing effect. Small cut-outs of the leading characters in the picture were placed in front of this miniature castle.

Marquee cut-out display at the Cameo theatre, New York City, on "Down to the Sea in Ships."

A "Strangers' Banquet" was put on every day during the run of the picture at the Rialto theatre, Tacoma, by the Fountain lunch. This cut-out was used in the window. Chas. F. McManus, exploitation manager for Jensen & Von Herberg, arranged it

Kiss Length Contest Aids "Voice from Minaret"

JACKSON, Mich.—Manager Harold Frank of the Rex and Majestic theatres, in exploiting "The Voice from the Minaret" at the former house, played up the angle that the "perfect screen lovers, Norma Talmadge and Eugene O'Brien" were reunited in this picture and that they staged the longest screen kiss on record, with the lines:

"Norma Talmadge and Eugene O'Brien, reunited in 'The Voice from the Minaret' film the longest kiss ever made for camera.

"How long in screen footage is this kiss?

"To the person who guesses most near the correct screen footage of this kiss the Jackson News will pay $5 in cash or give the full award to all contestants making the winning guess in case of a tie."

The idea was good for a different cut and a different story in each issue of the News and it kept going until the picture finished its run.

Pocketbooks with Fake Bills Exploit "Nobody's Money"

Boise, Idaho.—The stock heralds of "Nobody's Money," gotten up after the fashion of real currency, were used to advantage by Walter Mendenhall, of the Pinney theatre, and Kenneth O. Renaud, Paramount exploiteer, in their campaign on the picture.

They bought a stock of small coin purses, 500 in all, from a novelty store at three cents apiece. In each they stuffed a sheet of paper and a stock Paramount herald for "Nobody's Money," which itself resembles a currency bill. This gave a bulky appearance.

One purse was dropped on each corner of the residential section of the town and in the leading stores. Some of the finders reported the "finding" to the proprietors of the store.

Superintendent Gives Real Aid to "Oliver Twist" Showing

Marshfield, Wis.—A remarkable example of real co-operation on the part of school officials occurred during the showing of "Oliver Twist" at the Adler theatre.

Upon the solicitation of Manager J. P. Adler, the superintendent of schools at Marshfield took a definite stand upon "Oliver Twist." He not only had the announcement made in the classrooms but sanctioned and personally prosecuted a campaign for the sale of half-price matinee admissions for all school children. The tickets were given out to students by the teachers with the understanding that they were good for a half-price matinee admission at the Adler. If not used by the conclusion of the run, however, they had to be returned to the teachers. The bulletin boards also carried announcements of the picture.

Of equal promise was the Jackie Coogan Club organized by Mr. Adler in conjunction with McKane-Johnson Company, the largest store in town. The store formed the club and issued membership cards, doing all the printing, advertising and soliciting necessary to establish a substantial membership list.

Voice from Air Exploits "Voice from Minaret"

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—A voice, apparently coming from the air, advised all residents of San Francisco to see "The Voice from the Minaret" when that picture played the Tivoli theatre.

Manager I. E. Phelps had arranged for two Magnavox machines, one of which was placed on the Tivoli theatre and the other on the corner of Market and Taylor streets.

Ties Up with Public School as "Remembrance" Aid

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Manager Max Greenberg of the Livonia theatre, working in conjunction with Goldwynner Charles Cohen, made a profitable tie-up with Public School 109 on "Remembrance."

The tie-up with the Public School 109, the largest elementary school in the world, having more than 5,600 pupils, consisted of Mr. Greenberg's taking motion pictures of the school's activities, and of the pupils marching to the Livonia theatre, and afterwards running the pictures off on his screen in connection with the showing of "Remembrance."

The school authorities sold more than 5,000 tickets to the pupils.

Music store window display for "The Third Alarm" at the Moon theatre, Omaha, arranged by Harold D. Barnes, F. B. O. exploiteer, using copies of the song, "Fire Laddie," scenes from the picture and fire fighting apparatus

Butte Bulletins and Montana Trade Items

MR. MERLE DAVIS is general manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company with the head office in Butte and with branches in the key cities of the state. Mr. Davis is quoted as saying that Butte as well as other cities in the state is experiencing a splendid revival of business in all lines and that the theatres generally are playing to better business and the forecast is that conditions will continue to improve. The theatre attractions have been of a high order and programs universally give promise of continued interest, according to Mr. Davis. The legitimate stage has had some of the finest programs that have ever been given on any stage and business in every case has been satisfactory. This has in no way interfered with the attendance at the movies, he declares, as the various theatre centers cater to their own peculiar clientele.

The headquarters of the Montana motion picture theatre owners organization, the new national unit of the Motion Picture Owners of America, has been getting in touch with the members all over the state relative to the importance of sending a big delegation to Chicago on May 19 to attend the convention in that city. The service department of the organization is one that is proving a powerful factor in the building up of the association and letters from the various members of the unit here show enthusiasm and great interest in everything that will safeguard the future of the movie interests. President Merle Davis says that the music tax is of vital interest here as elsewhere and at the present time the Montana organization is carefully watching the struggle ready to lend its strength to combat the injustice when the time is ripe, until then every effort is bent toward working with as little friction as possible.

C. C. Pratt, formerly manager of the American theatre, has been forced to go to the Coast for his health. Mrs. Pratt will follow as soon as she can close their interests here. Friends are regretting very much that Butte is to lose the Pratt family for they have during their short residence here made many friends. The best wishes of their associates go with them to their new home.

J. W. Sullivan, manager of the Rialto, has taken charge of the American Theatre and is a busy man these days managing two such splendid theatres.

Edward Head, the well-known organist, is now associated with the Rialto theatre. He at one time was an exhibitor at one of the theatres in Miles City, Montana. He is a master hand with the pipe organ, and the Rialto is to be congratulated in securing his services. He has played at the Regent theatre in Billings, also Sheridan, Wyo., Greybull, Wyo., and Roundup, Mont.

Powell and Burche represent a new movie theatre firm at Broadway, Montana. The new exhibitors are busy loading up on pictures for the coming season.

C. J. De Maio, traveling auditor of the First National, from the home office, New York City, arrived in Butte this week and is busy at the branch office in his official capacity.

Washington Exhibitor and Exchange Items

OUT of town film men noticed at First National included J. Louis Rome and John Bach of Baltimore. A. C. Frey of Spates and Frey, exhibitors of Frostburg, western Maryland, and points in Virginia and West Virginia, were in town and foregathered with other exhibitors at the office of Flax Brothers, Liberty Films states right exchange. D. N. Joseph, suburban capitalist and prospective theatre owner of North East Washington, was seen in the Flax office and told the NEWS representative that he would have his contractor start excavation at 61st and Dix for the new "Classic" in May. He is negotiating with the Wurlitzer Organ Corporation for the pipe organ.

F. A. Schauss of the Pyramid Productions, working out of the New York and Washington offices of the finance units, before making a new trip to New York, announced the appointment of Miss Micou as secretary, vice Miss Roberts, resigned.

Maitland LaBelle, publisher of the Capital Film Review of Washington and corresponding secretary of the F-I-L-M Board of Trade, has tendered his resignation, effective May 1. He is to enter on a new film career in connection with the production and exploitation of industrial films. In accepting his resignation the Board tendered Mr. LaBelle their appreciation of his many progressive accomplishments as their secretary. He still owns and publishes the Capital Film Review, all rumors to the contrary, notwithstanding.

Manager Capelon of the Clover theatre and Clover productions, of Baltimore, who recently disposed of his interest in the exchange to his brother and partner, Ben Capelon, was a Washington visitor in the interest of his Clover thetre there, which he still operates.

Charles S. Horn, manager of the Blue Hen theatre, Rehoboth Beach, Delaware, was a Saturday visitor at the Famous Players exchange. Mr. Horn operates his theatre from June to November, but expects to open before June 15 this year. He says that the movie interests of rural Delaware put through the daylight saving repeal. They got no support from Wilmington exhibitors, because the city group feared the daylight cohorts would seek revenge in a state censorship law in next year's legislature.

Manager Sam Galanty of the American Releasing Corporation, Washington, announces the addition of William F. Bush, former Goldwynner, to his sales force. "Bill" Bush is well and favorably known in the territory.

E. E. Shinn, former booker at the local office of Paramount, has just entered the service of Fox Films. No territory as yet has been allocated to the new Fox salesman.

The national film executives and stars coming to Washington from New York this week will be sought as guests at three trade dances. The Fourteenth Annual Movie Ball will be given this year at the Arcade by the Projectionists' Local of Washington, on Thursday, April 5. Saturday night, April 7, the Paramount Club will give its annual ball at the City Club. The Lasky employees will feature the original Peacock Orchestra, Deauville, France, the spring sensation of New York. A film star, probably Tom Meighan, will attend, and maybe others. Later that evening the annual N. V. A. Benefit, arranged by Manager Roland Robbins of Keith's, is to be presented for the first time in Washington, at a local hotel.

Manager J. A. Bachman announces the opening of the new offices and laboratories of Educational Film Company of Eastern Pennsylvania, at 926 New Jersey Avenue in the Kirbey-Fox building. Trimmed in French grey, the suite is the most attractive group of exchange offices yet presented to film exhibitors and the trade generally in the local field.

F. B. O.'s anniversary week contest is over, at the Washington branch, reports Manager F. L. McNamee. Results and standings of his force and the exchange will soon be given out by P. A. Powers, at the home office.

All day, Easter Monday, the film reel camera men ground merrily away making White House easter egg rolling movies for the pleasure of children everywhere, who cannot go to Washington for the annual event.

Eastern supervisor Scully of the Educational exchanges was the guest over the week end of J. A. Bachman, to view the new plant of Educational.

Manager Brown of the Universal exchange here was a visitor in Philadelphia over the holidays in conference with district manager Jules Levy.

Tom Moore, whose property at 1010 F Street recently figured in rent board litigation, as owner of the Moore's Victoria Theatre Company, whose one-time auditorium is now used as offices by the Forestry Service, and private concerns, is again in the circuit court here with the Austin Company as plaintiff. Attorneys Lambert and Yeatman are representing Tom Moore, while the plaintiff is represented by Palmer, Davis and Scott. The case was continued for the term.

John J. Payette of the Crandall executive staff, and "Nick" Mirskey, Crandall music director and conductor of the Metropolitan Symphony Orchestra, spent Tuesday of Holy Week in Baltimore. They returned to Washington Wednesday. During Mr. Mirskey's absence the orchestra was under the competent direction of assistant conductor, Alexander Podnos.

George Zilch, Washington and New York amusement capitalist and promoter, has been quartered at the Willard of late, looking over the field for the location of a proposed new downtown movie.

Around Seattle's Photoplay Trade Circles

AFTER ten successful weeks, the Blue Mouse Theatre's Singers' Popularity Contest came to a close last week with Jack Barbour, representing the Moose Lodge, well established in first place. Barbour will receive a check for $500 as his prize for winning the contest, and Adele Walker, Floyd Murphy and Mabel Grace Roberson, who finished second, third and fourth, will receive $250, $150 and $100, respectively. Barbour had a final total of over 7,000 votes, with the three other winning contestants each claiming about 4,000 or 5,000 to their credit. The contest has been running at the theatre since January 14, with twenty of the city's best vocalists entered.

Similar competitions are being held by the Blue Mouse in Tacoma and Portland, with $1,000 in cash as the prize at each.

"Strand Theatre Day" was celebrated here recently by the Seattle Advertising Club, with Manager H. B. Wright as guest of honor and principal speaker at the Club luncheon in honor of the occasion. General factors in regard to the improvement of films, both from a production and exhibition standpoint, were discussed by Mr. Wright, who is trying to impress upon various organizations in the city the value and power of motion pictures as a factor in a community's development. Music was furnished at the luncheon by the Strand orchestra, under the direction of S. K. Wineland, and exhibition of a coming film completed the program.

The Princess theatre, under the management of O. R. Hartman, has just returned to a second run, ten cent admission policy, after having attempted to run first run programs for the past six or eight weeks, with an admission price of twenty cents.

Henry David, manager of the Mission theatre in Los Angeles, was a recent visitor in Seattle, having come to the city in regard to exploitation for "Suzanna" which opened at the Blue Mouse theatre the end of March. While in the city, Mr. David spend much time with Charles Hardin, manager of the local United Artists exchange. "Suzanna" at the Blue Mouse in Portland was doing an exceptional business, it was reported, and expectations were that it would draw the crowds in Seattle and Tacoma as well. Mr. David is accompanied on his tour by his wife. From Seattle they will go to Tacoma and then return South.

Wallace Reid's final photoplay effort, "Thirty Days," was scheduled to open a three day engagement at Manager Frank Steffy's Coliseum theatre the end of March. "Clarence" was shown at the Neptune theatre, in the University district, shortly after the star's death, and did a very good business, according to Ben Larson, manager of the district playhouse, so it is expected that "Thirty Days" will not fall short in attendance because of the fact that the star is no longer living.

Following the recent activity of Washington theatre and exchange men in defeating a state taxation bill, the Seattle Film Board of Trade has gradually grown in scope and now meets regularly to discuss all phases of the exhibition and exchange field. The latest move on the part of the Board has been its alliance with the Seattle Parent-Teachers' Association, in order to promote the production and exhibition of a better class of photoplays. The Board meets each Thursday at luncheon, in addition to regular business meetings, and is instrumental in settling disputes between exchanges and exhibitors, taking care of legislative problems and otherwise acting for the interests of the motion picture industry in the state.

Exchange and Exhibitor News of Carolinas

SERIOUS losses of films in transit from one theatre to another have forced the Charlotte Film Exchange Managers' Association to demand an investigation by the postoffice department. It is explained that in many of the smaller towns no opportunity is given for insuring shipments at night and since overnight shipments are quite frequently necessary, the exchanges simply waive the insurance privilege, shipping uninsured. Several consecutive mysterious disappearances of such uninsured shipments recently have not only baffled the exchange managers but have caused missouts to exhibitors in the territory.

Charlotte's Strand theatre reopened on Monday, April 2, after having been closed for several months, and is playing a combination vaudeville and picture program. The house has been leased by Laurence T. Lester, of Columbia, S. C., and L. F. House will manage it with Miss Nan Gordon as musical director. Mr. Lester has thoroughly renovated the theatre and put in many conveniences, and states that special musical programs will receive much consideration in arranging his programs.

Claude Lee, manager of the Imperial theatre, Charlotte, addressed the regular weekly luncheon of the Charlotte Vivitan Club last week by invitation, and gave the members an illuminating talk on the motion picture industry from production and exhibition. A practical demonstration of the method of projecting pictures was also given to members of the club, together with a short history of the progress of the industry during the twenty years of its existence.

Harry S. Allen, general manager of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, Wilmington, N. C., has returned from a business trip to the western part of the state, having motored.

Ernest G. Stellings, formerly manager of the Grand, Wilmington, N. C., has deserted theatricals to accept a position on the advertising staff of the Wilmington (N. C.) Star.

The South Carolina Legislature failed to pass the bill attempted to levy a special tax on theatre admissions of ten per cent.

J. U. McCormick is covering Carolina territory for Al Lichtman Corporation's Charlotte office, of which he is manager. Special Representative V. P. Whitaker recently spent several days with him in Charlotte, arranging for the opening of the new exchange.

Miss Freda Huckabee, formerly of the Atlanta F. B. O. office, is in Asheville, recuperating from a recent severe illness.

W. H. Kerin is in the Carolina territory for the "Paramount 39," out of the Charlotte office of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

J. J. Burroughs is now covering Carolina territory for the Washington Vitagraph office.

Theatre and Film Row Items from Cleveland

ALL Cleveland exchanges and all Ohio exhibitors mourned last week the sudden and unexpected death on Tuesday of Walter Lusk in Washington, D. C., where he went to take charge of the First National office, having completed a five-year term here in the same capacity. Universally loved, he is genuinely mourned by every member of the trade, who wish, through this means, to express their deep sympathy to Mrs. Lusk. Mr. E. Mandelbaum, president of First National Exhibitors' Association of Ohio, left for Washington immediately upon receipt of the news. Inasmuch as Mrs. Lusk's home was in the East prior to her marriage, he was buried in Newark, N. J. At the time the body was being conveyed to the train which was to take him on his last journey the entire Cleveland First National office went into silent meditation for three minutes. The death of Walter Lusk is regarded as a distinct personal loss to everybody who knew him, as well as a loss to the industry to which he gave the best that was in him. Aside from his widow, Mr. Lusk is survived by his mother and father, who live in Granville, Ohio.

The Penrod brothers, C. E. and E. W., have shaken the dust of Cleveland from them, and are now in Indianapolis. The Penrods belong to the F. B. O. organization. They came here last fall to reorganize the local office. Report has it that C. E. Penrod has been appointed district manager-at-large, with the entire United States as his field, while E. W. Penrod is to assume a responsible position in the New York office.

Lou Geiger has been appointed manager of theh local F. B. O. exchange following the shift that has taken the Penrods from Cleveland. Geiger is well known all through the territory. He has been associated with F. B. O. in a sales capacity.

Sam Dembow, Jr., assistant general salesmanager for the Fox Film Corporation, spent Easter in Cleveland.

Robert Cotton, local Fox manager, is a trained housekeeper. That's why he has sent all his salesmen out on a six weeks' spring housecleaning campaign to clean up all the unsold product of the past year in the territory. Like all campaigns, this one is gaining constant momentum. Now in its second week and going strong, Cotton will be able by the first of May to start in with a clean bill of sale and offer the exhibitors nothing but the newest and latest product.

The First National Club, consisting of everybody connected with the local First National exchange, has set aside Friday, April 7, for a dance. It's to take place in the Shaw-Hayden hall. Tickets are $1.10 a couple. Profits go into the club treasury.

Herbert Ochs, Cleveland manager for Associated Exhibitors, announces the premier showing in Ohio of "Safety Last," to take place simultaneously the week of April 8, at the Liberty theatre, Youngstown, and at the Strand, Akron.

R. E. Bishop, who has been selling Associated Exhibitors' product in Ohio for some time past, is now a member of the local Vitagraph sales force.

H. Kram has come out here from New York to cover the Cleveland territory for the local Goldwyn exchange.

Maurice Safier, manager of United Artists in Cleveland, left on Friday for a short visit in New York, where he went to consult with the home office powers. Safier says that "Robin Hood" will play twenty Cleveland motion picture theatres simultaneously the week of April 22d.

W. J. Fitzpatrick, who sells American Releasing pictures in Northern Ohio, was in a bad automobile accident one day last week. Several ribs were broken, his jawbone was dislocated and mastoid tendencies have developed.

William Raynor, the dignified manager of Reade's Hippodrome, Cleveland, has gone and done it. It happened last Tuesday. Nobody knew about it until Friday, when Raynor was so effervescent about it that he couldn't refrain from publishing the news that he had taken unto himself a wife. Congratulations and best wishes. May you both live long and prosper!

John Illes, a newcomer to Cleveland, has taken over the lease of the Deucan theatre, Broadway, Cleveland, from Harry Kaplan, and will personally manage the house.

Jack Greenbaum separated himself from his popular Opera House in Mansfield long enough to pay Cleveland a flying visit this week.

Charles A. Barbian, of the Waldorf theatre, Akron, was seen in the Cleveland Film Exchange Building this week.

John Palfi, manager of the Opera House in Kent, came up to do some spring picture shopping this week.

M. B. Horwitz, who heads the Washington circuit of Cleveland theatres, staged a professional midnight performance of "Follow Me" at the Globe theatre last Thursday night. Horwitz has been running colored shows at the Globe all winter with marked success. He had so many inquiries about this week's show from performers appearing at other local houses that he arranged a show at such time as would be convenient for the professionals to attend. A crowded house greeted the cast of "Follow Me," and a tremendous round of applause followed the final drop of the curtain.

Fred Desberg, managing director of Loew's Ohio theatres, treated every Cleveland newsboy to a special morning performance of "Daddy," Jackie Coogan's latest picture, on Monday of this week. Every seat in the immense State theatre was filled with an enthusiastic youngster. Desberg has given free newsboy performances of every Coogan picture that has played at any of the Loew houses.

The Baby Grand Orchestra was the special feature of the musical program at the Allen theatre, Cleveland, last week. The Baby Grand Orchestra is composed entirely of children under ten years of age, and is conducted by Norma Spitalny, aged eight. Norma is the talented daughter of Philip Spitalny, musical director of the Allen.

J. E. Allman, manager of the Pike theatre, Dover, Ohio, headed a delegation of Dover citizens who came to Cleveland one day last week to attend a performance of "Kempy," a dramatic play written by J. C. Nugent of Dover, with a Dover locale, and a cast comprising several Dover people. Herbert Ochs, manager of Associated Exhibitors, managed to get hold of Allman long enough to secure his name on a "Safety Last" contract while in the city.

News and Notes of Detroit's Film Circles

ONE of the city's handsome picture and vaudeville houses, the Regent, Woodward avenue near the Grand Boulevard, was broken into a week ago last Tuesday morning at two o'clock, by three armed and masked men and the safe looted of $4,762.90. The men entered by a fire escape on the north wall by forcing the door.

According to the watchman who was bound by the thieves before he awoke, the yeggs displayed a familiarity in the layout of the building and took their time about helping themselves to the coin and making their getaway. As all three wore gloves, naturally no finger print clues were discernible.

Picture patrons of Detroit are proving that they do not demand the proverbial happy ending when it is not the logical outcome of the story being told on the silver screen. The big success of "The Christian" which is playing to crowds and even turning them away, at the Broadway Strand for the third week, is a direct refutation of the contention of certain picture people that the clinging clinch is absolutely necessary for a box office success. The day of the more intelligent picture is surely arriving.

Manager Lorch of the Goldwyn offices reports that the Detroit success of the picture has aroused much interest throughout the state and exhibitors are constantly wiring and writing for dates.

John H. Kimsky intends to have the finest acts possible for the big Capitol irrespective of price. He has just engaged the well-known team of Van and Schenck, now in vaudeville, to play one week for which he will pay $2,000.

The local exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky-Paramount moved last week from film row, the Joseph Mack Building, to 2949 Cass avenue. Their new location is in a former residential section which is rapidly changing into a business one and is just around the corner from the magnificent new million dollar Masonic Temple.

The Ferndale theatre, a Kimmel Bros. enterprise at Woodward avenue and the Nine Mile Road, and the one and only movie house in the small but thriving village of Ferndale, had a fire in the projection room last week that caused $200 worth of damage. Two reels of film were also destroyed.

Al. Danke, Vitagraph salesman, while driving through Ecorse, a short time ago stopped to fix a tire. While busy at the job he was held up by three armed men who took him to a boat house, said he was a Mr. Doyle who had got $4,200 worth of the forbidden fluid several months previous and who had given them a bad check. Danke finally convinced the men he was not the man they were looking for and the holdups apologized.

Jake Schreiber of the Blackstone theatre while on a Florida vacation shook hands with the richest man in the world, the well known John D. All this happened on one of the Florida golf links. Schreiber had a snapshot taken of the event. Rockefeller is pictured wearing earlaps. Max Jacob, owner of the Wills theatre is also shown in the picture.

Fred Reynolds, salesman for the Ray J. Branch Feature Productions, has just returned from a trip in the western part of the state. Result, just the kind of business every good salesman likes.

Fred North, manager of First National, is away on a business trip to Adrian.

Word is given out from First National that Jackie Coogan in "Daddy" is making records at the Capitol theatre. This is a picture well suited for the small people and crowds of kiddies may be seen at the matinees. Grownups will like it also.

Harry Lorch, Goldwyn manager, left Saturday for Cleveland to attend the convention of Goldwyn managers of the Middle West. Sales plans for the coming season will be discussed.

George W. Sampson, Detroit manager for Pathe, has mapped out what he calls "ideal short subject programs," which he believes will be just the things for the hot season when people like to be amused without much mental effort on their part. He believes that such programs will be a distinct novelty, to be used once weekly with good box office results.

Joe Friedman, general sales manager for Universal, paid his former home office a visit last week on his trip to the Pacific Coast.

Boston Flashes and New England Bulletins

THE Eastern Feature Film Corporation is looking forward to a big season, has about 30 feature releases in view, and by September expects to be shooting a feature a week into the territory, with some knockout exploitation campaigns to send them over the top. It is going to have a highly efficient organization functioning through the territory. During the summer months they will put out three or four features a month. The company is a purely Boston organization, and numbers many prominent men among its stockholders and officers. The boss is E. V. B. Park, president, who was secretary to Mayor Peters, the former Mayor himself being one of the large stockholders. Frank S. Deland is the vice-president, and the general manager and treasurer is Herman Rifkin. Prominent among the stockholders are Daniel W. Lane, city councilman; and L. C. Prior, who runs the Brunswick and Lenox Hotels, two of the most popular in Boston.

There are some ambitious building and moving projects underway at the present time in Boston's film row, or rows, chief among them being two buildings for exchanges of note, but more of this later.

Boston has missed the familiar figure of Moxley Hill, Boston office manager for Metro, since last Friday, when he went on to New York until the first of the week. However, he and his smile of "Success" will soon be back once more.

The annual motion picture entertainment in aid of the South End Day Nursery of Boston will be held April 7 at the Exeter Street theatre under the auspices of the nursery auxiliary. The feature picture will be "Snow White." coupled with Buster Keaton in "Cops," and "Neighbor Kelly."

Last week saw one of the largest real estate deals in Malden, Mass., completed, when the C. H. Tenney Co., public service corporation, took over the Malden Auditorium from the E. S. Converse estate. The property is assessed at $254,500, but the purchase price was not disclosed.

Barrett Kiesling, personal representative of Cecil DeMille, took a tour through these parts not long ago. A result of his visit may be that the Boston Stock Company may lose its principal players, for so impressed was he with the screening possibility of Adelyn Bushnell, Lucille Adams, Walter Gilbert, and Houston Richards, that a Famous Player cameramen is now on his way here to make screen tests of them.

The Loew interests, soon to put on an amateur presentation of "H. M. S. Pinafore" at the State theatre, have donated two scholarships in co-operation with the New England Conservatory of Music, to the two whose voices hold most promise. As a matter of fact one is donated by Marcus Loew and M. Douglas Flattery, and the other by the conservatory. Mgr. Brennan of the State is being flooded with applications for tryouts.

The Massachusetts House of Representatives last week passed to be engrossed the bill giving to cities and towns authority to regulate the display of billboards and other outdoor advertising devices.

A beauty contest, in which the prettiest girl will be chosen as Miss Boston and presented a loving cup donated by the American Releasing Corporation, will be the feature of the annual dance of the Movie Boys of Boston's film district in the new Rose Croix ballroom on Monday evening. The judges will include three of the exchange managers.

Motion pictures in radio education was unrolled at the Franklin Union one night last week when "Wizardry of Wireless," pprepared by engineers of the General Electric Company, was given two showings. It was mighty popular.

Films showing Jackie Coogan in "Daddy" and Jane Novak in "Thelma" were given Monday evening at the Tremont Temple for the benefit of the Chickering House, a convalescent home for women and children in Dedham.

The Athol Amusement Company, of Athol, Mass., a new corporation, is mailing dividend checks on preferred stock at the rate of 8 per cent. Edgar S. Hill, treasurer, announces that the company's new theatre, which is being remodeled from the Opera House, will open October 1, and will be practically a new theatre.

A Mrs. Emma L. Reynolds, of Ludlow, Mass., dropped dead while in the women's rest room of the Broadway theatre, Springfield, following a matinee performance. The medical examiner was called and had the body removed.

Unrestrained expressions of approval and disapproval on the part of more than 700 college students at a capacity house in Fay's theatre, Providence, R. I., last Monday night, necessitated a hurry call from the theatre to the Central Police Station. The event was the annual Brown party. Manager Samuel Kaufman, alarmed at the situation and fearing more serious trouble, sent in the call and a squad of reserves was rushed to the scene. After the brass buttoned law guardians arrived, what was reported as pandemonium before they got there, quickly calmed down.

Jack Pegler, the well known motion picture exploitation man and more recently representative at the Boston exchange of Associated First National Pictures, has left for Springfield, Mass., where he will manage the Capital and Bijou theatres. Abe Goodside is the owner.

Members of Pathe's Exchange force at New Haven, Conn. W. G. Carter, manager; Gerry Meyer, associate manager; J. C. Leighton and W. J. Whyte, salesmen; Sam Germain, booker; A. Basilicato, shipper; Miss Esther Rosen, sales control clerk; Miss F. L. Slater, biller; Miss G. Flood, assistant cashier; G. C. Dense, cashier; Miss Julia Speratore, poster clerk; Miss G. Ruff, and Miss Fay Greene, inspectors; A. Fishman, manager Lawrence theatre, New Haven; Jim De Lucia, manager Dreamland theatre, New Haven

Members of the F. B. O. branch-office staff at New Haven, Conn. Mr. L. George Ross, manager; Mr. I. Levine, salesman; Mr. J. Pavone, salesman; Miss E. J. Harmond, booker; Miss L. E. Greenberg, stenographer; Mr. A. Juul, shipper, and Miss G. Evans, rewinder

Trade Activities in San Francisco and Vicinity

Charles M. Thrall, former First National exploitation agent at the San Francisco exchange, has been engaged by A. M. Bowles, general manager of the T. & D. Theatre Circuit, as general publicity representative. Thrall has been in close touch with this circuit in line with his First National work.

In the city of Oakland, the T. & D. theatre, exploiting "Mighty Lak' a Rose'" tided up fourteen downtown shop-windows, and secured an effective double truck advertising layout in the Oakland Tribune, the first time such a stunt has ever been put over in this city. Carston Dahnken, manager of the theatre, who handled the campaign, says the extraordinary business warranted the effort.

The Wobber Brothers, of whom Herman Wobber, district manager of Famous Players is one, have purchased the site of the Pantages theatre on Market street. It is said they now control quite a number of theatre properties in the heart of the city.

Jottings from Kansas City and Vicinity

WHEN Earl E. Langan was appointed manager of the Standard Film Company, Kansas City, he became the youngest manager in exchange manager in Kansas City. He formerly was assistant manager of the Kansas City Select office, but recently has not been affiliated with the film business. He succeeds Bernard C. Cook, who resigned last week to open his own exchange, the Economy Film Service, in Kansas City. Mr. Cook opened his exchange with 1,000 reels of film, consisting of the 5-reel features of the western type, serials, 2-reel westerns, novelties and one and 2-reel comedies.

Earl E. Langan

As Harry Graham, manager of the Kansas City Pathe office, was out searching for likely recruits for his office baseball team the other day, he came across Homer Gill and Charles Stephens of the First National office working out in an alley near the office. With big league stature Stephens wound up.

"Flunk!"

With professional contempt Gill speared a crooked bender with the chubby left mit that hangs by the side of a 220-pound frame.

Graham moved on, with a perplexed expression on his face.

"We're gotta beat 'em this year," he was heard to mumble.

All of which proves beyond a doubt that spring at last is here.

"The Evils of Political Censorship," was the subject of Harry Graham, manager of the Kansas City Pathe branch, A. H. Cole and Jack Roth of the Isis theatre, Kansas City, in a lecture last week before women of the Kansas City Athenæum. The Athenæum is composed of the most influential women civic workers of the city.

W. E. Truog of Kansas City, district manager for Goldwyn, has been called to New York for a conference with Goldwyn officials.

"Rube" Melcher, who has resigned as a Hodkinson representative out of Kansas City, has been replaced by H. R. Barker, who operates the Grand theatre at Winfield, Kas. Melcher is undecided as to his future plans.

In addition to opening an exchange of his own, Bernard C. Cook of Kansas City has purchased an interest in the Treece theatre at Treece, Kas.

A town without a railroad; yet a motion picture house, controlled by several of the citizens—that is the type of population that dwells in Buffalo, Mo., a small village. B. H. Darby, who manages the theatre, the Grand, says that the house is doing a good business and is regarded by the inhabitants as the meeting place of the community.

The Kelley theatre, Iola, Kans., one of the best theatres in the smaller towns of Kansas, was opened last Thursday. It was erected by E. Van Hyning, who also operates the Grand theatre in the same town. The decorations of gray and old rose would do honor to any first run house, while the draw curtains harmonize against the color combination. Direct and indirect lights are arranged to flood the auditorium. The projection equipment consists of two 6 B Powers machines, while a Fotoplayer was installed by the J. W. Jenkins' Sons Music Company of Kansas City.

Unusually keen interest is being manifested in the "Discovery Concerts" to be staged by the Newman theatre, Kansas City. The idea, originated by Milton Feld, manager, has received much space in the daily newspapers, and tickets for the first performance have been placed on sale. The tickets are for reserved seats, entitling th holder to remain for the regular picture. More than 100 applicants "tried out" for the initial performance, which will be similar to an "amateur night," April 1.

For a 10-minute appearance Valentino and the wife received a "cut" of $3,600. The remainder of the time was spent in dancing about the big hall with throngs of spectators who had come prepared to witness some sort of a performance. What a sarcastic panning "Rudy" received from the press the next day.

The former Century theatre, Kansas City, which has been remodeled by the Shuberts, has been re-named the Missouri theatre. J. J. Shubert, who has been in Kansas City the last week, left Wednesday, still undetermined as to what the future policy of the house would be. It may be a combination motion picture and vaudeville house or a legitimate theatre. It will be opened this fall, Mr. Shubert said.

A quiet little wedding took place Monday afternoon in Kansas City. The groom was Dr. Carlos DeMandil, new director of Frank L. Newman's Royal theatre—the bride, Miss Mayre Lippel, who lives across the street from President Harding at Marion, O. Dr. DeMandil met Miss Lippel two years ago in California.

Portland, Ore., Exhibitor and Exchange News

CHARLES KOERNER, new manager of the Associated First National exchange, is expecting a visit soon from Joseph Skirboll, now western district manager, who is coming out from Pittsburg, Pa., to take charge of First National exchanges. He succeeds L. O. Lukan, now general manager of John Hamrick's chain of theatres. Skirboll will have headquarters in Los Angeles, whereas Lukan directed his business from Seattle.

P. Dibble of the Park theatre, Branford, Ct., who is reputed to be the oldest living exhibitor in the U. S. He started showing Cineoptican slides in 1873 and moving pictures in 1896

Thirteen exchanges and producers' representatives are allied in the new Portland Film Board of Trade, which has already considered several important trade problems. Two years ago there were only four exchanges active in the Portland field, and the present 13 is indication of the campaign constantly waging for business.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, arrived in Portland Sunday night, April 1, for a brief visit. Laemmle was accompanied by his daughter, Rosabelle, her chum and Laemmle's secretary. The party arriving from Los Angeles was greeted by J. E. McMeekin, manager of the local Universal exchange, and William Cutts, manager of Universal theatres, who is personally in charge at the Columbia theatre for the present. On Monday Laemmle was a guest at the members' forum luncheon at the Chamber of Commerce and spent the afternoon seeing the sights. He departed at midnight Monday for Seattle. Laemmle spent a pleasant few minutes here with Mayor George L. Baker, a personal friend and a showman until he entered politics a few years ago.

The Lyric Musical Comedy Company, which has been an extensive user of film fillers this season at the Baker theatre, closed for the season Saturday night, March 31, several weeks in advance of its customary closing date. Road shows in Portland are becoming few and far between and the Orpheum circuit will close its local house May 15, leaving the pictures and Fantages and Hippodrome vaudeville to a clear field.

Manager C. E. Couch, at the People's theatre, has booked Paramount's "The Covered Wagon" for early showing. Particular interest is manifested in the feature here because of the fact that the story is about Oregon, and set in Oregon, although it was filmed in Utah. Universal's serial, "The Oregon Trail," is getting attention for the same reasons in those houses still booking chapter plays.

Edward Horton, former leading man with the Baker Stock Company here, is starred in "A Front Page Story," feature of the film program at the Columbia theatre for Easter week, and the reaction of business promises to be unusually good, since Horton was a local favorite.

E. E. Marsh, last manager of the Columbia theatre under the Jensen & Von Herberg rule, now in charge of the firm's Liberty theatre at Astoria, was a visitor among the theatres Tuesday and Wednesday. Astoria, recently destroyed by fire, is rapidly rebuilding and among the first to resume business in the stricken city were the motion picture theatres owned by Jensen & Von Herberg and by John Hamrick.

John Hamrick, owner of the Blue Mouse theatres here, at Astoria, Tacoma and Seattle, conferred here with Manager A. C. Raleigh last week.

Stereopticon slides presenting in vividly colored scenes all the vital parts of the Passion Play as presented at Oberammergau was scheduled as an Easter week feature at the Liberty theatre. Through the co-operation of Paul Murphy, Fortland business man, who saw the Passion Play, Manager Paul Noble obtained a complete photographic record of the production and had his slides made here. In the collection are more than 35 pictures, which were to be screened with an appropriate musical setting throughout the week.

Harold Lloyd's pictures hold box office and long run records in Portland, and Manager Frank Lacey at the Majestic, where "Safety Last" opened Saturday, is looking forward to new long run figures. "Grandma's Boy," showed at the Heilig, road show house, for four weeks and might have stayed longer except for incoming road shows. Then the Majestic booked "Dr. Jack" for two weeks. It ran for six weeks. The booking of "Safety Last," Lacey announces, is "indefinite."

Buffalo Briefs and Western New York Notes

Roland G. McCurdy, director of publicity for the Buffalo Universal exchange, is an old timer in the show game. He started back in 1900 and has handled exploitation for leading theatres in Iowa, has toured in advance of large spectacular shows, has handled publicity on world's championship athletic events and special motion picture productions. Mr. McCurdy joined Universal when "Foolish Wives" was released about a year ago. He started in Des Moines and ended up in Buffalo, where he has succeeded in putting over a number of excellent publicity stunts for Universal products. He says he is now seeking an opponent for Young Pat Glendon, light heavyweight, known as "The Abysmal Brute" for an early date in Buffalo.

Rowland G. McCurdy

Paul Shaver is now representing F. B. O. in the Syracuse district, according to an announcement by Branch Manager Earl Kramer.

Arthur Lucas, district manager for Goldwyn was in town last Saturday for a conference with Branch Manager Tom Brady and the sales staff. Mr. Lucas has charge of the Boston and Buffalo offices. J. Gecox, special representative, has been transferred from the local exchange to the Milwaukee office.

Holbrook C. Bissell has resigned from the Metro sales staff. He had been representing the company in the Albany territory. He will move his family back to Buffalo.

Arthur H. Levy has arrived in town to take over the management of the local American Releasing office. Mr. Levy has been with the company in Philadelphia and Washington. His home is in Hamilton, Ont., and he has been associated with many film companies during his long career in the business. He reports the signing of much business with houses in Rochester.

J. L. Cook has been engaged as a salesman at the Select exchange by Manager Harry Lotz. J. L. is the "Cookey" of Brew Briefs fame in the former famous Pictureplay News of Rochester.

Bob Murphy feels good. He has placed "All the World's a Stage" at the Falace theatre this week and has a date on "Women Men Marry" for the Lafayette Square theatre. Bob is also set on his Renown product in many Rochester theatres.

Robert Smeltzer, district manager, was in town last week for a conference with Branch Manager W. A. V. Mack, who spent the Easter Holidays with his family in Syracuse. W. A. V. was all dolled up for the occasion, with a feather in his hat, a minstrel collar and a new Valentino suit. To purchase all this equipment, it is reported that he cashed his last Liberty bond and took out a mortgage on his gas buggy.

Following the failure of the picture-tab-vaudeville policy at ten to forty cents to draw, the Criterion has changed its policy to straight pictures at fifteen to 25 cents. Lionel Edel has succeeded Ben Holmes as manager.

Rudolph Valentino is coming to Buffalo to stage his dancing act in the Broadway Auditorium on April 11. The appearance is a tie-up with the Mineralava company who are billing the event like a circus.

Joe Cristema, 794 Seventh avenue, has been awarded the contract to build the new Kensington theatre for James Cardina. The house will be ready for fall, it is expected.

The old Red Jacket theatre has been reopened under the name of the Seneca with Melvin C. Wiley as manager.

Charles M. Bagg, former manager of the old Lafayette and several other Buffalo houses, is dead.

Fire swept the booth of the Palace, Buffalo, Thursday morning, March 28 and destroyed two projection machines and severely burned the operator, William Melgier. The loss was placed at $2,500. New machines were immediately installed and operation of the house was not interrupted. The Palace is managed by Howard J. Smith, president of the Western New York unit of the M. P. T. O. A.

All Buffalo theatres were closed from noon until 3 o'clock on the afternoon of Good Friday as requested by Mayor Frank X. Schwab.

Lockport, N. Y., has decided to go back to standard time, after having daylight saving for several years. Niagara Falls, N. Y., is taking up the question this week, when a public hearing will be given the ordinance submitted to the council calling for the return to daylight saving from the present standard time.

Manager Vincent McFaul had his hands full this week taking care of the crowds that stormed the Shea Hippodrome box office to see "Robin Hood," which is being shown at regular prices—which has been arranged, the Hipp ads state, through special permission from Douglas Fairbanks. It is expected the production will be held a second week.

There's one man in Buffalo Filmdom who sure has been through the mill. Frank J. Young, now booker at the Vitagraph exchange, has been employed at the World Film, Republic Distributing corporation, Robertson-Cole, Select and now Vitagraph. Frank was with Selznick when he had eighteen foreign-made productions and one American-made. Frank knows every exhibitor in this part of America, and they're all his friends. He recently resigned from the post of booker at Select to take the booker's place left vacant by Percy Emslie at Vitagraph.

Photoplay Personals and Events in Southeast

A WELL deserved recognition of the ability of Lem Stewart, for the past several years director of exploitation for all Southern Enterprises theatre, in the invitation extended him by Harold B. Franklin to move his activities to the New York office of the Famous Flayers-Lasky Corporatioin, there to install an exploitation system on a national basis similar to the methods which he has pursued with such gratifying success in the South.

Mr. Stewart is one of the oldest exploitation men, in point of service, in the South, and his work in the Southern Enterprises theatres of the Southeastern States has won for him national recognition. He has finally decided to sever home ties and legions of friendships to go to the "big city," and will accept the high post tendered him, which is considered one of the biggest exploitation jobs in the country.

"Doc" Koch's crew at the Atlanta F. B. O. exchange has been on its toes for the past week, winding up in a flourish that should put them away out front, the national anniversary drive which closed on April 1st, although it will be several days before all returns are tabulated and prize winners announced.

Some real money goes with the honor, and early in the week Atlanta got word that they were leading the field, which caused the whole crew to forsake the office for road work, trying to roll up enough additional business to make their distance cut front comfortable for a finish.

Mrs. Floribel Lewis, well known woman exhibitor, of the Dixie theatre, Eatonton, Ga., died at her home last week and the news has cast a pall of gloom over the fraternity of the State, with whom she enjoyed a wide acquaintance. She was one of the best known lady exhibitors in the State of Georgia.

Clyde Watson, who was right-hand man with Lem Stewart's exploitation crew in Atlanta, has forsaken the field to go back to engineering and construction work, for which he received training at Georgia Tech.

Mrs. Annie Aiken Patterson, publisher of the Weekly Film Review, Atlanta, Ga., has been named by Governor Hardwick as a delegate to the Southern States Conference on Illiteracy to be held at Little Rock, Ark., about the middle of April.

George A. McDermotte of Baltimore has been appointed manager of the Famous Players theatres in Macon Ga., succeeding J. H. Stellings,

Henry Hury, the well known theatrical magnate of Birmingham, Ala., paid a visit of several days to Atlanta during the past week and was the center of many social attentions while there.

Nick Carter, Frank Sands and W. A. Sanges of the portfolio crew of First National spent the last week-end in the Atlanta office for a special sales conference.

Several changes have taken place in the Atlanta Vitagraph office. O. G. Sowers becomes cashier, his booking department chair going to C. A. Rhyne, formerly of the poster department.

Oscar Oldknow, president of the Southern States Film Company, announces the purchase from Irving Lesser of Southeastern rights to "Environment."

Melvin S. Shauer of the accessories department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, visited the Atlanta and Charlotte exchanges the past week.

Dick Henshaw of Second National Pictures was in Atlanta the past week closing with Savini Films, Inc., for some new product.

W. K. Jenkins, president of Enterprise Distributing Corporation, is on the West Coast studying production activities with a view to extensive purchases of states rights pictures for the fifteen States which their system of exchanges covers.

Briefs From Florida Territory

The annual meeting of the Motion Picture Operators Union, Local No. 321 of the I. A. T. S. E. of Tampa, was held this week, and the following officers were elected for the coming year: Leon S. Cazin, president; John S. Fette, vice-president; W. J. Paleveda, treasurer; G. W. Griffith, secretary; W. T. Flemming, guardian; and G. W. Griffith, press representative.

Poultry Movies, 5,000 feet of them, were given as a free show by local poultry raisers, at the K. of P. Hall, in Tampa, last Friday evening. Albert Angell, Jr., a poultry expert, appeared with the films and gave a very interesting talk on poultry raising.

Manager John B. Carroll, of the Victory theatre, Tampa, did some nifty advertising on "Adam's Rib." About two weeks before the opening date, little two and three line readers appeared daily upon every page of the local papers. Then a week later the space was increased to a 1½ inch, single column box. In this space he had all manner of catchy paragraphs, such as "All Chickens Have Wish Bones but there Is just one ADAM'S RIB." These were changed daily, and about three days before the showing he came out with "Open Letters," using a space 12 inches long and two columns wide. The letters were addressed to "The Flapper," "The Bachelor," etc. All of this, with the attractive lobby, sold the picture to Tampa fans in great shape.

Exchange and Exhibitor Items from St. Louis

A STRENUOUS effort is being made to put over a Daylight Saving ordinance in St. Louis and the propaganda squad of the proponents of the plan are working night and day drumming up sentiment for the movement.

To date twelve organizations and business houses have come out for the plan, and petitions are being circulated for presentation to the new Board of Aldermen which will convene about April 11.

However, St. Louis motion picture theatre-owners feel that the measure hasn't a chance to pass. Organized labor is against the plan saying it deprives the working classes of sleep needlessly.

The contract for the new Kingsland theatre has been let by Freund Brothers. This house which will stand at Kingshighway and Gravois avenue will be one of the finest in South St. Louis. It will cost upwards of $100,000.

The Novelty theatre, Easton avenue near Grand boulevard, was entered by burglars on March 26. They secured $400 in cash, $184 in checks and a bottle of "medicinal" whiskey from the safe. The St. Louis Amusement Company owns the Novelty.

The patronage of the theatre at Metropolis, Ill., has been seriously affected because fire recently destroyed one of the town's largest factories.

The Odeon theatre, St. Louis, will open as a picture house on April 6. Lady Diana Manners in "The Glorious Adventure" will be the feature film.

Herschal Stuart of the Missouri theatre gave a special matinee showing of the film explaining Professor Albert Einstein's theory on relativity on Saturday, March 31. No admission was charged. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch co-operated with Stuart in putting the show across.

Fay H. Barr has leased the Trio theatre, Hale, Mo., from H. C. Bedell.

Mrs. John Paul is now booking for both the Marvel and Landale theatres, Carlinville, Ill.

The Gem Theatre, Millstadt, Ill., has been sold by Jake Yung. Ben Mischke is the new owner.

Morris Reichman has purchased the Fairy theatre, St. Louis, from Sam Horowitz.

G. W. E. Griffin on or about May 15 will open a tent show in Centralia, Ill., to be known as the Broadway theatre. It will have seats for 1,500. Griffin, who is very well known in that section, has interested W. O. Goin, retired banker in his plan.

The General Film Manufacturing Company, University City, Mo., of which Romaine Fielding is director general, has started work on an interest industrial for the Pevely Dairy Company, St. Louis. This firm is reported to have the finest dairy farm and milk plant in the United States, receiving a rating of 100 per cent from the United States Department of Agriculture.

J. J. Gilmore has resigned as director of the publicity department for the First National office. Morris Aaron has joined the exchange's selling staff.

William A. Shalit, United Artists, plans to take the fatal leap at Boston on June 16. His bride will be Miss Pauline Jacobs of Lynn, Mass.

Frank Rice- Paramount's assistant booker, has resigned to become manager of the Maffitt theatre. Selby Carr has succeeded him.

S. Keely, Service Division, Department of Distribution, First National, has gone to Oklahoma City after spending about two weeks in St. Louis.

Harry Weiss of First National has reorganized his Bimbos and is looking for baseball contests with other St. Louis exchanges. His first game will be with the St. Louis Amusement Company's crack team.

Callers of the week included: W. C. Sears, Booneville, Mo.; Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Hewitt, Robinson, Ill.; Paul Mooney, Louis B. Mayer Productions; I. W. Rodgers, Poplar Bluff, Mo.; S. E. Pirtle, Jerseyville, Ill.; William McNamara, Rex theatre, Virden, Ill.; Ben Mischke, Millstadt, Ill., Mrs. J. Mittler, Marthasville, Mo.

F. G. Conklin of the Hope Hampton Productions was in for a brief spell. On his way to New Orleans.

District Manager William Jenkins of Enterprise was in on his way from the Pacific Coast to Atlanta, Ga.

Goldwyn had a sales conference on Saturday March 31, District Manager W. E. Trough of Kansas City presiding. All the salesmen were in for the confab.

R. L. McLean, sales manager for the First National office, has purchased a handsome new Franklin touring car, he may be seen along the boulevards and parkways in the evenings but during the day he chases the contracts.

F. A. Curran of the Arrow organization was in during the week and called on the various independents.

The General Film Corporation's big studio in University City has been whipped into shape for the making of "The Toll," which is being produced for the Producers Co-operative Syndicate, headed by C. S. Barrett, president of the National Farmers' Union, an organization of 5,000,000 farmers. "The Toll" is the first of a series of feature pictures to be put out by the farmers to tell their side of the struggle to eliminate the middlemen in the handling of farm products. The story was written by Judge Willis Brown, author of several film successes. Romaine Fielding, president and director general of the General Film Corporation, will direct the picture.

Work has been resumed on "The Spirit of St. Louis," being made by the Rothacker Film Corporation for a group of St. Louis business men. The picture will be used to exploit St. Louis commercial, educational and residential advantages throughout the world. It tells the city's story from its founding by Laclede to the present. A. L. Parker is directing the picture.

Field men of the Tisdale Film Corporation, Chicago, are in St. Louis, making motion pictures of leading St. Louis industries, citizens, and public places. Skouras Brothers plan to show the films in their houses and will later release them through one of the national organizations.

Motion pictures of the gigantic plant of the Laclede Christy Clay Products Company, St. Louis, are being made for the United States Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce. They will be used as part of the bureau exploitation campaign in South America, Europe and the Orient. The film will cost $10,000.

In and Out of the Omaha Branch-Offices

EXCHANGE managers, assistant managers, exploitation men and other members of Omaha's film colony come and go, but the local Universal exchange organization, under the leadership of H. F. Lefholtz, seems to go on forever, intact. Mr. Lefholtz has been with the Universal organization nearly nine years. He started on the road for the Laemmle organization. A roll call of the present Universal staff at the Omaha office shows surprisingly long periods of service. M. G. Rogers, assistant to Mr. Lefholtz, has been with Universal three months less than the manager.

H. F. Lefholtz

George McCool of the sales force has been with Universal for 15 years, joining the Laemmle organization a few months after it was launched by Carl Laemmle. Clara Olson, cashier, has been with the exchange six and a half years. Others have been with the exchange seven years and a few six years. Manager Lefholtz believes that better co-operation can be obtained by keeping an organization together. With such a competent organization, he is able to get into the field frequently and meet the exhibitors.

I. Schlank, formerly salesman for A. B. Metzger's local F. B. O. exchange at Seattle, took over the Omaha F. B. O. branch managership on Saturday, March 24. He succeeds H. N. Holmes.

Edgar O. Brooks, serial sales manager from the Pathe New York office, visited Oscar Hanson, manager of the local Pathe exchange, this week. Mr. Brooks called on some of the exhibitors.

Manager Hanson of the Pathe exchange reported that "Safety Last," Harold Lloyd's seven-reel comedy, will be shown in Omaha, Lincoln, Sioux City and Council Bluffs, beginning during the week of April 1 and extending into the following week at the Rialto in Omaha and possibly in another of the cities mentioned.

S. A. MacIntyre, who returned this year to the managership of the local Metro branch, reports that he has placed H. A. Friedel, formerly booker, in the field to cover Northern Nebraska J. McCarthy was added to the sales staff on March 27. These changes increase the field staff from three to five. Harry Wineberg covers Eastern Iowa, Arthur E. Bitters has Southwestern Iowa and Clarence Blubaugh meets the exhibitors in Northwestern Iowa. F. E. McRoy, formerly traveling auditor out of the New York Metro offices, has been assigned to position of assistant manager under Mr. MacIntyre.

John E. Kennebeck, who covers the field between Des Moines and Omaha, as exploitation man for Famous Players-Lasky, landed a noteworthy tie-up with the Union Pacific Railroad Company, in connection with "The Covered Wagon," which will be released in this territory about May 1. The history of the Union Pacific, "The Overland Route," lends itself readily to this exploitation. This campaign will include the distribution of blotters and ticket envelopes throughout the system, also the display of photographs from the screen production, and post cards will be placed on the tables of dining cars. A private screening of the picture will be given for Union Pacific officials.

E. F. Dennison, inspection room expert and inventor, from the New York offices of Famous Players-Lasky, was here on March 19, 20 and 21, installing new inspection equipment.

The motion picture censorship bill has been defeated in the state legislature. The fight for the passage of the bill was not as intense as it was during the session two years ago. Prominent Omaha club women testified before the committee on child's welfare that motion picture men of Nebraska have raised the standards of their business and they should not be hampered by a state censorship board.

Rube Harris has transferred his activities from the Goldwyn to the F. B. O. exchange. He will specialize as salesman in their superspecials and the "Fighting Blood" series.

Albany Notes and Eastern New York Briefs

FRANK TIERNEY, former secretary to ex-Governor Martin H. Glynn, now associated with Fox in New York, was a visitor in Albany the past week.

Frank Bruner, manager of the Pathe exchange in Albany, is up to his neck in work these days in booking "Safety Last." The picture opens for an indefinite run on April 16 at the Strand in Albany, on April 15, at the Troy, and on April 28, at the State in Schenectady, playing Syracuse beginning May 5.

R. V. Erk, who runs all of the theatres in Ilion, N. Y., including the Big Ben, was along Film Row in Albany the past week, booking for the coming months. According to Mr. Erk, "The Third Alarm" made more real money for him than any picture played this winter. He figured out that about 75 per cent. of the men in the larger villages of the state had at some time or other belonged to the village fire department and for that reason, take more interest in such type pictures, than in any other. According to Mr. Erk, "Dangerous Age" failed to attract young patrons, while "Sin Flood" fell flat, "Shadows" being ordinary business, while "The Headless Horseman" brought him patronage that was rarely if ever seen in the house, but on the other hand, the regular patrons remained away, he declared.

G. M. Reap, a student-salesman from the home office of Fox, is at the Albany exchange, learning the business.

Green Island, N. Y., is to have a motion picture theatre, M. L. Conery having leased the Odd Fellows Hall for two nights a week, opening April 10, with "O'Malley of the Mounted." A portable projection machine will be used.

"Honesty, Courtesy and Efficiency." These three words in large type adorn a placard in the office of the Fox exchange in Albany, N Y., and have been so placed that they confront every employee throughout the day.

According to Frank Bruner, manager of the Pathe exchange in Albany, there is a big scramble among the exhibitors of this territory to secure "Safety Last." Mr. Bruner returned last week from a trip through the northern section of the state.

Samuel Goldstein of Springfield, Mass., the biggest operator in the New England States, with sixteen houses in his chain, visited several of the exchanges in Albany last week.

A. J. Herman, manager of the First National exchange in Albany, is still holding the lead in the managers' contest, with S. E. Feld, of the same exchange leading in the salesmen's contest.

J. M. Schine, of Gloversville, in Albany the past week, announced having secured the Maxy in Oneonta.

Central New York exhibitors, in town the past week, visiting the Albany exchanges, included Mrs. G. Harry Brown, of Old Forge George W. Loomis, of Frankfort; Lew Fischer who operates the Play House in Ticonderoga the Bradley in Fort Edward and the Empire in Port Henry; E. IL. Griffin of Kinderhook; L. L. Connors of the Victory in Cambridge, and William Smalley, who owns houses in Cooperstown Fort Plain, Sidney, Stamford and Worcester and who has just taken over the Rex, in St Johnsville.

Joe Miller, who is handling the Albany territory for Hodkinson, has recovered from his recent illness.

George Roberts, managing director of the Berinstein circuit, was in Little Falls the past week, preparatory to breaking ground for the $150,000 house, which is to be erected there this summer.

In and Out of the Des Moines Exchanges

THE film exchanges in Des Moines are to have a building all their own. Erection of a Film Exchange building at Tenth and High streets will be started within the next thirty days. Latest requirements for fire protection, etc., will be carried out in the building, which will house practically all of the exchanges of this city. It is hoped to have the building ready for occupancy by September 1.

The Orpheum theatre in Des Moines is changing its policy beginning April 1, when it will have vaudeville and feature pictures. The opening picture is "Alias Julius Caesar." This policy, with a continuous show from 11 to 11, will be carried out for the spring and summer months.

W. H. Strickland, salesman for Pathe, Des Moines, is in Omaha, called by the serious illness of his mother, who is reported improving following an operation.

Gene Crandall, field manager for the Associated Exhibitors, has been in Des Moines for two weeks going over the territory with Harry Frankel, local manager of the Associated Exhibitors. Mr. Crandall, who goes to the Omaha branch from Des Moines, has been over Iowa and is very optimistic over conditions.

Mr. E. C. Jensen, assistant general manager of exchanges, is here from New York and visited the Film Booking office.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Sage, former owners of the Masonic theatre at What Cheer, Iowa, have sold their interests there to V. J. Hudson and have been in Des Moines looking for another location. They were guests at the Kirkwood Hotel while in the city.

Mrs. Bernice Harvey is a new employee at the Film Booking office, where she is engaged in the inspecting department.

Paul Mooney, general manager of the Louis B. Mayer Producing Company, spent two days in Des Moines this week visiting the office of the Associated First National, where he gave information about the future John Stahl productions.

Harry M. Weinberg, manager of the Associated First National at Des Moines, left March 31 for a three-day stay in Chicago, where he attends a district meeting to discuss the sales policy for the coming season.

A. H. Blank was in Council Bluffs March 31 for the opening of his new theatre, the Broadway, said to be the finest theatre in the state of Iowa. The theatre opened with Jackie Coogan in "Daddy" and Buster Keaton in "The Balloonatic."

R. L. Brentlinger of Indianapolis has been appointed salesman working out of the Des Moines office of the Associated Exhibitors. Mr. Brentlinger is a nephew of A. S. Brentlinger, former head of the Brentlinger Circuit of Indiana. Mr. Brentlinger was formerly manager of the Terre Haute theatre at Terre Haute, Ind.

Mr. Sullivan has sold out his interest in the Columbia theatre at Fort Madison, Iowa, to his partner, Mr. Helling.

Mr. Baker of Baker & Dodge, owners of the Regent theatre and the Opera House at Keokuk, is confined to his bed by illness.

Mr. Jacobs, formerly of the Century Comedy Company and owner of the Palace theatre at Burlington, visited with his manager, A. H. Blank, in Des Moines last week.

Edgar O. Brooks, serial sales manager of Pathe, returned to New York Friday after a week spent in Des Moines territory. While here Mr. Brooks experienced two of the worst blizzards in the history of Iowa.

The A. H. Blank Enterprises report big business recently on the Warner Brothers and Al Lichtman features.

The northern part of Iowa, near Cascade, has been snowed under and unable to get film service.

F. L. Davie, manager of the Universal Film exchange at Des Moines made a trip last week to the key towns and reports business picking up.

O. H. Garland, formerly salesman with the Des Moines Paramount offices, has joined the Universal sales force in Des Moines.

Hugh Bennett, short product manager at the Universal exchange, Des Moines, who has been confined to his home with influenza for three weeks, is back on the territory.

Trade Events in and About Indianapolis

THE Colonial Theatre at Logansport, Ind., owned and operated by Harlow Byerly for the last thirteen years, was bought last week by Harley H. Hornbeck of the Hornbeck Amusement Company of Lafayette, Ind., for a reported consideration of $25,000. Mr. Hornbeck took charge this week. With this acquisition the Hornbeck Amusement Company operates, besides the Colonial, two motion picture theatres at Monticello, two at Knightstown and two at Lafayette. Associates of Mr. Hornbeck in the company are his father, A. D. Hornbeck, and brothers, Willard and M. B. Hornbeck.

The "Circus Frolic" at the Palace last week probably was the only occasion in the history of Indiana when the Governor, the Mayor and a United States Senator have been in the same theatre at the same time to take part in the performance. The Junior Chamber of Commerce tied up with the Palace for the week to boost its membership campaign. The opening night was marked with a big party with many specially invited guests occupying boxes. Mayor Shank, Governor McCray and Senator Ralston made speeches wishing the Junior Chamber well. A street parade was held Monday noon and movies of it made one of the features of the frolic.

Thomas Meighan was to be the guest of and speak at the annual convention of the Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays at the Claypool here this Thursday and Friday.

Proposal of theatrical interests represented by the Harry Templeton Realty Company to build the first of a string of five or six neighborhood houses at College avenue and Forty-second street, ran into an obstacle at the outside when the city plan commission, sitting as the board of zoning appeals, refused to change the classification of one of the lots the theatre was to be built upon from a residence to business standing, so as to permit the construction.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

"An Old Sweetheart of Mine"

Metro—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

THERE'S notning new in this one in the way of story or anything else, but it is a picture that will certainly have the approval of the reform factions, the mothers' clubs, yes, even the censors will like it, for they will find nothing in it to offend. The big thing in the picture is the fact that it is based on one of James Whitcomb Riley's most popular poems and any exhibitor that books it should play up that fact above all others.

The production has been well staged. It looks real all through. The rural exteriors are fine. The scenes in the beginning of the picture, while somewhat drawn out, will amuse a lot of folks, but the kiddies, especially, will like them. They deal with those golden days of childhood through which we all travel and all of us experience adventures very similar to those pictured. There are some laughs in the school room stuff.

Harry Garson, who presided at the megaphone, has excellently handled the material at hand. He has had a good cast to work with. Elliott Dexter has the leading male role. It is not the best thing he has done—but, we'll confess he hasn't much to do. Helen Jerome Eddy makes a charming belle of yesteryear. Pat Moore, Mary Jane Irving and Turner Savage deserve credit for their work. This trio takes care of the children's end. When these tots grow up, Barbara Worth, Lloyd Whitlock and Arthur Hoyt are introduced into the cast.

The picture gets away to a slow start and the spectator is likely to loose interest because there is nothing doing until almost the fourth reel. The beginning is taken up with picturing on the screen the lines of the Riley poem. Of such stuff, box office receipts are not made. The story has been done on the shadow stage many times before. Perhaps you have heard of the smart city chap going to the "village" and selling an "oil" well to the folks. Well, that is what happens here. The only original angle is that the well is made to "shoot" at the close. It's a good thing, they thought of that. The Riley angle will help you put over a lot of exploitation and live wires may be able to put this on and make money with it.

The Cast

John Craig.....Elliott Dexter
John Craig, as boy.....Pat Moore
Mary Ellen Anderson.....Mary Jane Irving
"Stuffy" Shade.....Turner Savage
Mary Ellen, grown up.....Helen Jerome Eddy
Irene Ryan.....Barbara Worth
"Stuffy" Shade, grown up.....Lloyd Whitlock
Frederick McCann.....Arthur Hoyt
William Morton.....Gene Cameron

Adapted from James Whitcomb Riley's poem. Directed by Harry Garson. Scenario by Louis Duryea Lighton.

The Story—Follows the lines of the Riley poem. Plot deals with attempt of "Stuffy" Shade to put over a shady oil deal on a lot of country town folks, in which he involves John Craig, editor of the local newspaper.

Classification—Rural drama.

Production Highlights—The rural background given the picture, which is correct in every detail. The quaint costumes of Riley's day. Some talented child players. The scenes dealing with the trials and tribulations of childhood. The schoolroom scenes.

Exploitation Angles—Your one best bet on this one is to boost the James Whitcomb Riley end. Tie up with the schools, the women's clubs, the literary societies. Put over window displays of Riley's poems

Drawing Power—Problematical, but is especially good for children's matinees. Should go well in the towns.

Scene from "Boys To Board," Our Gang comedy, Pathe release.

"Three Jumps Ahead"

Fox—4854 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS western is far above the average. While dealing with cattle rustling it carries out this form of villiany with such a punch that the interest is maintained to the end. Furthermore it gives Tom Mix the best opportunity he has had in many moons to distinguish himself in and out of the saddle. He puts over several new stunts and see to it that the action which is of the fast moving kind, is not wanting in excitement.

The hero and his uncle are captured by a desperate band of bandits and secreted in a cave where they are flogged by an unwilling prisoner. The latter escapes and the westener is ordered to re-capture him or suffer the death of his uncle. This is the point to introduce some humor. Knowing that the escaped man is hard up for money he plans a ruse whereby his cousins, masquerading as wealthy men, get him interested in a tract of land. They drop a fake telegram on the floor which contains the information that a large sum of money is being sent to them by stagecoach. The old fellow holds up the coach but it carries the leader of the gang. Here he is recaptured. Then it is up to Mix to effect his release because he has fallen in love with his daughter. And so we have the star executing various stunts and putting pep into the picture at the same time.

It's a complicated story yet one can follow it without losing touch with a single episode. The star's horsemanship is superb. Put this number down as among Mix's best. It is filled with action and suspense and competently played by a well selected cast.

The Cast

Boone McLean.....Tom Mix
Ann Darrell.....Alma Bennett
Burk Taggert.....Edward Piel
John Darrell.....Joe Girard
Mrs. Darrell.....Virginia True Boardman
Alicia.....Margaret Joslin
Ben McLean.....Frank Forde
Lige McLean.....Harry Todd

By Jack Ford. Directed by Jack Ford. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Westerner and his uncle are kidnapped by bandits and secreted in cave, where they are whipped by another prisoner. The latter escapes and the hero is sent to recapture him or his uncle will be killed. The westerner captures his man by a ruse, but because he has fallen in love with the old man's daughter he sets out to effect his release again.

Classification—Western melodrama.

Production Highlights—The thrills and fast action. The good suspense. The appealing work by Alma Bennett. The pursuits, etc.

Exploitation Angles—Put this down as a fast-moving western—one of Mix's best. By playing up the star and his horsemanship you are certain to bring out his following.

Drawing Power—Should prove suitable in all second and third class downtown houses. Also a good number for small towns.

"Luck"

C. C. Burr-Mastodon—6442 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ON one of the most favorite themes—that of the youth who must win a wager by a specified time or find himself out of luck—Johnny Hines rides to fair success. The picture may not be inspired in plot, but its incident is often novel and frequently amusing and moves an adequate pace which will satisfy nine out of ten patrons who see it. The comedy gets off with a good gag, showing Hines attired in running togs and kidded into participating in a cross-country race at the country club. A circus is pitched nearby—and Hines feeds a cigar to one of the elephants. The big pachyderm loves his tobacco and naturally chases the star across the wire a winner although the latter thinks the animal is seeking revenge.

There is much good-natured kidding between the youth and a rich man, the result of which is a wager that the young man cannot make ten thousand dollars within a year. The stipulations are he must start with nothing and attired in his running togs. So we next find him getting in and out of trouble on a railroad train—a train from which he is ejected for not having car-fare. The crowd at the station think he is a pugilist who is scheduled for a fistic combat in the local hall, which gives him the opportunity of making his first hundred dollars.

This sequence also gives Charles Murray, Polly Moran and Flora Finch opportunities to put over some ancient hokum. The youth's good fortune arrives when he is successful in winning a suit for libel against the paper. Meanwhile the romantic interest is progressing from where it started on the train. With nine thousand dollars to the good the hero buys a tract of land and starts a real estate boom. And he wins his wager in the nick of time. The finish shows a melodramatic touch when the youth rescues the girl from a mine which conveniently caves in and traps her.

The comedy is acted by seasoned troupers, although such capable players as Robert Edeson and Edmund Breese do not have many chances to display any characterization. However it is a fairly bright little piece and worthy of patronage.

The Cast

Robert Carter.....Johnny Hines
Judge Templeton.....Robert Edeson
Alan Crosby.....Edmund Breese
Sylvia Templeton.....Violet Mersereau
The Plumber.....Charles Murray
His Wife.....Flora Finch
Pollard.....Warner Richmond
Fight Enthusiast.....Polly Moran
A Lawyer.....Harry Fraser

By Jackson Gregory. Scenario by Doty Hobart. Photographed by Charles Gilson and Neal Sullivan. Produced by C. C. Burr.

The Story—Youth, accused of never earning a dollar in his life, bets with rich man that he can make $10,000 in a year starting out in his running togs. After various experiences on a railroad train and in a small town he succeeds in winning the wager and a girl to boot.

Classification—Farce-comedy on formula of winning sum of money by specified time.

Production Highlights—The moments when elephant pursues Hines. The boxing scene. The snappy action. The work of a well-balanced cast.

Exploitation Angles—The title is snappy and use it for a teaser campaign. Use idea of story, which is a favorite one. Decorate your lobby with gilded horseshoes and other emblems of good luck. Play up the cast—all are well known.

Drawing Power—Should go well in all second class neighborhood and small town houses.

"Quicksands"

American Releasing—6541 Feet

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

FEATURED by an excellent cast and a whirlwind finish, "Quicksands" is an entertaining picture with a considerable measure of audience appeal. The story material is slight, but it has been well handled, on the whole, and the strength of cast compensates in a considerable measure.

The action is laid in and around an army post on the Mexican border in the Southwest, and some of the scenes, at least, have been taken in the actual locale called for. There are many interesting touches of army post life in the picture, and some good local color typical of the little towns that dot the border.

The story concerns the efforts of the army officials to stop the smuggling of narcotics across the border into the United States. Directly across the border is a cantina (Mexican for honky-tonk) which is believed to be the headquarters of the band of smugglers. Interwoven with this is the romance of a lieutenant and a young girl who, unknown to him, is an agent of the U. S. Customs service. Consequently, when he finds her at the cantina, he believes the worst, and ends their engagement.

Later, however, when he learns that she is in peril, and that the army cannot officially take action, since she is on the Mexican side of the border, he gets a 24-hour leave of absence and starts out on a one-man relief expedition. He, too, is captured, and it is only when word comes from Washington at the last minute that the cavalry troops are permitted to dash to the rescue.

As will be seen, this is not an especially involved plot, but the last couple of reels pack a tremendous amount of action. We know of nothing more truly stirring than a cavalry troop riding at top speed, and we have it here at its best. There is excellent opportunity here for musical effects, bugle calls, and the like, which would build up tremendous suspense. Everyone knows, of course, that the troops are going to get there on time, but the appeal of this sort of thing seems never ending. Griffith has used it in nearly every one of his big pictures, with variations, and it may be set down as one of the sure-fire things in this uncertain business.

The Cast

The Girl	Helene Chadwick
The Boy	Richard Dix
Ferrago	Alan Hale
"Silent" Krupz	Noah Beery
Colonel Patterson	J. Farrell McDonald
Matt Patterson	George Cooper
Sergeant Johnson	Tom Wilson

Farrell	Hardee Kirkland
Bar-fly	Lou King
Members of the Ring—	Walter Long, Edwin Stevens, Jean Hersholt, William Dyer, Frank Campeau, James A. Marcus, Lionel Belmore, Jack Curtis.

Story by Howard Hawks. Directed by Jack Conway.

The Story—Deals with adventures of troops on the Mexican border in combating ring of narcotic smugglers. Col. Patterson, in command, keeps a sharp lookout on cantina across border, which he believes to be headquarters. His lieutenant is in love with girl who is agent of customers service, unknown to him, and he suspects that she is member of band. She is trapped at the cantina and he goes to rescue, but is imprisoned. At the last minute, however, permission comes from Washington and the troops ride to their rescue.

Classification—Romantic melodrama of army life on Mexican border.

Production Highlights—The army post atmosphere. The excellent types in the cast. The thrilling finish.

Exploitation Angles—Play up the members of the cast strongly, and, at your discretion, the narcotic-smuggling angle.

Drawing Power—Suitable for second-class downtown and neighborhood houses.

"While the Pot Boils"

Robert C. Bruce—Five Reels

(Reviewed by E. F. Supple)

THIS is a feature-length compilation of what is frankly a series of scenics. The producer, of course, realized that a sheer footage of five thousand feet of scenic shots would not, of themselves, sustain interest no matter how colorful the settings presented, and accordingly a story element has been introduced to give the varying locales coherence and render the transition from one group of scenics to the next orderly and logical. This purpose has been served with a measure of success, but the appeal of the subject as a whole remains primarily photographic rather than dramatic—which is just as the producers intended.

The story element centers in a group of hoboes, who while waiting for a pot of "mulligan stew" to boil recount, each in turn, how they came to "hit the road." The first tells how the lonely vigil in the wilderness as a station master led to his wife's desertion and his subsequent downfall due to her defection. In this part we are given views of a desolate country, in which the action of the story transpired. The scenic quality is weak but the narrative holds because of its human interest. The reminiscences of the second hobo bring us some beautiful settings of Oregon hatcheries. The story element here takes second place and the scenic quality predominates. The third story introduces sea views, presenting the ocean in both its docile and stormy moods. The tale of the fourth hobo moves against a background dramatic in spots. For example, we view the story-teller and his enemy in an unwieldy boat in the trough of a sluice-way, which winds periously down the mountain side and across the ravines. As the boat, with its hostile occupants careens along the narrow sluice-way, vistas of distant timber-laden slopes and deep-seated valleys unfold themselves. Here drama combines with beautiful photography. After attaining such heights, it is not surprising that the subject in its remaining brief footage weakens noticeably in story content and photographic quality.

The Cast

Bascom	Gernie Hays
Dippy	Lawrence Keaton
Old Ben	Irving Kennedy
Pete	John Christopherson
Barker	Salmer Jackson
Hendricks	Howard Webster
Uncle Joe	Walter Gilbert
Amy	Mayo Methot
The Stranger	Nate Mears
Game Warden	Jack Moseby

Direction by Robert C. Bruce. Photography by John M. Lamond. Scenario by Peter Milne.

The Stories—(No. 1) Hendricks is a station master in the wilderness. His wife, obsessed by the desolation, deserts him, taking with her gold entrusted to him for shipment. After a term in prison, he "hits the road," a despondent outcast. (No. 2) Barker has charge of fish hatcheries in Oregon. His wife, responding to the lure of the city, deserts him. His defection follows. (No. 3) Old Ben lives in a house by the sea. When his only son is drowned he abandons the sea for the road. (No. 4) Bascom has charge of a timber mill. After a stranger has killed his pet dog he wreaks vengeance by stringing the offender up by the heels. Outlawed for this offense he takes to the road.

Classification—Feature-length scenic introducing story element.

Production Highlights—The photography, especially views of Oregon hatcheries, shooting the rapids and wild ride down sluice-way.

Exploitation Angles—Play up name of Robert C. Bruce; mention this, his first feature-length picture, as an ambitious step toward "something better and different in pictures." Selected views in the lobby would be appropriate for better class houses. Second class houses might use man dressed as hobo and placarded: "Spring's Here! Hit the Road with Me and View the Country's Beauty Spots at the Blank Theatre."

"Enemies of Women"

Cosmopolitan—Eleven Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

TAKING advantage of the popularity of Ibanez's name—taking advantage of the popularity which "The Four Horsemen" achieved in literature and upon the screen, Cosmopolitan has approached the Spaniard's novel, "Enemies of Women," with unbounded respect for his grasp upon the fiction reading public. Nothing has been left unaccounted for to make the picture a genuine sensation insofar as production values are concerned. The tale features the exotic atmosphere of Monte Carlo in several of its chapters. The producers, undaunted, journeyed to the Riviera to catch the actual locations. This is just one indication of the effort to stamp the picture with an authentic background which makes it sincere.

It is a stupendous production, carrying massive sets and colorful detail and dazzles the eye with its regal splendor. Indeed the artistic side of the picture far overshadows the story which while it builds to a climax which generates a spiritual touch often loses its force and logic through the manipulation of its characters. Stalking through this drama is a dominant Russian prince, painted as a rich and worthless bounder who scorns women. They are puppets created for his amusement. So scene after scene is given up to his erotic fancies to find amusement at the expense of the other sex.

The spectator is piloted through bizarre sets. He looks upon a vivid entertainment in the Russian's palace; he is taken to the prince's villa at Monte Carlo; he follows his various amours and adventures with interest. A devil incarnate, this Russian, who worships no shrine except that of Folly. Comes the war and sacrifices. But he steps aside to scorn. But his soul emerges eventually and he becomes a man of morals. The scenes are peopled with some colorful episodes. One in particular is exciting, showing as it does, the terrorists storming the palace in Russia. The picture is punctuated with genuine war strips which give the battle touches much more reality than the trench scenes. It shows a moral which emphasizes the significance of sacrifices as the only way to salvation.

The motivation is weak, however, in the attempt of the fair charmer to extract money from the prince to send to her boy at the front. And though she finds her soul in her love and pride for him, she is false to her mother instinct, refuses to divulge her relationship. The picture is capitally acted by Lionel Barrymore, Alma Rubean and a good supporting cast.

The Cast

Prince Lubimoff	Lionel Barrymore
Alicia	Alma Rubens
Atilio Castro	Pedro de Cordoba
Spadoni	Gareth Hughes
Vittoria	Gladys Hulette
Colonel Marcos	Wm. H. Thompson
Gaston	Wm. Collier, Jr.
Duke de Delille	Mario Majeroni
Alicia's Maid	Betty Bouton
Madame Spadoni	Madame Jean Brindeau

By Vincente Blasco Ibanez. Adapted by John Lynch. Directed by Alan Crosland.

The Story—Russian prince of fabulous wealth lives only to satisfy his selfish whims and fancies. Declares himself, in company with a few friends, an enemy of women. The war breaks out, but he remains immune from it until the spirit of sacrifice is brought home to him. He enlists and finds a glorification of his soul.

Classification—Drama of characters in conflict with nature—which touches also upon the war.

Production Highlights—The rich and sumptuous settings. The scene of the terrorists storming the castle. The exteriors at Monte Carlo. The color and detail. The fine acting by Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens.

Exploitation Angles—Play up the author, the large cast, the massive production, the war atmosphere and the statistics concerned in its making.

Drawing Power—For big houses only.

"The Town Scandal"

Universal—4704 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HERE'S a bright little idea which, had it been treated more seriously, would have come mighty close to the truth. As it is it hits a genuine note even with its exaggerated hokum. It shows up the hypocrisy of the staid and proper moguls of a small town who looks with scorn upon a chorus girl while she is visiting in their midst but who, upon arriving in New York, extend to her the keys of the city. In other words they are cheaters against their marital vows.

This idea should have been exploited to emphasize the real truth of the matter and had it been treated accordingly it would have proved a very human document. But the picture is saturated with hokum—even though the types with few exceptions look genuine.

Propaganda is abroad in the town sponsored by the purity league. A chorus girl spends her summer there and when she goes to New York the opening night finds a few of the leading citizens of the village in the audience. Each tries to keep the other from learning of his playful tendencies, for all of them try to entertain the girl after the show. Naturally she thinks she belongs to the favored few. So when she arrives in the town again she looks up her old friends who promptly show her the air. Then she is inspired to expose them through the village press which is controlled by a fearless young editor.

The hokum comes strong at this point as the cowardly group try to keep under cover. They attempt to bribe her, with no result. She will expose their smug hypocrisy. Becoming desperate they put on their disguises and threaten severe punishment for the editor. He takes care of himself in manly fashion and the girl helps him out by driving a truck through the barn door, and breaking up the rough-house party. She extracts a promise from them to behave and cease their efforts in making the town over to suit their puritanical beliefs.

Gladys Walton's personality is ideal for the role of the chorus girl, and her cast is excellent. The women who compose the purity league are out of character. It's an interesting number which might have been a knockout. Someday the idea will be taken seriously. Then you'll see a real picture.

The Cast

Jean Crosby	Gladys Walton
Toby Caswell	Edward Hearne
Avery Crawford	Edward McWade
Bill Ramsey	Charles Hill Mailes
Samuel Grimes	William Welsh
Lysander Sprowl	William Francy
Mrs. Crawford	Anna Hernandez
Mrs. Sprowl	Virginia Boardman
Effie Strong	Rosa Gore
Mrs. Grimes	Nadine Beresford
Mrs. Ramsey	Louise Reming Barnes
Trixie	Margaret Morris

By Frederick Arnold Kummer. Directed by King Baggot. Photographed by Victor Milner. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Chorus girl snubbed in small town goes back to New York. The leading citizens come to the city and attempt to carry on an intrigue with her—though each one of them tries to keep his flirtation from the others. The girl thinks she is extremely popular with them. But when she returns to the small town she is promptly snubbed. She gets even by exposing them in the village press. The girl has a romance with the editor.

Classification — Human interest story sprinkled with comedy.

Production Highlights—The efforts of the village moguls to become playful with a chorus girl in New York. The scene when she is snubbed. The good work by the cast.

Exploitation Angles—The idea here is a sound one. Exploit it. Play up the star, who is ideal for the role. Treat it as an interesting stage story which carries a large volume of truth.

Drawing Power—Suitable for second class and small town houses. Will be best appreciated in city theatres.

"Glimpses of the Moon"

Paramount—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

PARAMOUNT has given Allan Dwan free rein to produce an exceptionally lavish society drama in "Glimpses of the Moon." Certainly no expense has been spared to give it an aristocratic background. Yet as colorful as its settings are they fail to hide the artificial story through which glide a group of smart society people. No doubt Edith Wharton's tale carries substance which cannot be caught by the camera. Not having read the book we are unable to state whether the adapter is at fault. But Dwan has not failed in suggesting the smart manners of society.

As a picture, however, it seems to lack good red corpuscles. Their absence may be accounted for through fear of censorship. It is a wordy, argumentative sort of document which features a triangle or two. The figures seem more like marionettes rather than human beings because they appear to be on display. Indeed they never become intimate. So we follow them to Palm Beach, Paris and Italy, looking in on a plot which emphasizes the lack of money among certain parasites of the smart set.

The central character is a girl who consents to a trial marriage of one year with a struggling writer. She has several rich feminine friends who adorn her in the clothes of a "heavy sugar baby,"—and one of these friend asks for a bit of reward when the triangle approaches its climax. The young wife's marriage is fast going "on the rocks," because of the husband's inability to make both ends meet. So the adventuress seeks to make the separation permanent by asking the bride for her husband. What does the pretty spouse do? She displays some character for the first time and refuses. Which introduces the happy ending when the husband shows her a check for a thousand dollars as first payment on his novel. There are several subordinate characters who provide more background than they do drama.

The outstanding performances are contributed by Nita Naldi as the adventuress and Charles Gerard as the "heavy." The detail is splendid. In fact the trimmings and trappings are much more genuine than the story. "Glimpses of the Moon" should appeal to feminine audiences.

The Cast

Susan Branch	Bebe Daniels
Ursula Gillow	Nita Naldi
"Nick" Lansing	David Powell
Fred Gillow	Maurice Costello
Mrs. Ellie Vanderlyn	Rubye de Remer
"Streffy" (Lord Altringham)	Charles Gerrard
Bob Fulmer	William Quirk
Grace Fulmer	Pearl Sindelar

By Edith Wharton. Scenario by E. Lloyd Sheldon. Directed by Allan Dwan. Photographed by Hal Rosson. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—Treats of the married life of a young couple, the wife being one of society's "poor sisters," and the husband, a struggling writer. They become involved in the domestic affairs of another couple, the Vanderlyns. Mrs. Vanderlyn demands the aid of the other wife in a scheme that almost separates her from her husband. The affair, however, is satisfactorily settled and the young couple are reunited.

Classification—Domestic drama carrying an eternal triangle.

Production Highlights—The competent work by Bebe Daniels, Nita Naldi, David Powell and Charles Gerrard. The good direction. The costuming of the principals. The lavish detail.

Exploitation Angles—By all means play up the author, whose story has been a big seller. Play up director as responsible for "Robin Hood." Mention the players. Use theme for "copy."

Drawing Power—Best suited for a high class clientele. Should interest feminine audiences everywhere.

"Modern Marriage"

American Releasing—6331 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

FILM patrons are certain to rub their eyes when they read the billing and other announcements of this picture for it introduces the co-stars, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, who have emerged from retirement to appear again before the camera. Time has rested lightly upon their personalities even if it gives an old-fashioned flavor to their technique. Screengoers are not adverse to the old school style of screen pantomime, and certainly the Bushman-Bayne combination put enough sincerity in their efforts to pass muster even with the worshippers of Rodolph, Ramon, et al.

Francis X. still possesses his classic profile judging from the close-ups and his physique might well indicate a recent graduate from Yale. And so the co-stars appear in a domestic drama with the usual triangle situation. The neglectful husband, the flirtatious wife, who, becoming conscience-striken, attempts to recover some silly letters—and the other man—these are the figures in this conventional story which features a murder and considerable conflict between husband and wife before the reconciliation occurs.

The plot succeeds in holding the interest because it isn't developed with the usual glaring inconsistencies which follow this theme. The wife disappears in the apartment below that of the philanderer to avoid her husband, while a murder is committed above. Naturally this introduces another home-wrecker whose object is blackmail. The latter is employed as the husband's secretary and gets his punishment in the climax.

This is quite exciting and we have it on good authority that Bushman and Bayne are booked for forty weeks over a vaudeville circuit to put over this climax as a one-act play. To do this the film will fade into the act, although those houses not booking the stars will have the alternative of taking the picture in its entirety. It is rather compact, this climax—acted against a single setting. Some gaps are visible. One features the absence of any police investigation. But the blackmailer confesses the crime before he dies and all ends well. Most of the players including the stars are given to over-acting their roles.. A rather interesting picture on an old theme.

The Cast

Hugh Varley	Francis X. Bushman
Denise Varley	Beverly Bayne
Frank Despard	Roland Bottomley
Cort Maitland	Ernest Hilliard
Nita Blake	Zita Moulton
Hugh, Jr	Frankie Evans
Elihu Simpson	Arnold Lucy
Mammy	Pauline Dempsey
Blossom Young	Blanche Craig

By Derek Vane. Scenario by Dorothy Farnum. Directed by Lawrence C. Windom. Produced by F. X. B. Pictures, Inc. Supervised by Whitman Bennett. Distributed by American Releasing Corp.

The Story—Husband, neglectful of his wife, learns that she is interested in philanderer. She goes to latter's apartment to recover certain incriminating letters and in making quick exit she does not know that the man is subsequently murdered. She seeks refuge in another apartment, the occupant of which is aware of her folly with the deceased. The husband defends his wife against him when the latter attempts burglary and assault. He is fatally wounded but confesses to the murder and exonerates the wife.

Classification—Domestic drama on eternal triangle theme.

Production Highlights—The suspense after the adventurer is murdered. The fight in the climax. The good production.

Exploitation Angles—Play up that this introduces Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in a "come-back." Make copy of the title and theme for a teaser campaign.

Drawing Power—Suitable for second class first-run houses.

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

" Take Your Choice "

(Educational—Two Reels)

"TAKE YOUR CHOICE" is good for some laughs despite the fact that it is cut to a conventional comedy pattern. In consequence of having lost an election bet, Bobby Vernon, in the role of Mr. Dick, is obliged to roller-skate about town in evening clothes and a top hat. Of course, he eventually runs afoul of the police and in eluding pursuit hooks on the rear end of an auto, which turns out to be a police department car en route to the station house. In court, Dick's skates precipitate a series of accidents in which the judge fares badly. His honor, incensed, sentences Dick to six months solitary confinement, but upon the plea of Dick's father, who is a friend of the judge, sentence is suspended with the proviso that Dick gets married within a week.

Matrimony doesn't appeal to Dick but neither does six months solitary confinement. He writes five proposals to as many fair candidates. Having chosen one of the five letters at random, he drops it in the mail box. The family butler finds the remaining four letters on Dick's desk, and true to the training of a good butler he mails them without Dick's knowledge. At this juncture, father's partner arrives with his pretty daughter. Love at first sight. All's rosy—till the girls, who have received Dick's unauthorized proposals, get busy. Each, of course, is just wild to deliver the fatal "Yes!" to Dick's offer of marriage. Complications galore! Eventually, Dick loses his real sweetheart, and father disgusted cuts him off without a cent. "But what's a man without an inheritance!" chorus Dick's quartette of fiancee's as they promptly exit. Dick disgraced; the girl unconsolable; both fathers wrathful. Then the butler to the rescue: "I wrote those letters to the young ladies, sir, to help Mr. Dick get married!" he explains. Reconciliation and kisses!

The action keeps going with a zip from start to finish, and Bobby Vernon makes the best of his opportunities. On the whole an enjoyable two-reeler.—E. F. SUPPLE.

" When Fighting's Necessary "

(Range Rider-Pathe—Two Reels)

LEO MALONEY is seen in another of his typical Western hero roles as Bart Hodge, who manages the Diamond-Bar Ranch owned by his mother. Dick has a brother, Ben, detailed to arrest the leaders of the Buck Neville gang, whose identities are unknown.

The pretty new school mistress comes to board at Diamond-Bar Ranch and wins the admiration of the male element of the countryside. Bart and Buck Neville race to the schoolhouse to invite the school mistress to a dance. Bart wins, but is repulsed because of his refusal to fight his rival. He departs with the remark that there are times when fighting is necessary.

One of those times comes when Bart returns to the ranch to find his brother badly wounded by the Neville gang. He starts for their rendezvous and single handed, with an unloaded gun succeeds in capturing the entire outfit just as relief arrives headed by his sweetheart. The latter capitulates, realizing fully the meaning of Bart's earlier remark. There are several exciting incidents in this good picture—CHESTER J. SMITH.

" The Salesman "

(Fox Comedy—Two Reels)

HERE is Al St. John in a comedy which exploits the ancient and accepted order of dream situations. The comedian is discovered registering hatred against the w. k. destroyer of good dispositions—namely, the alarm clock. He tries in vain to silence the ticker and ends up by smashing it to pieces. Thus he is able to snatch a little more sleep.

But on to the dream. Al arises O. K. and gets on the job in the country store where he is employed. A quartette of old cronies of the spitting-on-the-stove variety sit around whittling wood and ridding their evil minds of choice scandal and they make no effort to help him. A title suggests that they are to engage in the lumber business on a small scale, for they keep up their whittling until the store is filled with stacks of slivers. So Al ejects them and gets into a few fights. He seems to be getting the worst of it until he wakes up to find himself on the floor of his bedroom wrapped in a sheet. Fairly amusing.—LAURENCE REID.

" Good Riddance "

(Roach-Pathe—One Reel)

PAUL PARROTT'S romance threatens to become completely disrupted because of the mutual affection between him and his dog, the latter burdened with an over-abundance of fleas. It is not a case of "love me, love my dog" with Parrott and he makes every honorable and dishonorable effort to comply with the fair lady's ultimatum that the dog must be dispensed with before the romance can continue.

This state of affairs makes for many comedy situations, but from each, like the well known cat, the dog comes back. A drop from an aeroplane seven miles high and an explosion wrecking the bungalow fail to produce the desired results. The dog refuses to stay put, with the result that in the end the lady capitulates and even the dog continues to live happily ever afterwards. There are several good laughs in the picture.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

" The Movie Dare Devil "

(C. C. Burr-Educational—One Reel)

THIS Earl Hurd comedy, a combination of animated cartoon and straight photography, carries Bobby Bumps, the cartoon character, through a series of adventures in which he rebels at the small salary being paid him by the film company for which he works. He takes a sample picture and goes to a rival company, to show them what he can do.

This picture is then projected, "Around the World in Eighty Ways," and shows Bobby Bumps introduced into photographic scenes, including steer-throwing contest, a kangaroo race, a steeplechase, a chariot race, an airplane stunt and other thrills, neatly burlesquing the hair-raising screen melodrama.

The picture fails to register the expected hit, however, and they wander out, after which Fido produces last week's salary, which he had thought might come in handy. This is a rather interesting subject and puts over a number of amusing gags.—L. C. MOEN.

" The Dude "

(Educational—One Reel)

JIMMIE ADAMS appears in the role of a farm-hand who has just returned from the city where he has been unsuccessful in his attempt to become a grand opera singer. Abner's resumption of the farm chores is marked by a series of mishaps. The woodpile and a balky mule offer some especially trying obstacles. However, Abner is still strong with farmer Green's daughter, played by Virginia Vance, and while the city has ruined his operatic ambitions it hasn't spoiled his dancing a bit. Consequently at the annual barn-dance Abner officiates as the "town pride."

The barn-dance scenes introduce some eccentric dancing which, we consider, is the highlight of the subject. Of course, when the pigs invade the barn at the height of the festivities and the hens come home to roost there is considerable rough-and-tumble among the dancers. Eggs dislodged from their positions in the loft come tumbling down and add to the discomfiture of those below. Meanwhile, the village sheik and Abner have been engaging in a little horseplay on the crowded dancing floor. The end comes when Abner in retaliation pushes the village "terror" against the main prop of the hayloft. The support giving away precipitates the loft full of hay down on the heads of the fleeing dancers. Abner and his girl are left in sole possession.

An audience susceptible to the slapstick and "physical discomfiture" type of comedy will very likely find "The Dude" laughable in parts. The sub-titles offer nothing very original but will probably furnish a laugh or two to a not too exacting audience.—E. F. SUPPLE.

" Green as Grass "

(Christie-Educational—Two Reels)

RURAL comedy, centering about a broken-down horse with protruding ribs, provides a plentiful quota of fun in "Green as Grass." The picture opens with an amusing sequence in which the hero, played by Jimmie Adams, drives up to his best girl's house in a buggy to which is hitched the aforementioned antique horse. His rival comes along in a flivver, and after a series of excellent gags, drives away with the girl.

The horse refuses to move, when he tries to spur it on in pursuit, but when a farmer nearby suddenly opens an umbrella, the horse is frightened and dashes away in a streak of dust.

The farmer has delivered an ultimatum to the effect that the first of the two suitors to buy an adjoining farm for $3,000 will win the girl. The hero decides that if he can discover what made the horse run, he can enter it in the county races. Experiments show that the umbrella was the cause, and he enters the race. By providing himself with a plentiful supply of umbrellas of various sorts, he wins, and sells the horse for $3,000, then engages in an exciting race with his rival to buy the farm. After much dirty work on his rival's part, he succeeds, putting over a lot of genuinely amusing comedy in the doing.

This was directed by Scott Sidney from a story by Walter Graham, and was photographed by Gus Peterson and Paul Garnett.—L. C. MOEN.

Century Releases for May Announced

JULIUS and Abe Stern announce their following Century Comedy releases for May:

May 2d, "Oh Nursie," featuring Jack Cooper, supported by Marjorie Marcel, Jack Earle and The Century Beauties; May 9th, "Why Dogs Leave Home," starring Brownie, the canine wonder; May 16th, "Ain't Love Awful," with a cast composed of Bobby Dunn, Ernie Adams, Frank Earl and Lillian Hackett. May 23d, "All Over Twist," the third of the Buddy Messinger series. May 30th, "The Kid Reporter," starring Baby Peggy.

Pathe Claims Scoops in News Reel

In the latest current issue of Pathe News, No. 27, clean "scoops" are claimed on two of the most important developments in wide world affairs. These exclusive motion pictures relate to exciting Franco-German events in the Ruhr district, and to archaeological excavation work in Egypt.

In the German Ruhr district, now occupied by a French army with the object of enforcing reparation payments, the French are seen actually disarming German police and expelling them from the occupied territory.

The active operations of archaeological explorers in Egypt, pictured in Pathe News No. 27, are those being conducted by the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and, therefore, represent American enterprise along the same lines of the Carnarvon Expedition, which startled the world by the discovery of the tomb of King Tutankhamen and its priceless contents.

"Information Kid" New Universal Series

Spurred by the exceptional success of "The Leather Pushers" series, which has established a high water mark for short subjects de luxe, Universal is planning another high class series of two reel features. In contrast to the prize ring atmosphere of "The Leather Pushers," the new series will deal with horse racing.

The title will be "The Information Kid" series, built around the race track adventures of a picturesque character known by that name. This series is being adapted from the celebrated "Rider Up" series of short stories by Gerald Beaumont, which recently appeared in the Red Book Magazine, and which now is being published in book form.

Educational Series Is Praised

National Review Board Places Three One-Reelers in Exceptional Class

INDORSING a series of pictures as a series for the first time, the Exceptional Photoplays Bulletin, published by the National Board of Review, devotes a large part of the space in its March issue to a review of the first three releases of the new series of Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce, which are now being released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., putting these single-reel subjects in the class of Exceptional Photoplays.

The subjects considered in this article are "By Lantern Light," "Moonblind" and "Jenkins and the Mutt," the last of which was included in a program of Exceptional Photoplays presented by the National Board of Review in New York City last week.

"After all the gaudy and pretentious feature productions have gone by," says Exceptional Photoplays, "these three little films will remain vivid in the minds of those who have seen them. They are nearer to art, truer to beauty, and more imaginative about life. And if Mr. Bruce is as successful in working out the rest of the series as he has been in producing these, he will have to his credit an achievement that is solid and convincing."

The review in part says:

"'Moonblind' tells the story of two men prospecting in utter isolation among the mountains. One, who has been temporarily blinded by sleeping with his eyes upturned to the full moon, tries to find the partner we have seen tumble down a steep incline, breaking his leg in the fall. Here, then, is a situation in which the mind of the audience is impelled to work: A man who is blind stumbling about in a wilderness of crags and ledges toward a precipice, below which lies his wounded comrade. The loneliness and danger of the wild is forcefully presented in the picture of these two helpless men; indeed, they provide a reason for the 'pictures.'

"'Jenkins and the Mutt' is one of the finest things of brevity that motion pictures have presented. It has humor and pathos and a fine feeling for the mysterious movement of wonders being achieved, and in the solution its chief character finds for life, it hits upon a truth that makes us reflect.

"'By Lantern Light" presents a sequence of striking pictures through which runs the narrative of a search for two lost children who are imprisoned in a cave by the rising sea waters. The episode is pictorially suggestive of the life of people whose livelihood is found in coastal regions. It is full of movements of wind and darkness, and the thought of breakers reaching up the sand to rocky places, and in this sense is reminiscent of that other fine thing of Mr. Bruce, 'And Women Must Weep.'"

Gorham Follies in Six Comedies

Century Signs Popular Company For Series with Doris Eaton as Star

COMPLETE arrangements have been made for the six Century Comedies which the Gorham Follies will make with Doris Eaton in the starring role. They will be directed by Archie Mayo and Jack Cooper will play the leading masculine role.

In signing J. K. Gorham, Miss Eaton (who, in private life, is his wife) and their company of twenty-five actors and actresses with wardrobes and properties estimated at over $50,000, Julius Stern has added a superfeature to his 1923 attractions. Doris Eaton, who is the sister of Mary Eaton, one of the prettiest girls in the Ziegfeld Follies, was herself one of the shining lights of the Ziegfeld Follies until she married J. K. Gorham, who directed the Ziegfeld production for several seasons. He took out a show of his own, called the Gorham Follies, with Miss Eaton as the star. She is not only an exceptionally pretty girl, but a clever dancer as well, and has one of the most gorgeous wardrobes on the stage.

The Gorham Follies has been playing the big circuits and the larger cities, as well as the large hotels on the Coast, such as the Palace and Ambassador. It was while watching their revue in Los Angeles that the Stern brothers conceived the idea of putting into Century Comedies six superlative girl shows on the Follies order.

Very beautiful sets are being erected by Century's technical director, Tom O'Neil, under the direction of Gorham. Eighteen trunks of gowns for the other members of the cast have been received.

Jack White Completes "This Way Out"

Jack White, producer-director of Educational - Mermaid Comedies, has finished production work on the two-reel comedy, "This Way Out," featuring Lige Conley, and is now busy on the preparatory work for Conley's next, "Backfire," an automobile racing comedy.

Plumer Signs Contract with Christie

AL CHRISTIE has signed Lincoln Plumer, well known character actor, for a year in which he will play in Educational-Christie Comedies exclusively.

Plumer has been seen recently in the Christie Comedies, "Hazel from Hollywood," "Choose Your Weapons," "That Son of a Shiek," "Let 'Er Run," and "Chop Suey."

The Christies are signing up other players with speed these days. Other new contract signers are Jimmie Adams, Hazel Deane, Jimmie Harrison, Charlotte Merriam, and Babe London.

"Topics of Day" Shares in Anniversary

When the Tivoli theatre, Chicago, celebrated its second anniversary recently "Topics of the Day" is reported to have won a double salvo of applause from the regular patrons of the house. This was in recognition of the fact that the snappy joy reel issued weekly by [illegible] not been missing on the Tivoli [illegible] since the original opening of the theatre.

Broadcasting of the selected jokes and witticisms screened in "Topics of the Day" now adds to the attractions of the General Electric Company's radio service twice weekly.

Art Musem to Preserve Pathe Subjects

In connection with the co-operation of the Metropolitan Museum of Art with Pathe Review in novel presentations of art subjects, Pathe has received noticed of the Museum Trustees' acceptance for its archives of prints of two examples released within the last few weeks.

Three subjects are contained in a section called, "The Foibles of Yesterday." The first, released on March 4th, in Pathe Review No. 9, is entitled "The Vanities of Men." The second is "Milady's Treasures," released on March 11 in Pathe Review No. 10.

Bobby Vernon Making New Farce Comedy

The Christie organization is working on a farce comedy featuring Bobby Vernon, under the direction of Scott Sidney. The new film will be called "Take Your Choice" and is by Frank R. Conklin. Five leading ladies are in the picture, including Charlotte Stevens, Duane Thompson, Natalie Johnson, Margaret Cloud and Gladys Baxter.

Two popular players of the Christie aggregation—Jimmie Adams and Charlotte Herriam.

Educational Program Announced

Four Two-Reel Comedies of Varied Type Listed for Release During April

FOUR two-reel comedies of widely varying types are listed for release on the April program of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

Two of these are Mermaid Comedies, produced under the supervision of Jack White, and two are the product of the Christie studios. The balance of the program, which will comprise twenty-two reels in all, is composed of Cameo Comedies, Earl Hurd Comedies, Wilderness Tales, Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge, Educational's news reel and Kinograms, issued twice weekly.

"Kick Out," the first Mermaid release of the month, is a lion comedy with Lige Conley as the featured comedian. The other Mermaid Comedy on the schedule is "Cold Chills," which presents the inimitable Louise Fazenda in a new role, that of a Swedish maid.

The Christie product also presents two different types of comedy. Jimmie Adams is featured in his first picture under the Christie banner in "Green As Grass," a comedy horse race picture, which is said to contain some very exciting racing scenes, remarkably well done. "Take Your Choice," the second Christie of the month, presents Bobby Vernon in the type of comedy that has made the Christies famous. In this picture they have returned to the familiar living-room farce.

The Cameo Comedies are "Family Troubles," with Eddie Barry, a flivver comedy; "The Dude" and "Traffic."

"Jenkins and the Mutt" is the third of the series of Wilderness Tales.

The cartoon subjects, the Earl Hurd Comedy, "The Movie Dare Devil," and Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge, "Speed Demons," complete the program. The first of these presents Bobby Bumps in a real cartoon thriller, showing his stunts before a movie camera. "Speed Demons," which takes its name from a burlesque auto race done in cartoon, is a combination of interesting but unrelated subjects, done in both animated cartoon and straight photography.

"Our Gang" Gets Capitol Laughs

N. Y. Reviewers Praise Hal Roach Kids for Good Work in "The Big Show"

FRECKLED MICKEY DANIELS and the other juvenile screen stars in the Hal Roach two-reel Our Gang Comedies made themselves doubly amusing to Capitol theatre, New York, audiences last week in "The Big Show." Over and above the customary stunts of unterrified boyhood that distinguish the Our Gang Comedies, "The Big Show" includes "take-offs" on several of the screen's most celebrated figures.

Mickey Daniels—with whom Hal Roach has just made a five-year contract—thus pays his respects to Douglas Fairbanks in that star's most Dumasesque role. Harold Lloyd and "Two-gun" Bill Hart are "interpreted" by other members of the cast hardly less laughably, while little Mary Kornman is declared to be Mary Pickford "to the life."

New York newspaper reviewers paid their compliments to this Capitol theatre occasion after the following fashion:

Tribune: "There is an Our Gang Comedy on the bill called 'The Big Show.' These kid comedies, sponsored by Hal Roach, are among the real joys of the screen."

Morning Telegraph: "If for no other reason, it would be well worth anyone's time to go this week to the Capitol to see 'The Big Show,' in which Hal Roach's Our Gang stage a circus."

Christie Comedy in Black Face

"Roll Along" Will See Well Known Funmakers Doing Stuff in Burnt Cork

THE two-reel comedy is going far afield for new laughs, not only in the matter of locations but in plots, according to Al Christie, whose organization is just starting another innovation by producing a comedy all in black-face with many of the well-known comedians "doing their stuff" in burnt cork and kinky hair, a la Al G. Fields' minstrels.

In the new comedy, "Roll Along," which will be produced along the Sacramento River, with its chugging steamboats and levees to resemble the Mississippi of Mark Twain's description, Jimmie Adams, Babe London, Earl Rodney, Natalie Johnson, Ward Caulfield and other players of the Christie staff will all don the darkest variey of grease paint. Every actor in the picture will be in burnt cork; that is to say, there will be no real colored folks in the piece, but all the regular Christie troupe, who have in the past appeared as Chinamen or Northwest Mounted Police, or Sheiks and Sheikesses, will add another line to their repertoire.

Mr. Christie's company is on the location now, doing the scenes of the steamboat race between the "Dusky Belle" and "The Smoky City," in which Jimmie Adams, the new Christie comedian, is featured. This is the third extensive location trip for Mr. Christie's troupe within the last three months. Close on the heels of the making of his "Hula Honeymoon" in Hawaii, which has recently been released, he produced "Winter Has Came," a comedy of New England farm life, using the snow backgrounds at Truckee for locations.

Christie Signs Up For Exhibit Space

The Christie studios have signed up for Bungalow Number One, where producing companies are to have exhibits at the American Historical Review and Motion Picture Exposition here during the month of July.

The space is the first studio reservation to be made, and it is expected that practically every film organization will have an exhibit in the grounds at Exposition Park, where all phases of motion picture endeavor will be represented.

"Colonel Heeza Liar" on Broadway

Announcement is made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to the effect that "Colonel Heeza Liar and the Burglar" began a two weeks' engagement starting last Sunday at the Strand theatre, New York. This production is one of the series of Bray Comedies distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Eight Releases on Pathe April Program

SUSPENSE and terror reach their height in the twelfth episode of "Plunder," released April 15 in a Pathe program of eight subjects. Pearl White, the heroine, is seen plunged into the most ingenious perils yet shown on the screen.

This program contains also a 2-reel western of the Range Rider Series "When Fighting's Necessary."

Two issues of Pathe News—Nos. 32 and 33—picture the outstanding current world events, and Topics of the Day, No. 15, has many laughs.

The Hal Roach 1-reel comedy is "Good Riddance," with Paul Parrott. The Aesop's Film Fable of this program is called "One Hard Pull."

In its Popular Science Series, Pathe Review No. 15 makes fascinating demonstrations of "Glacial Age Instincts."

Hamilton on Location in Box Car

Lloyd Hamilton is putting the finishing touches on "F. O. B.," which is the final comedy in the current series of six for Educational release.

The majority of "F. O. B." was shot in a box car, and Hamilton has been spending the major portion of the last three weeks on location on the branch line btween Redondo Beach and Inglewood, Cal.

Supporting Hamilton are Ed Kennedy, Lew Morrison, C. L. Davidson, and Eddie Flaif. Ruth Hiatt, Hamilton's leading lady, is completing a second comedy with Lige Conley for Mermaid. The cast of "F. O. B." has no women.

Fox Shows Maneuvers of Fleet in Canal

Fox News in release No. 52 presents unusual glimpses of the American fleet maneuvers in Panama Bay. While many moving pictures have been made before of fleet maneuvers, those now showing bring out vividly the possibilities of tracing from airplanes the course of torpedoes fired from destroyers.

The pictures were taken from government plane by Al Brick, New York staff man, and traced plainly the course of torpedoes in the water from the time they were fired from the destroyer.

Fred Spencer's First Is "Gasoline Love"

The first Century Comedy, in which Fred Spencer plays the featured role, will be called "Gasoline Love." The story has to do with a country boy, played by Spencer, whose country sweetheart is played by Fay Wray. His rival is played by Glen Cavender, an actor of the old school, who at one time directed many of the Sennett successes.

"Fun from Press" Well Edited

Preparation of Copy by Experienced Experts Responsible for Success

ACCORDING to Charles J. Post, Assistant to the President of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, it is the splendid care and editorial preparation by men who have the traditions and experience of 35 years that has given the Literary Digest's "Fun From the Press" its immediate success and its unique popularity as one of the surest laugh makers of its kind on any program.

The Literary Digest with its million and a half circulation every week has a staff of editors, that for over 35 years have been trained in editing a magazine containing a review of politics, science, art, etc., and includes such well known names as Doctor Woods, Doctor Visitolly (editor of the Standard Dictionary), Mr. Roberts, and Updegraff and various other writers of distinction. Experienced men with editorial training clip from thousands of newspapers all over the United States.

These selected jokes, numbering thousands a week, are pasted upon filing cards. These cards are carefully gone over by several editors in succession each picking out those that appeal to his expert editorial judgment and placing them in a special file. This policy is repeated and the process of elimination made with the result that the entire number is boiled down to about 30. The humorous bits are then typewritten and given another course of inspection at which time special stress is laid upon the arrangement and order. After the final O.K. has been put upon the selection the reel in then ready for the laboratory.

It is due to this care in preparation, according to Mr. Post, that "Fun From the Fress" has been meeting with such widespread success wherever shown. The humor selected backed by the judgment of editors of the standing found among those of the Literary Digest is an insurance of all that is best in the world's humor.

Jackie Discards Rags for Prince Raiment

ONE of the interesting features of Jackie Coogan's first production under his new Metro contract is the fact that he will no longer be seen in the ragged clothes with which he has been associated up to now. "Long Live the King," from the famous novel by Mary Roberts Rinehart, one of America's best known authors, tells a thrilling story centering around the person of the boy hero, Prince Ferdinand William Otto. The scenes are laid at the present time in one of the colorful Balkan principalities.

Jackie, himself, as the Crown Prince, and in the very end of the story the King, wears the clothes natural for a scion of royalty, which means there will also be a coronation scene with Jackie in all his regal splendor.

"Aesop's Fables" Praised in Letters

"Aesop's Film Fables" are becoming more popular daily, according to word from the Pathe offices. This fact, they say, is proven not only by increased bookings, but on the large number of commendatory letters being received. Also they are being praised generally by the press. The following is a sample:

"Q. E. D.," writing in the Baltimore Evening Sun of March 19: "Of all the screen comedies, so-called, before the public at the present moment, we doubt if there are any more enjoyable than the Aesop's Film Fables. For some time we have wanted to give vent to our overwhelming admiration of these exceedingly clever little fantasies. To be sure, they are only animated cartoons; but, animated cartoons or not, they give us more laughs in one second than most of these impossibly dull and overworked comedies in the flesh are able to do in all their stupid length."

Toronto Editor Laments Bill Advertising

The fact that the entire bill of entertainment of picture shows is not sufficiently advertised to let the public know what they are going to see is the basis of an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Star Weekly recently.

This unfortunate fact was stated in connection with a discussion of censorship and is, incidentally, an argument in favor of advertising all short subjects, according to S. B. Taube, manager of Toronto's Canadian Educational Films, Ltd., exchange.

The editorial says, in part: "Most people who go to the picture houses do not know what it is they are going to see. They know the house; they have been in it before, and they go again, expecting to be entertained. Even if they know the name of the main film, or the name of the movie star, they do not know what other films are to precede it."

"Head Hunter" Curios For "Black Shadows"

When Pathe, in the near future, releases its Solomon Islands "Head Hunter" feature, "Black Shadows," interest in this strange drama of the savages and sirens of the South Seas, will be stimulated in a way similar to that which earned for "Nanook of the North" its tremendous success.

This promise is made in connection with the receipt by Pathe of a large collection of "Head Hunter" curios which the producer of "Black Shadows" brought back from the tropical Pacific island scenes in which the barbarous human drama was photographed. These curios—war weapons, canoes and implements of various kinds—will form rare and interesting theatre lobby exhibits, as in the case of Robert J. Flaherty's great Eskimo epic.

Mack to Make Personal Appearance Tour

Negotiations are now under way between Willard Mack, famous stage star and author, and several leading first run exhibitors throughout the country whereby Mack is to make special personal appearances in connection with the recently released Sawyer-Lubin special, "Your Friend and Mine," by Metro Pictures Corporation.

It is planned to have Mack enact some of the scenes from the film during his appearances, at the same time giving audiences some of his experiences as film writer and screen star.

United Studios Speeds Up Work

Three Shifts Working Twenty-Four Hours Daily in Construction of Sets

THREE shifts are employed at the United studios, in Los Angeles, working twenty-four hours a day constructing and tearing down sets for the seven productions now under way there, it is said. They have been at it a week. They will be busy many more weeks, for there is that much work ahead for them.

"We are speeding up as the industry never before has been sped up," declared M. C. Levee, president of the United studios, in a recent interview. "Organize—systematize—supervise! Those are our watchwords and they enable us to do three times the amount of work done at most studios.

"Like other studios, we have in the past put the construction of sets into the hands of a foreman—one man who had entire charge of the work and had to be there to supervise it. Now we lay it out in the office, give six sets of blue prints to six different departments and tell them: 'This work must be done by 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. If you can't do it, let us know in time and tell us why and we will have it done by outside contract.'"

Thirty-two sets for First National pictures will be completed on the United lot in the next few days. There are 102 sets to be made for one production on the lot, the Norma Talmadge production, "Ashes of Vengeance."

Other First National productions under way on the United lot include Maurice Tourneur's "The Brass Bottle," Richard Walton Tully's "Trilby," Frank Borzage's "Children of Dust," Constance Talmadge's "Dulcy," Sol Lesser's "The Meanest Man in Town," and Edwin Carewes "Girl of the Golden West."

Warner Feature Is Commended

"Little Church Around Corner" Wins Approval of New York Reviewers

THE showing of the Warner Brothers' "Little Church Around the Corner," at the Strand theatre, New York, during the week of March 25, brought forth an unusual number of favorable opinions from the critics of the Metropolitan dailies.

Directed by William A. Seiter, it is based upon the stage play by Charles Blaney and the book by Marion Russell. An original story was written by Olga Printzlau. The cast headed by Claire Windsor includes Kenneth Harlan, Pauline Starke, Hobart Bosworth, Walter Long, Margaret Seddon, Alec Francis, Cyril Chadwick and many others.

Evening Telegram said: "The Little Church Around the Corner" is filled with thrilling moments and a pretty romance, in which the minister falls in love with the daughter of the owner of a coal mine."

The Tribune said: "The Little Church Around the Corner" is a good picture, well above the average; one well worth seeing."

Evening Post said: "It is full of sentiment and situations generally effective for the masses. The most striking scene—and it is well done—is the invasion of the home of the president of the mining company, which is full of guests, by the angry miners tracking mud all over the ballroom and demanding in true melodramatic fashion that they shall not be made to work in the unsafe east shaft."

Globe said: "The Little Church Around the Corner" is well above the average in entertainment value; has been made in a decidedly new-fashioned way."

New Western Thriller Down to Editing

William Duncan's new western thriller has arrived in the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn for final editing. In it will appear Duncan and Edith Johnson and a cast including Frank Beal, Francis Powers, Dick La Reno, Edmund Cobb and Bob Reis.

Frank Beal directed the first photoplay that Duncan ever wrote or appeared in. It was called "The Brotherhood of Man," and these two have been personal friends ever since.

Mary Astor, who has signed five-year contract to appear in Famous Players-Lasky productions

Leah Baird in Personal Appearance Tour

Leah Baird will make several personal appearances in Texas towns next week, under the auspices of various women's clubs. By special invitation of the Women's Federation of San Antonio she will attend the opening at the New Palace theatre, Sunday evening, of the run of her new 1923 Special, "Is Divorce a Failure?" and later in the week she will visit Dallas and a number of other Texas cities for similar appearances.

According to Associated Exhibitors, arrangements are being made for personal appearances also in New Orleans and in Atlanta, as Miss Baird continues her trip eastward to New York. From the Leah Baird Club of Chicago this popular player has received an invitation to be its guest at an early date and make an address on the subject "How to Get on in the Movies."

Johnny Hines Writes Song for "Luck"

Johnny Hines is nothing if not versatile. Now he has written the words for a song. Leon De Costa, well known composer and symphony orchestra leader, has composed the music. It is called "Luck" and is to be published by T. D. Harms within the next week or ten days.

DANIEL CARSON GOODMAN, Presents

"HAS THE WORLD GONE MAD!"

NO more powerful answer to the country wide demand for FIRST RUN SUPER SPECIALS than Daniel Carson Goodman's greatest production to date "HAS THE WORLD GONE MAD."

No independent production in years has ever presented such a cast as in this picture—Charles Richman—Robert Edeson—Mary Alden—Hedda Hopper—Elinor Fair—Vincent Coleman—Lyda Lalo and others. Match that cast if you can.

It's the talk of the Independent Trade

No production possesses such a huge box office appeal as does this striking and unusual drama of jazzed up existence,—gilded women—soulless men—wild flappers—youth running amuck—wondrously told in a production richly invested, superbly produced and backed by Equity's well known brand of unusual exploitation and advertising.

After all the best answer is the picture itself. SEE IT at your nearest Independent exchange. If your Independent exchange hasn't secured it as yet,—

"To Shoot Dan McGrew" in Alaska

ARTHUR H. SAWYER, supervising director of S L specials produced for Metro, has announced that an entire company of players will be taken to Alaska for the purpose of filming certain scenes in the forthcoming Sawyer-Lubin special, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," an adaptation of the famous poem by Robert W. Serviss, many of the scenes are laid in the Yukon and for the purposes of realism and picturesque atmosphere, Sawyer is now making arrangements whereby the picture will be filmed on the exact locales, insofar as is possible.

In order to facilitate the shooting of these scenes, it is stated that the poet, Serviss, who is thoroughly familiar with Alaska, will accompany the S L outfit and lend his assistance and advice in the choice of Alaskan miners, dance hall girls, etc.

Of the all star cast which) will interpret the various leading roles, Lon Chaney, Barbara La Marr and Jvillard Mack have already been selected as the nucleus.

"Nanook" Is Praised by Woman Leader

Mrs. Woodallen Chapman, for several years Chairman of the Motion Picture Committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs, is quoted by Pathe as among the most recent writers of letters in praise of "Nanook of the North." Mrs. Chapman writes as follows:

"I cannot begin to tell you how much I and my friends enjoyed 'Nanook of the North' the other afternoon.

"There were scenes in that picture which I am sure will never leave my memory. I certainly would like to congratulate the interpid photographer on his intrepid daring, his artistic sense and his marvelous skill under such trying circumstances."

Pola Negri Publicity Campaign

Polish Star Widely Heralded Preceding First Production Distribution

THE release of Pola Negri's first American-made picture, George Fitzmaurice's Paramount production of Robert Hichens' novel, "Bella Donna," follows one of the most extensive publicity campaigns given any star or picture in the history of motion pictures, according to Famous Players.

Since the arrival of Miss Negri in America last September, thousands of columns of publicity have been printed in newspapers and magazines on the exotic Paramount star.

Her engagement to Charles Chaplin kept Miss Negri's name on the front page of the country's newspapers for days last month, and the reported action of Tade Styka, the Polish painter, in withdrawing his portrait of the film star from the Knoedler art gallery, furnished the newspapers with another sensation which was made the most of by the numerous newspaper syndicates.

It is estimated that Miss Negri's newspaper publicity alone since her arrival in this country has amounted to more than 10,000 columns.

The publicity campaign on Miss Negri, however, is not stopping with the release of "Bella Donna." Last week Paramount's double-page smash in the Saturday Evening Post told ten million readers of the Post that Miss Negri's first American-made picture was about to be released.

Through arrangements made by the Paramount publicity department, under the direction of Mr. McCarthy, Al Burt Company have published a photoplay edition of Robert Hichens' novel, "Bella Donna," and the publishing company is pushing the display of the book in every city where the picture is to be shown.

In connection with the opening of the picture at the Rivoli theatre, New York, April 15, the Paramount publicity department has arranged with the Burt company for a display of the book and stills from the picture in thirty Liggett drug stores in Manhattan. The Burt company and Paramount also have arranged for wholesale window displays of the book in Philadelphia, Chicago and other large cities that boast of several chain stores.

Music stores all over the country are said to be ready to display the song, "Bella Donna," written by Harry B. Smith, Arthur M. Brilant and Ted Synder.

Beginning early in May the New York World will start the publication of a series of full-page stories, signed by Miss Negri and amply illustrated with her photographs, under the general heading, "My Secrets of Health and Beauty." This series will run weekly for a year and has been syndicated to about fifty of the leading newspapers of the country.

"Silas Marner" Frolic Feature

Is Approved as Part of Junior Commerce Chamber Fete in Indianapolis

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS' "Silas Marner" was the feature attraction last week at the Palace theatre, Indianapolis, where it was run in connection with the Circus Frolic of the Indianapolis Junior Chamber of Commerce. The picture program was made up entirely of Associated and Pathe offerings.

On Monday there was a huge parade through the business streets, Gov. Warren T. McCray heading a delegation of state and city officials. The opening at the Palace that evening was a gala occasion, at which, the Indianapolis Star says, "Governor and Mrs. McCray, Senator Samuel M. Ralston, and Mayor and Mrs. Lew Shank were greeted with an ovation when they entered boxes reserved for them."

When I. Libson of Cincinnati, who owns the Indianapolis Palace, contracted for "Silas Marner," the suggestion was made that he run the feature during last week, when the spring vacation was on, that it might cater to the young folks of the city. The idea was adopted with enthusiasm.

A special showing of "Silas Marner" was given March 17, when 600 leading residents attended on invitation of Mrs. Fred L. Pettijohn, president of the Indianapolis Indorsers of Photoplays. Every person present received an announcement of the selection of "Silas Marner" as the photoplay selection of the Circus Frolic, and was asked to express his opinion of the picture on an enclosed blank. The comments were unanimously complimentary, it is said.

The publicity campaign preceding the run was the biggest ever put on for any picture in Indianapolis. Following the special showing, 4,600 Boy Scouts called at the homes of the city, leaving at each a card, which they asked the "lady of the house" to sign, and on which she agreed to visit the Palace during "Silas Marner" and Circus Frolic week.

Celebrated Buys Rights to C. B. C. Features

Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Chicago and Milwaukee this week completed negotiations with C.B.C. Film Sales Corporation for territorial rights to the first Edward Belasco production, "Her Accidental Husband," featuring Miriam Cooper, Forrest Stanley, Mitchell Lewis, Richard Tucker, Maude Wayne and Kate Lester.

According to the contract, Celebrated will handle the feature in Northern Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin territory.

Warner Float Arrives in Los Angeles

WARNER BROTHERS' huge float advertising the Warner's seven classics of the screen, has arrived in Los Angeles.

Word to this effect was received last week by Harry M. Warner from the coast studios. The float has been on the road for about six months, and throughout its entire journey, it is said to have aided scores of exhibitors showing the Warner classics.

The float carried the exact reproduction of the seven books filmed this season by the Warner's. It is thirteen feet high and seventeen feet long, the books being mounted on a truck. It also carried a silvery toned calliope, and in the course of the tour a radio set was installed.

The seven classics advertised by the float include "Rags to Riches," "Heroes of the Street," "A Dangerous Adventure," "Brass," "The Beautiful and Damned," "Little Church Around the Corner" and "Main Street."

Pastor Lauds "Man Who Played God"

The Rev. Frederic H. von der Sump, of the Trinitarian Congregational Church, New Bedford, Mass., says that for beauty and as representation of the best in motion picture production the George Arliss feature, "The Man Who Played God," a United Artists release, easily ranks as one of the three best films he has used in his church service work in the last four years.

"From the point of view of entertainment it is superb," says Mr. von der Sump, "clean throughout, with magnificent acting, perfect photography and sustaining interest. From my point of view, it carries also a magnificent sermon on the beauty and satisfaction of helping others. My church was crowded and the expression of approval and satisfaction was overwhelming."

Long N. Y. Run on "Down to Sea in Ships"

Owing to the success of the Hodkinson special, "Down to the Sea in Ships," which has just completed six successful weeks at the Cameo theatre, New York, it has been held over for an additional four weeks.

Instead of dropping off as might have been expected after a run of this duration, the receipts, on the contrary, have maintained a steady high average week after week. It is reported that at ten o'clock in the morning when the box-office opens it is not uncommon to find twenty-five or thirty people in line.

Beyond the four additional weeks which it is scheduled to run, the Hodkinson Corporation has taken an option of four more weeks, and there seems to be little doubt of the picture running for at least two months longer.

New Editions Issued on Fox Specials

GROSSET and Dunlap, publishers of "best sellers," are bringing out new editions of "Truxton King," by George Barr McCutcheon, and "The Custard Cup," by Florence Bingham Livingston, illustrated by scenes from the famous screen productions of those books by Fox Film Corporation.

The Fox star of "Truxton King" is John Gilbert, while Mary Carr is featured in "The Custard Cup."

The new additions of these stories will provide a wider scope for exploitation and publicity tie-ups where these productions are presented. Much of the Fox paper has been so arranged as to make these stunts easily linked with the various publicity angles already prepared.

"Tie That Binds" Wins Critics' Praise

Following the premiere presentation of "The Tie That Binds," at the Dyckman theatre, New York, recently, the trade paper critics favorably reported on it. The territorial rights to the feature, described as a modern domestic drama, are controlled by Jacob Wilk, New York.

Motion Picture News said: "A regular Charles K. Harris sob story, characteristic of the songs that made him famous. It should make a suitable attraction for audiences that are not too discriminate in their taste."

Exhibitors' Trade Review said: "Here is a story that will have undoubted appeal for women."

Exhibitors' Herald said: "It reverses the problem of the neglected wife, the interest being centered on an ambitious husband."

"The Tie That Binds" was written by Charles K. Harris, the well known song writer, and adapted by Pearl Keating. It was produced by Ben Goetz, and directed by Joseph Levering. In the cast are Walter Miller, Barbara Bedford, Raymond Hatton, William P. Carlton, Robert Edeson, Julia Swayne Gordon, Marian Swayne, Effie Shannon and Baby Mary Louise.

"Temptation" Passes Penn. Censors

"Temptation," the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation feature starring Bryant Washburn, Eva Novak, and an all-star cast, passed the Pennsylvania Censorship Board without a single cut, it is announced this week.

The Pennsylvania state board is known as one of the strictest in the entire field, very frequently taking exception to scenes that pass in other states without a question.

"We are greatly pleased at this finding," said Joe Bradt, head of C. B. C. "When we first announced production plans on 'Temptation,' several people said, 'Look out, it sounds like a hard subject to put over right.'"

Millions Read "Fighting Blood"

Popularity of Witwer Stories Increases Through Syndicate to Papers

"FIGHTING BLOOD" will be more widely read by the American public than any other stories ever transferred to the screen in short subject form, is the claim of F. B. O. Published originally in Collier's Weekly, these stories by H. C. Witwer are now being syndicated to newspapers. Among the representative daily papers which will publish the twelve stories serially over a period of many weeks are the New York World, San Francisco Bulletin, Boston Post, Philadelphia Record and the Portland Oregonian. F. B. O. is advised by G. P. Putnam's Sons, which has issued "Fighting Blood" in book form and is now disposing of the newspaper serial rights, that newspapers in every large city in the country will publish these stories.

The number of people who have already read "Fighting Blood" in Collier's Weekly is conservatively placed at two and one-half million and the A. B. C. audit of the above mentioned daily papers alone totals one million one hundred thousand, says F. B. O.

In screen form, "Fighting Blood," which has been made into twelve two-reel subjects under the direction of Mal St. Clair, follows in every detail the original stories. Many of the titles were transcribed to the screen directly from the published stories, and Mr. Witwer, whose home is in Los Angeles, co-operated with St. Clair in the production of the pictures. Realizing that millions of movie fans would read these stories, St. Clair took particular care that there would be no deviation from the published stories to react to the disappointment of the theatregoer.

Since the release of the first round several weeks ago, the picture has been booked by many of the largest first-run houses and exhibitors' comments have supported the reviews already given the pictures by trade paper reviewers. The leading role is played by George O'Hara, and Clara Horton is seen as the female lead. The screen adaptation was made by Beatrice Van, F. B. O. scenarist, who has preserved Witwer's humor and heart interest, and accentuated the many highlights of fast action.

Charles Ray's Latest Is Praised

"The Girl I Loved" Wins Approval of Critics at World Premier Showing

QUICK and unstinted praise followed the world premier showing of Charles Ray's latest photoplay feature, "The Girl I Loved," a United Artists Corporation release, at the Mission theatre, Los Angeles.

"Place this latest Charles Ray production, a reverent conception of James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem, in the list of the best photo dramas of the year," said the review of the Los Angeles Evening Express. "It is a thing of beauty, epitomizing the joy of young love and the tragedy of a soul bereft, the homely charm of simplicity, its vibrant idealism and inner beauty."

"Dramatically, photographically and histrionically, 'The Girl I Loved' is a triumph for Charles Ray," said the critic for the Examiner. "Throughout this new picture he excels alike as actor and producer. He has given the James Whitcomb Riley poem a setting which will make it live as an epic of unspoken love.

"The picture is alive with gusty scenes, yet wholesome comedy is also in evidence. Drama reigns and tragedy casts its grim shadow now and again across the screen, but this tale of young love is one pregnant with sincerity and honesty, without a moment of the sordid or vicious throughout its course."

"Charles Ray may have done better things on the screen, but I doubt whether any of his portrayals will cling longer to the memory," said the reviewer for the Evening Herald. "There is something decidedly different and refreshingly lasting in his latest contribution to cinema history."

"'The Girl I Loved' is the graduating ceremony for Charles Ray," said the critic for the Record. "The naive, gawking, funny youth has made way for the man who must be lashed by the passions of life.

"Charles Ray has effected a work of art which may have its place in the history of pictures. There are bits of acting which make one gasp for their truth, realized by a bold quashing of conventions."

Barry Ends Personal Appearance Tour

Wesley Barry recently completed his twelve weeks' personal appearance tour in connection with Warner Brothers "Heroes of the Street," a Harry Rapf production directed by William Beaudine, it is announced.

During his stay in the East, Barry appeared at the Strand theatre, New York. He then visited Boston, Reading and Harrisburg, Pa., Dallas and Fort Worth, Texas, and went across the country to the Northwest, where the major portion of his appearances were made.

"Freckles" will be featured by Warners in a number of features for the coming season, the first of which is "The Printer's Devil," an original story written by Julien Josephson.

"Westbound Limited" April F.B.O. Release

THE third Emory Johnson production, the successor to "In the Name of the Law" and "The Third Alarm," two F. B. O. specials, will be distributed through the Film Booking Offices of America this month. It has been given the release title of "Westbound Limited."

The story, from the pen of Emelie Johnson, revolves around the character of a veteran locomotive engineer as the central character. This part is played by Ralph Lewis. The leading lady is Ella Hall. Johnnie Harron plays the juvenile lead, and others in the cast are Claire McDowell, Taylor Graves, Wedgewood Nowell, David Kirby, Richard Morris and Jane Morgan. Direction was by Emory Johnson and Ross Risher was behind the camera.

Women's Club Sees New Thos. Ince Picture

Before a distinguished gathering of professional women, "What A Wife Learned," a Thomas H. Ince production which is being distributed by First National, was privately screened on Monday evening, April 2, with a special musical accompaniment, at Wurlitzer Hall, New York, and was given especially for the Woman Pays Club, an organization of women writers, of which Rita Weyman is president. Among those present, besides members of the Woman Pays Club and their friends, were the motion picture committee of the National Federation of Women's Clubs.

Among those who attended the showing were Anne Ardmore Clark, poet and composer; Marion Armstrong, composer; Luella M. Parsons, motion picture critic; Mary Alden; Emilie Frances Bauer, author and composer; Marian Bauer, composer; Dorothy Donnelly, Lillian Gale, Gretchen Dick, Amy Ashford Clarke, composer; Dr. Lulu Peters, inventor of the callory system; Muriel Pollock, composer; Helen Hancock; Lou Olp, pianiste, and Zelda Sears.

First National Stars in Candy Boxes

FIRST NATIONAL has just closed a contract with the manufacturers of Ghirardelli's Milk Chocolates whereby five million cards carrying the portraits of First National stars will be inserted in packages of candy marketed during the next twelve months.

The Ghirardelli company is issuing a set of thirty-six portraits of motion picture players, eleven of these being First National stars. They are: Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Guy Bates Post, Dorothy Phillips, Buster Keaton, Douglas MacLean, Ruth Clifford, Madge Bellamy, Colleen Moore, Milton Sills, Anna Q. Nilsson.

Censorship in Boston Is Defended

S. Jay Kaufman's "Round The Town" column in the New York Globe published in its issue of April 2 a letter from F. B. Warren, vice-president of American Releasing, on the subject of Boston censorship which should accomplish much in acquainting newspaper readers with the real status of motion picture censorship in that city. The letter in part is as follows:

"I note your comment on Mr. Arliss' article in The Atlantic Monthly and your concluding sentence that the magazine is published 'in the city of censors.' I wonder whether you paused in writing that sentence to remember that the Boston 'censorship,' in so far as it applies to the stage and screen, is the type of censorship to which there should be little, if any legitimate objection from any source. There is no statutory censorship in the city of Boston.

"The only pronounced departure from a normal police function practised by this body is to pass upon and approve those motion pictures designed for presentation to the public at Sunday performances. This censorship of 'Sunday shows' doubtless has kept many persons friendly to the motion picture who might have been unfriendly."

Goldwyn Producing Big Novels

Fifteen Productions Completed or Contemplated Among Leading Stories

IN its search for motion picture plots and ideas that are out of the ordinary and suitable for superfeatures, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has been delving into the world's output of fiction, novels, plays and original scenarios, but principally novels.

Fifteen of its productions now ready, in the making or purchased for early production, are from novels. In addition to its own product, Goldwyn will distribute many other pictures based upon novels from the product of Cosmopolitan Pictures and Distinctive Pictures Corporation.

Four Goldwyn pictures based upon novels which are now completed are: "The Strangers' Banquet," by Donn Byrne, produced by Marshall Neilan with a cast of twenty-three stars, including Claire Windsor, Hobart Bosworth, Eleanor Boardman, Rockliffe Fellowes, Nigel Barrie and others.

"The Christian," by Sir Hall Caine, directed by Maurice Tourneur in London, on the Isle of Man and at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, with a cast including Richard Dix, Mae Busch, Phyllis Haver, Gareth Hughes, Mahlon Hamilton, Cyril Chadwick, Beryl Mercer and others.

"Vanity Fair," by William Makepeace Thackeray, produced by Hugo Ballin, starring Mabel Ballin, with a supporting cast including among others, Eleanor Boardman, George Walsh, Hobart Bosworth, Earl Foxe, Harrison Ford, Willard Louis and Robert Mack.

"Souls for Sale," by Rupert Hughes, directed by the author himself with a cast among which are numbered Eleanor Boardman, Richard Dix, Mae Busch, Frank Mayo, Barbara LaMarr and Lew Cody. This is a story of life among the motion picture players in Hollywood.

Two famous novels are now in production:

The late Frank Norris' realistic story of California, "McTeague," to be known as "Greed," is being directed, in San Francisco, by Erich von Stroheim as his first production for Goldwyn. In the cast are Gibson Gowland, ZaSu Pitts, Jean Hersholt, Cesare Gravina, Dale Fuller, Frank Hayes, Sylvia Ashton and others.

Lambert Hillyer is directing a new film version of Rex Beach's Alaskan novel, "The Spoilers," a Jesse D. Hampton production which Goldwyn will distribute. In the cast are Milton Sills, Anna Q. Nilsson, Barbara Bedford, Wallace MacDonald, John Elliot, Robert Edeson, Noah Beery, Mitchell Lewis, Ford Sterling, Robert McKim, Louise Fazenda, Kate Price, Gordon Russell, Rockliffe Fellowes, Alec Francis and Sam de Grasse.

Metro Scores in Board Review

All Five of February Features Are Included in Selected Photoplays

THE National Board of Review, which publishes each month a list of selected photoplays as a guide to movie-goers seeking the best in film entertainment, selected every one of the five Metro features viewed during February as worthy of a coveted place on the list. And the Board remarks: "This is quite a collection of features by any one company to appear on one of our photoplay guides."

The photoplays to attain this marked distinction were "The Famous Mrs. Fair," "Jazzmania," "Success," "The Woman of Bronze," and "Your Friend and Mine."

"Success" is a Ralph Ince production, presented by Murray W. Garsson. Brandon Tynan, who created the leading role on the stage, plays the same part in the photoplay. The cast also includes Mary Astor and Naomi Childers.

"The Woman of Bronze" was adapted by Hope Loring and Louis Lighton from the novel by Henry Kistaemaecher, translated by Paul Kester. It is a Harry Garson production, directed by King Vidor and photographed by William O'Connell.

"Your Friend and Mine" is a Metro-SL (Sawyer-Lubin) Special, adapted from Willard Mack's play by Winifred Dunn. The cast includes Willard Mack, Enid Bennett, Rosemary Theby, J. Herbert Frank and Aileen Ray.

"The Famous Mrs. Fair," an adaptation of the great American play by James Forbes, is a Fred Niblo production, the first of a series by this noted director under Metro-Lewis B. Mayer auspices.

"Jazzmania," starring Mae Murray, is presented and directed by Robert Z. Leonard, and released through Metro. The photoplay is produced by Tiffany productions, of which Robert Z. Leonard is director general and M. H. Hoffman, general manager.

Chicago Critic Strong For Ray's Latest

"Charles Ray is going to give you the surprise of your life when you see him in 'The Girl I Loved,'" said Mae Tinee in the Chicago Tribune when this United Artists release was shown at Barbee's theatre, Chicago. "Mr. Ray, who literally 'stumbled' into fame, bursts forth in an emotional role that reveals most unexpected genius. He holds you spell-bound by the pathos, fire and power of his acting. Probably ever since he has been on the screen he has been wanting to do just the sort of thing he does in this latest picture.

"You'll have forgive me for not going into details. I DO so want you to see this new Charles Ray and be brought up startled and charmed as I was."

Ministers Congratulate Ray on Production

CHARLES RAY, who is hard at work on the production of "The Courtship of Myles Standish," has received the congratulations of the Congregational Ministers Union of Los Angeles, with a statement conveying the best wishes of the clergymen for the complete success of the big venture.

This formal action, which was taken at a regular meeting of the Union, has caused somewhat of a sensation in Hollywood, where, it is declared, no such endorsement of a motion picture undertaking not of a strictly religious nature was ever before given by a ministerial body of any denomination.

Ray Vehicle Named As Month's Best

To Charles Ray's "The Girl I Loved," a United Artists Corporation release, is awarded the rank of "The Picture of the Month" in the April issue of Screenland, which says: "This is dedicated to the fastidious minority which appreciates delicate characterization rather than broad farce; emotional restraint rather than dramatic abandon.

"A story of a great love. In this poignant picture of a tortured heart, Charles Ray reaches dramatic heights which he has never before attained," the review states. "All the pathos of the James Whitcomb Riley poem has been transferred to the silver screen, intensified by the superb artistry of Mr. Ray and a splendid supporting cast.

"'The Girl I Loved' comes as a joyous surprise to those friends of Charles Ray who had lamented the lack of distinction in his later pictures."

"For You, My Boy" Is Ready for Market

The healthy conditions of the state right market and the strong demand for good pictures was keenly evidenced last week immediately following the first trade paper announcement of the William L. Roubert production, "For You, My Boy," which is being released to independent buyers by Rubicon Pictures.

The trade papers carrying the first advertisement had hardly been on the street before the telephone started to ring and inquiries come in from independent exchange managers in New York asking when the picture could be screened.

The keen demand on the part of buyers speeded up all work in getting the production ready for the market. By working every night until the small hours of the morning William L. Roubert, the director and producer, was enabled to finish the editing and cutting and the picture is now ready to be shown.

Author of "Brass" Lauds Warner Production

Ever since producers began filming the stories of prominent authors there has been a general complaint that the completed print was not the author's story in any way, shape or manner. Charles G. Norris, author of the Warner Brothers "Brass," a Harry Rapf production directed by Sidney Franklin, took occasion recently to view his "brainchild" during its engagement at the Strand theatre, New York.

Mr. Norris considers himself a harsh critic, as evidenced by the following letter, but he realizes the difficulty of adapting a novel to the screen and characterizes "Brass" as driving home "The spirit, the lesson, the purpose of the book."

Here is Mr. Norris's letter in part addressed to Mr. Rapf:

"I reached New York on Tuesday and the first thing I did was to go and see 'Brass.' I went with some trepidation. I had no idea how I should like my 'child' in other clothes, but I confess, I was pleasantly surprised. The spirit of the book, its reason, is there, and what more has an author a right to ask?"

Toledo Critics Like Hines' "Luck"

Following the first public presentation of "Luck," Johnny Hines' latest melocomedy, sponsored by C. C. Burr, at the Princess theatre, Toledo, Ohio, the critics of the dailies in that city were most enthusiastic in their praise of Johnny's production.

In the Toledo Times the motion picture critic wrote: "Johnny Hines has certainly rung the bell and rung it hard in 'Luck,' his latest screen effort. 'Luck' is like hash. But like a lot of hash we've tasted it goes down easily and is mighty agreeable to take. The fun starts early and lasts late."

"H. E. B.," writing for the Toledo Daily Blade, says: "So long as Johnny Hines, the Prince of Paprika, is the boy who puts the punch in 'Luck,' the funfilm of the Princess, it doesn't make much difference what it's all about, as the simple fact that this irrepressible comedian is in the picture and that it has been built to amuse and create laughter is enough to know. And 'Luck' does all of that. It's a corking story with a smashing finish and Johnny rollicks through it like a feather on the bounding ocean of joy."

Illinois Second National To Handle "Luck"

Second National Pictures of Illinois, Inc., of Chicago, have closed contracts for territorial rights on "Luck," Johnny Hines' latest melocomedy, sponsored by C. C. Burr. The territory covered by the contract includes Northern Illinois.

Burr Nickle Closes New England Deal

Burr Nickle Productions have arranged with the Eastern Feature Film Corporation of Boston to handle their output of productions for the New England States.

"You Are Guilty" Wins Praise

Trade Paper Reviewers Give Stamp of Approval to Burr Production

THE critics have placed their stamp of approval on the latest of the C. C. Burr productions, "You Are Guilty," in every case according this Edgar Lewis feature their praise. It is also a notable fact that in practically all of the reviews Mr. Burr's little five-year-old star, Russell Griffin, was singled out and credited with fine work along with James Kirkwood, Doris Kenyon and other members of the cast.

Roger Ferri in Moving Picture World had this to say: "James Kirkwood scores triumphantly in this Edgar Lewis production of Roy Middleton's story. The story is melodramatic throughout. It is cleverly told—particularly true is this of events leading up to the trial of the hero."

Larry Moen of Motion Picture News wrote as follows: "Excellence of cast and some splendid direction on the part of Edgar Lewis are the outstanding features of 'You Are Guilty.' The honors of the picture are in a large measure stolen by little Russell Griffin who reveals here a winning personality and a great histrionic gift. It would be unfair, however, to overlook James Kirkwood's sincere portrayal of the down-and-outer. Mary Carr, too, is in the cast, as a lovable mother and contributes a sympathetic note to the story."

"Jed," in the Billboard says: "If you can do business with such stage and screen stars as James Kirkwood, Doris Kenyon, Robert Edeson, Mary Carr, Edmund Breese, William Riley Hatch and the child star, Russell Griffin, You Are Guilty is worth booking."

Film Daily has this to say about the production: "The picture-going public will probably be well satisfied with this latest Mastodon release, You Are Guilty."

Dorothy Day, film critic of the Morning Telegraph, wrote as follows: "Mr. Kirkwood bears much of the burden of the picture and does it skillfully. He is ably aided by Doris Kenyon who not only gives an adequate performance but who presents a series of fashionable gowns and cloaks, sure to delight the feminine eye."

John Spargo of Exhibitors' Herald is responsible for the following: "An excellently directed picture, made from an interesting story and with a cast composed of names which in themselves are good drawing cards."

George Blaisdell of Exhibitors' Trade Review wrote: "Edgar Lewis has achieved something different in this story by Roy Middleton. He has given us a story of self-sacrifice on the one hand and extreme selfishness on the other and has told it with steady, gradually cumulating force."

Bushman, Bayne Luncheon Guests

Rhode Island Theatre Owners Are Hosts to Stars as Prelude to Premiere

AS a prelude to the premiere of "Modern Marriage" and the personal appearance of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in conjunction with the picture at the Victory theatre, Providence, R. I., a luncheon was tendered the stars at the Providence-Biltmore Hotel by the theatre owners of Rhode Island, April 2.

After an absence of over three years, Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne have returned to the screen and judging from the expressions of enthusiasm from the Rhode Island exhibitors their homecoming is a real and welcome event.

Mr. Fay of Fay's theatre, Providence, although playing in opposition to the Bushman-Bayne engagement, said in an address that he believed the new picture, enhanced by the appearance of the stars in person, to be "the biggest attraction on the bills today," and the applause that greeted this statement indicated that all the others agreed wtih him.

The stars were formally introduced by Hon. Joe Gainer, mayor of Providence, who referred to them as "the Sothern and Marlowe" of the screen, and then explained how the stars had devised a unique offering by appearing on the stage and playing a part of the fifth reel in person.

Among those present were: Hon. Joe Gainer, Fire Chief Charlesworth, Edward McGinnis of the Gordon theatres, Boston; Mr. and Mrs. Marsden of the Imperial theatre, Pawtucket; Sen. W. G. Hartford; Fred Lovett, Royal theatre, Olneyville; Joseph Donahue, Park theatre, Woonsocket; Charles Stedman, Palace theatre, Attleboro, Mass.; Edward Rhind, Bates theatre, North Attleboro; W. F. Eddy, Star theatre, Bristol; Harry W. Crull, Albee theatre, Providence; Chief of Police Wm. O'Neill; Fred Gage, American Releasing Corp.; and John Merkyl and Zita Moulton, members of the company supporting Bushman and Bayne.

"Down to Sea in Ships" Music Approved

Many favorable comments have been received regarding the attractive musical setting arranged by Edward Kilyeni for "Down to the Sea in Ships," now playing to capacity audiences at the Cameo theatre, New York.

The theatre has been in receipt of numerous letters commending them upon the attractive musical score

A number of popular American folk songs have been used such as "The Sweetest Story Ever Told," "Home Again," "Midshipmate," "The Lass that Loves a Sailor" and "Sunday Morning." During the exciting whale chase "McDowell's 'Sea Song'" was used.

Girl Scout Head Lauds "Covered Wagon"

Strong praise of James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," is embodied in the following letter which Will H. Hays, recently received from Mrs. Jane Deeter Rippin, national director of the Girl Scouts, and which Mr. Hays has turned over to the Paramount office:

"It seems to me that the moving picture industry has accomplished a great achievement in putting before the American public 'The Covered Wagon.'

"The picture is extremely valuable as an historical record. And in this day when many of us are wondering about the superficialties of life, I believe that an hour or two viewing the courage and fortitude with which our American ancestors faced the future, will give us a new inspiration and a deeper understanding of the basic values of life.

"I wish every child might have an opportunity to view this picture so that they could visualize the true spirit of the pioneer and realize that even today there are many opportunities for the same spirit to work for the betterment of these United States."

First National Closes Foreign Contracts

Two important foreign deals were closed by First National during the week; one with the Kosmos Societe Anonyme of Budapest, Hungary, the other with the Nederlandsche Bioscoop Trust, The Hague, Holland. The distribution

The contract with Kosmos Societe Anonyme of Budapest is for the territory of Austria, Hungary, Jugo-Slavia, Roumania and Bulgaria and includes the following pictures: "Nomads of the North," "The Sky Pilot," "The Golden Snare," "The Cave Girl," "The Branded Woman," "Penrod," "Married Life," "Star Dust," "Serenade," "Midnight Bell," "Peaceful Valley,"

The deal with the Nederlandsche Bioscoop Trust is for Holland and covers the following pictures: "Twilight Baby," "Wet and Warmer," "Kick In High Life," "Punch of the Irish" and "A Game Lady."

Equity Is Pleased with Special

Daniel Carson Goodman Production Is Given Approval After Conference

FROM all reports, Daniel Carson Goodman is scheduled to reach new heights when the next big "Special" Production is completed and viewed by public and press. The present title is "An Only Son," and although this title suits the story to perfection, still before the picture is ready for release, Daniel Carson Goodman may decide to substitute another.

This was one of the points decided upon at a special meeting of the officials of Equity Pictures Corporation and Goodman during the past week. This meeting was called by Dr. Goodman so that the directors of the corporation might discuss his next public offering from the standpoint of sales and exploitation, and also that a few changes as contemplated by Dr. Goodman for this express purpose might be deliberated upon. However, it was the unanimous opinion of all those present that Dr. Goodman's work could not be improved upon and the production will remain in its original form.

This is a wise policy that Dr. Goodman has adhered to, because, as he said, "Many authors neglect the sales end and exploitation end in their writing, and I have always made it a point to take these matters into consideration. I write my story from a humane and literary standpoint and have always found it to work to my advantage by asking suggestions from the officials who have the selling of my picture as their part of our business."

Equity Pictures Corporation is pleased over the prospects of Daniel Carson Goodman's next picture.

"Tiberius Tinker" in Two-Reelers

Peter B. Kyne's "Tiberius Tinker" short stories are the subjects of a series of twelve two-reel comedy-dramas now being produced by the Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation in San Francisco.

The character of "Tiberius Tinker" portrayed by Orral Humphrey is that of a shyster lawyer who plys his trade in the police courts of San Francisco.

Universal Gets Big Game Picture

Snow's African Hunting Production Goes to Laemmle for World Rights

UNIVERSAL has obtained the world's rights to the big thrill picture, H. A. Snow's "Hunting Big Game in Africa With Gun and Camera." The unusual production will be released as a Universal picture, word comes from Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation.

Despite the fact this picture is particularly suited to road-showing, and that Universal profits from the picture would mount much higher were it handled in that way, Laemmle announces that the production will be released unconditionally to Universal's exhibitor patrons immediately.

The Universal chief, who is now on his way East from the Coast, especially to superintend the launching of the big hunt picture, has broadcasted a call to all parts of the country for booking propositions on first runs for it.

Although this call has been out only a few days, the office of Art Schmidt, general sales manager for Universal, is swamped with queries.

The picture has just completed a run of eleven weeks in the Lyric theatre, New York City, at $1.65 top. This is a record breaker for 1923. Despite predictions to the contrary, it was royally received by press and public and pointed out as one of the most unusual and worth-while film productions of all times.

Its next screening will be in the Forrest theatre, Philadelphia, where it will open within a week or so for an indefinite run.

Marc Lachmann, Universal home office exploiteer, has taken up headquarters in Philadelphia for the purpose of publishing the picture so that its fame will reach the patrons of every exhibitor in that territory.

Laemmle's decision to release the African picture through the regular Universal exchange channels followed an extended conference of the Universal Sales Cabinet. The cabinet consists of Art Schmidt, the general sales manager, and the following assistant general sales managers: Cleve Adams in the Middle West, H. M. Herbel in the Allegheny district, Herman Stern in the North Central, Jules Levey, in the Atlantic Division, Ned E. Depinet in the South, Clair Hague in Canada, Edward Armstrong on the Pacific Coast, and Joe Friedman of the home office.

The entire publicity, advertising and exploitation departments of the Universal organization have concentrated on "Hunting Big Game in Africa." Universal promises an unusual supply of paper and other advertising accessories, as well as publicity tie-ups. The Universal laboratory at Fort Lee, N. J. is working 24 hours a day on the prints, and it is expected that the picture will be on its way to every Universal exchange within the next week.

Many Showings On Fox Picture

"Town That Forgot God" in 23 Cleveland Houses on Day, Date Engagements

"THE TOWN THAT FORGOT GOD," the spectacular flood special on the current Fox release program, opened this week in 23 Cleveland theatres for a record day-and-date run, according to announcement today.

Robert Cotton, manager of the Cleveland exchange of Fox Film Corporation, has succeeded in giving the widespread showing an elaborate and effective newspaper and exploitation background. Large display spreads were placed in all the city's daily newspapers, teaser posters stationed as far as ten miles out of town, and unique lobby arrangements and stage prologues effected.

"The Town That Forgot God" received a ninety-one per cent. rating in the list of "Production Values" published by the Motion Picture News in the issue of April 7th. Only one other photoplay was given a higher mark.

Details of Layout and Staging of Unusual Effective Holy Week Program

By Lee S. Ferguson

ALTHOUGH it is very likely that the majority of exhibitors paid special attention to Holy Week, I think it timely to recount the program put on by Hyman the week of March 25, to show to what extent an exhibitor may go to be in keeping with the occasion and yet have a show that contains interest and entertainment. To stage something appropriate is one thing, and a comparatively easy thing at that, but to stage something appropriate and yet "get" your customers, satisfying them and entertaining them, is something else and a test of showmanship.

Made Holy Week Success

Holy Week, just like Christmas week, is looked upon by many exhibitors as an excellent time to slip over most anything on the public, owing to the great lack of patronage. Some houses even close that week, afraid to face the empty seats. The Brooklyn Mark Strand, on the other hand, does not close and does not book in an inferior show. Instead, Hyman exerts himself and, as may be seen by the program, puts on one of the most ambitious and finest weeks of the year.

The bookings of the Brooklyn Mark Strand were arranged so that "The Little Church Around the Corner" fell on March 25. For a special performance each morning at 11 o'clock the Einstein Theory of Relativity was secured. The comedy to go with the feature picture was "Bell Boy 13," Douglas MacLean's newest farce. The Mark Strand Topical Review supplied additional variety in newest news events of the world.

"The Little Church Around the Corner" ic a title well suited to the occasion, and the picture itself is appropriate and well done. With this as a basis Hyman then devised an accompanying prelude called "Holy Week Suite," and which used as a setting an interior corner of a church. As described herewith, this may suggest various uses to other showmen: The Suite opened with "Omnipotence" by the orchestra, with the tab curtain covering the presentation, or small, stage. A Mestrum light pink flood covered the entire stage, and a Kliegl pink flood was on the orchestra. The large transparent windows, one at either side of the stage, were light green. Light amber entrance spots were trained above the windows, on the scrim that covers the ceiling and which gives the soft, hazy effect to lights. The X-rays were magenta and light blue, full. Foots on the small stage were green, and on the large stage blue. Borders were red, as were the cove lights.

THE special section on Theatre Construction and Equipment which was scheduled to run in this issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS has been postponed for one week and will appear in the issue dated April 21st. This section will contain unusually helpful text on the construction of motion picture houses and should be read by everyone who is interested in this field.

Owing to the completeness of this section, the regular Theatre Construction and Equipment Section will be omitted next week. The various articles which are being run in series will be continued the week following. The advertising which will be carried in next week's special architectural number will be representative of the various concerns who are especially active in motion picture theatre construction and will be particularly interesting to prospective theatre builders.

Lighting Schedule

With the finish of 'Omnipotence" (by Schubert) the lighting changed to a Mestrum deep blue over the whole stage, and Kleigl deep blue over the orchestra. Blue foots on the large stage. One entrance spot was light blue and the other green. One transparent window was pink and the other orange. The cove lights were blue. The tab curtain parted, showing the church interior. This was secured by centering a double church window, transparent, in dark blue cyclorama, and then placing a raised platform and altar rail in front of this. Actual candelabra were on either side of the window, and several palms along the altar rail. In one of the huge church windows a figure, apparently stained glass, was visible. To the left three singers, in surplices and with hymn books, were standing. The basso and the tenor sang "The Palms," by Faure, as a duet, and at the finish the basso made his exit. The contralto then sang "Gloria," by Buzzi-Pecci, and at the close she also made her exit. The orchestra then took up "Unfold Ye Portals," by Gounod, playing but briefly, and then going into "Largo," by Handel. This was sung by the tenor, the only remaining one of the singers, and while he sang the figure on the church window came to life, picked out by a white spot light, and moved slowly to the center, and with arms outstretched and upward the number came to a close. Three overhead blue spots were focused on the singers and, as recorded above, the whole was covered by a deep blue flood, giving a most beautiful and artistic effect.

Although this "Little Church Around the Corner"-Holy Week presentation occupied the entire presentation stage, it may be used in modified form by various theatres. A church window, transparent, may be used alone with a picture which is suitable, whether it's Holy Week or the Fourth of July. These windows always lend opportunity for beautiful lighting, and their size may depend upon the amount of space available for use.

Music Program

For contrast on this program, Hyman had a specially arranged and orchestrated symphony of jazz, or popular tunes. There were about seven of these numbers, including "Toot, Toot Tootsie," "Chicago," "Parade of Wooden Soldiers," "Bees Knees," "Lady of the Evening," "Argentine," "Burning Sands" and "Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Sheehan." In addition to this there were two other vocal numbers, one by basso and the other by soprano. The first was "When the King Went Forth to War," by Keeneman, and the other was "The Song of Songs," by Moya. With the organ recessional, "Triumphal March," by Costa, this made eight separate and distinct offerings on the week's program, all specially lighted.

The lights for the Symphonized Jazz included a white Mestrum flood covering the entire stage, with a Kliegl white on the orchestra. There were four 2,000-watt lemon spots on the orchestra, and the transparent windows were white. Spots on the draw curtains were white, and the cove lights were full yellow. The entrance spots were white, covering the sides of the stage over the transparent windows.

For the soprano solo, sung in front of the orchestra, a Mestrum medium violet floor covered the entire stage. The transparent windows were light green. Four 2,000-watt light green overhead spots were on the orchestra. Green foots on the small stage. Magenta X-rays. Blue foots on the large stage; cove lights blue. Entrance spots light blue, hitting the ceiling. Kliegl medium violet flood on the orchestra.

Spring Activities in Proposed Theatre Construction

Partial List Showing Program Now Being Carried out in this Industry

CALIFORNIA

Los Angeles—A brick store and theatre building will soon be erected at the corner of West Adams and Calais Streets for Agnes M. Damtree. Theatre will have a seating capacity of 900 and there will be rental space in the building for six stores. Plans drawn by Architect Leonard L. Jones.

Los Angeles—A theatre, store and office building of class A construction will be erected at the northwest corner of 6th St. and Western Ave. by the Sun Realty Co. The building will be erected at a cost of $250,000.

Los Angeles—Wright & Hogan have completed plans for the building of a picture theatre and store building at Sunset and Hollywood Boulevard. The building will be 70x149 feet, have brick walls, steel beams, ornamental marble and tile work and will cost $70,000.

Hollywood—Plans to take over the Hollywood Woman's Clubhouse and convert it into a beautiful and ideal small theatre were announced by Walter Hast, director.

Oakland—George Roos, San Francisco merchant will begin the erection shortly of a $400,000 motion picture theatre on his property on Grand Ave. between Broadway and Webster Street. The theatre will run through from Grand to 21st Street, and will have stores on each street.

San Francisco—The property on the northwest corner of Geary Street and 15th Avenue has been purchased by Alex E. and Joseph L. Levin and plans have been drawn by Reid Brothers, architects, for the immediate erection of a magnificent $250.000 theatre with a seating capacity of 2,000.

San Pedro—A two-story apartment and theatre building will be erected at the northwest corner of Pacific Ave. and Santa Cruz St. by Goebel Brothers, which will cost $25,000 and seat 500 in the auditorium portion.

Santa Ana—T. M. Henneberry, representative of the West Coast Theatres Co., bought the property on the site of the present Grand Opera House, Fourth and Bush Streets. The lot is 25x100 feet and the structure will be erected at an outlay of $250,000.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Washington—G. L. Preacher. Comm. Bank Bldg., has plans for three story theatre building for J. E. Beaman, Comm. Bank Bldg., to be built on Leon near Brassfield Sts., costing $200,000 and be of brick and terra cotta. Owner taking bids on general contract.

Washington—Moore & Blakeslee, Colorado Bldg., 14th and St. Sts. N. W., has plans for three story theatre, building, 63 x 158, to cost $100,000 and be on 14th and Critenden Sts. N. W. Owner taking bids on separate contracts.

ILLINOIS

Chicago—Denson & Oman, 5 N. La Salle St., have plans for a two-story and basement, 307 x 215 x 244, $750.000 theatre on Lincoln, Robey and Belle Plaine Aves. for Jacob Horwitz, care of Peters & Horwitz, 10 S. La Salle St. Press brick, stone or terra cotta trim.

Chicago—Newhouse Bernham, 4630 Prairie Ave., has plans for a 2,500-seat theatre on 6906 N. Clark St. for L. L. Brunhild, Atty., 127 N. Dearborn St. Brick, fireproof.

Chicago—J. C. O. Pridmore, 38 S. Dearborn St., has plans to remodel "Columbia," 11 N. Clark St., for A. H. Woods, care of L. Houseman, Woods theatre, Randolph and Dearborn Sts.

IOWA

West Union—The West Union Fair Association, H. M. Stafford, secretary, drawing private plans for a 4,000-seat amphitheatre.

GEORGIA

Atlanta—A large natural amphitheatre will be built a few miles from the city at the base of the Stone Mountain, which will have a seating capacity of over 10,000.

IDAHO

Priest Lake—A large motion picture studio at the upper end of Priest Lake is to be built by Miss Nell Shipman, actress, which will compose a complete motion picture colony, with laboratories, indoor stage, office, projection rooms and power plant.

LOUISIANA

New Orleans—J. Morgan LaFrance has plans by George F. King, 211 Carondelet Bldg., for two story frame and stucco theatre, 76 x 106, to be erected at Iverville & Lopez Sts., to cost $30,000.

MASSACHUSETTS

Malden—David and Samuel Pearlswig are erecting a brick block for commercial purposes which will contain a moving picture theatre at 265-269 Bryant St. Estimated cost of the block is $45,000.

Northampton—Mowll & Rand, 21 School St., Boston, Mass., have completed plans for the King St. Theatre owned by Goldstein Bros. Amuse. Co., Bridge Street, Springfield, Mass.

Weymouth—W. V. Dixey & H. B. Smilie, 25 Huntington Ave., Boston, Mass., have completed plans for the community theatre for E. Weymouth, owner, Lakewood Grove & Birches Imp. Assn., E. Weymouth, Mass.

MISSOURI

Independence—The Elliott Bldg. is being torn down and will be replaced by a modern playhouse which will be three stories high and of brick. A. E. Elliott of the Grand theatre, Kansas City, holds lease on the ground.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Keene—Haynes & Mason, 280 Main St., Fitchburg, Mass., has plans for three story theatre building for Chas. C. Baldwin which is 180 x 71 of brick. Architects taking bids.

NEW YORK

Brooklyn—A moving picture theatre to cost about $350,000 and to have a seating capacity of 3,500, is to be built at the northeast corner of Nostrand Ave. and Eastern Parkway by the Wein-Wolf Realty Co., of which Samuel Wolfman is president. Plot is 89 x 190. Building to be constructed of light colored brick with limestone trimmings from plans prepared by J. Weisman.

Hempstead, L. I.—J. Fisher, 25 Ave. A, New York City, has completed plans for a theatre to be erected by owner, Max Weiss, of Weiss Bros., 1540 Broadway, New York City.

Newark—Geo. W. Croucher & Son are erecting theatre on the site of the old Crescent theatre which will have an auditorium 50 x 87 in addition to which there will be an entrance 20 x 40.

New York City—Wm. Rahmann & Son, 126 Cedar St., has plans for three story theatre building, 150 x 150, to cost $500,000 and be of brick. Architect will take bids on general contracts. Location East Fordham Road.

New York City—Plans have been filed for one story theatre building on Morris Park Ave., northwest corner of Hunt Ave., by Novelty Realty Corp. and Benjamin Livenson owners. Architect, M. W. Del Gaudio, 160 West 45th St., New York City. Plot 95 x 185.

Rochester—Work is to be started on a new theatre in Geddes St., next to the Webster millinery shop, being built by Geo. McCargo and F. W. Gates, proprietors of the Lyric. Building will be one story 100 x 35, fireproof construction and of tile, with a brick front. Seats 500.

Yonkers—Ufaldn & Liftmann, Inc., 299 Madison Ave., New York City., will build $3,000,000 theatre and apartment house building on E. S. McLean Ave., adjoining Park Hotel. Owner will take bids on all contracts.

NEW JERSEY

Englewood—H. F. Rotman, 63 W. Palisade Ave., will build a two-story theatre and store and office building of brick. Architect not selected yet.

Fords—A modern photoplay house, 600 seating capacity, will be built by A. H. Dunham of Elm St., Perth Amboy.

Secaucus—Andrews, Tower & Lavelle, Springfield, Mass., drawing plans for a theatre on Paterson Plank Rd. for Port Development Realty Co., Robt. Droutman, Pres., 1247 Paterson Plank Rd. To be of brick.

OHIO

Lakewood—J. W. Christford, 1462 W. 117th St., Lakewood, Arch. & Struc. Engr., has plans for two story theatre building on Madison Ave. near Arthur Ave., 110 x 210, costing $125,000, structure being built by Lincoln Theatre Co., C. G. Burton, Pres., 2301 Center St., Cleveland Building, will be of brick walls, stone trim. Plans being drawn.

OREGON

Eugene—Plans for the construction of a six story hotel and theatre building were announced with the taking of an option on corner property of the Southern Pacific R. R. Co. Building will cost $300,000, 160 x 120.

PENNSYLVANIA

Philadelphia—John Chas. Norton, 29 W. Lancaster Ave., Ardmore, Pa., has plans for two story theatre building, 85 x 200, for C. F. Kline, 110 N. 60th St., Philadelphia. Plans which are being drawn state building will be of brick.

Reading—Edward Z. Scholl, 136 Robeson St., has plans for two story theatre building, 90 x 115 to be of brick, fireproof, plans for which are in progress.

WASHINGTON

North End—A permit for the construction of a $10,000 motion picture theatre building at 3816 N. 26th St. was taken out by J. R. McKinnell. Construction to begin as soon as plans are finished.

WISCONSIN

Shorewood—Baches & Pfaller, 216 W. Water St., Milwaukee, Wis., has plans for a theatre, apartment and store building, 105 x 120, $200,000, at Atwater and Farwell, for Kel-Naw Amuse. Co., care of architect. House to be of brick

NEBRASKA

Grand Island—A motion picture theatre will be built next to the People's State Bank, particulars for which will be announced when plans are drawn.

Juneau—W. D. Gross will build a reinforced concrete theatre building with steel framework on the lot adjoining the Alaskan Hotel on Front St., which has a 50-foot frontage and a depth of 100 feet. Seating capacity 1,000.

"Comfortable Seating" Is Doug's Motto for the Full Enjoyment of a Show

Here he is with Mr. Grauman setting up American Seating Company Theatre Chairs in the Grauman's Egyptian Hollywood Theatre. This is their assurance of comfort for an audience.

This is the second theatre chair installation made by us for Mr. Grauman, while a third order follows for the Metropolitan Theatre of Los Angeles. now nearing completion.

Have You Ever Sat Through an Entire Show in Your Own Theatre?

IT is very seldom that theatre owners or managers have an opportunity of seeing a complete show in their own theatre. Because of other duties needing attention, they seldom occupy a chair more than a few minutes. Naturally, uncomfortable features are not noticed in so short a time. On the other hand, theatre patrons criticize defects and generally find another theatre where the complete program can be enjoyed in comfort afforded by proper seating.

After the tiresome hours of work during the day, the public look forward to relaxation. Theatres should offer this with deep cushioned chairs and other restgiving elements.

Make yours the best. Give the public the benefit of American Seating Company Theatre Chairs.

Direct Current Circuits

Lesson III—Part III

BY far the most complicated part of direct current circuits is the calculation of the resistance and currents of parallel circuits. Yet nothing could be simpler when once understood. Resistances are said to be connected in parallel, or multiple, when one end of each resistance is connected to the same point and the other end of all the resistances is connected to another point. Of course, the ends do not have to be extended until they all meet at the same point, but the wiring must be so arranged as to give the equivalent effect. Incandescent lamps are ordinarily connected in parallel with each other. The switch controlling each light is connected in series with the lamp it controls. Multiple circuits are much more widely used than are series because they permit the addition of loads to the line without causing serious voltage drops as long as the circuit is not too heavily overloaded.

A simple illustration of resistances in parallel is contained in Fig. 24. This shows a conductor, an ordinary copper wire, which has been split into three equal sections. The end areas of these three sections are all equal. Since this is so, the resistance of each section is equal to that of the others.

If, now, an electric current is caused to flow in the main conductor, upon reaching the split portion at A, it will divide and equal currents will flow through each section because the resistance of each is the same. Hence, if the total current is 30 amperes, the current in each section will be 10 amperes. These 10 ampere currents will later combine, where the three sections join each other again at B, and flow on as a single 30 ampere current.

Had the wire been cut so that the resistance of each section was different from that of the others, the main current would not have divided equally but inversely as the resistance of each split section. Thus, if the top wire had twice the resistance of the middle wire it would only draw one-half as much current as the middle section. And if the bottom wire had only one-fourth the resistance of the top wire it would draw four times as much current as the top wire. This is strictly in accordance with the resistance formula given last week and Ohm's Law (E = IR).

Kirchoff's Laws of Circuits

Of course, the case explained above is a very simple one and is given merely to show the method involved. In the solution of complicated networks, as parallel circuits are sometimes called, a more systematic method is used. In last week's article was shown how resistances in series were solved by Kirchoff's Law of Series Circuits, which goes as follows: "The algebraic sum of all the voltages acting in a closed circuit is equal to zero." This same gentleman is responsible for another law which is applicable to resistances in parallel and is known as Kirchoff's Law for Parallel Circuits. In effect it says: "The algebraic sum of all the currents flowing toward or away from a junction point is equal to zero."

Let us pause for an instant to analyze these two laws. The first speaks of the voltages acting in a circuit while the second speaks of the currents flowing in a circuit. In the first case there are a number of voltages and only one current. In the second case there are a number of currents and only one voltage. For this reason Series Circuits are sometimes known as constant current circuits. The street lighting systems employing either arc or incandescent lamps are constant current systems. The lamps in such systems are all in series. On the other hand, the parallel circuits are sometimes referred to as constant potential circuits. The ordinary residence lighting systems employing incandescent lamps are constant potential circuits, as are also the ordinary motor circuits. Of course, it must be understood that the current or voltage, as the case may be, is apt to vary somewhat and so can not be called constant in the strict sense of the word. The word constant refers to circuit only. That is, if the current is 10 amperes in one part of the circuit (series) it is 10 amperes in every other part also. The absolute value may vary slightly but the effect is the same all over the circuit. So it is also with the voltage of the parallel circuit, allowing for the IR drops, which, in comparison with the total voltage, are usually small.

Solution of Parallel Circuits

To return, now, to the solution of parallel circuits; Kirchoff's second law says, to repeat, that the algebraic sum of all the currents flowing toward or away from a junction point is equal to zero. In explaining the words "algebraic sum" in last week's issue we made use of plus and minus signs placed before the various voltages. The same thing is done in the case of the current also. That is, the currents flowing toward any junction point are given the plus sign, while those flowing away from the same point are given the minus sign.

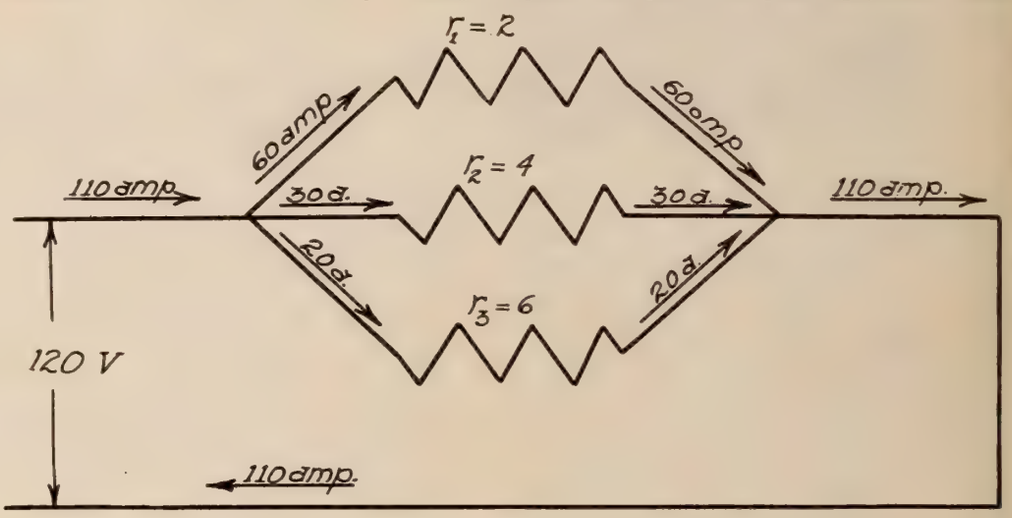

Figure 26

The sum of all these currents, with proper regard to their respective signs, must equal zero. In Fig 25 a current (I) is shown flowing toward a junction point (P), hence the sign before it is plus. Also, currents (i_1), (i_2) and (i_3) are shown flowing away from the same point, and their sign is accordingly minus. Kirchoff's Law, applied to this case, would appear as follows:

$$(+I) + (-i_1) + (-i_2) + (-i_3) = 0$$

(removing the brackets)

$$I - i_1 - i_2 - i_3 = 0$$

(adding $-i_1 - i_2 - i_3$ to each member)

$$I = i_1 + i_2 + i_3$$

We can also say, as just shown, that the sum of the currents flowing toward any junction point is equal to the sum of the currents flowing away from the same point.

Suppose we apply this knowledge to a simple parallel circuit, such as the one shown in Fig. 26. The thing we wish to find out, primarily, is what total current will be drawn from the generator if 120 volts be impressed across the resistances as shown?

TransVerteR (Double Arc Type) is a series arc motor generator, having automatic voltage regulation.
No more amperes used than actually required for the light or dark pictures.
Only such voltage is generated as is used in the arc itself (no ballast being used).
TransVerteR produces better results and uses less current than any other device.
TransVerteR is ball bearing; gives better light and better pictures. It is easy to operate, thoroughly reliable, and is an important factor in drawing full houses, by reason of superior projection.

There are two methods which can be used. We can find the current flowing thru each resistance and then add these individual currents to obtain the total, or we can find the total resistance of the combination shown and then find the current by a single application of Ohm's Law.

The result by the first method is as follows:

$i_1 = E/r_1 = 120/2 = 60$ amp.
$i_2 = E/r_2 = 120/4 = 30$ amp.
$i_3 = E/r_3 = 120/6 = 20$ amp.
$I = L_1 + L_2 + L_3 = 60 + 30 + 20 = 110$ amp.

It is sometimes much simpler, in complex circuits, to find the total resistance of each combination and then use Ohm's Law directly. In order to do this, however, a formula, which gives the total resistance of any parallel combination must be used. It is:

$$R = \frac{1}{\frac{1}{r} + \frac{1}{r} + \frac{1}{r} + \text{etc.}}$$

The derivation of this formula, which is based on Ohm's Law, is comparatively simple, but lack of space prevents giving it in detail It is enough to know that in order TO FIND THE TOTAL RESISTANCE (R) OF ANY PARALLEL COMBINATION, (1) find the reciprocal (see Lesson I, Part I) of each individual resistance; (2) add these reciprocals together; (3) divide this figure into the numeral one (1). The result will be the total resistance. This figure can then be used in conjunction with the voltage to find the total current flowing.

Applying this formula to Fig. 26 we have:

$$R = \frac{1}{\frac{1}{1_r} + \frac{1}{2_r} + \frac{1}{3_r}} = \frac{1}{\frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{4} + \frac{1}{6}} =$$

$$\frac{1}{0.5 + 0.25 + 0.166}$$

$$= \frac{1}{0.916} = 1.09 \text{ ohms}$$

$I = E/R = 120/1.09 = 110$ amp.

This agrees with the result obtained with the first method. Kirchoff's Law may again be checked by applying it to the junction points A and B, Fig. 26.

This law is particularly valuable in solving Edison Three Wire D.C. circuits, an example of which is shown in Fig. 27. In this circuit the two outside wires are the main current carrying wires, while the middle one is called the neutral, or return, and carries, in a properly balanced circuit, but a small current back to the generator.

An unbalanced case is shown in Fig. 27.

Such systems should always be well balanced in order to make the neutral small and thus effect a saving in copper. The primary objects of this system are (1) saving in copper wire, (2) two voltages supplied the consumer; 220 volts for motors (which again means a saving in copper) and 110 volts for lighting (which means saving in lamp operaton).

In the case shown, L_1, L_2, etc., each represents an incandescent lamp drawing 1 ampere from the line (a 100 watt lamp); a, b, c, etc., are the junction points. Kirchoff's Law can be checked as follows:

(a) $+3-2-1=0$ (b) $+2-1-1=0$
(c) $+1-1=0$

It will be noted that between junction points (d) and (e), and (f) and (h), no current is flowing. These two portions of the neutral could then be cut away without affecting the situation and thus still more copper could be saved. This is not done in practice because any slight unbalancing of the loads would send a current through these portions in one direction or the other. If the entire system were absolutely balanced no neutral would be required. This, however, is practically impossible to accomplish.

Combination Circuits

These circuits, briefly, consist of resistances in series and parallel. In order to effect their solution the resistance of each parallel combination should first be obtained, using the formula given above, and then these total resistances should be treated as if they were in series with the single resistance which, in fact, they are. In other words, by finding the total resistance of the parallel combinations the entire circuit is changed to a simple series circuit and can then be solved.

This series of articles will be continued week after next. No article will appear next week.

Question on Transformers

In a letter to the editor Samuel McAllister, theatre, Port Norris, N. Y., complains that one of the connections to his Power's inductor "gets red hot" and that the transformer also hums whenever this occurs.

This may be due to a number of causes. The projection arc is essentially a constant current device and so any unnecessary resistance in the circuit will cause a power loss. Also, the greater this resistance the greater will be the loss of power. If the connection only gets hot then the trouble, no doubt, is that it is poorly made and this is the first place to inspect. Even a comparatively low resistance connection can cause a lot of trouble in view of the high current being used.

If the transformer itself heats up excessively then there may be a short circuited coil in it which is causing the trouble. The only way of finding out where the shorted coil is located is by testing the transformer.

Either of the two faults mentioned above will cause the transformer to hum as they can be classed as overloads. The humming, however, may also be due to a loose piece of magnetic material vibrating in synchronism with the alternations of the current (and hence flux) in the transformer. It may be that some of the laminations of the core are loose.

It is difficult to place a finger directly on the trouble without an inspection, or at least a complete description, of the trouble-making apparatus.

Harry Lucas Visits N. Y.

Harry Lucas of the Lucas Theatre Supply Company, Atlanta, Ga., made a flying visit to New York during the past week. Mr. Lucas reports that business throughout his southern territory has been staging a very encouraging comeback and that the prospects for the future are very bright in theatre supplies. The Lucas Theatre Supply Company constructed a large sales and manufacturing building a year or two ago and now find it extremely convenient to use all the various manufacturing departments to capacity.

Rockhill Theatre Coming Up

An hotel and theatre building is being erected at Fortieth and Main streets, Kansas City, Mo., by Tri-State Realty Company, architects being Shepard & Wiser, 302 R. A. Long Building, Kansas City, Mo.

The Rockhill theatre has been leased by the Kem-Way Company. The house will have a standard stage and large balcony, have a seating capacity of 1,500 with modern heating and ventilating system. The structure will be entirely fireproof, detailed plans of construction to be announced shortly.—True

Broadway, Kansas City, Theatre Going Up

A new motion picture house, fireproof and with a seating capacity of 1,800, will be erected at Thirty-sixth Street and Broadway, Kansas City, by E. J. Willett and H. W. Pinnick. The new house, which will be named the Broadway theatre, will cost about $250,000, including storeroom space, and will occupy a frontage of 192 feet on Broadway. The theatre, including the main floor, balcony, foyer, children's playroom, lounge and lobbies will be in Georgian detail.

A modern cooling system will be installed, in addition to a heating and ventilating system. The house will be of reinforced concrete. The architects, Lodge & Gornall, are preparing the plans which will be ready in time to prevent any interruption in a continuous construction program. —True.

New Plan for Financing Industrial Standardization Is Approved

A NEW plan for financing the industrial standardization work of the United States which provides for membership dues on the basis of one cent per $1,000 of gross receipts, has been formally approved by the Executive Committee of the American Engineering Standards Committee. And twenty of the most influential industrial executives of the country have accepted places on an Advisory Committee which will co-operate with the Ways and Means Committee in the refinancing of the American Engineering Standards Committee.

In submitting the report of the Ways and Means Committee, A. W. Whitney, Chairman of that committee and of the A. E. S. C., declared that the economies which should accrue to the industries of America through standardization "are to be measured in billions of dollars, not millions."

This report announces a new class of members in the A. E. S. C. to be known as "sustaining members," and provides a special service to "sustaining members," including information bulletins on developments in standardization work in this country and in every other country where industrial standardization is in progress.

The American Engineering Standards Committee, which was organized in 1918, has heretofore been financed entirely by dues from the nine technical societies and seventeen national trade associations which, with seven departments of the federal government, constitute its present membership. Annual deficits were cleared by contributions from individual corporations.

The plan calls for the appointment of an engineer-translator who will provide translations of standards developed in foreign countries for the information service to sustaining members. The new information service will be an elaboration of the work which the A. E. S. C. has been carrying on in a small way, in calling to the attention of co-operating bodies and the technical press the important developments in standardization work, foreign as well as American.

William Goldman Building in St. Louis

St. Louis is to have a new $1,000,000 motion picture palace to stand at Grand Boulevard at the head of Delmar Boulevard. Announcement to this effect was made a few days ago by William Goldman, who until last June was managing director of the Missouri Famous Players Corporation, owners of the Missouri theatre, Grand and Lucas avenue.

Goldman's new house will seat 3,000 and be the last word in theatre construction. Preston J. Bradshaw, International Life Building, St. Louis, is architect, while the Selden-Breck Construction Company probably will receive the contract to build. The house will be ready about September 1, but the formal opening ceremonies will be postponed to November 21, which is the thirteenth anniversary of the opening of Goldman's St. Louis Tent Show, Prairie and St. Louis Avenues, which marked his advent as a motion picture magnate.—Barrett.

CALIFORNIA

Beverly Hills—Negotiations were consummated for the erection by J. J. Seigrist, a retired rancher of Hollywood, of a theatre and stores building on the southeast corner of Burton Way and Camden Drive to occupy an area of 95 x 148½, building to cost over $40,000. Will be constructed of brick and terra cotta, theatre to seat 800. Architects, Warner & Volke, Burton Realty Co.

Burbank—Plans are being drawn by A. J. Johnson, for a theatre building constructed on the rear of the present building on the Minor block. Exterior will be of hollow tile and plaster, seating capacity 900.

East Oakland—A new moving picture theatre is to be built by Contractor F. T. Kennedy for Allen King at the southwest corner of 23rd Ave. & East 15th St. Building will be two stories, modern throughout and cost $45,000.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Washington—Architect J. Wenig, 721 10th St. N. W., has plans for a two-story, 45x110, $50,000 theatre to be built on the southeast corner 161st and Dix Streets N. E., for D. G. Joseph, 61st and Dix Sts. N. E. House to be top brick, concrete, steel, stone, fireproof. Architect taking bids.

NEW YORK

Brooklyn—J. S. Jacobs, Inc., 1482 Broadway, New York City, will build a two-story theatre, 80 x 120, on Surf Ave. and Coney Island, of brick. Bids being taken.

New York City—Cosmopolitan Prod., Chester Beecroft, 126th St. and 2nd Ave., to rebuild theatre, 2nd Ave. and East River, 126th to 127th Sts. Architect not yet selected.

Correction

In our issue dated March 31st an advertisement of the M. G. Felder Sales Company, distributors for Bio Carbons, the world "B I O" was incorrectly printed as B10.

OHIO

Springfield—Work has been started on the new $15,000 theatre to be on Fair St., east of Yellow Springs St., for James W. Maxey, 702 S. Yellow Springs St. It will be a one-story brick structure, 96 x 40, seating 600.

First Class Prints

EXHIBITORS know the value of first-class prints. They are the men who deal with the public, who bear the brunt of criticism when they are forced to retail shoddy goods. These men and their distributors know what it means when a release print comes fresh from the laboratory and then breaks down after the first few showings.

CONSEQUENTLY, these men can appreciate the superiority of STANDARD PRINTS. Our release prints represent nearly a quarter of a century's experience in developing and printing film. They are a product of one of the newest, finest and most completely equipped laboratories in the world. They are the work of a big, efficient organization of photographic experts, each of whom has a personal interest and pride in what he is doing.

STANDARD PRINTS retain all of the film's vitality or wearing quality. They're just as strong and durable as the raw stock that comes from the manufacturer. Proof of this may be seen in the ever-increasing number of the industry's foremost producers depending upon STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES for camera-to-screen service.

Exhibitor Service that Really Counts

The advertisement above is out of the Paramount Press Sheet on "You Can't Fool Your Wife". Your exchange can supply you with mats or electros.

During the past year the exhibitor demand for Paramount Press Sheet advertising mats and electros of all styles and sizes has shown increases of from 40 to 100 per cent.

That doesn't mean additional revenue for Paramount, because the mats and electros are supplied to you at cost.

But it does mean that the kind of advertising service Paramount is offering exhibitors through the Press Sheets is being used with profitable results.

It means that Paramount is supplying exhibitors with an advertising service that really counts.

Prodigal Exhibitors. The prodigal exhibitor is the showman who spends his advertising dollars foolishly.

Thousands of wise exhibitors are booking Paramount Pictures and advertising them with material from the Paramount Press Sheets.

The snappy 3-column advertisement above is from the "Prodigal Daughters" Press Sheet. It is a sample of the flashy box-office material you'll find there. Your exchange has mats and electros.

JACQUELINE LOGAN

A Paramount Picture

There's room on every bill for the kind of fast, clean, human comedies Walter Hiers is making.

The tremendous success of Hiers' first starring picture, " Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," proves that.

Now comes " Sixty Cents an Hour "—vastly bigger and better than anything Hiers has appeared in before. It really is a comedy clean-up!

By Frank Condon. Scenario by Grant Carpenter. Directed by Joseph Henabery

What do you do with your Press Sheets?

Throw them in the waste basket, unread? Lots of exhibitors do. And probably there are lots of Press Sheets that deserve it.

Paramount is getting out the kind of Press Sheet material you can actually turn into box-office dollars.

The advertisement above, for instance, is from the Press Sheet on " Sixty Cents an Hour." It is eye-catching and attractive, and inferior printing on inferior newspaper stock won't spoil it. Your exchange has mats and electros at your service.

Paramount Press Sheet advertising is prepared by a staff of experts who know the motion picture public as well as the advertising business. That's why it goes into the newspapers instead of the waste baskets.

"THE ABYSMAL BRUTE."

Universal—7,373 Feet.
Featuring Reginald Denny.
Reviewed by Dorothy Day.

There are so many elements of interest in this picture that it will please almost everybody. Surely this is an achievement.

The story, by Jack London, is full of action, and it has received suitable treatment in its production as a picture.

The central character is a prizefighter who, because of his feats in the ring, has received the nickname of "The Abysmal Brute." But his conduct outside the ring is an entirely different matter. Brought up in the wilds of the Sierra mountains by his ex-prizefighter father, he is rather crude and decidedly inexperienced. Women, he thinks, are an abomination to the Lord, and runs away whenever he sees one approaching.

His triumphs in the ring are instantaneously achieved. His success in this line assured, the natural course of procedure should include a girl, and it does. She meets the "Brute" on the beach at a fashionable resort, where he performs a thrilling rescue of a drowning man. She invites him to call, and the luckless fellow chooses the hour just before din ner to accept her invitation. He remain for dinner, and is very gauche; but th irl overlooks all these minor faults, see-ng the sturdy character of the man beneath his crude exterior. She is the daughter of a man prominent in society, and it is expected that she will make a brilliant match. At the dinner party the conversation turns to the subject of the new prizefighter known as the "Brute," and one of the guests even claims an acquaintance with the famous god of the ring. The "Brute" says nothing, as he is fearful of losing the friendship of the girl, who does not approve of prizefight-

ers. When she does learn his identity, she is so furious at his deception that she promises to marry another man. But the "Brute" adopts a ringside manner, intervenes at the proper time, and falls into a clinch when there is no referee to say him nay. Thus it ends.

The work of Reginald Denny as the "Brute" is really interesting. He is a fine boxer, and makes the role of the timid boy very convincing at the same time. Real tears spring to his eyes when he is touched, but, in the words of his opponents, he is "one tough baby" when he gets his boxing gloves on.

Mabel Julienne Scott as the girl plays with intelligence, and is wholly satisfying. Craufurd Kent as a rejected suitor does a clean-cut piece of work, and several small parts of people connected with the prizefighting enterprise are extremely well played.

Action, pathos, some pretty outdoor scenery, a fine story all the way through —what more can one ask of a photoplay?

Speaking of Figures–

HERE are some interesting statistics gathered by our accountants:

There are 12,000 exhibitors in this country, most of whom you can't fool at any time.

There are 7 Chinamen, all living in Shanghai, who have never heard of Kenneth Harlan, but their wives have.

Every Englishman consumes at least 3 gallons of tea a year, even though Prohibition has not been passed.

It takes 2 people to make a bargain, but only 1 lawyer to make a contract.

The number of poor Super-Specials that are turned out every year would reach from here to Mars and halfway back, if laid end to end—which is the way they should be laid.

THE STUPENDOUS FACTS CONCERNING THE FEATURE PRODUCTION

The Mystery of

KING TUT-ANKH-AMEN'S EIGHTH WIFE

The whole population of the United States—from New York to California —are waiting NOW to see the story of King Tut-Ankh-Amen ON THE SCREEN. If you don't believe it, ask the first man, woman or child you meet on the street!

In all the history of Motion Pictures, THIS is the Timeliest Production ever made!

It is the Colossal Clean-Up of the Year—the Mightiest Money-Making Mint ever presented to Wide-Awake Film Men looking for Big, Clean, Novel, Audience-Pleasing SENSATIONS. This Picture will do for the Picture Theatres what Rubber Heels do for Shoes—annihilate hard going!

It is a Picture worthy of being played in the Best Theatres in the country—aside from its even GREATER VALUE as a TIMELY GOLD-MINE!

NOTE — When the Picture was Written and Made there was no notion entertained that it would almost be a perfect parallel, in its main episodes, with the recent tragic news from Egypt concerning the death of a splendid man and renowned explorer, with the old legends of poisoned tombs—but the fact IS the story of THE MYSTERY OF KING TUT-ANKH-AMEN'S EIGHTH WIFE contains so much matter that parallels the unfortunate tragedy of Lord Carnarvon, the prophecy of Marie Corelli and the mystic explanations of Conan Doyle, that it would seem the Producer and Director and Author were all three gifted with Clairvoyance and the power of Prophets.

This Picture is the Film Man's GREAT DOLLAR GO-GETTER! TO GET it, you must go after it QUICK!

Charles Ray's New Picture A Hit at World Premier

"Place this latest Charles Ray production in the list of the best photodramas of the year," wrote Carl Rall in the Evening Express when "The Girl I Loved" had its world premier at the Mission theatre, Los Angeles. "It is a 'thing of beauty.' The action is rapid, purposeful and full of unusually high dramatic suspense."

"Dramatically, photographically and histrionically 'The Girl I Loved' is a triumph for Charles Ray. The picture is alive with gusty scenes, yet wholesome comedy is also in evidence. Drama reigns, and the picture moves to high climaxes with constant suspense and mounting interest."—Examiner.

"'The Girl I Loved' is the graduating ceremony for Charles Ray. He has effected a work of art which may have its place in the history of pictures. There are bits of acting which make one gasp for their truth."—Record.

"There is something decidedly different and refreshingly lasting in Mr. Ray's latest contribution to cinema history. By deft acting—or rather, by cleverly not acting at all—he paints a picture vividly real and human. He puts into the role the accumulated artistry of his entire career."—Evening Herald.

"Surprise of Your Life," Says Noted Critic of Chicago

"Charles Ray is going to provide you with the surprise of your life in 'The Girl I Loved'," said Mae Tinee in the Chicago Tribune. "He bursts into an emotional role that reveals most unexpected genius. He holds you spellbound by the pathos, fire and power of his acting. I DO so want you to see this new Charles Ray and be brought up startled and charmed as I was."

Capitol Does $13,677 in One Day

The Capitol reached a new high record for one days gross on Sunday when "Souls for Sale" drew $13,677. 50 in paid admissions. Standing room only was all to be had from the 2 o'clock show until closing and hundreds were turned away. At one time, the line extended from the box-office, along the 51st side of the building and almost to 8th Ave. The Sunday gross exceeds any other total by over $1,000. an unusual figure when it is remembered that "The Four Horsemen," 'Foolish Wives" and "Robin Hood" have played at the theater.

"Souls for Sale" Scores.

We didn't need the report from the box office at the Capitol Theatre to tell us that "Souls for Sale" would establish a record. We knew it yesterday after seeing Rupert Hughes's picture. It has all the elements of popularity and it is the greatest entertainment we have seen in many a day. To see the inside of a studio and watch the wheels go around is an experience almost any fan wants. The receipts, according to the Goldwyn Company, totaled $13,677.50 on Sunday, which would indicate that between 20,000 and 25,000 persons viewed the picture. At 1.30 o'clock—just an hour after the doors opened—crowds were waiting in line on Broadway, and from then on until late at night the picture played to standing room only. At noon the receipts were $1,500. This establishes a record for the Capitol, and since the Capitol is the largest theatre in New York—a record for any motion picture theatre for one day's receipts.

Following the visit made to "Down to the Sea in Ships" by the officers and crew of the French cruiser "Regulus," Captain Aubert, of the French liner "Rochhambeau," visited the Cameo Theatre. Here is what he thinks of the greatest sea picture ever produced.

On board S. S. ROCHAMBEAU

March 26th 1923

Dear Sir:

Accepting your kind invitation, I had the pleasure, last night, accompanied by my purser, of seeing at the Cameo Theatre, your film of the whale fishers, "Down to the Sea in Ships," about which you told me.

Beside the plot, which is very interesting and well documented, relative to the early day Quakers in America, the Cameo Theatre has given us the most marvellous reproduction of marine scenes.

These scenes, one after the other, full of the intense poetry of the sea and the thrilling spectacle of the struggle for life of the whalesmen, have filled me with admiration.

Every scene, every attitude on board the whaler is scrupulously staged and realistically true. No marine detail, no technical arrangement is false or fantastic, and it is felt that the most intelligent direction has presided over the making of this film.

I thank you again for your kind invitation, and I ask you to convey to the manager of the [illegible] my sincere thanks for his obliging [illegible] and for the agreeable evening which we

HERE is a picture made in the best Ince style, which means it is a sure fire box office winner.

There is everything in it to hold fascinated and spell bound any audiences. Thrill follows thrill, leading up to the smashing climaxes—a battle between revenue officers and mountaineers, a lynching party, and a forest fire so realistic you fairly smell the smoke and hear the crackle of the flames.

Here you have a romance with all the glamor of old Dixie with its proud and ancient aristocracy, and its rugged primitive mountaineers, carrying on their feudal battles from generation to generation. An atmosphere that appeals to all. And a cast to conjure with.

You know the sort of pictures Thomas H. Ince has been producing—"Hail the Woman", "Skin Deep", "The Hottentot". This is just such another winner.

DIRECTOR ..... David Smith
AUTHOR ..... Morgan Robertson
SCENARIO BY .....C. Graham Baker
CAMERAMAN ..... Steve Smith, Jr.
AS A WHOLE.....Fine live entertainment with punch in its action, sure-fire patriotic atmosphere and all that goes for a good picture
STORY.....A romance of the Spanish War period with action, thrills and plenty of genuine audience appeal
DIRECTION.....Splendid; succeeds in making story realistic and atmosphere is great; development very good
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent
LIGHTINGS ..... Very good
PLAYERS.....Cullen Landis at his best in role that he handles in fine style; Alice Calhoun and Wanda Hawley attractive maids of '98 and Earle Williams suitable; others all good types
EXTERIORS ..... Good
INTERIORS ..... Good
DETAIL ..... First rate
CHARACTER OF STORY.....A character development showing the rise of an American lad from boyhood to manhood
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....6,800 feet

Here is one with a genuine wallop for American audiences and if the patriotic atmosphere in this doesn't send them out with their blood tingling and their fervor for the stars and stripes increased a hundred fold, then the guess is all wrong. "Masters of Men," David Smith's production of Morgan Robertson's novel, is an out and out American picture for Americans and it contains an unlimited supply of real audience appeal—the sort that starts them talking about the picture and brings others in.

Much of the credit for the success of the picture belongs to Director Smith for the very worth while and capable way in which he has handled the material and to C. Graham Baker, who prepared the scenario. Added to this there is the splendid performance of Cullen Landis in the role of a sailor of the U. S. Navy, as well as a uniformly well suited and capable cast.

To start with, Morgan Robertson's novel contains splendid material for the screen and in retaining the author's method of development, Baker has gotten the most out of it and Director Smith has been able to tell the story smoothly, consistently and cover the ground in much less footage than he might were he to proceed in the usual fashion. This chapter style of telling the story is wholly pleasing and satisfying and eliminates considerable unnecessary detail. And at the same time the sequences dove-tail nicely and there are no gaps in the continuity.

The first two chapters are concerned with the early boyhood of the hero and his subsequent entrance into the Navy followed by the entrance of the United States into war with Spain. This leads up to some mighty fine business and includes a variety of thrills and action with sure-fire punch. It all registers and is flavored with such definite patriotic atmosphere that it is even more impressive than ordinarily. It is distinctly the treatment given the story and the wealth of realism and excellent detail that makes the piece absorbing. For a climax you have the destruction of the famous battleship Maine and the fight in Santiago Harbor.

Cullen Landis works like a real trooper and his portrayal in this is easily one of the best things he has ever done. They are going to get a real thrill out of his many scraps. Alice Calhoun and Wanda Hawley are both charming in their '98 costumes. Picture patrons all over will "love" the romance of Alice Calhoun and Landis, and Wanda Hawley and Earle Williams. Director Smith had fine cooperation from the whole company.

Story: Dick Halpin is accused of theft by the brother of Mabel Arthur, whom he loves. To save Mabel from humiliation Dick accepts the blame, runs away and joins the U. S. Navy. It isn't until Dick and his lieutenant, Breen, have been shanghaied aboard a sailing vessel, that Dick learns Mabel knows the truth, but before there can be a reconciliation Dick and Breen return to their ship and are pitched into active service at Santiago Harbor. Dick is transferred to work under young Arthur, now an ensign, and is with him when he dies. After it is all over Dick and Breen return to the home town, Dick to claim Mabel, and Breen to claim Bessie, Mabel's chum.

Better Get Your Order In and Then Get to Work On It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Vitagraph's latest production looks like a sure thing for the box office. It has all the requisites of a box office attraction and they are all fully satisfying from an audience viewpoint. "Masters of Men" has been done in a big way and should do a big business. You can safely make promises for it and rest assured your crowd will vote it a winner, unless, of course, you happen to be catering to a foreign clientele. In that case they may not be carried away with the spirit of enthusiasm that the picture is almost certain to create with American audiences.

There is a trailer available which you would do well to secure and use well in advance of the showing. Be sure and tell them of the historic episode and of the blowing up of the battleship Maine. There will be those of your patrons to whom the incident will still be current history and they'll be especially interested. Tell them about the excellent work of Cullen Landis, of the action and thrills. The picture really deserves your best exploitation efforts with the receipts proving it well worth your while. You have something to talk about. Do it.

NOW WORKING for your THEATRE

A word to the man who never sleeps!

Working while you sleep? We won't say that, for the live exhibitor never sleeps —not on his job. And this is only for the live boys.

But First National has inaugurated a national advertising campaign in the Saturday Evening Post that will work for YOU—by the night lamp—kerosene, gas and electricity, in practically every home in America.

And this is not the usual advertising campaign. We have hit on something unique—distinctive. Story ads. That's the thing. They'll read them like any other story in the Post. And to write these story ads we have engaged a popular fiction writer, a man whose stories appear regularly in the popular magazines. He knows how to write—how to stir up interest.

Look over the reproduction of the first advertisement which appeared in the issue of April 7, and see for yourself. It will create a demand at your box office.

And these ads are appearing in every other issue—one every two weeks of the year.

MORE—We are tying up these advertisements and your theatre with the pictures when you show them. We are making one sheet reproductions of all these ads, so you can post them in your lobby.

FREE—Yes, we are giving the one sheets away free. Don't fail to ask for them at your First National exchange.

That's not all. We are supplementing this with regular advertising monthly in all of the most popular fan magazines.

This is building Box Office business for First National pictures—and building patronage for YOU.

Stars—director—story. We think of pictures not in terms of trademarks, but of people—because pictures are people. And motion picture brands must be judged by the human company they keep. Hence this fortnightly page will tell about the folk who make up appear in First National Pictures, because the big important factor is the man or woman whose artistic endeavors the screen reflects.

Still further to acquaint picture-goers with their entertainers' activities, this page will be reproduced large-size for exhibition in the lobbies of several thousand theatres which present First National Pictures. Something to read while you wait for a seat.

The law of the island—every woman must choose a husband within a twenty-four hour—

"THE ISLE OF LOST SHIPS"

Maurice Tourneur pictures strange drama, stranger thrill in the Sargasso Sea—from which ships seldom return

GALLEONS, DERELICTS, once-proud clippers, stately liners, caught in the grip of the weird Sargasso Sea through centuries and wedged by seaweed into an island of lost ships. A colony of men and only two women inhabit it, a rabble ruled by a giant with the right of might. Escape is impossible. Each new wreck adds castaways, desperate men—sometimes a woman, and she, by community law, must marry within one day—choosing her husband from the mob. The man she takes must defend her against all comers.

To this island drift a millionaire's daughter, a New York detective and his prisoner, an ex-naval officer charged with murder—sole survivors of a wreck. And although the girl would give a million for release, she must choose her mate from these men who offer. Two want her—the brute who rules and the man accused of murder.

Director Maurice Tourneur tackled a big job in filming this story of Captain Crittenden Marryat's. Not only was there drama of the strongest kind, but also the unprecedented locale of the Sargasso Sea with its waste world of stagnant weed, its submarine monsters, the hundreds of ships it never lets go. A sailor's myth some call the Sargasso Sea; yet the atlas shows it at the Gulf of Mexico's very door. Thus Tourneur has depicted both island and people, in scenes that come as some new, almost incredible wonder.

With Anna Q. Nilsson, Milton Sills, Frank Campeau and Walter Long in the cast and produced at M. C. Levee's vast United Studios at Hollywood, "The Isle of Lost Ships" will be discovered as that rarest of jewels—a photoplay the like of which has never been seen.

Yo-ho, me hearties! Bend a sail!

* * *

"THE GIRL of the Golden West" has joined the movies. The David Belasco success is being directed by Edwin Carewe, with J. Warren Kerrigan, Russell Simpson and Sylvia Breamer in the cast. Production is under way in Sonora, California, the story's actual locale, although disguised as Manzanita on the stage.

"Slander the Woman"

HOW MUCH does the divorce court leave a woman? How much can it leave her when the merest mention of her name in court means notoriety outside? The part she played may have been exemplary, her social position assured through her own worth. So much the worse for her—so much the better for those who would slander the woman.

Surely a promising theme for Allen Holubar's new drama, starring Dorothy Phillips and written by Jeffrey Deprend. The girl, unjustly involved in a divorce scandal, denounces the trial judge and, unable to endure the aftermath, hides herself in the Canadian snows, where Fate also drives her tra-ducer. Things happen! Suddenly! Producer Holubar, living up to his "thrill-director's" reputation, has gone to extraordinary lengths for drama here; and since the supporting cast includes George Siegmann, Rosemary Theby, Brinsley Shaw and little Richard Headrick, the woman appears to have been slandered in good company.

"Humoresque" Director Has New Job

Frank Borzage

THE FLAGS are out to welcome another big director to First National. Frank Borzage, who made "Humoresque," will do a series of specials, with Arthur Lacoby as producer, starting with Tristram Tupper's "Tenwhiffler," another "Humoresque-stage" human-interest story. Announce Frank's name—BOR-ZOGGY—when you tell your friends.

Young Makes "Wandering Daughters"

James Young

ANOTHER director "reels his own." James Young, who directed "The Masquerader," is bossing himself around the studio these days as an independent producer, working on Dana Burnett's story, "Wandering Daughters." A record for consistently excellent work over a period of years wins Mr. Young his new honors. His personal production plans will be interrupted after it is reported, he will return temporarily to Richard Walton Tully to direct "Trilby."

Continental Beauty for "Trilby"

A TRILBY to thrill Ame—Andrée Lafayette, Continental star engaged by Richard Walton Tully for his production of "Trilby." We are promised glimpses of the real Montmartre in exteriors Tully shot in Paris, but the art directors insist that when Mlle. Lafayette saw the Latin Quarter they built at the Hollywood studios she burst out in tears! and "Mon Homme."

Jackie Coogan Joins Circus

C'MON, SKINNY! Jackie Coogan, side-show freaks, circus champs, jumping horses, high-wire heroines, all in one picture! It's Coogan's "Toby Tyler, or Ten Weeks with a Circus." Acts from Ringling, Sells-Floto and other tent shows hibernating in Los Angeles performed under the big top at the studios. Thousands trooped there to fill the tents. They were really extras, men, women, children, but they paid for the privilege in lumpy old clothes and tins of milk, which Jackie turned over to the Near East Relief Committee for distribution in Armenia. Batteries of cameras and applauding spectators from 10 a. m. till late at night. Jackie did the barehack riding stunts, the story called for. The soldiers in Armenia got new scenes as would make Barnum "Toby Tyler" the Greatest Show on Earth. This follows Jackie's repertoire. Meanwhile Oliver Twist" earns special halt holidays for thousands of school-kids—and whoops of gratitude for Jackie.

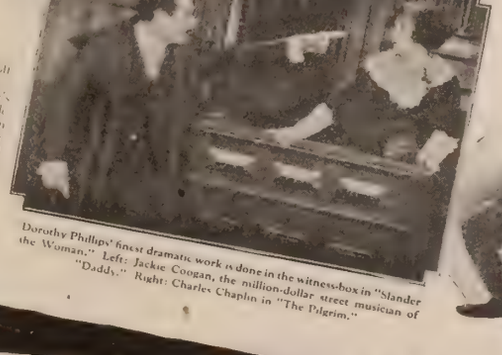
Jack London's "White Fang"

DOGSTAR STRONGHEART, a sled pack and a hundred huskies supply and supply the leads in Jack London's "White Fang," which Laurence Trimble and Jane Murfin have been filming in Alberta all winter. Further good news for fans who thrilled over "Silent Call" and "Brawn of the North": Trimble says these two were only intended as rehearsals for "White Fang." And all they were merely rehearsals! Incidentally, you'll see Canada's grand pets dog teams in the 100-mile championship run on Lake Winnewanka.



Dorothy Phillips' finest dramatic work is done in the witness-box in "Slander the Woman." Left: Jackie Coogan, the million-dollar street musician of "Daddy." Right: Charles Chaplin in "The Pilgrim."

All Dressed Up

EVERYONE will want to read the article in this issue by Jerome Lachenbruch, our able correspondent in Berlin, in which Adolph Zukor takes off the gloves and deals with American pictures.

Mr. Zukor, who has been watching audiences in Germany, France, Italy, Austria and most of the rest of Europe, sums pictures up in one word: mechanical.

The mechanism of the American film is very high; the art is comparatively low. So the mechanism stands out—everywhere.

And Mr. Lachenbruch confirms. The European audience today, susceptible to the mechanical effects, says: "Very interesting as far as it goes. But why not give us life as it really is?"

And the stock answer, of course, is: "We can't depict real life. The censors won't let us."

But that isn't always a true answer.

Art is, to a large degree, a product of sincerity.

And sincerity demands, also, intelligence, time and patience—lots of each.

American pictures today lack sincerity.

That's the trouble.

Find a sincere director and you'll find sincere pictures.

* * *

Don't think for a moment that we regard the public as highly intelligent; or that we are speaking from high-brow standards or from any standpoint other than a strictly commercial one.

We do regard the public as wanting its money's worth and as being able to distinguish between tinsel and real goods.

The average pretentious picture today reminds us of the phrase: "All dressed up and nowhere to go."

It is all dressed up—with a "catchem" title, presumptuous sub-titles, lavish sets, high-speed action, clever editing, wonderful effects, emotion getting tricks, etc., etc., but it isn't going anywhere—or getting anywhere.

And then we hear people raving about "Nanook," "Down to the Sea in Ships," "Hunting Big Game in Africa," "Driven," etc., and we know they want sincerity.

* * *

J. D. Williams is advertising, in this issue, for an exhibitor who is capable of serving as a producing and distributing executive. Universal has already engaged Eugene Roth in such a capacity.

Perhaps that is the answer. At least it is a mighty good one.

There's too much Hollywood in production; and too little of the towns and cities of this broad land—yes and of Europe and the world market.

Our ideas of production have always been to have a mighty good showman sit in on, at least, the preliminary conference.

The exhibitor is editing a lot of pictures today; but he does it by shoving them out in toto or with a ruthless pair of scissors at the last moment.

Which brings up the question of overlong features.

They are playing hob with programs today and the public is yelling about the elimination of their favorites—comedies, news, travel and cartoon subjects.

Naturally. Imagine a popular magazine filled with a serial!

We are giving some figures on the matter in our next issue—and some expressions from exhibitors.

But the best expression an exhibitor can give—to stop this very dangerous situation—is to value pictures and pay for them by their quality and not their length.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

CARL LAEMMLE has returned to New York from Universal City. Fred McConnell, serial sales manager, came East with him. The big chief of Universal pictures should feel highly proud of "The Abysmal Brute," adapted from a Jack London story and directed by Hobart Henley. A character study of the roped arena, saturated with local color and crisp incident and punctuated with real human touches, it comes to the screen as one of the best tales of the prize-ring ever visualized. Much of its success is due the director, but without the excellent interpretation of Reginald Denny, who possesses an adaptability for the title role, it might have missed some of its spark and vitality.

STILL another picture calls for encomiums. This is Vitagraph's "Masters of Men," a character study of adventure and romance during the late nineties when the Spanish-American war gripped the nation with excitement. Morgan Robertson, who fashioned this tale, was always a vigorous writer. And he has supplied the story with all the necessary essentials which hold and intrigue the imagination.

There is a fine patriotic flavor about the number which lends a great share of its appeals. Witness the bottling up of Cervera's fleet in Santiago harbor and the attempt to run the gauntlet of American ships. The climax is graphic and finely executed. Interpreted by a cast of players who are not only adaptable for their roles, but enact them with sincerity and feeling, the picture is certain to score as one of the better documents.

E. C. PATTERSON, sales manager of the Standard Film Laboratories, leaves New York for the coast this week after a two weeks' stay here. On his way East Mr. Patterson visited a number of exchange centers and reports a decided improvement in business conditions everywhere. Mr. Patterson, who has a keen knowledge of production matters, was at one time assistant to H. O. Davis when the latter was manager of Universal City.

WE must pay credit to Harold Lloyd for giving us one of the treats of the season in "Safety Last," a picture crammed full of rich comedy and thrills, the elements so perfectly balanced that it is difficult to tell just where the humor gives way to excitement. Lloyd is making consistently good pictures. He seems to be one of those rare individuals who does not believe in doing anything unless it can be done perfectly. "Safety Last" carries him to further heights—heights where he is standing in a secluded spot by himself—if you get what we mean—heights, dizzy heights too, where the spectator with faint heart must of necessity bow his head.

As someone audibly remarked in the Strand the other night: "You can't hear the orchestra because of the shrieking women—just as if they were on a Coney roller coaster and were taking a huge dip as the car hits the incline." This is a good description of the effect this picture has upon the audience. It has them laughing one minute and gasping the next. One watches the comedian scale the skyscraper who makes it so realistic that one dreads for the consequences if he loses his balance.

And here is further testimony of the excellence of the picture. We understand that it has broken the Strand record. Theatre records are broken so often by enthusiastic press agents that the "peepul" are accepting them with a grain of salt. In the case of "Safety Last," however, it is a sincere statement. There is enough solid entertainment packed away in its seven reels to make an exhibitor shout with joy. We predict broken records everywhere.

HUGO RIESENFELD and his Rialto orchestra which is augmented with several musicians from the Rivoli have taken a little flyer into vaudeville and from all reports are creating a riot of popularity. They are at the New York Palace for two weeks and have the best position on the bill. Not even Paul Whiteman and his band met with such an appreciation when they appeared several weeks ago. The maestro, whose Classical Jazz numbers have made his Rialto orchestra famous, sails for Europe on the 25th for six or seven weeks.

A FEW excerpts from a Coast letter: "Universal, by the way, is looking up just now and planning big things. Tom Meighan wants to direct. Lee Dougherty is now with Universal. George Walsh has been signed by Mary Pickford to play opposite her. Raoul Walsh is going to direct the next Fairbanks picture."

Re the exodus from the East to the Coast: "All of them obtained work soon upon arriving. One of the boys worked his way out via the Panama Canal. They are coming every old way. A lad said the other night to me, when I expressed surprise at seeing him—'There's more coming on the next train—and behind them are caravans crossing the desert—and behind them are more walking through the Imperial Valley.' Hollywood Boulevard at night looks like Broadway with the familiar faces."

"THE room was banked heavily with flowers, etc." Edward Laemmle, nephew of Carl Laemmle and a director of serials for Universal, was married last Sunday to Peppi Heller at the Cooper Carlton Hotel, Chicago. The romance of this marriage is heightened by the fact that Carl Laemmle's first job was with the bride's father at Ichenhausen, Bavaria.

NAT G. ROTHSTEIN sends a postcard and a bulletin of his activities at French Lick Springs, Indiana, whither he repaired a week ago to practice up on his golf strokes for the forthcoming film tournament.

The card reads: "Wonderful golf, wonderful weather. Tell Gillette he would rave over the tough hill course here. Schnitzler and I taking turns at trimming each other. No!—we haven't busted 90 as yet."

The bulletin reads: Weather here—A A A 1, Golf course—IMMENSE, Hotel—WONDERFUL, Water—ROTTEN, Health—OH BOY. Scores first three rounds 36 holes each between Schnitzler and Rothstein—

1st round—Rothstein 3 down.
2nd round—Schnitzler 1 down.
3rd round—Schnitzler 5 down.

Nat is surely nifty with a Niblick.

FOLLOWING in father's footsteps seems to be the aim of Lawrence J. Kane, Yale senior, who is the younger son of Arthur S. Kane, the Associated Exhibitors chieftain. The boy at New Haven was recently elected to the editorial staff of the Yale Daily News, a position much coveted in university circles. Placed in charge of the pictorial section he succeeded quickly through an executive ability unsurpassed by Dad, to raise its circulation from 1,000 to 10,000 in three weeks. Arthur S. Kane was a newspaper man before he went into pictures. . .

'N' HERE is our list of character actors who never step out of C-H-A-R-A-C-T-E-R. Theodore Roberts, George Fawcett, George Nichols (who has come along rapidly the past year), Lon Chaney, Russell Simpson, George Beban, Wallace Beery, Hobart Bosworth, Frank Campeau, George Cooper, Claude Gillingwater, Warner Oland, James Neill, Harry T. Morey, Tully Marshall, Ernest Torrence, Frank Losee, Ralph Lewis, Raymond Hatton, Frank Keenan, Charles Ogle, Jack Curtis, and Joseph J. Dowling. Many of these sterling actors do not have praises sung in their favor, yet they go on giving their best in picture after picture. In many instances they have saved the films from quickly entering the limbo of forgotten things.

'N' here is our list of character actresses who are always what they pretend to be—who never receive the plaudits which belong to YOUTH who is starred, but who are endowed with more gift at expression than most of the young stars whose pictures they support. Mary Alden, Vivia Ogden, Dale Fuller, Kate Bruce, Edith Yorke, Kathlyn Williams, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Kate Lester, Lillian Langdon, Lydia Knott, Aggie Herring, Julia Swayne Gordon, Vera Gordon, Maude George, Helen Jerome Eddy, Josephine Crowell, Edythe Chapman, Gertrude Claire, and Emily Fitzroy and Mary Carr.

These actresses are not so dominant in their roles as the actors mentioned above, principally because they are not called upon to express anything but subdued emotion. Yet the parts they portray are just as vital to a well balanced story of human frailties than the characters who embrace and fade out in a dying sunset. No star, with the possible exception of Chaplin and perhaps, Negri, is stronger than his or her supporting cast. And no picture is greater than its story.

AL'S here. We are paging Mr. Lichtman, who returned last Friday on the Aquitania from Europe where he has spent the last six weeks traveling between the principal cities of the continent arranging a distributing system for Preferred Pictures. Lichtman's return was made a little earlier than scheduled in order to reach New York before B. P. Schulberg, his partner, who is temporarily in the East, returned to Los Angeles. The three musketeers are in conference at this writing—Lichtman, Schulberg and Bachmann.

J. D. WILLIAMS is away again for a week's trip interviewing exhibitors.

Minnesota Convention Is Success

Exhibitors Raise $7,500 to Finance Work; Steffes' Talk Warmly Received

"WE are here to talk business and get right down to brass tacks," were the opening words of President Al. Steffes' annual address at the convention of the Motion Picture Owners of Minnesota, held at the West Hotel, Minneapolis, on April 10, 11, and 12, and these words typify the successful and business-like meeting.

The convention was marked by two outstanding features, the enthusiastic applause at every mention of Al. Steffes as candidate for the national presidency and the placing of the state organization on a sound, financial basis, exhibitors present putting seven thousand five hundred dollars in checks and negotiable notes into the treasury with a liklihood of the amount reaching ten thousand by the end of the week.

President Steffes in his address attacked the music tax and declared only two courses were open to submit or secure its repeal and charged that if the proper effort had been put forth during the last session of Congress we would now be relieved of this burden. He also declared that the bill to repeal the tax on admissions up to twenty-five cents was not given proper support and offered a plan for securing its passage.

He detailed his work as a member of the uniform contract committee and his success in securing reductions in certain film rentals for Minnesota exhibitors and told of going to see Will Hays in New York only after consulting with his executive committee. He denounced as propaganda the statements that he had become too friendly with Will Hays and distributor executives and told of his efforts to get in touch with Sydney Cohen during his New York visit on Minnesota exhibitors' business.

"It seems utterly impossible for a man to be active in exhibitor affairs and have the courage of his own convictions without being accused of being subsidized by producers. If there is a man in the United States who has fought the producers and distributors harder than I have bring him forth." Mr. Steffes later said, "I am sold on the idea and firmly sold that more good can be accomplished by a round table conference than by shooting bulletins and propaganda throughout the country. The time has come when your leaders must do constructive things instead of tearing down.

"It is a moral certainty Will Hays is not going to get any concessions out of me to harm exhibitors and on the other hand it may be possible to get some out of him that may benefit the exhibitors and still not jeopardize the producers to a point where they will be forced out of business."

He attacked high cost of production and exorbitant salaries paid stars who mean little to exhibitors and called for action to mitigate these evils and impress on producers who do not realize it that box offices are carrying as big a burden as they can stand up under. He deplored the constant threat made to distributors that exhibitors themselves are forming an association for the express purpose of putting them out of business and urged more constructive methods and stronger organization to get reduced film rentals which must be secured.

Al. Pramer, of Nebraska, attended the convention as the personal representative of President Cohen and praised the accomplishments of the Minnesota Association under Steffes' presidency. He promised a free and open convention at Chicago and urged a large attendance. W. D. Burford was to explain the exhibitors' distributing organization on the last day of the meeting.

At the Wednesday session organizer H. M. Richey of Michigan explained the Michigan plan for financing the national organization and made a plea for better organization of state associations following the methods which have developed his association to the high point of efficiency it enjoys. His fine address enthused the members and Joe Friedman followed it with a hard-headed business talk which loosed the purse strings of the members to the tune of $7,500. Richey on behalf of Michigan gave Minnesota a week of his time free and it was decided to secure a competent paid secretary to carry out organization work and lift some of the burden from the president's shoulders. Plans for further financing of the association were also outlined for adoption later on.

The subscription list was started by J. B. Clinton of Duluth who returned to membership after two years absence and buried the hatchet with a $600 contribution and pledge of hearty support.

Governor J. O. Preus addressed the meeting on insurance and Mayor Leach greeted the members on behalf of the city.

An unusual and enjoyable event was the ham and egg breakfast with J. F. Cubberley as host and which was attended by 152 exhibitors, the largest number ever seen together at eight-thirty in the morning.

Uniform contracts, distributing proposition, clean films, shortening of features, lowering film rentals and resolutions to be sent to Will Hays as well as the election of officers were to be disposed of on the closing day of the convention.

Leading Theatre Architect Writes NEWS Section

Bill for Repeal of Censorship in N. Y. Is Doomed to Die in Committee

THE Ways and Means Committee of the Assembly, in New York State, has definitely decided not to report out the Walker bill, calling for the repeal of motion picture censorship in the Empire State. According to a definite decision, made by Republican leaders of the Assembly, the bill is to die in committee. Joseph A. McGinnies, chairman of the committee, in discussing the situation, said: "There is no disposition on the part of any member to report the bill out. There has been no discussion of the measure in any of the weekly conferences of the Republican members of the Assembly. Unless there is a motion to report out the bill, it will remain exactly where it is."

This statement is important in view of the fact that the present session of the legislature has only three weeks to run. There is little likelihood of any action being taken in the Assembly.

The one or two other bills of interest to the industry appear to be dormant. This is particularly desirable of the bill which would impose a six per cent. tax on the gross receipts of motion picture theatres and many other forms of amusement. Regardless of politics, this bill is generally conceded as being too drastic and inclined to present a tax which would force many a motion picture theatre out of business. Both Charles L. O'Reilly, and Samuel I. Berman, of the state association of exhibitors, are closely following this and other bills, and are in hopes to have them die in committee.

The bill relative to miniature machines has reached the order of third reading and may eventually pass. The bill is of little interest to the industry as a whole.

War Promised Unethical Film Salesmen

The St. Louis Film Salesmen's Club has promised to co-operate with the St. Louis Film Board of Trade in eliminating film salesmen guilty of unethical practices. "We don't believe we have any bad boys among us," Tom McKean, president of the club, told the exchange managers at last week's joint luncheon, "but if there are, we will certainly help you to drive them out of the business."

This is in accordance with the rider appended to the new uniform contract now effective between exhibitors and distributors of the M. P. P. and D. of America.

New Picture Epoch Likely as Dinner Result

Dignitaries Discuss Broader Viewpoints at Farewell to "Nanook" Producer

A NEW epoch in motion pictures which will have a profound influence in developing a broader American international viewpoint, is believed by a number of statesmen, diplomats, authors, publishers, dramatists and scientists to have been started at a dinner given at the Waldorf Tuesday night by the editor and publisher of Asia magazine for Robert J. Flaherty, F. R. G. S., who produced the film, "Nanook of the North," the realistic story of the Eskimo. Mr. Flaherty left Thursday for Savaii, in the Samoan group of islands in the Southern Pacific, where he will make for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation a picture that will do for the South Sea Islanders what he did for the Eskimo in "Nanook."

More than one hundred leading representatives of international statesmanship and finance, newspaper and magazine, literature the arts, the theatre and motion pictures acclaimed Mr. Flaherty as the prophet of a new school of films.

Colonel Lloyd C. Griscom, president of the American Asiatic Association, former Minister to Japan and Persia and Ambassador to Italy and Brazil, presided. A group of representatives of those most keenly interested in the extension of American knowledge of foreign affairs joined in a statement which expresses the spirit of the undertaking. Among those who are backing this new undertaking are: John W. Davis, former Ambassador to Great Britain; Lloyd C. Griscom, Mrs. Willard D. Straight, Mrs. Gertrude Atherton, John H. Finlay, associate editor New York Times, and former Commissioner of Education of New York State; Mrs. Oliver Harriman, John Grier Hibben, president of Princeton University; Col. Edward M. House, Will Irwin, James G. McDonald, secretary of the Foreign Policy Association; Frank L. Polk, former Under-Secretary of State; Franklin D. Roosevelt, ex-Assistant Secretary of the Navy; Miss Lillian D. Wald, Jesse Lynch Williams, Louis D. Froelick, editor of "Asia;" Chester B. Van Tassel, publisher of "Asia;" Miss Ida M. Tarbell, Stephen P. Duggan, Director Institute of International Education; Otto H. Kahn, General Tasker H. Bliss, James Montgomery Flagg, William Jay Schieffelin, Miss Rachel Crothers, Henry L. Stoddard of the New York Evening Mail; Edwin R. Embree, secretary of the Rockefeller Foundation; Rev. Karl Reiland, Rector of St. George's Church; Walter Damrosch, Norman H. Davis, ex-Assistant Secretary of State.

This group expressed their belief that there is need in the country for a school of motion pictures telling the story of various races of the world from the realities of their daily lives, in such dramatic form that they will be equally popular with the present studio-made "feature" film and possibly more so.

Colonel Griscom, presiding, pointed to the national significance of the move and on the tremendous opportunity offered by the movies for broadening our national horizon. He described particularly the necessity for people who are leading the thought of the country to establish a connection with the men who are doing the work of developing the movies artistically.

Will H. Hays, President of the Motion Picture Producers' and Distributors' Association of America, said that his Association was pledged not only to see that the films that go abroad representing American life shall correctly represent America, but "to bring to America the true portrayal of the life of other nations. Every picture which accurately, sympathetically and with dramatic value portrays one people to other people is a successful World Peace Conference. To this extent the men who make such pictures are doing the work of statesmen."

Among the other speakers were: Robert T. Kane, production manager of Famous Players-Lasky; Louis D. Frolick, editor of the Asia Magazine; Dr. John H. Finely, associate editor of the New York Times; Dr. Osborn, of the American Museum. Telegrams and letters were read from Charles E. Hughes, Theodore Roosevelt, John W. Davis and Jesse L. Lasky.

Those present included:

Lloyd C. Griscom, president of the American Asiatic Association and former Ambassador to Japan; Dr. John H. Finley, former Commissioner of Education of New York; General J. G. Harbord, Mary Garrett Hay, president of the Women's City Club; Will H. Hays, Eugene J. Zukor, assistant to the president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Otto H. Kahn, Gilbert Miller, of Charles Frohman, Inc.; Charles R. Crane, former United States Minister to China; Mr. and Mrs. Courtlandt D. Barnes, Karl A. Bickel, president of the United Press Association; Bruce Bliven, C. T. Brainerd, Herbert Croly, of the New Republic; Rachel Crothers, Norman H. Davis, former Assistant Secretary of State; John Drew, Maximilian Foster, Herbert Adams Gibbons, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Irwin, Waldemar Kaempffert, E. W. Kemble, Frederic G. Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Fairfield Osborn, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Karl A. Reiland, Edward Robinson, director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art; Tony Sarg, William Jay Schieffelin, Henry L. Stoddard, of the Evening Mail; Miss Ida M. Tarbell, Charles Hanson Towne, Louis Wiley, of the New York Times; Miss Lillian Wald, of the Henry Street Settlement; Maurice Wertheim, of the Theatre Guild; Mrs. Norman deR. Whitehouse, Miss Anna Bogue, L. W. Boynton, James W. Brown, of Editor and Publisher; Philip Marshall Brown, Professor of International Law at Princeton University; Roland Clark, explorer and writer; Maurice coster, vice-president of the International Western Electric Company; Mrs. W. Murray Crane, Edwin R. Embree, secretary of the Rockefeller Foundation; Miss Gertrude Emerson, associate editor of the Asia Magazine; Miss Alice B. First Nat'l Stockholders to Hold Annual Meeting

THE annual stockholders' meeting of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will convene at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, Atlantic City, N. J., Tuesday, April 17. Present indications are that nearly all of the First National executives and stockholders will be present at the sessions.

While no definite program has been announced, it is understood that detailed plans for the coming season will be considered and passed upon, including some new contracts with important producing organizations about to be closed. The present indications are that the program for the new year will be in excess of sixty pictures.

Shortly after the close of the meetings it is expected that First National will issue an announcement covering the product which will be offered to exhibitors during the coming year.

Naked Truth Committee Strips for Action

Everything indicates that the A. M. P. A. naked truth dinner to be given at the Biltmore Hotel on April 28th will be the most successful of the three annual events to date. With a seating capacity limited to 400 and applications for tickets coming in by the dozen daily, paraphrasing Walter Camp, the outlook is that every seat will be reserved at the time that the Prize Bloomer, the nature of which is being kept as a surprise, points the way to the dining hall.

The biggest crisis was passed last week when, at the regular Tuesday meeting of the dinner committee, all members who absented themselves from the meeting or who had failed to attend rehearsals regularly, were automatically dropped from the casts. Their places were speedily filled by capable volunteers, with the result that by midweek the rehearsals were proceeding with the precision and pep of a Broadway revue.

Loew Launches Thirty-House Circuit

Plan Contemplates Booking of Artists and Productions from Coast to Coast

FORMATION of a coast to coast circuit of picture theatres comprising twenty Loew controlled and ten affiliated houses for the booking of productions and artists is well under way, according to announcements this week from the offices of Loew's Incorporated.

Marcus Loew, on Wednesday, announced the proposed booking circuit as the newest of the Loew activities and selection of Walter F. Keefe as the general booking manager.

The venture will doubtless be operated as one of the Loew subsidiaries, although it is the outgrowth of recent conferences among the owners and managers of the high class or deluxe picture theatres throughout the country.

The offices of the new circuit are located in New York City, and are being fitted this week.

Mr. Loew's decision to systematically organize the booking and routing of feature artists and attractions and distinctive productions now required in his own and all other high class picture houses, was made after a study of the results in the San Francisco and Los Angeles theatres, which recently played a series of feature acts and elaborate productions.

The new circuit is composed of theatres in the larger cities. Announcement of the specific houses is withheld pending decision in several cities where there is more than one desirable affiliated house available. One of Loew's newest theatres probably will head the list of two New York and two Brooklyn houses.

E. A. Schiller, general representative, Loew's, Inc., and Walter Keefe recently completed separate investigation of the picture theatres in the larger cities in the country, and their reports of a universal demand on the part of picture theatre owners for artists of box office calibre and of a standard necessary to build up picture theatre programmes which now are demanded in the high price and high class houses, probably influenced Mr. Loew's decision for an immediate start on the formation of the circuit.

The aim of the new circuit is to do as a unit what Mr. Loew and other theatre owners have been attempting to do with their picture theatres toward the development of the "divertisement" part of their programme.

The lining up of desirable material for the houses already in hand is of first importance and Mr. Loew's intention in the matter of any affiliated house is that it be of suitable size and tone of management to conform to the very highest standard of present-day picture theatre entertainment, and that the houses be selected on this basis only and irrespective of their picture buying affiliation or ownership connections.

None of the houses comprising Loew Vaudeville Circuit are included in the tentative plan and the conduct of The Marcus Loew Booking Agency is not in any way affected by the picture theatre circuit.

It was stated at the Loew offices that the complete list of houses in the circuit will be announced upon the return from the Pacific Coast of Marcus Loew and E. A. Schiller, who start west in a few days. Their trip will include stops in several key cities where more than one desirable theatre is available for the new circuit.

Daylight Saving Doomed in St. Louis

Daylight Saving has very little chance of passing the Board of Aldermen in St. Louis this year, although considerable agitation in favor of the clock-change has been worked up by its proponents.

A poll of the incoming board reveals that but one man, Alderman Clinton B. Udell, of the Twenty-third Ward, is pledged to vote for a bill for Daylight Saving.

Radio Discontinues Sending Copyright Music

The Westinghouse Electric Company is the latest to encounter the tax of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. As a result of the tax imposed by the society, the electric company has discontinued sending out music from the WJZ station in Newark on which the copyright is owned or controlled by the society.

The action was taken last Tuesday when Westinghouse cancelled the broadcasting of the light opera, "Robin Hood." It was the result of the society notifying the broadcasters that they must pay license fees ranging from $200 to 5,000 a year.

Black Interests Again Deny Monopoly Charge

IN the last of the answers to be filed in response to the amended complaint of the Federal Trade Commission in its complaint against Famous Players and its associates, actual or supposed, Alfred S. Black and the Black New England Theatres, Inc., about the same ground is covered as in answers previously noted in these columns. Like the others, it "denies the allegation and defiies the allegator." The denials include the statement that Black is no longer connected with the New England Theatres corporation.

Ohio Sunday Opening Fight Again Waxes Hot

Although at one time the fight between the movie exhibitors of Findlay, Ohio, clerical associations and politicians, had appeared on the surface to be settled, it has again broken out more fiercely than ever.

In the early part of the squabble Mayor Rodabaugh of that city washed his hands of the affair, and it appeared that the five-year fight to exhibit cinema productions on Sunday had been won. The Mayor at the time declared that the city would entertain a "hands off" policy, and that clerical or other interests must, if they wished, pursue their efforts unaided by the city government.

Picture theatre owners assuming that the fight had been won opened on Sunday with the result that those of braver heart were arrested. Plans were then made by the exhibitors to enforce the Blue laws to the extreme on the following Sunday. The plan failed through lack of co-operation on the part of the exhibitors.

The result of this contemplated action on the part of the exhibitors gathered force among them with the result that on April 5, six of Findlay's business men were arrested and bound over to the grand jury on charges of unlawful operation of their stores on April 1, Sunday. Two others, against whom similar action was taken, failed to appear in court.

The affidavits were sworn out by representatives of the picture theatre owners of Findlay.

A meeting will be arranged between the warring factions in the Sunday closing controversy with the directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Findlay at an early date in an effort to settle the affair for all times.

Week Brings Many New Corporations

The past week brought the incorporation of motion picture companies in New York State showing the following directors and capitalization: 161st Street Amusement Corporation, $500, L. I. Fink, M. L. Elkin, Etta London, New York; Simmonds Pictures Corporation, $500, Joseph Simmonds, Rebecca Simmonds, Rose Rosenberg, New York; Edgar MacGregor, Inc., $25,000, E. J. MacGregor, O. W. MacGregor, S. R. Golding, New York City; Universal Electric Stage Lighting Co., Inc., $400,000, A. T. Kliegl, J. H. Kliegl, Leopoldine Kliegl, New York; Hildor Amusement Corporation, Mt. Vernon, $50,000, Maxwell L. Crames, Seth V. Elting, Aaron Appel, New York; Median Photo-Plays, Inc., $50,000, Nan Sacks, A. L. Griffith, Joseph Schottland, New York; Selznick Distributing Corporation, $500, William A. Sands, Myron Selznick, Hyman Winik, New York; Bim's Realty Corporation, $10,000, Anna Davidson, Edna Bayard, L. Lawrence Green, New York.

Loew Statement Shows Gross Income Decrease, but a Net Profit Increase

DESPITE the fact that Loew's, Inc., shows a decrease in gross income for the period of September 1, 1922, to March 11, 1923, over the same period in 1921-1922 the financial statement shows a considerable gain in net profit for the period.

The net operating profit for 1922-23 is given as $1,556,554, which is $406,653 more than the net profit of the same period the previous year. In 1921-22 the total was $1,149,901.

The gross income of the current period is given as $11,202,329, which is $410,544 less than the previous year.

One reason for the excess profit in the current statement over that of last year is the reduced cost of operating theatres and office buildings owned by the corporation. These expenditures are placed at $5,055,424, a decrease of $1,552,169. The figure reached last year was $6,507,593.

To partially offset this, the distributing end of Metro took a decided jump to $1,257,849 from $650,292 last year.

American Pictures Immature, Say Foreigners

Are Declared Most Popular of All, but Would Improve If Incidents Were Not Forced

By Jerome Lachenbruch

ADOLPH ZUKOR stopped long enough on his tour of European capitals to take a look at the EFA studios in Berlin, have a few conferences with Ike Blumenthal, the results of which will be published when he returns to America, and to give me a few minutes' interview while shaving, before scooting off to London. Mr. Zukor confirmed the published report that the studios in Berlin and in London would cease to be used as regular producing units, and for the immediate future at least would be leased to local companies for production purposes.

In his visits to Paris, Rome, Prague, Budapest, and half a dozen other Continental cities, Mr. Zukor found that American pictures are especially well received in this out-of-season period. He ascribes the success of our films abroad to their superior editing.

Mr. Zukor, upon invitation, then spoke of his plan to give a prize every year to the best picture produced anywhere in the world, the jury of award to consist of an international group of persons interested in the motion picture from a point of view other than that of business. This proposal of Mr. Zukor's reveals his belief in the artistic future of the photoplay, and is an added proof of the fact that he looks upon his personal enterprise as a permanent force in the social life of his generation.

Mr. Zukor indirectly feels it necessary to stimulate the artistic side of picture production through the offer of a prize. During a month's tour of France, I took occasion to find out why American films draw foreign audiences better than does the native product. What I learned bears out Mr. Zukor's belief that our pictures could be greatly improved if we went at the matter from a new point of view. In Nice, for example, I saw the French version of "Way Down East," which was made palatable for the French by an excellent, short introduction that described the restricted attitude toward life of our ancestors (of fifty years ago). The picture was immensely successful, thanks to Miss Gish and to Mr. Griffith, though not satisfying the audience completely. It was so much better made than the usual photoplay shown that the audience was deeply appreciative. One had to grant, as always in American pictures, a lot of puritanical assumptions which we exaggerate in our photoplays. Perhaps the most overworked screen assumption is that incidents never happen naturally, but must be made to happen by the author. Hence, the villain always overhears a plot, intercepts a letter, and so forth.

Despite our clumsiness in these matters, I venture to say that three-fifths of the pictures shown in France are American, and they are preferred to all others. In talking with Frenchmen, discussion always came back to, "Why don't you Americans make your pictures more true to life?" I responded, like every loyal producer looking for a scape-goat, "The censors won't let us." But I couldn't convince myself of the fact, for I knew that before censorship, American pictures were little different from what they now are.

The criticism by the French hits the biggest fault in our productions, their insincerity. And they are so because our screen writers, directors and producers have one view of life for private use and another which they assume their audiences want to see on the screen.

A far-sighted producer, watching a French audience swallow our falsely romantic productions with a forbearing smile, would come to the conclusion that France accepts our pictures merely because of their superior mechanism. And in this I include scenario, editing, direction, lighting and costuming. Without these advantages, our stories would not stand much chance in the European market. On the other hand, the French program picture is on the plane of the American 1914 variety. Were our photoplays truly convincing, the French public would not go to the American cinema merely because it offers better entertainment than the home-made variety; they would stampede the theatres in which they are shown. Such theatres would be sold out in advance, and bookings would be computed in terms of "runs." The conclusion is forced upon one that American pictures succeed in France, as they do in Germany, because of their technical superiority. But unless something happens, this cannot last. Our competitors are learning our technical secrets.

I think some magazine might garner a lot of new readers by giving a prize for the best answer to the following question: "Why do American producers go out of their way to distort life on the screen?" Are we to think that American audiences will always accept the conventional romantic falsehoods that the screen has been presenting these many years? Is it not plausible to believe that Americans have personal experiences similar to their French, their Italian, or their German contemporaries? I think Americans have instincts much the same as Europeans, and that it is about time motion picture producers and directors stopped insulting their intelligence by giving them pictures, labeled as "serious problems," which have the intellectual content of a First Reader.

One of the many things that American motion picture producers can learn from their continental confreres is that there are many types of stories that have never been produced in America; stories which the reading departments of our large producing organizations have recommended time and again for picturization, and which have always been refused by those in actual charge of production. The reasons for rejecting stories that tell the simple tale of an unsophisticated person, for instance, seems to lie in the fact that we do not know how to picturize fine shades of feeling. When we want to psychologize or philosophize on the screen, we produce some intricate and elaborate technical picture like "Earthbound." When the Continentals wish to do the same thing, they make their actors, not their cameramen and their electricians, do most of the work.

Recently I saw a picture made by some of the Moscow Art Theatre players, Tolstoi's "Polikuschka," with the famous Moskwin in the title role. The production was made in three rooms, in an unheated studio, with poor lights and no facilities for indoor long shots. The photographer had to limit himself to semi-close-ups almost exclusively; yet the result was an unusual picture. The acting was devoid of tricks, and the audience lost itself in the joys and the sorrows of Polikuschka, the thieving peasant who, in trying finally to be honest to a great trust, fails through no cause of his own. The picture had moments of broad humor, and several powerful acting scenes. However, one must always remember that Polikuschka was played by the expressive Moskwin.

At the end of the performance, the departing audience discussed the production with more intelligence than some of our reviewers exhibit. One heard comments on the pictorial quality of certain scenes, the dramatic strength of different motives, and the satisfactory ensemble playing. In other words, a German audience wants to take its photoplay entertainment seriously; it accepts the screen at the face value it puts upon itself, namely, as a mirror of life. Our audiences do, too; but we have been deceived so often that we are becoming very skeptical. As a consequence of the critical Continental attitude toward the screen, producers abroad (and this point of view is general in Europe), have tried to develop sincerity in their productions. They are never sincere when they point a picture exclusively for America. Then they think that they must have a certain percentage of sugar to serve the American taste. Naturally these pictures are nearly always complete failures. That sincerely made foreign pictures do not always earn the approval of their audiences is due to imperfect technique rather than to dishonesty of artistic purpose.

Stories that do not seem to have dramatic content to our present day production units, but which every reading department knows are charged with drama, still remain to be screened. We must do a little study, however, to discover new ways to bring out in picture form the ideas that gallop through a character's brain. I admit the job is difficult; especially difficult for us now that we have gotten into the habit of working according to formulas. We think in terms of "heart interest," "mother interest," and so forth, instead of artistic verity.

Sometimes I think the motion picture industry (or art), ought to take a six months' rest from the production of dramatic pictures and give us a season of ridiculous farce. Let the producing units kid some of their own "serious problem" pictures, and they will earn a lot of money, while at the same time clearing the air for a leap forward into a new era of photoplay production.

Expert Tells Criticisms of Foreigners

JEROME LACHENBRUCH has from time to time contributed articles to MOTION PICTURE NEWS which have aroused considerable interest. In this present one he discusses a subject that should be of interest to the entire industry. Admitting that American made pictures are the most popular in Europe, at the same time he points out the defects in them and tells how they could be improved so that they would be absolute riots and be booked for long runs. Mr. Luchenbruch is an expert on pictures and his travels over Europe have given him an intimate touch with conditions there. He was formerly connected with the Goldwyn Home Office.

Coast Exposition Plans Center in New York

Delegation Coming to Invite Dignitaries to Fete Scheduled for July

PLANS for the Motion Picture Exposition, which will be held at Los Angeles from July 2 to August 4, in connection with the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the enunciation of the Monroe Doctrine, are now centering around New York.

Madge Bellamy, Thomas H. Ince star, is the official representative of the Exposition and presented to Mayor Hylan an invitation from Mayor Cryer, of Los Angeles, to visit that city during the celebration. Miss Bellamy is making one of the most remarkable tours in the history of motion pictures. She will visit more than 30 big cities and present to the Mayors invitations similar to the one given Mayor Hylan. She also will visit Governors and other prominent State and National officials.

Before coming to New York she stopped in Chicago, presented an invitation to Mayor Dever and then proceeded to Albany, where she was received by Gov. Smith. She is accompanied by her mother on the tour.

Miss Bellamy was the forerunner of a big delegation from the Coast city. This delegation left Los Angeles April 8 in a special train and proceeded to New Orleans, where they boarded the steamship "Momus," and will reach New York on that boat next Monday. Their trip will be made under the supervision of the Southern Pacific railroad. A number of motion picture stars are in the party, among them Ruth Roland. The delegation left Los Angeles as the second section of the Sunset Limited, their special train consisting of a baggage car, a tourist car, a diner and seven compartment cars.

Upon arriving in New York they will be met by the Mayor's Reception Committee for Distinguished Guests and entertained in royal style. Motion picture people in every branch of the industry in New York also will entertain the visitors.

Mayor Hylan received Miss Bellamy in the famous "Blue Room" at the City Hall, and when she had extended the invitation to him to visit Los Angeles during the Exposition he said:

"It will give me great pleasure to go there if my plans permit. Please convey my thanks to Mayor Cryer, and when you return to the Coast, tell the people of the land of the setting sun of my great admiration for them. Tell the motion picture people also of my faith in their splendid work."

Madge Bellamy, Ince star, photographed with Thomas H. Ince upon her departure on a tour of 30 cities in the interests of the Motion Picture Exposition

In her tour of the country Miss Bellamy is scheduled to visit Salt Lake City, Omaha, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Harrisburg, Columbus, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Houston, Tex.; Fort Worth, Dallas, San Antonio and El Paso, besides many other cities.

The Los Angeles Exposition will be an international event of great importance. It has been indorsed by President Harding, and Congress has authorized the striking of a commemorative coin in honor of the affair.

The administrative end of the Exposition is presided over by Walter J. Reynolds, with Frank B. Davison as Director General. The following are acting as an Advisory Council:

Actors' Equity Association, American Society of Cinematographers, Assistant Directors' Association, Burston Films, Inc.; Chester Bennett Productions, Christie Film Co., Charles Chaplin studios, Century Film Corporation, Charles Ray Productions, Inc.; C. L. Chester Productions, Douglas Fairbanks Pictures Corporation, Electrical Illuminating Engineers' Society, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, Goldwyn Producing Corporation, Graf Productions, Inc.; Hal E. Roach studios, Hamilton White Comedies, Inc.; Thomas H. Ince studios, Joseph M. Schenck Enterprises, King Vidor Productions, Los Angeles Theatres' Association, Louis B. Mayer Productions, Los Angeles Film Exchange Board of Trade, Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association of Southern California, Motion Picture Directors' Association, Motion Picture Art Directors' Association, Mary Pickford Company, Metro Pictures Corporation, Mack Sennett Films Corporation, Robertson-Cole Studios, Inc.; Rockett Lincoln Film Co., Renco Film Co., Screen Writers' Guild of America, B. P. Schulberg Productions, Selznick Pictures Corporation, Selig Polyscope Co., the Vitagraph Co., Universal Film Manufacturing Co., United Studios, Inc., Western Motion Picture Advertisers, Warner Brothers, Willatt Films, Inc.

Motion picture stars will act as queens of the various celebrations held during the Exposition.

Women's Committee Says Pictures Are Clean

THE movies of Springfield, Mass., are clean as far as can be determined. That is the decision of a representative committee of local clubwomen, appointed by the Springfield Federation of Women's Clubs. First reports of the censorship by public opinion, a rather novel scheme that has been tried out here for some weeks now, have been made at a meeting of the committee. Complaint was made of but one theatre and that was slight.

Delegations from all women's clubs have kept every show covered for several weeks now, from the news reels, current topics, and comedies, to the feature pictures. They have decided either that Springfield is particularly fortunate in the type of pictures shown, or that it is but representative of the rest of the country.

Oregon Boosts Traveling Tent Show Fees

Motion picture exhibitors are not complaining at the new ordinance invoked at Eugene, Ore., to increase the license fee of traveling tent shows, with which, in the form of circus and carnival, Oregon has been deluged. The Eugene city council has agreed with resident showmen to double or treble the $17.50 weekly fee collected from traveling shows.

The City of Portland has gone even further and has pending an ordinance to prohibit street carnivals in the city. The carnival companies were warned of such action a year ago, with the promise that this year they would not be permitted within the city limits. Motion picture men, especially in the suburbs, have repeatedly complained to the council about the proximity of visiting carnivals, merry-go-rounds and other tented amusements.

Report Shows Increase in Foreign Sales

Commerce Report, under date of March 26, shows renewed interest in American Film exports and sales abroad. Consul-General Stuart J. Fuller of Tientsin, surveys the film possibilities of Tientsin and Pekin. The China Theatres (Ltd.), a British concern managed by A. Bari, and the Pathe-Phono-Cinema-Chine, a French concern, both of Tientsin, control practically all the motion picture theatres of Pekin and Tientsin.

Seating capacity of all these houses ranges from 300 to 900. Admission prices in local currency or Mex., to the theatres patronized by foreigners are $1 and $1.50. In theatres run for the native Chinese, prices range from 10 to 40 cents, Mex. In the Chinese theatres two shows are given daily, one in the afternoon and one in the evening.

New Title is Suggested for Mary Pickford's Next

"THE STREET SINGER" is the latest title under consideration for the new Mary Pickford feature picture, now in process of production. While there have been many others submitted and practically accepted, it is reported that the new title of "The Street Singer" is meeting with unusual favor. The story has to do with Spanish characters and romance, and will be a costume play of Spanish locale.

Selznick Corp. Only to Distribute

Company Under New Officers Takes Over All of Select's Exchanges and Product

AN announcement from the Selznick headquarters in New York this week tells of the passing of the Select Pictures Corporation and of the advent of the Selznick Distributing Corporation into the distributing field under a new administration and with a new set of policies. The Selznick Distributing Corporation, according to the announcement, has taken over all of Select's exchanges, both here and abroad, and with these exchange offices all the product that has been heretofore handled by Select.

The announcement further states that the Selznick Distributing Corporation will not engage in producing activities of any kind, and that it stands ready to negotiate contracts for independent productions meeting its standards.

The new officers are announced as follows: W. C. J. Doolittle, president; Myron Selznick, vice-president; Ralph B. Ittelson, vice-president; Walter Jerome Green, secretary and treasurer; and Charles E. Pain, chairman of the board of directors. The full board of directors comprises the officers previously mentioned, together with Mark Hyman, attorney-at-law, of New York, and M. C. Levee, president of United Studios, Los Angeles.

The Selznick Distributing Corporation has taken over the sales personnel of the old Select organization both in the field and at the home office.

It is also announced that Lewis J. Selznick is to have no hand in the management of the affairs of the company. He is rendering the board of directors his services in a purely advisory capacity, it is declared.

In connection with negotiations for independent product to go through Selznick Distributing Corporation, President Doolittle makes the following announcement:

"To afford absolute protection to producers," says Mr. Doolittle, "Selznick Distributing Corporation will deposit each producer's portion of the receipts in a special Trust Fund. This means that the money that is coming to each producer is handled separately, and as sacred and inviolable trust receipts, and that no one but the producer can withdraw, or use, or touch that money."

The Selznick announcement contains the following outline of its new executive personnel:

"W. C. J. Doolittle, president, is also the vice-president of the First National Bank of Trenton, N. Y., and is extremely active and well known in banking circles throughout New York State. Mr. Doolittle will be in active command of all affairs and policies of the company.

"Myron Selznick, vice-president, established a reputation for himself by the production of such successes as, 'One Week of Love,' 'Reported Missing,' 'A Man's Home' and the entire Elaine Hammerstein series. Myron Selznick will personally supervise the acquisition of product.

"Ralph B. Ittelson, vice-president, is of the law firm of San, Ittelson and Van Voorhis.

"Walter Jerome Green, secretary and treasurer, is vice-president of the Utica National Bank of Utica, N. Y. Mr. Green will be in personal charge of all matters of finance.

"Charles E. Pain, chairman of the board of directors, is a lawyer of Chicago and Los Angeles, and attorney for several of the largest industrial and banking corporations in the country."

Goldwyn Cameraman Wins Coast Golf Event

JOHNNIE MUSCALL, Goldwyn cameraman, carried off the honors in the Spring Golf tournament of the Motion Picture Golf Association on the course of the California Country Club last Sunday. There were 68 entrants in the event and Muscall's gross score of 84 gave him the Larry Semon cup.

Competition for the Motion Picture News cup for second best gross score resulted in a tie among Howard Hawks of Morosco Productions, Al Crowley of the Goldwyn Exchange and Mike Farley of the Fox studio. Each had an 87.

The Nat Deverich low net cup went to Babe Hardy with a 63. His handicap was 26 and his gross score 89. The second low net cup went to William Farnum with a 68. His handicap was 24 and his gross 92.

The match play prizes were won by Harry Beaumont, Al Ripley, Wallace McDonald, Gene Hornbostel, Walter Hall, George Ovey, Richard Schayer, Sam Warner, Brandon Hurst, Clyde Cook, Slim Summerville, Colin Kennedy and Tom Kennedy.

Fox Wins When Copyright Suit Is Reversed

Brushing aside what a layman would call an unimportant legal technicality, the Supreme Court of the United States, just before adjourning, reversed the District Court and Circuit Court of Appeals and sustained the Fox Film Corporation's claim to copyright on "Over the Hills to the Poorhouse" and "Over the Hills from the Poorhouse," thus outlawing dramas other than theirs based on those of Will Carleton poems.

Complete Section Covering Construction, Remodeling and Equipment of Motion Picture Theatres, by Thomas W. Lamb, Presented to NEWS Readers

STARTING on Page 1911 of this issue will be found a special supplement devoted to the construction, remodeling and equipment of Motion Picture Theatres and containing data and recommendations of exceptional worth. This material has been prepared by Thomas W. Lamb, widely known theatre architect, insuring the authenticity of the information.

Every exhibitor will find it worth while to peruse this section, covering, as it does, the type of city, the location of the theatre and its entrance, commercially practicable methods of construction, advice on up-keep, and the like. It will aid the exhibitor in judging of the suitability of locations in his vicinity for additional theatres, and may point out the answer to the problem of the exhibitor whose theatre is running at a loss, although carefully managed.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS regularly publishes articles dealing with the more or less technical phases of the theatre. These articles ordinarily appear in the regular Theatre Construction and Equipment Section. This week's special supplement, prepared by Thomas W. Lamb, is simply an extension, both in scope and detail, of those articles which appear weekly in the regular Construction Section.

The comprehensive treatment embodied in this special article is the result of the continuous inquiries received by MOTION PICTURE NEWS for information and plans on the construction, remodeling and equipping of motion picture theatres. By presenting in such a complete manner this information, it is possible to refer to this article in answer to all such inquiries.

Often the problem confronting the prospective theatre builder is one of securing bids from various companies who manufacture material and equipment especially for the theatre. The advertising embodied in this special supplement is representative of companies that are exceptionally active in this field and will thus serve as a directory. Reprints of this section may be obtained from MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Woody Resignation Is Surprise

Vice-President of Select Withdraws to Enter Upon New Proposition

The announcement that John S. Woody has resigned as Vice-President and General Manager of Select Pictures Corporation comes as a distinct surprise to the industry as a whole, but the fact that Mr. Woody has been considering such a move has been known for some time by W. C. J. Doolittle, President of the newly organized Selznick Distributing Corporation, and his associates.

John S. Woody

For some time before the Selznick company became involved in the difficulties which they have finally overcome, Mr. Woody has been seriously considering a proposition which he states offers him, by far, the greatest opportunity of his career. At the time the matter was first broached to him, however, he felt that he should remain with the Selznick forces until such time as they might surmount the problems with which they were confronted. Now that the crisis has been passed and the new organization has struck its stride, he feels that he can now conscientiously sever old ties for the new.

Mr. Doolittle has realized that there is no inducement he could offer which would persuade Mr. Woody to revoke his decision to leave the organization, and he reluctantly and with the sincerest regret accepted Mr. Woody's resignation. Mr. Woody's letter to Mr. Doolittle concisely covers the entire situation. It is as follows:

"It is with genuine regret that I hand you my resignation as Vice-President and General Manager of Select Pictures Corporation.

"Personally I have enjoyed every moment of my association with your good self in the now perfected reorganization of the Selznick Enterprises, and if I have been of any assistance to you in the realization of its purpose, I am indeed happy.

"Will consider it a real kindness on your part to relieve me at the earliest possible moment. I am anxious to get my new plans in motion before the close of April.

"My advice on any question in the future, regardless of my connection, is yours for the asking and, needless to say, I will be glad to cooperate with you in every conceivable way—nothing but good luck for the new organization is my earnest wish."

In a statement issued this week Mr. Woody says: "Although I was eager to embark in the new undertaking some time ago there were many reasons why I felt that it was incumbent on me to remain with this organization until I could feel assured that all its difficulties were behind it. I felt a personal obligation to many of the creditors, to my host of exhibitor friends, and to my associates and pals in the field."

Metro to Release "An Old Sweetheart of Mine"

James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem, "An Old Sweetheart of Mine," has been converted into a photoplay by Harry Garson, with Elliott Dexter and Helen Jerome Eddy in the leading roles. It will be released by Metro.

For the boy-and-girl episodes, in the first part of the picture Pat Moore takes the role of the boy and Mary Jane Irving of the girl.

The adaptation for the screen is by Louis Duryear Lighton, photographed by L. William O'Connell, and edited by Violet Blair. Joseph Wenght is the art director.

Scenes from "Backbone," a Distinctive picture for Goldwyn release.

"Ragged Edge" Distinctive Release by Goldwyn

"The Ragged Edge," a romantic tale of China and an island in the South Seas, is the second of the Distinctive Pictures Corporation's productions to be distributed by Goldwyn. The release date for "The Ragged Edge" is May 14.

Alfred Lunt, who makes his first screen appearance in a stellar role in "Backbone," is the leading member of the cast of "The Ragged Edge." Playing opposite him is Mimi Palmeri, a young actress new to both stage and screen, for whom Distinctive is predicting a brilliant film career.

Others in the cast are Wallace Erskine, George MacQuarrie, Grace Griswold, Alice May, Charles Fang, Charles Slattery, and Christian Frank. "The Ragged Edge" was directed for Distinctive by Harmon Weight.

Featured Players Sign for Universal-Jewel

J. Warren Kerrigan and Anna Q. Nilsson have been signed to be featured in a new Universal-Jewel production, according to word from Universal City. It is to be a Harry Garson production.

No name has been selected for the picture. It is being adapted from an original story by John H. Blackwood.

Garson expects to commence shooting by April 23rd. About eight weeks will be consumed in photographing the picture.

Fox to Start "Six Cylinder Love" Shortly

In May or June Fox will start production on the West Coast of "Six Cylinder Love," William Anthony McGuire's comedy, which was one of last season's biggest New York hits, and is now playing on the road.

Three Women Players Are Signed by First Nat'l

First National has just placed under long-time contracts Sylvia Breamer, Andree Lafayette, and Virginia Brown Faire.

Miss Breamer is completing her portrayal of The Girl in Edwin Carewe's production of "The Girl of the Golden West" for First National. Following a successful stage career in England and Australia she came to this country and was seen in a number of Broadway successes before engaging in motion picture work.

Andree Lafayette, who is only nineteen years of age, was brought to this country from France by Richard Walton Tully to enact the title role in "Trilby," a First National release. Those who have seen the "rushes" on "Trilby" declare that Miss Lafayette's work marks her as an actress of abilitv.

The third member of the trio, Virginia Browne Faire, is also nineteen years old. She is a Brooklyn girl who came into prominence through winning a Fame and Fortune contest conducted by the Brewster publications before she had completed her high school course. After a preliminary training in minor roles, she was advanced to leads, her most ambitious part to date having been in Richard Walton Tully's production of "Omar the Tentmaker," a First National Picture.

J. P. McGowan Picture for American Releasing

"Deep Waters," the first picture to be produced by Continental Productions, Inc., has been completed by J. P. McGowan at Miami and will be distributed by American Releasing. Besides directing, Mr. McGowan plays one of the leading roles, the other featured member of the cast being Helen Holmes.

"Deep Waters" has to do with the downfall and regeneration of a sea captain. It was produced entirely in and around Miami, and the most spectacular scene in the picture occurred recently when the steam yacht "Dutchess" was burned and dynamited in Biscayne Bay.

Prosperous Conditions on Coast

Carl Laemmle Back from West Brings Report of Unprecedented Production

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, arrived in New York early this week after a three months' stay at Universal City, with a story of West Coast production that makes even the hectic days of 1919-1920 seem pale in comparison with the feverish studio activity of the present season.

This unprecedented production spurt, according to Mr. Laemmle, is not a shot in the dark, but a well-motivated movement, inspired by authentic prospects. Those film companies which have made critical surveys of the film trend for the coming summer and fall have found that the industry will have a high saturation point — that the ordinary output of photoplays will fall far short of meeting the demands of the picture public.

Added to a natural increment in the demand for better class pictures, there will be pyramided an increased demand due to better business conditions and a tardy reflex towards the screen's style of entertainment, as compared with the heavier types of post-war recreation and thought. Thus, for a year or so, the screen has been the target of many attacks because it was alleged not to be "high-brow" enough. The reaction has set in, however, and the more popular brand of entertainment is coming into its own again.

"In all my experience in the motion picture industry, I have never seen such a stir and so much striving for high class results," is Mr. Laemmle's comment. "On every stage on every lot, and wherever else it is possible for a motion picture company to work, pictures now are being made around Los Angeles. Good pictures, too. There is keen rivalry among various companies for the services of stars and well known players. Likewise for directors and technical experts.

"Universal is an excellent example of this increased activity. Far ahead of production status of a year ago, I now have in work what very recently would have been considered an entire year's output of Jewel production. Yet the Jewels now being made at Universal City are for release next fall. Our summer Jewel releases have long been in the hands of the printing laboratory. Also, an entire year's supply of chapter pictures are under way—eight super-serials.

"The biggest thing being done at Universal City is the production of 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame.' This super-Jewel is costing an enormous sum, but every dollar will show in the film."

During Mr. Laemmle's stay on the Coast, he put into effect a series of important changes in Universal policies and production plans. Besides the projection of Jewels well up through 1924, and a year's supply of serials, he engaged three new feature stars, William Desmond, Roy Stewart, and Jack Hoxie, thus assuring a complete schedule of five-reel attractions for the coming season.

"Michael O'Halloran" Set for July 1st Release

Announcement that the release date for the first Gene Stratton-Porter production, "Michael O'Halloran," had been set for July 1 is made this week by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Mrs. Porter produced "Michael O'Halloran," personally supervising every portion of it. For that reason authors who have had disputes with producing companies over the manner in which their stories have appeared on the screen, expect this production to vindicate their stand that a story should be put on the screen without change.

Anti-Narcotic Film Open for Bids

To Go to Distributor Offering Highest Guarantee; Closing Date April 23

MRS. WALLACE REID announces that bids for the distribution of "Human Wreckage," the film directed at the drug evil which she is making at Culver City, Cal., will be received up to and including Monday, April 23, and that the releasing rights will be awarded to the distributor offering the highest guarantee.

Bids will be opened Tuesday, April 24, and the name of the winner, or highest bidder, will be published in the trade papers of that week. All bids are to be addressed to Mrs. Wallace Reid, Hollywood, Cal. Mrs. Reid's decision to thus dispose of the distribution rights to "Human Wreckage" has resulted from hundreds of letters and telegrams she has received from persons in the motion picture industry.

It is understood that "Human Wreckage" will be ready for release about July 1. Plans are being made to have the world's premier performance take place simultaneously in the biggest cities in the country.

Work on the production now is well under way, and it will be finished before the end of April. James Kirkwood has the leading role and Mrs. Reid herself plays a prominent part in the picture. John Griffith Wray is directing the subject.

Among the prominent people who appeared in the film were Benjamin Bledsoe, United States Judge of the Twelfth Federal District; Mayor George E. Gryer, of Los Angeles; Chief of Police Louis D. Oaks, of Los Angeles; Dr. L. M. Powers, Health Commissioner of Los Angeles; Dr. R. B. von Kleinsmid, President of the University of Southern California, who also is president of the Los Angeles Anti-Narcotic League; John P. Carter, former Collector of Internal Revenue; Mrs. Martha Nelson McCann, Park Commissioner of Los Angeles; Brigadier C. R. Boyd, of the Salvation Army; Miss Jean Orfa Shontz, of the Juvenile Court; Mrs. Chester Ashley, educator; Dr. R. D. Bird, president of the Occidental College; Mrs. Charles F. Gray, of the Parent-Teachers' Association; Dr. Miriam Van Waters, of the National Prison Reform Commission; Miss Harris, of the Church Federation, and Father Clifford, of the Diocese of Los Angeles.

The original title of Mrs. Reid's picture was "The Living Dead," but when the filming of the picture was started several days ago she decided that "Human Wreckage" was more expressive in carrying the message she desires to convey.

Films Fail as Educators Says Hugo

Francis M. Hugo, chairman of the directors of the National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc., was the guest of honor at a Biltmore luncheon Wednesday at which he discussed pictures in the educational field.

Mr. Hugo expressed it as his opinion that the picture field has not measured up to its possibilities for development of the highest type of citizenship. He said there was no attempt in his field to present pictures of dramatic value, but that motion pictures were essentially educational, conceived and developeed originally by educators.

Miss Helen Varick Boswell was chairman of the luncheon. Among the speakers were, Mrs. Harry Lilly, chairman of the Dovition of Motion Pictures of the Federation of Women's Clubs; Rabbi Rudolph Grossman, Father John M. J. Quinn, Dr. Frederick M. Gordon, Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Dr. Alfred W. Abrams, Rev. Martin B. Fahy and Rev. Christian F. Reisner.

Metro Will Continue Mae Murray Releases

At the request of Mae Murray, Nicholas E. Schenck this week denied clearly and emphatically the report that this star plans to release her photoplays, after expiration of her contract with Metro Pictures Corporation, through independent exchanges.

The statement to the contrary was to the effect that Miss Murray's pictures would be handled by Metro only for the period of time yet to run on her contract with Metro.

"Since the very beginning of the arrangement of Metro to distribute Mae Murray's pictures," said Mr. Schenck, "there has been nothing but the greatest harmony and common satisfaction between the producing and releasing bodies.

"I have been asked by Miss Murray herself to deny the report that she has in mind another distributing agent after her contract with Metro is fulfilled; and I am making this denial clearly and emphatically.

"If there is to be any change in this direction it is neither a plan of Metro's nor a plan of Miss Murray's."

Well-Balanced Cast Supports Douglas McLean

A well-balanced cast will appear in support of Douglas McLean in his new vehicle for First National, which bears the title of "The Sunshine Trail." Edith Roberts is cast as the ingenue heroine, while William Courtright, Josephine Sedgwick, and Barney Furey will also appear in important roles. The picture was produced by Thomas H. Ince under the direction of James W. Horne.

Albany Exchange Wins F.B.O. Anniversary Drive

THE First Anniversary Drive of the Film Booking Officers of America closed on March 31st. The three leaders, winners in their respective groups were the Atlanta exchange, under the management of U. T. Koch; the Detroit exchange, managed by E. M. Booth; and the Albany branch, under Vic Bendell Of these three Albany is the grand winner, and will be presented with the huge silver loving cup, to remain in the possession of the office until the following year, when it will be transferred to the next winner.

Kansas City, New Orleans and Pittsburgh captured the three second prizes. Kansas City is managed by R. E. Churchill, New Orleans by Paul Tessier, and Pittsburgh by A. H. Schnitzer.

"Main Street" Premiere at Mission, April 25

"Main Street" will be given its premiere presentation at Mack Sennet's Mission theatre, Los Angeles, on April 25, according to Harry M. Warner.

Preceding the presentation at the Mission theatre, Sam and Jack Warner, production managers of the coast studios, have arranged with the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, to hold a "Main Street" night at the Cocoanut Grove. To this affair will be invited the leading figures on the Coast, in addition to many prominent exhibitors. One of the novelties to be distributed will be miniature green painted lamp posts, 1,000 of which have been mailed to the coast studios from the Eastern offices.

Star System on Wane, Says Rowland

Declares Producers Begin to Realize the Public, Not Industry Makes Stars

JUST returned from several weeks on the Coast, where, with Samuel Katz of Chicago, a First National franchise holder and a member of the executive committee, he came close to the work of the many production units at present engaged in making First National Pictures, Richard A. Rowland, manager of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., stated that the industry is passing through an evolution that will prove of vital importance.

Following his intimate contact with producers, directors and stars, and with the perspective gained through a few days' time in which to analyze the situation and the outlook for next year's market, Mr. Rowland's strongest impression is that motion picture producers have finally awakened to the fact that they cannot make stars unless they have been selected by the public.

As a result of this situation, he sees in the immediate future a new class of production, bringing a departure from the star system, but not its abandonment.

"Motion pictures will be divided into two general classes," he said, "the first featuring the big stars, of whom there are but few, and the second, pictures in which the box office value will be determined by the story, adaptation director and cast. Production is passing through a refining process and exceptional artists who are in line for public-made stardom will get a chance to advance through working in the story-director-cast type of picture. In this way they will be given their best opportunity, in fact the only real opportunity to become stars by public acclamation.

"This change, the effects of which will be noted in next season's product, denotes a decidedly healthy condition in the industry.

"One of the indications of the present tendency is the keen competition for leading players who may be counted upon to strengthen casts, but who are not ranked as stars. In this connection First National is gratified to announce that Virginia Brown Faire, Andree Lafayette, the French star to be featured in 'Trilby'; Sylvia Breamer and Maurice Canon, the French comedian, have been signed up on long-term contracts. More big artists are being secured with a view to building up an acting organization of the highest caliber for pictures of all types.

"Production on the Coast is at its peak and all hands are working, hammer and tongs, on the big pictures for fall release. Mr. Katz is as enthusiastic as I am about the prospects for next year's First National output. We were on the ground and saw the wonderful things that are being done."

Owen Moore and Robert Edeson in Paramount Roles

Two former Paramount players return to the banner of that company in Charles Maigne's production of Maximilian Foster's story, "The Silent Partner," just started at the Lasky studio. They are Owen Moore and Robert Edeson, and they will be featured with Leatrice Joy, the cast also including Robert Schable, Forrest Robinson, Patteron Dial, William Calvert, Maude Wayne, Bess Flowers and Lura Anson.

Moore's last appearances in Paramount pictures as co-star in Famous Players productions with Hazel Dawn, Marguerite Courtot and Irene Fenwick. This was in 1916 and 1917. He has recently been starred by Selznick.

Robert Edeson was one of the original Lasky stock company and was seen back in 1914 as the star of "The Call of the North" and "Where the Trail Divides."

"Sherlock Holmes" Decision Upheld

Appellate Court Refuses Temporary Injunction Against Educational Company

THE Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York, in a decision handed down a few days ago, has affirmed the decision of Justice Francis Martin in the Supreme Court refusing a temporary injunction in the action brought by William Gillette, Charles Frohman, Inc., and Alcet Enterprises, Inc., against the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., and the Stoll Film Company questioning the right of the defendants to use the name "Sherlock Holmes" or "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" in connection with advertising the two-reel motion pictures on The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.

Shortly after Educational began releasing "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" last spring, Nathan Burkan, representing Gillette, Charles Frohman, Inc., and Alcet Enterprises filed a petition for a permanent injunction against Educational and the Stoll Company. The latter, however, was never served with a summons. In August a motion was made for a temporary injunction, which was refused by Justice Martin after lengthy arguments.

It was claimed by the plaintiffs that they had the only right to the use of the name, Sherlock Holmes, through a contract made in 1897 between Conan Doyle and Charles Frohman, who died on the Lusitania in 1915.

A stage play was written by Gillette and produced in 1900 under the name, "Sherlock Holmes." On the strength of this contract, which the plaintiffs claimed became the property of Charles Frohmann, Inc., upon the death of Frohman, the motion picture rights were sold to Essanay in 1916 for five years. In 1921 these rights were bought for the Alcet Enterprises, and a feature motion picture was produced called "Sherlock Holmes," in which John Barrymore played the leading role.

Production work on the first series of The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes was carried on prior to this. Each of these pictures was based on one of the Conan Doyle stories, and distinctly bore its title. The contract between Frohman and Conan Doyle called for a single dramatic production. It was claimed by the defendants, therefore, that the use of "Sherlock Holmes" and "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" in advertising this series of Short Subjects in no way infringed on any rights which the plaintiffs may have had under the old contract. Fifteen two-reel pictures have been released in the series of The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes.

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., was represented by Herman Goldman, through Elkan Turk.

Jerome Storm Is Directing "Children of Jazz"

Jerome Storm has started "Children of Jazz," from a play by Harold Brighouse adapted by Beulah Marie Dix, at Paramount's West Coast studio. The cast includes Theodore Kosloff, Ricardo Cortez, Eileen Percy, Irene Dalton and Robert Cain. An island location near the Southern California coast will probably be sought for many of the scenes. Ralph Block is production editor.

Garson to Produce Original Story for Universal

Harry Garson has made a contract to produce for Universal an original story by John Black-Wood. The continuity is being prepared by Leonore Coffee.

Some moments from Gladys Walton's latest vehicle titled "The Town Scandal," in which Edward Hearn appears opposite the star.

Scenes from the Paramount picture, "The Nth Commandment," with Colleen Moore and James Morrison.

Desmond Starts First "U" Feature

William Desmond, newly signed Universal feature star, already has started work on his first Universal five reeler, according to word from the coast. It is "McGuire of the Mounted," a Northwest Mounted Police story written and scenarized by Raymond L. Schrock, scenario editor at Universal City, assisted by George Hively.

Richard Stanton, the director, is at present taking interior scenes at Universal City, but the company is due to go to the California mountains for snow scenes in a few weeks. "McGuire of the Mounted" probably will be ready for release early in July.

Continuities in Process for First National

From the material acquired by First National for next season's productions, three stories have just been turned over to continuity writers, for adaptation. They are: "The Huntress," a novel by Hulbert Footner; "Her Temporary Husband," a play by Edward A. Paulton and "Lord of the Thundergate," a novel by Sidney Herschel Small.

Percy Heath has been assigned to write the continuity on "The Huntress." "Her Temporary Husband" is being adapted by F. McGrew Willis. Fred Myton is handling "Lord of the Thundergate."

Ralph Ince Starts New Subject for Paramount

Ralph Ince has begun production of a new picture starring Dorothy Dalton at the Paramount Long Island studio. It is a French story adapted by J. Clarkson Miller from the play, "Leah Kleschna," by C. M. S. McLellan. Miss Dalton will have the support of James Rennie, Alphonse Ethier, Walter Percival, Frederick Lewis and others who have not yet been selected. Arthur Cozine will be Mr. Ince's assistant on this picture and William Miller will be the cameraman.

Harold Shaw Will Direct Viola Dana

"ROUGED LIPS," a story of the stage by Rita Weiman, has been selected as the first Viola Dana vehicle which Harold Shaw will direct for Metro. It offers Miss Dana a role somewhat similar to that in "A Chorus Girl's Romance."

The star's new director is a native of Tennessee. His theatrical experience dates back to the early nineties in San Francisco, and in addition to a vast amount of stock company experience, he appeared in leading roles on the stage with Amelia Bingham and Thomas Jefferson.

Truart to Start Work on "Unknown Purple"

Following the consummation of their arrangement with Truart Pictures, through M. H. Hoffman, General Manager A. Carlos, head of the producing unit to be known as Carlos Productions, Inc., and Roland West, director, are preparing to start work immediately upon the filming of "The Unknown Purple," a stage play, running for two years in New York, written by Mr. West, in which Helen MacKellar and Richard Bennett played the leading roles.

Hodkinson Production for April 15 Release

Announcement is made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to the effect that the finishing touches have been made in the final titling and editing of "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton" to be released April 15th. The photodrama after re-titling will be eight reels in length.

This is a Richard Oswald Production presented by the Sterling Pictures Corporation and features Liana Haid in the role of Lady Hamilton.

Comedy Vehicle Chosen for Jack Holt's Next

"A Gentleman of Leisure," a comedy by John Stapleton and P. G. Wodehouse, will serve as a vehicle for Jack Holt, Paramount star, and will be started some time this month.

"Long Live the King" Under Way

Metro Preparing Production of Mary Roberts Rinehart Story for Jackie Coogan

JACKIE COOGAN'S first picture under the auspices of Metro Pictures Corporation will be "Long Live the King," by Mary Roberts Rinehart. Preparations are already under way at the Metro studios for the filming of the story.

C. Gardner Sullivan is at work upon the screen adaptation, by arrangement with Joseph M. Schenk, who recently retained Mr. Sullivan to provide stories for the stars under his direction. Collaborating with him is Eve Unsell, loaned for the Coogan picture by B. P. Schulberg.

Edward Biby, former casting director for Mack Sennett, and notable also for having conducted the negotiations which resulted in Chaplin's engagement of Jackie Coogan for "The Kid," is the Coogans' studio manager. Frank Good, who photographed the Coogan production of "Daddy" and "Toby Tyler," will be the cameraman for "Long Live the King," assisted as heretofore by Robert Martin. Irene Morra, who edited the last five of Jackie's pictures, has been retained to act in this capacity for the newly formed organization.

The story originally appeared as a serial in a leading national magazine, and later was published in book form. Jackie will play the role of Prince Ferdinand William Otto; despite the Germanic cognomen the locale of the story is in one of those semi-mythical Balkan principalities. For the first time in his crowded, though short, career, Jackie will be seen in other than ragged clothes. Since "The Kid" every one of his pictures has shown the youthful star as a waif, and attired in accordance, with the exception of a few episodes in "Oliver Twist." In "Long Live the King" Jackie will wear the clothes naturally worn by the scion of a reigning house.

Fox Sets Release of "Snowdrift" for April 15th

Fox Film Corporation has but one release, "Snowdrift," starring Charles Jones, on its release schedule for the week of April 15th.

The feature was directed by Scott Dunlap from the story by James B. Hendryx. The supporting cast lists Irene Rich, Dorothy Manners, G. Raymond Nye, Colin Chase, Evelyn Selbie, Lolo Encinos, and Lee Shumway.

Kirkwood Contender for Ben Hur Role

Another contender for the role of Ben Hur has arisen in the person of James Kirkwood. In the last weekly tabulation of votes pouring in upon Robert B. McIntyre, Goldwyn casting director, Mr. Kirkwood steps right up beside Valentino, with 16,418 votes to "The Sheik's" 17,593. An odd coincidence is that Mr. Kirkwood has just been signed under long-term contract to appear in Goldwyn pictures.

Paramount's N. Y. Exchange Moved

Transfer to New Office Covering N. Y. and N. J. is Effected in Rapid Time

THE New York and New Jersey Paramount exchanges, under the supervision of H. H. Buxbaum, district manager, which for many years have been located in the Godfrey Building at 729 Seventh avenue, took possession of their new building at 331-37 West Forty-fourth street last week. The transfer of films, accessories and furniture was started under the direction of T. A. Kiltoil, of the Paramount home office, Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock and at 9 o'clock Thursday morning both exchanges were ready for business, with everything in its proper place and every employee at his station.

The new building, occupying a plot 100 by 100 feet, was erected under the supervision of Theodore E. Young, manager of the Real Estate department of Famous Players-Lasky, according to the standardized plans now being followed in the construction of all of the Paramount e changes. The quarters are declared to be the largest in the world occupied exclusively by one company for exchange purposes. There are 16,000 square feet of floor space in the building, the ground floor being given over entirely to the storage vaults, storerooms, showrooms and other facilities for the physical distribution of the films and accessories.

On the second floor are the executive offices of the two exchanges, the New York exchange serving Greater New York, Long Island and Westchester County, and the New Jersey exchange taking care of the entire Northern part of that State.

Paramount's new standardized exchange building now being erected by the company in Memphis, Tenn., will be ready for occupancy about July 1. This new one-story building is located at the corner of Front and Linden streets, on a plot 60 by 109 feet. The exchange will serve local territory in the Southern district, under Fred C. Creswell, District Manager.

Arrow Sales Drive to Run for Six Weeks

Doctor W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, presided over a special sales meeting of the Arrow Exchange Sales Organization on Monday night. The meeting followed a dinner at the Hotel Astor given by Harry Thomas, general manager of the exchange, to announce the opening of a Spring sales drive to extend over a period of six weeks.

Handsome cash prizes will be awarded to the winners. Doctor Shallenberger talked of the growth in power of the Independents to the position they have now attained, and discussed the Spring releases to be handled through the Arrow exchange. The party was later entertained at the Palace theatre.

Allen Holubar to Produce Series for Metro

By the terms of a contract signed by Hollywood a few days ago, Allen Holubar will produce a series of four or more productions for distribution by Metro.

The first story is to be selected by Mr. Holubar within the next few days, and he plans to start actual production at the Metro studios on or before May 1st.

Lewis Stone Engaged for Role in "Scaramouche"

Lewis Stone has been engaged for one of the leading roles in "Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's newest production for Metro.

Ralph Lewis Under Long F. B. O. Contract

Ralph Lewis, who won fame first in "The Birth of a Nation" and more recently in "In the Name of the Law" and "The Third Alarm," has been placed under a long term contract by the Film Booking Offices of America, according to a statement emanating from the Coast studios of F. B. O.

His first role, under the terms of the new contract, will be in the Owen Davis play, "Blow Your Own Horn," now in production under the direction of James W. Horn. Warner Baxter and Ann Perdue, two recently signed F. B. O. players, will also appear in this picture.

Barker Names Cast for "Law Bringers"

The high standard set by Reginald Barker's casts in the past is to be upheld in "The Law-Bringers" in this forthcoming Metro-Louis B. Mayer offering. The book, by G. B. Lancaster, was adapted for filming by Monte M. Katterjohn.

Among the players already selected are: Renee Adoree, Earle Williams, Pat O'Malley, Barbara La Marr, Wallace Beery, Joseph Swickard, Pat Harmon and George Kuwa.

The production of "The Law-Bringers" got under way recently at the Mayer studio, where the interiors are to be filmed. The outdoor scenes will be shot in Canada.

T. Hayes Hunter Leaves for Location at Miami

T. Hayes Hunter has left New York for Miami, Fla., where he will photograph the exterior scenes of his first independent production since he made "Earthbound" for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Basil King wrote the story. Prominent in his cast are Eugene Strong, Sara Mullen, Florence Billings, Boyce Comb and De Forrest Campbell.

Edward J. Bowes Back from Europe Tells Conditions

EDWARD J. BOWES, vice-president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, returned last week from a two months' trip to Europe. He reports that American photoplays are gaining in the English and Continental markets and that American producers have nothing to fear from productions made abroad.

"American pictures are far in advance of the European film," he said. "There is no threat to the American-made picture in the European product. In comparison with the films I saw abroad, our pictures are thoroughly up-to-date, far ahead of anything the rival markets have to show.

"In my opinion, the American pictures are certain to continue ahead of the foreign field because in anything that requires resourcefulness, speed, mobility of temperament and ingenuity we beat the world. The European nations can beat us in anything that involves patient research and long-continued toil, but in the making of motion pictures it is resourcefulness, speed and adaptability that count. Those qualities will continue to count.

"Foreign companies are realizing that they cannot make a profit on their product unless they can use the American markets, and so far they have not been able to use them to any great extent."

Mr. Bowes conferred with Sir Hall Caine while in London on "The Master of Man," his latest novel, the screen rights to which Goldwyn recently purchased. He induced the famous novelist to prepare the continuity for the picturization himself.

Enid Bennett Is "Captain Applejack" Heroine

In support of Mat Moore in "Captain Applejack" which Fred Niblo is to film as the second of the Louis B. Mayer productions for Metro, Enid Bennett has been selected as the heroine.

Bess Meredyth is already at work on the continuity and Director Niblo will begin actual filming soon. Doran Cox, Mr. Niblo's chief of staff, and Alvin Wyckoff, his cameraman, are laying the groundwork prior to Mr. Niblo's picking up of the megaphone.

F. P.-Lasky Representative Off for Brazil

John L. Day, South American representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will sail on the steamship Western World April 14 on his annual trip to Brazil, where he will spend some time directing the affairs of the offices under his charge. Mr. Day will make arrangements for the release of "The Covered Wagon" and other Paramount specials during his stay of several months, according to an announcement by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department.

Fred Clay, Pioneer with Lasky, Goes to Fox

Fred Clay, business manager at Lasky's since the inception of the Jesse Lasky Pictures Play Company, has resigned to accept a contract with Fox as the general studio manager. The contract becomes effective April 16th.

Jimmie Adams and Virginia Vance in "The Dude," an Educational release.

First National Club Holds First Anniversary Dance

The first anniversary dance of the First National Club was held Wednesday night, April 4th, at the Hotel Commodore, New York City.

About three hundred and fifty people attended, including many of First National executives and stars, among whom were General Manager Richard Rowland, Director of Publicity C. L. Yearsley, Richard Barthelmess and Mrs. Barthelmess, who was Mary Hay before her marriage; Dorothy Mackaill, who starred in "Mighty Lak' a Rose"; Jetta Goudal from the cast of the latest Barthelmess release, "The Bright Shawl"; Allan Dwan, who has directed several pictures for First National; Lew Cody, the popular player; Irving Lesser, of the Jackie Coogan Productions; and Eefe M. Asher, of the Mack Sennett headquarters.

Ralph Clark, manager of the First National exchange in New York, and S. H. Fabian, New Jersey exchange manager also made their appearance during the course of the evening.

The committee of the First National Club includes President Steve McGrath; Vice-Pres. Bertine Browne; Treas. Wm. P. Mullen; Sec. Emma Goerke, Financial Sec. James King, and the Committee of Arrangements Chairman Clive R. Waxman, assisted by Margaret Hughes, Mildred Kroll, Tesse Michaels, Abbott Obendorfer, Charles M. Kennedy, Raymond Price, Lazarus Bilson and Teddy O'Boyle.

Flynn Engages Old Staff with Goldwyn

Emmett J. Flynn has engaged his entire old staff of technical assistants to aid him in making his first picture, "In the Palace of the King," for Goldwyn under his recently signed long-term contract. His brother, Ray Flynn, will be the assistant director and Lucian Andriot, his head cameraman.

New Specials Selected for Production by Wm. Fox

"Gentle Julia," Booth Tarkington's popular novel, and "The Shadow of the East," by E. M. Hull, author of "The Sheik," will be William Fox specials.

Named Representative for Bushman and Bayne

Charles J. Giegerich, until recently with F. B. O., has joined American Releasing as special representative of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne on their tour of personal appearances in conjunction with the new picture, "Modern Marriage."

Frank Lloyd Signed to Do Series for First Nat'l

Frank Lloyd will make a series of productions for release by First National. A contract between Lloyd and First National officials was closed late last week. The director will start his initial production under the new contract as soon as he has completed work on "Ashes of Vengeance," starring Norma Talmadge. Mr. Lloyd has already directed Miss Talmadge's previous three pictures, "The Eternal Flame," "The Voice from the Minaret" and "Within the Law," and it is understood that his engagement by First National was largely determined by his success with these three subjects, as well as his past achievements, which have placed him in the forefront of the industry's directors.

Frank Lloyd

Robert Lieber, president of Associated First National, expressed himself as highly delighted at the successful culmination of the long negotiations which have resulted in First National securing one of the leading directors in the industry. He further expressed the belief that aside from a few really important stars, exhibitors must depend upon big directors for the kind of product needed to keep the motion picture progressing in accord with the public demand.

Pola Negri Added to Cast of "Hollywood"

Pola Negri is the latest addition to the cast of Paramount's special production, "Hollywood," which James Cruze has been making for the past three months at the Lasky studio.

Universal's Jungle Picture Opens in Philadelphia

"HUNTING BIG GAME IN AFRICA WITH GUN AND CAMERA," which was filmed by H. A. Snow and acquired by Universal for distribution, opened in the Forrest theatre, Philadelphia, on Monday evening of this week before an enthusiastic audience that comprised representatives of Quaker City's officialdom, society, and church and educational fields. The picture ran for eleven weeks at the Lyric theatre, New York, at $1.65 top, and the same top price is to be maintained for the Philadelphia engagement. According to word from Universal's home office, the Forest theatre engagement opened with an advanced sale that sets a record for Philadelphia's picture theatres.

The presentation was put on under the direction of Jules Levy. Universal's home office officials who journeyed to Philadelphia for the opening included P. D. Cochrane, secretary of Universal, E. H. Goldstein, treasurer; Art Schmidt, general sales manager; George Brown, advertising manager, and Joe Friedman, assistant general sales manager.

Included among the prominent personages and society folk who saw the animal picture were J. Hampton Moore, Mayor of Philadelphia; James T. Cortelyou, Dr. C. Lincoln Furbush, Joseph P. Gaffney, General W. W. Atterbury, Col. Barclay H. Warburton, Col. Robert Glendenning, J. Stogdell Stokes, Joseph W. Lippincott, Samuel P. Rotan, Mrs. William E. Buehler, Mrs. George Estebrook, Mrs. Edward W. Biddle. Mrs. George H. Lorimer and Mrs. George Wharton Pepper.

WHAT SHOWMEN THINK OF CURRENT RELEASES

Exhibitors' Box-Office Reports

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Adam's Rib—

People ate it up and crowded the theatre. Considered not too long by the theatre crowd. (East.)

Good motion picture material, typical Cecil DeMille. Went over in tremendous style. (East.)

It was very well liked, though at times it dragged. Too long for the good of the story. Very good business. (East.)

Business very good, the picture to run for a two weeks' engagement. Everybody liked it. The most general pleasing picture ever shown in house. (Middle West.)

Glimpses of the Moon—

A very entertaining picture. Bebe Daniels has many admirers. They liked this one. (Middle West.)

A good story, a good cast, great camera work, but what has the title got to do with it? Went strong to excellent business. (East.)

This one did a good business all week. (Middle West.)

The Impossible Mrs. Bellow—

Not much dramatic value, but excellent vehicle for display of Gloria Swanson and her wardrobe. She has a certain clientele, but the public at large is tired of her. (Middle West.)

Not much of a picture; average box office value. (Middle West.)

Bella Donna—

This can be classed as an A1 feature and in it Pola Negri becomes one of the most popular stars. Business big. (Middle West.)

A great picture; held over for second week. (Middle West.)

Nobody's Money—

Average picture and box office value. (Middle West.)

Racing Hearts—

Only fair business on second run. (East.)

Adam and Eva—

S. R. O. was out every night and matinees also held up strong. Widely advertised, which helped business. (East.)

Grumpy—

Splendid production, with 100% entertainment value. Everybody liked it. We had average crowds during a week when all amusement places were off. (Middle West.)

Java Head—

Business? There just was no such thing. This one does not seem to possess the box office requirements. (East.)

F. B. O.

The Third Alarm—

Average melodrama; good box office value. (Middle West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

The Pilgrim—

Went over big; held for a second week. (Middle West.)

Capital picture, original and amusing. Broke all records for business at house where shown. (East.)

Daddy—

Started out very big, but fell off materially in the middle of the week, due partly to incessant rain. (Middle West.)

Bell Boy 13—

A good box office attraction, which played to good crowds for a week's run. (Middle West.)

From the Minaret—

Went over big on second run. (East.)

Minnie—

Just an ordinary picture. Business only fair. (East.)

Mighty Lak' a Rose—

Dorothy Mackail won friends with this one, which was boosted in the newspapers and which played to good houses. (Middle West.)

This picture proved to be of average standard.

FOX

Three Jumps Ahead—

Typical Tom Mix picture Should go big where he is popular. Good attendance. (Middle West.)

One of the best Tom Mix mixtures of good thrills, pluck, and romance, that we have had. Excellent business. (East.)

Brass Commandments—

Mediocre picture. Business bad. (East.)

The Face on the Barroom Floor—

Well liked and well patronized for the entire week. (East.)

GOLDWYN

Mad Love—

Big card all the week, with heavy advertising. (East.)

Vanity Fair—

Very good in every way. Good business. (Middle West.)

The Christian—

Picture unusually well produced, but business was light at the box office.

HODKINSON

Down to the Sea in Ships—

One of the master films of all times. Attendance grew from day to day, and went into second week with record day. (Middle West.)

The Second Fiddle—

Nice picture, made pleasant impression. Business only fair. (East.)

The Headless Horseman—

Business only fair on this one.

LICHTMAN

Poor Men's Wives—

A fair picture. Went over very well. (East.)

METRO

Peg O' My Heart—

Good box office production, which pleased our patrons. (Middle West.)

Where the Pavement Ends—

Pulled well the first three days when it played to capacity and did a good business the rest of one week. (East.)

Hearts Aflame—

This is a top notch feature, including acting, story, and spectacular scenes. Business was very good. (Middle West.)

A Noise in Newboro—

The finest thing that Viola Dana has had in a long time. A mighty pleasing little work and strongly liked. Excellent business. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood—

All records knocked for a row of goose eggs. Picture held for second week, with long lines continuing at box office. A revelation in what business a good picture can do. (East.)

The Girl I Loved—

"The Girl I Loved" is one of Ray's good ones and our audiences like it. Business good. (Middle West.)

ALLIED PROD. & DIST.

Garrison's Finish—

Very old, threadbare tale of a horse race, full of hokum. Nothing new or original in the whole thing. Not much business. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Trimmed in Scarlet—

Business picked up noticeably following the Lenten season. This one was well received all week. (East.)

Just what it sounds—exciting, with mystery and thrills. All right for a melodrama house. Average attendance. (Middle West.)

The Midnight Guest—

Well liked by patrons. Nice receipts. (Middle West.)

PATHE

Safety Last—

Harold Lloyd's greatest picture. Critics and patrons universally praised it. Very good business indeed. (Middle West.)

Business very good. Everybody seemed to be climbing the skyscraper with Harold Lloyd and had to hold to their seats to keep from falling out. (Middle West.)

Dr. Jack—

Lloyd at his best in this one and it played to big crowds. (Middle West.)

VITAGRAPH

You Never Know—

Should fit into any program. Earle Williams does some very good work in this one, and it went across in fine shape. (Middle West.)

Ninety and Nine—

WARNER BROS.

The Little Church Around the Corner—

The attendance for the week was good. (Middle West.)

Brass—

Held up well for almost two weeks. (East.)

Beautiful and Damned—

Good picture but did light business.

STATE RIGHTS

The World's a Stage—

The picture is all right, but the crowds were rather scarce. Those who came liked the play, but business as a whole was not up to standard. (Middle West.)

Environment—

Took well and was well spoken of by the crowd. (East.)

Sure Fire Flint—

This picture went over in excellent shape.

LITTLE STORIES ABOUT PEOPLE ON THE LOT

Here and There

RICHARD THOMAS has completed "The Silent Accuser" and has engaged the cast for his new production titled "Other Men's Money." The cast includes Katheryn McGuire, Rodney Laroque, Estelle Taylor, Tom Wilson, Rex Ballard, Garry O'Dell, Carrie Clark Ward, Gordon Dumont, Norval MacGregor, Fred Moore and Charles Force.

The Fisher Productions have taken studio space in Hollywood and are now engaged in the filming of "Youth Triumphant" by George Kibbeturner. Lillian Ducey and J. M. Voshell are directing the subject. The cast includes Anna Q. Nilsson, William Boyd, Eugenie Besseserer, George Siegmann, Virginia Lee Corbin, Raymond Hatton, Dave Morris, Boyd Irwin, Ward Crane, Arthur Jasmine and James Quinn.

Interior sets of First National's "Adventures of Penrod," which is being directed by William Beaudine, are now being "shot" at the Hollywood studios.

Johnny Walker is to play one of the all-star leads in Frank Borzage's new pictures, "Children of Dust," a First National picture.

Alma Rubens is portraying a French girl once more—this time in Stanley Weyman's "Under the Red Robe," the interior scenes of which are being filmed at the Tilford studios, New York City.

Mary Alden has arrived in California, where she will play prominent roles in two or three imposing special productions. One of these, at least, will show her in a youthful role.

Gerald C. Duffy, author of "Sure Fire Flint," is preparing his latest story, "Rich Men's Sons," for the screen. It is to be produced by C. C. Burr, president of Mastodon Films, and will be one of the six features to be produced by him for the independent market.

Ruth Roland, well-known serial star, will arrive in New York April 16 and spend a week in the metropolis in the interests of her future productions.

Bert Lytell, screen star, is coming East after having made several pictures in California. Mr. Lytell's reason for coming to New York is his new contract with Cosmopolitan. He has signed to be featured in "The Lone Wolf" series, which will be made in New York City.

John Robertson has added Dorothy MacKaill to the cast of "The Fighting Blade," which he is directing for Inspiration Pictures, and in which Richard Barthelmess is starred. Miss MacKaill appears opposite Barthelmess in this quaint romance of Cromwellian times, written by Beulah Marie Dix. Interiors are being made at the Universal studios at Fort Lee, N. J.

Gerry Bachelor, the girl who won the Beauty and Brains Contest at the motion picture ball recently, has been signed by C. C. Burr to appear in his All-Star Comedies, released by Hodkinson. Miss Bachelor will be seen as a Salvation Army girl in number eleven of the series—a title as yet not having been chosen for the two-reeler. The young lady was seen on Broadway this season in "Sun Showers."

Director Fred Hibbard has completed the next two Educational-Cameo Comedies, "Exit Stranger" and "Small Change." Virginia Vance is supported by Cliff Bowes in "Exit Stranger," and by Billy Eugene in "Small Change."

Lloyd Hamilton has completely recovered from his attack of "flu," which laid the big comedian low immediately on completion of "F. O. B.," his next picture on the Educational program. Hamilton was confined to his bed for ten days, but is now able to superintend the cutting and titling of this picture.

Gregory La Cava is directing number eleven of the series of All-Star Comedies at C. C. Burr's Long Island studios. It is a Chinese story and Charlie Murray will be seen as an Oriental.

News of Paramounts Unit

The Herbert Brenon - Betty Compson company is at present on location in the San Quentin prison, near San Francisco, filming scenes for "The Woman With Four Faces."

The George Melford company has gone to Northern California for four or five weeks to shoot exteriors for "Salomy Jane." In the filming party are Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett and Maurice Flynn.

Robert Wagner, director of the Walter Hiers company, engaged in the filming of "Fair Week," is back from three weeks on location at Pleasanton.

Subjects in production include: "Children of Jazz," under the direction of Jerome Storm; "The Cheat," a George Fitzmaurice production starring Pola Negri; "The Silent Partner," with an all-star cast, Charles Maigne directing; "Hollywood," all-star cast, directed by James Cruze; "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," starring Gloria Swanson under the direction of Sam Wood.

William DeMille has completed work on "Only Thirty-Eight."

Alfred E. Green has returned to the West Coast, where he will produce his next Paramount picture.

Charles Ruggles has returned to the screen from the stage in the light comedy role of Gaspard in "The Heart Raider," which his brother, Wesley Ruggles, is directing with Agnes Ayres in the star role.

Irvin Willat has completed his latest Paramount picture, "Fog Bound," starring Dorothy Dalton, at the Paramount Long Island studio.

On the Goldwyn Lot

Marshall Neilan has completed work on "The Eternal Three."

Rupert Hughes will leave Los Angeles for New York on April 13 on a business trip.

Mae Busch has been selected as the lead for Victor Seastrom's production, "The Master of Man." Goldwyn has engaged Paul Bern to write the scenario.

Craig Biddle, Jr., George Hackathorn and Raymond Hatton have been added to the cast of "Three Wise Fools," which King Vidor is directing.

Erich von Stroheim has completely recovered from the attack of tonsilitis which brought work on "Greed," his film version of Frank Norris' novel, "McTeague," to a standstill in San Francisco last week, and photography has now been resumed on it.

The special train of twelve coaches which carried Clarence Badger and the actors in "Red Lights" to the Mexican border has returned to the studio with some great spectacular sequences for this film. Director and cast lived on board the special train for five weeks while they were filming the border scenes. One car was used as laboratories for developing the films.

June Mathis and Katherine Kavanaugh will write the continuity for Arthur Somers Roche's novel, "The Day of Faith," which will be Tod Browning's first Goldwyn picture.

Anna Q. Nilsson, Noah Beery, Sam de Grasse and John Elliott have completed their roles in "The Spoilers," which Lambert Hillyer has been directing for Jesse D. Hampton at the Goldwyn studios.

East and West with Fox

Bernard Durning has completed the filming of "The Eleventh Hour."

The Tom Mix company continues work on "Tempered Steel." Five comedy companies are engaged on new subjects. Additional subjects will probably not be started until Sol Wurtzell, the production manager, returns from his conference with the Fox Film executives in New York about April 20.

Peggy Shaw and Alma Bennett support Dustin Farnum in his just completed William Fox picture, "The Grail."

Doris May has completed work as William Farnum's leading lady in "The Gun Man."

Irene Rich and Dorothy Manners, supporting Charles Jones in his new production, "Snowdrift," make their appearance together for the first time in this picture.

The title of Shirley Mason's new picture, formerly called "Inside the Door," and then "Balance Due," will be released as "Lovebound."

Maude Wayne appears opposite William Russell in his new feature, "Alias, The Night Wind," now in the course of production.

At Universal City

The cast for "Saw Dust," in which Gladys Walton will star under the direction of Jack Conway, includes Herbert Standing, Niles Welch, Matthew Betz, Frank Brownlee and William Robert Daly. Production work was started on Monday of this week.

Mary Philbin has been cast for a leading role in "A Lady of Quality." This is a costume production in which Virginia Valli will be starred under the direction of Hobart Henley.

Duke R. Lee and Ruth Royce have been added to the cast of the serial production based on the exploits of Daniel Boone.

The editing of "Merry-Go-Round" will be completed in two weeks.

William Duncan will shortly begin the direction of the serial titled "The Steel Trail," by George Plypton and George Piper.

Gerald Beaumont, former Sunday editor of the Oakland Tribune, has been added to the Universal publicity staff as newspaper feature-writer.

King Baggot has been chosen by Universal to direct Herbert Rawlinson in his next starring vehicle, "Thicker Than Water," which was adapted to the screen by Harvey Gates from the magazine story, "Richard," by Margaret Bryant.

With the Metro Units

Clara Kimball Young's latest screen vehicle has been given the title "In Old Madrid."

Tom Moore was scheduled to arrive in Los Angeles on Tuesday of this week to appear opposite Viola Dana in "Rouged Lips."

Members of the cast are now being selected by Edward Sloman for "The Eagle's Feathers."

Mae Murray and Robert Leonard have completed the filming of the scenes for "French Doll" and in three weeks will go East for a month.

Carrie Clark Ward, Kala Pasha, and Snitz Edwards have been added to Rex Ingram's cast for "Scaramouche."

Around the United Studios

Ford Sterling and Aggie Herring have been added to Maurice Tourneur's "Brass Bottle" cast.

Walter Anthony, scenario editor for Principal Pictures, has returned to Los Angeles from Harold Bell Wright's Arizona ranch, where he has been conferring with the author on the screen version of "The Winning of Barbara Worth."

Last week twenty-one congressmen and two United States senators paid a visit to the United studios to see pictures in the making.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 725 S. WABASH AVE.

Among the Exchanges

OWEN GORINE, new Universal star, passed through Chicago on Wednesday, en route to the Pacific Coast, where she will start work on a new production at Universal City.

D. Arnold Kohn, representing Darkohn Productions, has started out on a tour of leading exchange centers in the interest of his two productions, "The Gate of Redemption," and "The Crucifixion," starring Pavley and Oukrainsky, the famous Russian dancers.

B. N. Judell has organized the De Luxe Feature Film Company and offices have been opened at 738 S. Wabash avenue. A trade showing of this exchange's initial release, "The Greatest Menace," was held at the Fulco Projection rooms on Eighth street on April 6th.

H. A. Snow, noted African hunter and explorer, accompanied by his wife, spent Sunday in Chicago, en route to New York. The picture which Mr. Snow made during his twenty-seven months' big game hunt in Africa, will be shown at the Randolph theatre, starting on April 27th, for an indefinite run.

R. C. Seery, district manager of First National, attended the conference of home office officials and district managers in New York last week, and has returned to his Chicago headquarters.

Harry Weiss, manager of Associated First National's St. Louis exchange, was in Chicago on business last week and reports conditions are good in his territory.

Claire Windsor, the popular Goldwyn star, who has just completed work on Neilan's, "The Eternal Three," stopped off in Chicago, Monday, en route to New York, where she will enjoy a two weeks' vacation. While in the city she was introduced to representatives of the daily and trade press by District Manager Hickey and Publicity Director Nealand, of the Goldwyn organization. This trip was of particular interest to Miss Windsor, as she is a western girl and this is her first glimpse, since she was a child, of Chicago and New York.

T. E. Delaney, formerly connected with the Fox sales organization as city salesman, is now a member of Manager Simmons' staff and is covering city territory for Hodkinson.

The many friends of Jack Sampson, manager of F. B. O.'s Chicago exchange, sympathize with him in the death of his mother, which occurred on Monday night.

Fox Exchange will re-release four of its important feature pictures in the Chicago territory in May, and already many bookings have been closed. The features are "Sheba," "The Connecticut Yankee," "Salome," and "Over the Hill."

Vice-president Monroe, of Hodkinson, was scheduled to arrive in Chicago the latter part of the week for a stay of three or four days. It is understood that while here he will put his O. K. on the final plans for the release of "Down to the Sea in Ships," in the Chicago territory.

George Oldfield has resigned as non-theatrical salesman for Fox's Chicago exchange and has left for Los Angeles, where he will engage in business for himself.

Michigan M. P. T. O. Interested Solely in Financing of National Organization

EMPHASIZING the desire of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan to avoid politics in its effort to focus the attention of members of the national organization on ways and means to strengthen the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and to take steps to properly finance it, Detroit headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners makes the following statement:

"The attention of this organization has been called to an article appearing in one of the trade papers, stating that 'Michigan seems to be lined up with Minnesota and that the two states are framing that when Sydney S. Cohen steps down as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, they are going to try to prevent the present regime from naming his successor and step into office themselves, with the possibility that Steffes will make a personal campaign and try to secure the presidency.'

"This statement is very misleading, in that Michigan has not yet interested itself in the political aspect of the comng convention in any way whatsoever, is not pledged or looking favorably on any candidates for that office, nor has it taken a stand against any of the candidates who have been mentioned; although, to date, Michigan has not heard of any candidate who has announced himself for the office.

"At the present time, this association is more interested in seeing the National Organization adequately financed, than any other one thing, and until that problem is solved, Michigan does not intend to interest itself in national politics. When the time comes for the supporting of candidates, Michigan will come out and definitely state its position in this regard, but, the impression should not go about that Michigan is for or against any candidate at the present time."

Around the Trade

PRESIDENT L. M. RUBENS and Secretary L. H. Frank, of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, have issued the official call for the annual convention, which will be held at the Sherman Hotel, Chicago, on Wednesday and Thursday, April 18th and 19th. It is expected that President Sydney S. Cohen and other national officers, beside prominent speakers from other states, will address the convention on matters of interest. Among subjects to be taken up, which are of interest to all exhibitors, are the music tax, admission tax, uniform contract, and Sunday closing. The election of state officers for the ensuing year and delegates to the national convention, which will be held in Chicago on May 19th to 26th, will also be important events of the convention. A big "Get-Together Dinner" of all branches of the industry will be held on Wednesday evening and the committee in charge of this social feature states that it has arranged for a splendid program.

Noah Bloomer, who operates the Gaiety theatre at Freeburg, Illinois, has opened up the Dreamland theatre at Belleville.

Word comes from Hillsboro, Illinois, that Ed. Fellis, of the Orpheum theatre, has been elected county supervisor on the Republican ticket by a majority of twenty-seven votes.

W. D. Burford, accompanied Sydney S. Cohen and his party, which included C. A. Lick, W. A. True and M. J. O'Toole, on its trip to Little Rock, Kansas City and Omaha, where conventions were held during the week.

McVicker's made a departure from their usual scheme of things in the retaining of "Bella Donna," Pola Negri's first American made Paramount picture, for a second week. The week of April 16th, Frances White, star of "The Hotel Mouse," and numerous other big comedy productions, will appear at McVicker's and the week after Miss White's appearance John Steel, of "The Follies," will make personal appearances at this house.

Kocher and Larson have started work on their new 75,000 house at La Porte.

The Rockford Theatres Company took over the beautiful Midway theatre in Rockford, Illinois, on April 1st. The house, which has been operated for five years by Ascher Brothers, of Chicago, has a seating capacity of two thousand and is known as one of the handsomest theatres in the state. The officers interested in the Rockford Theatres Company are now connected with the management of seventeen theatres in Illinois and Wisconsin, in the following cities: Aurora, Joliet, Rockford, Elgin, Bloomington, Galesburg, Ottawa and La Crosse. The officers of the company are: President W. D. Burford; Vice-president Jay J. Rubens, Secretary-treasurer Charles Lamb; and board of directors, Governor Fred Sterling, Frank Thielan, F. R. Riley, Ross V. Chapman, Charles Lamb, Harry A. Rubens, Jay J. Rubens and W. D. Burford.

The National theatre at 6221 S. Halsted street, has been taken over by C. Barrett, who will operate it as a motion picture house, with admission at ten cents in the afternoon and twenty-five cents, including war tax, at night. The National theatre was, for many years, a stock and road show house and this is the first time it has been used as a picture theatre.

Young & Wolf, who operate the Orpheum and Broadway theatres at Gary, will take over the Gary theatre on September 1st, a lease for this house having been closed. They will operate it as a combined vaudeville motion picture house.

Manager Vought, of St. Charles, has taken over Kennedy's theatre at West Chicago.

Several Illinois exhibitors journeyed to Minneapolis this week to attend the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Minnesota, which is one of the important spring events in exhibitor organization circles. Those who made the trip included: W. D. Burford, of Aurora; Louis Frank and John Silha, of Chicago, and B. L. Berve, of Rochelle.

R. C. Williams, of Streator, is again on the job at the Majestic theatre, after a vacation spent in California.

Two Part Westerns

They surprised him: they'll surprise you!

Crockett Brown of the Unique Theatre, Nashwauk, Minn., writes to Amusements: "We are more than surprised at the way these two reelers please. We play them with the Lloyds and they make a combination that is unbeatable."

We believe in these pictures. We believe that they are models of their kind. We believe that in story, cast, direction, action, suspense you can't get better pictures of any kind.

Figures that talk

Ruth Roland is a big attraction, everywhere.
Figures say so, and figures talk.

She is now presented in one of the best
Patheserials she has ever starred in.

THE PLOT

Ruth is the president and active head of Ranger Inc., a large contracting firm. She personally owns "Haunted Valley," a big and barren stretch of land. Unknown to her this land is very valuable and is coveted by a powerful and unscrupulous clique. To get possesion of the land they seek to drive Ranger Inc. to the wall by hindering completion of contracts, etc., always working secretly. As they stop at nothing there are endless hazards, plots and counterplots.

Seattle Is Scene of Extensive "Third Alarm" Campaign

Seattle, Wash.—An elaborate exploitation and publicity campaign, centered around the city fire department, was used recently to put over "The Third Alarm" engagement at the Blue Mouse theatre.

During the run of the picture, by special arrangement with the fire department, a regular fire engine, drawn by three horses and manned by two members of the department, was used as a street ballyhoo. A half-page spread in the Seattle Post Intelligencer was used in connection with this ballyhoo, as it was discovered that the apparatus used was the last horse-drawn vehicle in the city of Seattle, and the engine and horses were to be relieved from further duty in less than a month.

One of the men who manned the engine for the theatre was recently elected in this city as the most popular fireman in the department in a contest held by the Seattle Times. This fact was played up strongly by the theatre, and the man's popularity in the city accounted for a number of patrons that came to the theatre during the showing. While the ballyhoo was not parading the streets, the engine was left in front of the theatre, and steam was kept up by the firemen in charge. This item proved of great interest in connection with the run.

On the second Monday of the engagement, a special matinee for all firemen in uniform was held, at which time they were admitted free to the playhouse.

The presentation of the picture in the theatre itself was a big feature of the engagement, and sent patrons out talking. A fire effect machine was used during the overture and first few feet of the picture, and gave the impression that the whole front of the stage was in flames. During the picture, also, sirens and fire bells, loaned by the fire department, were used in conjunction with the orchestra and gave a most realistic atmosphere to the photoplay. The presentation was arranged and executed by House Manager Hal Daigler. A similar presentation was given the week before the showing of "The Third Alarm" began, during the showing of a short trailer.

Lobby display arranged by Manager H. B. Clarke of the Majestic theatre, Memphis, Tenn., for "Queen of the Moulin Rouge"

Attractive Theatre Front for "East Is West"

MILWAUKEE, Wis.—In dressing the front of the Modjeska theatre for "East Is West," the huge aperture above the entrance was used to excellent advantage. Hand painted compo board panels of Constance Talmadge and the Chinese dragon was erected on each side. Covering the oblong space in the center was another huge hand painted compo board design with the title, pictures and heiroglyphics symbolical of the feature.

The center of the oblong space was left blank, however, when the compo board was put up. In this blank space was inserted a part of the love boat scene, taken from the 24-sheet and pasted on a black cambric background. Hundreds of myriad lights made this display equally luminous at night.

Elaborate Teaser Campaign on "Town That Forgot God"

Dayton, Ohio.—J. Howard Lichtenstein, manager of the State theatre, conducted an excellent teaser campaign on "The Town that Forgot God" recently.

Starting four weeks prior to the opening, Lichtenstein plastered Dayton with seven by eleven cards printed in blue and red, asking pertinent questions, such as, "Is Paris the Town That Forgot God? Coming soon to the State theatre." Giving no date and by substituting the names of other cities in the place of "Paris," the teaser became an effective salesman.

Two weeks before the opening, ten thousand additional cards were placed in all conspicuous places telling the date when the picture would be shown.

Such phrases as follows were used on this second batch of cards: "A scathing indictment of the wickedness of Main Street," "The story of a town where the Ten Commandments are broken every day and the Golden Rule every hour," and "Rome was purged by fire, Babylon was destroyed by vandals, 'The Town That Forgot God' was destroyed by floods and fire."

"The Christian" Given Heavy Exploitation Campaign

Freeport, Ill.—Despite the fact that the run came during Holy Week, when bad business is usually accepted as inevitable, Manager John Dittman, of the Lindo theatre, and W. D. Nealand, Goldwynner, decided upon an intensive exploitation campaign for "The Christian."

They first arranged a series of big display advertisements in the daily newspapers. These ran for four days in advance of the regular advertising. The regular advertising came to a climax on Wednesday before the opening with a full page ad.

An attractive book store window display was obtained with Dollmeyer & Merck in the center of the city's business district. The manager ordered 100 copies of the photoplay edition of "The Christian" for the window, in addition to the two large hand-painted cards and three block cards advertising the showing of the film at the Lindo theatre.

Cards were used on all local street cars starting Wednesday morning, March 28th, and continuing until the end of the engagement.

A cut-out from the 24-sheet was placed on top of the marquise, where it could be seen for a long distance in both directions. At night this cut-out was lighted by four big spotlights which the theatre owns. This was mounted on the marquise the Wednesday before the opening. At the same time cut-outs from the six-sheet posters were placed in the lobby.

The coming of "The Christian" was advertised to the patrons of the Lindo theatre in advance of its coming by means of the 24-sheet banner made by Mr. Nealand, pasting one of the "Christian" pictorial stands on an old drop and painting the borders. This was suspended on the stage, back of the first border lights, and shown during the intermissions, with the theatre spot-light playing on the date lines and the heads of the figures. This was a novelty stunt in Freeport and proved very effective publicity.

Striking Throwaway Gotten Out on "Blood and Sand

ROBINSON, ILL.—Manager J. C. Hewitt of the Strand theatre issued an inexpensive and unusual throwaway on "Blood and Sand," which can be easily duplicated elsewhere, although it calls for a little extra work.

On one side, printed in red and green, was a reproduction at one side of splotches of blood; at the other side was placed a daub of mucilage, by hand, over which common sand was scattered. The copy between read: This side of this card represents the title of the greatest photoplay since "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," and written by the same author, enacted by an all-star cast, headed by the same popular male star. On the reverse was the usual billing of the picture.

"Thorns and Orange Blossoms" Advertised to Women

Jacksonville, Fla.—Manager Albert Hill, of the Imperial theatre, exploited "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" with considerable success, aiming his campaign largely at women patrons.

Advance work consisted of the distribution of about 300 copies of the book, "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" and approximately 1,000 packages of face powder.

The books were given out to women during the matinee performances previous to the advertising of the picture. Tying up with this was the advance notice of the coming of the picture.

They were fortunate in securing about 1,000 samples of delicately perfumed face powder, and these were also distributed to ladies, with an idea to making an appeal to the senses through suggestion. Each package was inscribed, "Compliments of 'Thorns and Orange Blossoms.'"

The floral lobby was in keeping with the title of the picture. The entire lobby was basked in with white flowers, with a sprinkling of real orange blossoms here and there and the box office filled with them.

Marriage on Stage to Exploit "The Marriage Chance"

Minneapolis, Minn.—The run of "The Marriage Chance" at Pantages theatre was exploited by means of a real wedding on the stage, arranged by Manager Louis Christ and Jack Auslet, American Releasing's branch manager.

Miss Sarah LaCount and Herbert Jay, a young Minneapolis couple, were induced to have their proposed marriage solemnized in view of a larger audience than could have been assembled in a church. Because of extensive newspaper publicity given the event, many of the leading merchants donated goods ranging from a 100-pound sack of flour to the wedding ring itself. The wedding finery, as much as possible like that worn by Alta Allen in the picture, was furnished by a department store, and one of the town's photographers signified his willingness to take flashlights of the ceremony. An automobile concern willingly provided the car to take the bridal pair to their new home, where an assortment of groceries and some furniture awaited them as gifts from merchants, who had been approached and responded to the advertising value of the stunt.

In all the newspaper stories the name of the picture and the theatre was, of course, included, while Manager Christ's cash present did much to foster good will.

Madison "Coue" Campaign Subject of Error

ATTENTION has been called to the fact that in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS of March 31st the article in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau headed "Newspaper Tie-up is Great Aid to 'Message of Emile Coue'" was credited to Manager Ed. Weisfeldt of the Strand theatre, Milwaukee, through a printer's error.

This campaign was planned and executed by A. P. Desormeaux, manager of the Strand Theatre Company, operating the Strand theatre at Madison, Wis. MOTION PICTURE NEWS takes this occasion to give proper credit to Manager Desormeaux for the excellent exploitation in question.

"Heroes of the Street" is Tied Up with Clothier

BAKERSFIELD, CAL. — A tie-up with a local clothing store was made by the management of the California theatre on "Heroes of the Street."

The tie-up was made when the local newspapers heralded the fact that "Freckles" would appear in person throughout the engagement of the feature.

The stunt was in the nature of a "freckle-faced" contest, the winner to be given a free trip to Hollywood with all expenses paid by the Federal Outfitting Company, Bakersfield.

Reward Poster Gotten Out on "Missing Husbands"

BALTIMORE, Md.—Teaser poster advertising was recently used to good effect by the New Wizard theatre in exploiting "Missing Husbands."

The title lends itself to exploitation and the theatre took advantage of it to issue a poster about the size of a one-sheet on which was a large photograph of a man, showing the back of his head and shoulders and a small portion of the side of his face. In big type over the picture was printed: "$25,000 reward to anybody who will give any clue, information or identify the person in this photograph." Below the photograph was: "One of the 'Missing Husbands.' Call at the Wizard theatre, etc."

"Thorns and Orange Blossoms" Exploited Through Novel

Sandusky, Ohio.—George Schade, owner and manager of the Schade theatre, put over a special exploitation campaign on "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" that aroused wide interest in the showing.

Three hundred and fifty copies of the special photoplay edition of Bertha M. Clay's novel were used. An equal number of personal letters type on paper monogrammed "T" were written and signed in a feminine hand, "Estelle Taylor." These books when wrapped took four cents' postage and were mailed to women only, including typists, stenographers, salesladies and those in other professions who were likely to come in contact daily with a large number of persons.

The canceling clerk at the post office used an old canceling stamp that could not easily be read. In this way the idea that the books were mailed from Los Angeles was preserved. The gag worked wonderfully and no one discovered the deception, the recipients of the volumes remaining quite flattered that Estelle Taylor had sent them autographed copies of the photoplay edition.

Elaborate Presentation Given "The Grub-Stake" Run

Seattle, Wash.—In addition to a special contest which received wide publicity for "The Grub-Stake," Publicity Manager Vic Gauntlett, of the Blue Mouse theatre, was further aided by the personal appearance of the star, Nell Shipman, and by an elaborate presentation.

Nell Shipman had with her two of the malamute dogs that appeared in the photoplay, and made her appearance in Alaskan fur costume. She told a few details of the making of the picture, and recited the closing stanzas of "The Spell of the Yukon," by Robert W. Service.

In conjunction with the visit of Miss Shipman in the city, the theatre tied up with the Seattle Star, and that paper each evening ran a series of articles by the star in regard to girls entering motion pictures. She answered through the columns of the paper, questions propounded by city movie fans, and on one afternoon was hostess at a tea for lady patrons of the theatre, given in the lounging room.

An especially elaborate presentation was arranged for the "Grub-Stake" engagement by House Manager Hal Daigler. The lobby of the theatre was decorated to resemble an Alaskan snow scene, with an electrically illuminated rainbow, trimmed with tinsel, at each side. A falling snow effect was used on the front drape of the stage during Miss Shipman's appearance on the boards, and was also used during the introductory overture and first sub-titles of the photoplay. Electrically illuminated rainbows were used at each side of the stage. They were also made out of various colored tinsel, and were backed up with winter snow scenes, indirectly lighted by shades of red, blue and green.

"Jackie Coogan Roll" Used as "Oliver Twist" Aid

TAMPA, Fla.—In Tampa the Federal bakeries make what they call a "Jackie Coogan Roll." Manager R. C. Frost of the Strand theatre went after the manager of this concern and sold him on the idea of giving away 6,000 of these rolls. Frost furnished the waxed paraffine bags and the bakery the rolls; of course each was advertised on the bag. These were given away at the theatre by one of the bakery girls. Manager Frost says "They all went away with a sweet taste in their mouth."

A co-operative page was gotten up, eight leading merchants were in it and each one of them had 25 free tickets to give away. In this manner 200 tickets were given out for the matinee performance of the opening day.

Teaser Stickers Stir Interest in "The Christian"

Evansville, Ind.—W. C. Meek, manager of the Victory theatre, and Goldwynner H. T. Snowden, used five thousand teaser stickers were used in advance of the exploitation campaign for "The Christian." The sticker was small, about two by two and one-half inches, and its message, printed in red nik, read: "April 2nd, at the Victory, Evansville. We'll all be there."

The town was plastered with these stickers for several days before Mr. Snowden opened his campaign, and succeeded in arousing an unusual degree of interest in the picture before its identity was made known.

This was followed by a billing campaign of unusual proportions; 100 regular one-sheets, 200 block teaser one-sheets, fifteen threes, fifteen six's, ten 24-sheets, 3,000 heralds, 200 window cards and 2,000 announcements put into the mails being used.

Sentries Are Placed in Front of House on "The Hero"

New York, N. Y.—A special stunt was used by Proctor's theatre in Yonkers to exploit "The Hero."

Two men dressed in soldier's uniform acted as sentries in front of the theatre, attracting a great deal of attention and causing widespread comment among the passersby. Special advertising and paper, including several 24-sheets, were used for the engagement.

A prologue which featured "My Hero," the song from "The Chocolate Soldier," was staged very successfully in the presentation.

"Safety Last" Cut-outs Hung on Prominent Buildings

St. Louis, Mo.—Manager Bob Smith, of the Grand Central theatre, in exploiting "Safety Last," hung twenty large 24-sheet cut-outs on buildings at good corners, giving the effect of a live man being actually suspended high in the air. Smaller cut-outs from the one-sheets were placed around the ledge of the lobby. These gave the effect of Lloyd trying to balance himself on the ledge, and made a big impression on patrons prior to the "Safety Last" opening.

"Lorna Doone" Is Aided by Better Films Group

ANNISTON, Ala.—Manager Roy C. Smart of the Noble theatre got his print of Lorna Doone" in advance and ran it off for the Better Films Committee, with the result that it gave him an enthusiastic endorsement.

On the strength of this endorsement, the Public Library cooperated by allowing a display of photos and cards in the foyer and reading rooms. Mr. Smart used the endorsement in his newspaper ads.

The presidents of all local civic organizations were induced to announce the picture at their regular weekly meetings and urge the members to attend.

Keith Houses Give Active Aid to "The Christian" Runs

New York, N. Y.—Active exploitation has been put back of "The Christian" recently by the theatres of the Keith, Moss and Proctor group in New York City.

The largest and most elaborate display was at Proctor's 125th street theatre, where a church steeple, 18 feet high, was erected on the marquee. The steeple boasted illuminated clock dials on which were the words, "'The Christian'—Now," and chimes, which were played five hours a day during the engagement of the picture.

A miniature church, complete in every detail, was placed in the lobby of the B. S. Moss Franklin theatre. A doll, dressed as a clergyman, even waited at the door to welcome his clergy. Another miniature chapel was built at Keith's Hamilton theatre, on upper Broadway, and was placarded as being the model of the chapel used in filming "The Christian."

Keith's Fordham theatre tied up with the publisher of Sir Hall Caine's novel and had a number of books on sale in the lobby of the theatre before and during the run.

Race Track Lobby Built Up for "The Kentucky Derby"

Seattle, Wash.—When Manager John Danz played "The Kentucky Derby" at his Colonial theatre here recently, he dressed up his lobby to represent a race track scene. A white wooden fence running all the way around the lobby gave the patrons the sensation of standing at the edge of the track, looking on to the field.

The boxoffice was entirely boarded in and disguised as the judges' stand, with a bell on top, which was rung occasionally by the cashier and never failed to attract attention. A large sign on the stand warned patrons: "Place Your Bets Here."

At the extreme top of the judges' stand stood a large replica of Barney Google and his famous horse, "Spark Plug," even to "Sparky's" checked blanket, oval figure and questioning visage. On the side of the small stall in which Barney and his horse stood were the words, "This One Is Too Fast Even for 'Sparky.'"

Water Tank Used to Build "Making a Man" Lobby

FORT WORTH, TEXAS—Manager Harry Gould, of the Hippodrome theatre, built a most attractive lobby display for "Making a Man." He made use of an old water tank that he had used before to furnish the river front scene.

In this water tank were placed several small toy boats. As a background he made use of a miniature skyline of New York City with a large cut-out of Jack Holt seen towering over the entire display.

Manager Boosts "Knighthood" at Home Talent Minstrel

GADSDEN, Ala.—One week in advance of the showing of "When Knighthood was in Flower" at the Imperial theatre, Manager A. L. Snell had blank half sheets posted in every available good location in town. Then he had painted across the top of these the question, "Do you remember?". Each night thereafter one word of the title was added until the signs read, "Do you remember When Knighthood was in Flower?" On account of the prominent locations secured, this was excellent teaser work and got the title over strong.

About three days before opening a home talent minstrel was given at the local Opera House. Mr. Snell himself went on for a solo act under the condition that he could tell them about "Knighthood." After a song and story to get them in the proper humor he sprung his "Knighthood" talk and it got generous applause.

"Down to the Sea in Ships" Is Tied Up with Essay Contest

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The contest idea has been applied to "Down to the Sea in Ships," which is to play at Rowland and Clark's State theatre, by Milton Crandall, special exploitation representative of Hodkinson, who has tied it up with the Pittsburgh Post.

Through the aid of the newspaper Mr. Crandall has opened a contest for all boys and girls in the elementary schools of Pittsburgh and all are invited to write an essay on whales, the one sending in the best to be awarded a silver loving cup 18 inches high. There are 20 other prizes that will be given to the next best winners.

Crandall's efforts in behalf of Elmer Clifton's romance of old whaling days resulted in plenty of front page publicity. Photographs in the newspaper for days preceding the showing were in evidence. The interest created in Pittsburgh in this contest was amazing. Replies, it is said, have been coming in every day, and the Pittsburgh Post had to put on additional help in order to handle the essays coming in.

Special advertising has been placed in the daily papers and nothing left undone that would in any way publicize the fact that "Down to the Sea in Ships" was the feature attraction at the State theatre.

Contrasts Chaplin's Roles in "Pilgrim" Lobby

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Manager James Fotheringham, of the B. S. Moss Franklin theatre, produced an attention-winning lobby for "The Pilgrim" by playing up strongly the contrast between clergymen and convict, the two roles essayed by Chaplin in the picture.

At one side Charlie, the cleric, faced passersby with the austere garb of the the cloth from "The Pilgrim's" church. Across the lobby from him sat the morose convict in his cell. The contrast alone was sufficient to cause comment. If any further need for arousing interest were necessary it was supplied in the bold, distinctive advertising copy that went with the display.

"Town That Forgot God" Given Strong Exploitation Drive

Baltimore, Md.—Manager Eugene Daly of the New theatre conducted an exploitation campaign that touched upon many angles of publicity on "The Town That Forgot God."

A week before the opening, one-sheet teaser ads were posted on more than 300 boards throughout the city. They read: "Where is the town that forgot God?" Further bill posting was done with the use of 35 24-sheets displaying the star in the picture.

Invitations were e tended to the leading clergymen in Baltimore to attend the opening night performance of the production. Many of the ministers attending used the story of the picture as the theme for their daily Lenten services.

The lobby decoration was elaborate. A large streamer bearing the name of the picture was dropped from the roof of the theatre and extended over the front of the house. Cut-outs from the posters were used to adorn the entrance way and the marquee.

The newspaper advertising began on the Wednesday prior to the Monday opening and was increased each day until Sunday, when a quarter page display was used in all the dailies.

A tie-up with a local department store resulted in carrying "The Town That Forgot God" advertising on more than fifty delivery wagons.

Keith House Stages Attractive "Brawn of North" Prologue

New York, N. Y.—An effective prologue to "Brawn of the North," designed and staged by Reed Albee, was used at B. F. Keith's Eighty-first street theatre recently.

The scene was a mountain pass, and when it opened the snow was flying and dark clouds were drifting by. Silhouetted against the sky was the lone figure of a dog. Gradually the stage became lighter and in the foreground a man appeared. He called his four-footed servants and prepared to "mush" them off on the day's long trail.

This presentation, which was made under the personal supervision of Mr Albee, was skilfully staged and lighted. A silver cyclorama furnished the background for the effects, and the snowy rocks and silhouette figure of the dog were of painted compo-board. A dog act appearing on the bill provided the real animals which appeared with the woodsman in the foreground.

"Mad Love" Strongly Exploited in Well Varied Campaign

Baltimore, Md.—"Mad Love" at the Century theatre was preceded by an exploitation drive designed to reach every citizen of Baltimore.

In addition to 500 window cards, 500 one-sheets, 75 threes, 50 sixes, 35 twenty-fours, 8x10's, 11x14's and 22x28's, large newspaper space, etc., there were 2,500 especially written letters sent to several selected lists of names of persons to whom a special appeal could be directed and 50,000 programs printed.

Hochschild, Kohn & Co., the largest department store in Baltimore, had a big window display, in which was used a brand new wax figure, on which Charles A. Vossberg, the display artist, draped black velvet to form the gown Pola Negri is shown wearing on the front of the press book. Surmounted by a white wig, similar to that worn in the play by the star, the figure looked strikingly like the famous star.

Eight hundred window and store displays were secured through the Hendler Creamery sending out 3,000 snipes and 800 letters to their dealers urging them to tie-up with this big picture by serving the "Mad Love" sundae, prepared from the famous Pola's own favorite recipe.

The catchline was used, "She will win your heart just as she won the heart of Charlie Chaplin," thus getting the benefit of the publicity given this famous romance.

The campaign was conducted by General Manager Thomas D. Soriero of the Whitehurst theatres with the assistance of Goldwynner William N. Robson.

Bonds Self for $1,000 as "Bond Boy" Guarantee

SANDUSKY, Ohio—When George F. Schade, owner and manager of the Schade theatre, played "The Bond Boy," he bonded himself for $1,000, guaranteeing that "The Bond Boy" would exceed in dramatic strength the performance of any other male star in any other first run picture presented in the city at the same time.

He placed the amount of the guarantee with Ed. L. Ways, day editor of the Sandusky Register, and advertised this challenge through the newspaper in two column space. He used two advertisements, one on the picture and the other on his guarantee.

Placing the money with a newspaper man assured good publicity notices and the initial story was run in the news columns along with the ads, making three notices for the Schade theatre in the same issue.

If Schade's claim was disproved the money was to go to a local charity, while three prominent citizens were named adjudicators in the event of a dispute.

Biblical Quotation Employed as "Adam's Rib" Teaser

Eau Claire, Wis.—Manager H. A. Schwann of the O'Klare theatre and Jack Hellman, Paramount exploiteer, used newspaper teaser ads to good effect for "Adam's Rib."

Five days before the opening scatter-ads set in 14 point italics were run in the newspaper reading: "Turn to Genesis II., 22, and read about the most famous bone of history."

The next day this appeared in the same space: "And the rib, which Jehovah had taken from man, made he a woman."—Gen. II., 22.

The next day came this: "We've got it all 'Ribbed Up' for you to see the famous rib of Adam. Watch the announcement in this evening's paper."

Then followed the straight advertising for the picture, in which there was much interest due to the teaser activity.

THE CAPITOL THEATRE

is carpeted exclusively with Bigelow Merrimac Wilton, in an all-over design of blue laurel leaves on a plain mulberry ground. This is one of the highest grades of the Bigelow-Hartford Carpet Company's worsted Wiltons. The ability of this carpet to retain its beauty and lustre, and to wear well under long and constant treading, has been the cause of its wide use in theatres all over the country. Pullman cars alone have used considerably over one million yards of this grade of carpet, in one pattern, during the past ten years.

Bigelow-Hartford Carpets for elegance and durability

THE atmosphere of elegance and refinement demanded, today, of motion picture theatres and others, cannot be achieved without the use of fine carpets on the floor. The sense of luxuriousness imparted by their softness to the tread and their beauty of appearance, dignify and enrich a theatre as nothing else can.

But carpets in this service must endure severe and constant wear, and even abuse. It must be known in advance that the fabrics intended for this purpose will be able to successfully withstand the hard usage to which they most certainly will be subjected.

Bigelow-Hartford carpets represent the highest development of carpet manufacture, in both style and quality. They radiate an impression of substantial strength and endurance. Their reputation, of ninety-seven years' standing, as the standard of carpet perfection, and our claims of long-wearing quality, are supported by a preponderance of evidence based on experience.

The following partial list of houses recently equipped with Bigelow-Hartford carpets, attests the recognition of these fabrics, by theatre owners and managers, as "carpets of quality."

The "BEST" BUILDING MATERIAL for THEATRES

"BEST"! That's the unqualified word which Harry S. Wright applies to Terra Cotta as a facing material for motion picture theatres. And he speaks from personal experience—for his theatre, pictured above, is faced with Terra Cotta.

One all-important reason why Terra Cotta is the "best" facing material for theatres is that it can give a theatre that attention-compelling attractiveness which is such a big factor in drawing and holding big audiences. A second, complementary reason is that, for the money spent upon it, Terra Cotta gives greater return in form and color than does any comparable material. Thus—no matter how much money you wish to spend on your theatre front, you may be sure Terra Cotta will give it the utmost in that kind of inviting appearance which invariably capitalizes passing crowds into box-office receipts.

The beauty of Terra Cotta is permanent. There is practically no maintenance expense. Dirt and grime do not penetrate its impervious surface; a simple washing with soap and water always restores its original beauty. And in addition, Terra Cotta is highly fire-resistant and weatherproof.

If you are contemplating the erection or alteration of a theatre building, write us for advice. We can give you information which may save you time and money. Address National Terra Cotta Society, 19 West 44th Street, New York, N. Y.

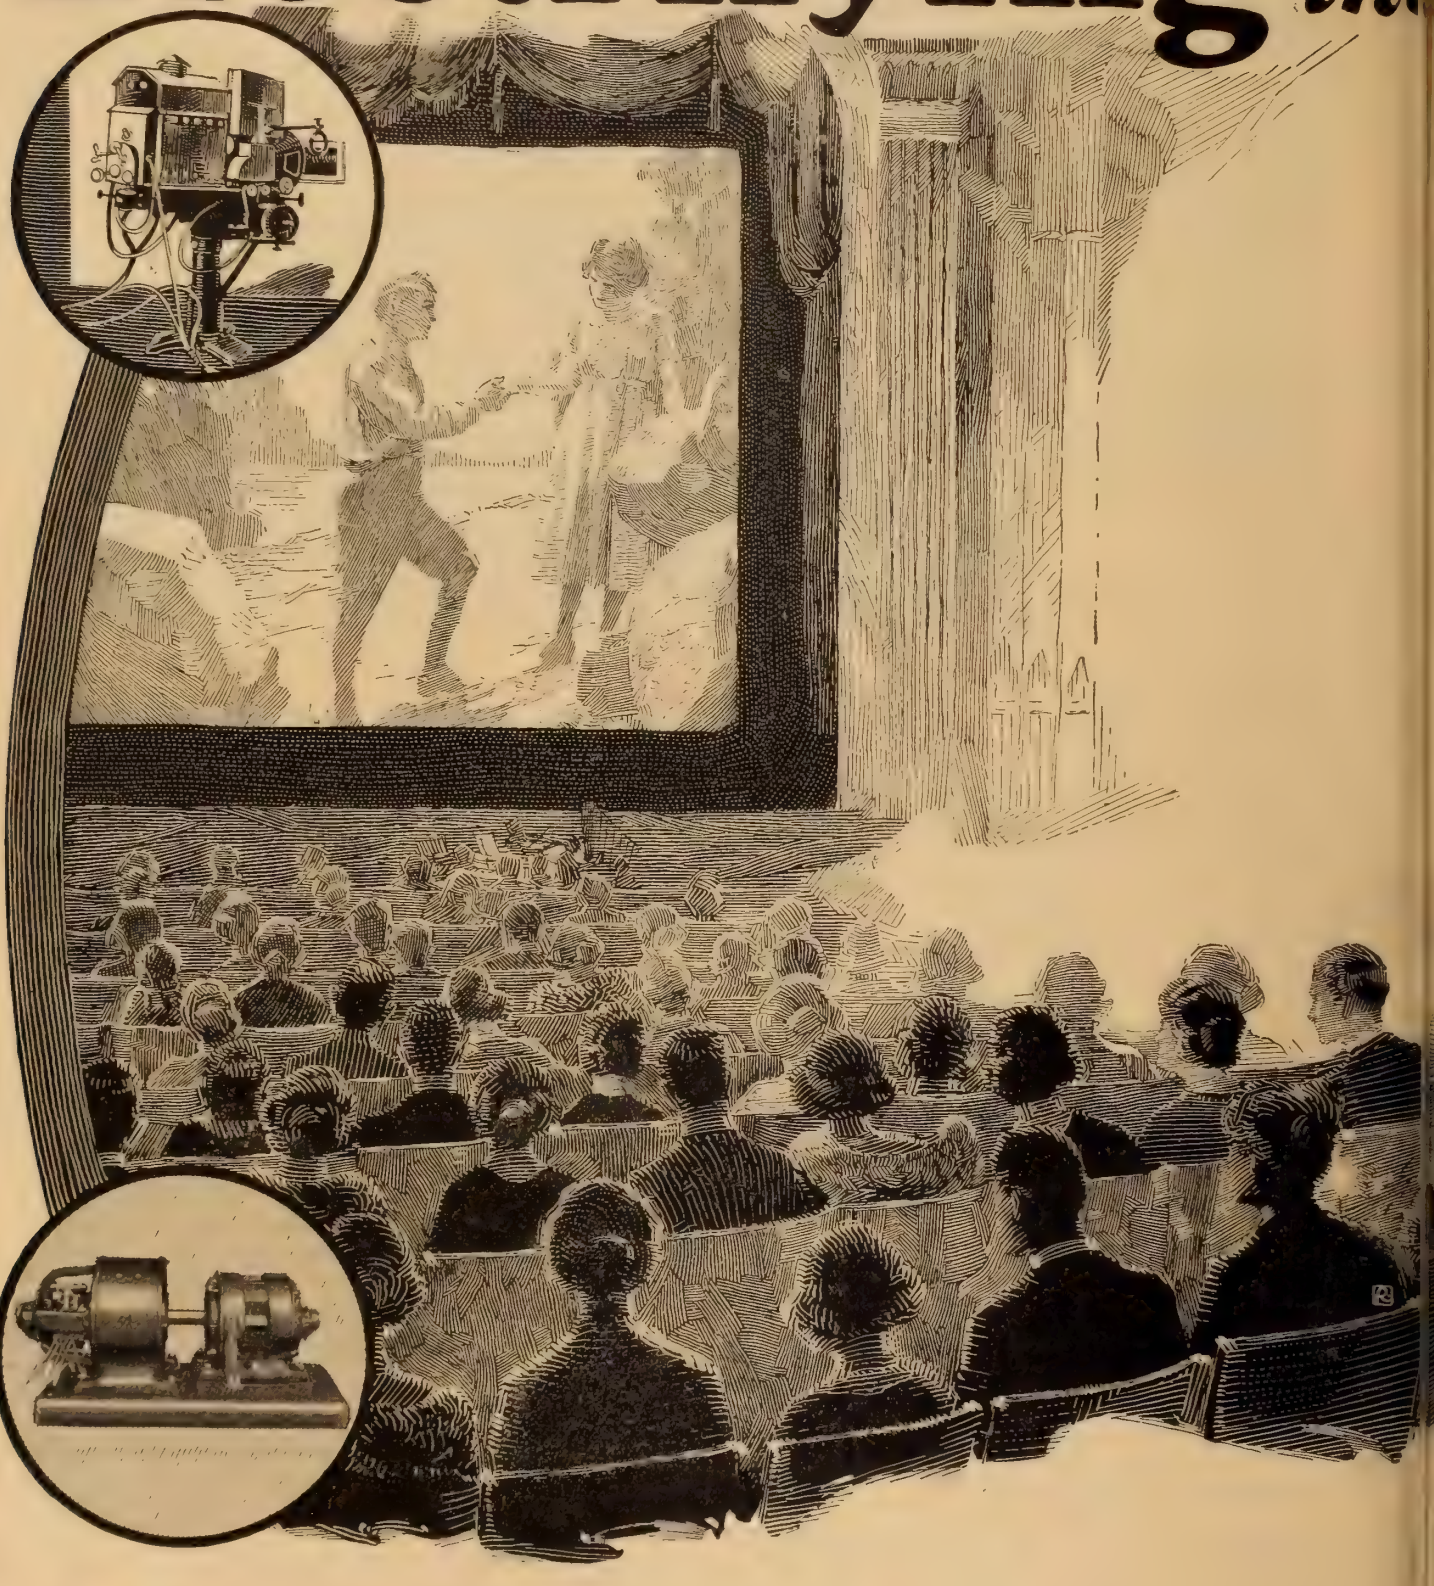
Electrifying th



Westinghouse

Motion Picture Industry

SINCE the very beginning of the Motion Picture Industry, about eighteen years ago, Westinghouse has been prominently identified with its development.

The three-unit motor-generator which has proved so valuable in studio service is a product of Westinghouse pioneer work. Westinghouse Three-Unit Motor-Generators are found in nearly all large studio substations.

Improvements in the design of portable generating equipment used in producing artificial light for outdoor photography; the development of automatic control equipment for centralizing and facilitating the control of studio lighting; the design of large generating equipment with exceptionally close voltage regulation so essential to the service—all these are Westinghouse contributions to the progress of the motion picture art.

Electricity is the very life of the Motion Picture Industry—there is no substitute. It is the basis of past progress and is the foundation of future progress. Westinghouse, therefore, is proud of its contribution to an industry of such world-wide proportions.

Three of the Finest

MAJOR SYSTEM ADVANTAGES:

- Remote Control
- Extended Remote Control
- Remote Dimmer Control
- Cumulative Control
- Pre-selection
- Flashless, noiseless switch operation
- Minimum stage space
- Unit construction
- Experienced design
- Perfect workmanship
- Highest grade materials.

These motion picture theaters, the finest in this country, are equipped with the Major System of Theater Lighting Control. They represent the type that have accepted the Major System as the only one worthy of installation. The great number of theaters who boast of this advantage of Major installations is being added to every week—a definite assurance of leadership.

Both old and new theaters alike may be equipped with Major Systems, the unit construction of the system itself making it exceptionally adaptable in fulfilling the better lighting needs in any size of theatre. In addition, it is equipped with a momentary contact switch to lock the switchboard with any combination of lights on, insuring absolute safety from meddling.

Another special feature is the "All-out" switch which is available only in the Major System of Light Control. With this device, every light on the stage may be turned out, regardless of the position of individual switches. The Major System of Theater Lighting Control is known to be the simplest to operate, the safest to handle and the most practical, and by these three reasons alone achieved its success.

Construction and Equipment of Modern Theatres

By Thomas W. Lamb, Theatre Architect

Recommendations and Procedure for Selecting the Site, Financing, Building, Etc.

PERHAPS the most fascinating architectural problem in the United States today is the design development of a theatre. But it is at the same time a most uncertain and dangerous one, unless it is properly approached and carried through. Theatre building is so unique in its very nature that unless a careful analysis is made of every division of the problem and the result worked out from this analysis, the owner and the operator are likely to find themselves with a "white elephant" on their hands instead of a gold mine.

The first phase to be approached is the consideration of the city or town in which the theatre is to be located. A prospective builder may believe that his is an excellent theatre town and yet find, upon analysis that he is wrong. This is an extremely important step. Therefore he should make a survey of his town to get definite and reliable information regarding the following points:

Survey of Town for Theatre

1. Number of districts, their character and size.
2. Number of industries and the class of people employed.
3. Location of the various factories and industries.
4. Size, character and location of the various residential districts. It is very important in this connection, to know whether factory employees are segregated or whether they are scattered over the city.
5. Character of the inhabitants of surrounding districts.
6. Transportation facilities of both city and suburbs.
7. Number of theatres already located in the city, rating of their shows, their capacity and the average attendance over a given period of time.

Having made such a survey, one has a basis from which one can work in determining whether or not one can safely build a new theatre in a particular district.

It is an established fact that factory towns offer the best location for theatres. The reason for this is that the average work done in a factory is less interesting and less varied than other types of work. This is especially true where the work is of a highly specialized character which leaves nothing to stimulate the worker's imagination. A theatre in this case supplies much of the dramatic and artistic stimulus which is so essential to a happy, well rounded life.

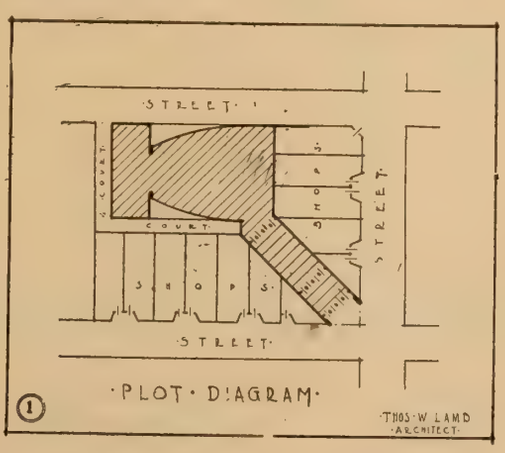
The situation of residential groups should determine, to a large extent, the location of the theatre. The theatre must be on a main street and the "must" should be emphasized in one's mind as a paramount requirement. This does not necessarily mean the main street of the town, but it does mean the key street of the district in which the theatre is to be located. In Montreal, Canada, there is a very striking example of a theatre business which became a financial failure because it was not built on the key street in its district. The lobby is about one hundren feet away from the key street corner. Although the section is a popular one and a good theatre district, the theatre has been unsuccessful since its opening. The same is true of one or two theatres in New York. This requirement for an advantageously situated entrance applies only, of course, to motion picture and vaudeville houses. A legitimate theatre having an attraction which lasts several months, does not of necessity require a main street entrance. In the minds of the keenest promotors of theatrical enterprises, however, this factor is such a fixed requirement that in several instances lobbies have been built over alleys. Diagram No. 1 illustrates this unusual construction. In another case a lobby was built three hundred feet long in order to avoid an entrance on a side street. The success of this particular theatre has been due, in a large measure, to the properly located entrance.



A plot diagram showing a diagonal entrance allowing the entrance to be placed at the intersection of two main streets and the use of less expensive ground for the theatre proper

Selection of Plot for the Theatre

Having determined the locality in which the theatre is to be built, the next problem is that of buying enough land. The plot should not be too expensive. The entrance will probably have to be on or through expensive property, but the actual theatre should be located on land that is much less expensive. One must always take into consideration the necessity of court exits as required by law. Even though there may be no such law in a given locality, theatre exits should be built to allow patrons easy and immediate exit in case of fire or panic.

In the selection of the site, there is one point that is of great importance inasmuch as it affects the cost of the building, namely, the nature of the soil on which the site is located. In a certain west coast city there is an interesting example of the results that may follow a disregard of this factor. A clever promoter found what he thought was an excellent theatre site, very well located and reasonable in price. In fact, so far as he could tell from his few short visits to the city, he had a bargain. He had, however, failed to investigate thoroughly and when the time came to build, it was found that dry, solid ground on the property was only about two feet deep. It was necessary to place wooden piles under the entire theatre, with the result that the cost of the foundation amounted to nearly five times the normal cost. Tests of the soil on which a theatre is to be placed should always be made. One may find soft bottom or one may find rock and either of these conditions create a very undesirable place for a small theatre. Of course, large theatres must often of necessity be built on property requiring piling or blasting.

Expert Advice for Planning and Selecting Architect

Following the foregoing preliminaries, the next step is to obtain expert advice on the planning of the theatre and to select the architect. If the theatre is to have a capacity of more than 1500 seats, the services of the best architect available should be secured. If the theatre is less than 1500 seats' capacity and is to be of inexpensive construction, the services of the most reliable local architect might suffice, but the design should be criticized by a theatre architect of the highest repute.

The building of theatres is as much a specialty as the building of residences, schools, or hospitals. In fact, it is even more highly specialized because it is a phase of architecture of comparatively recent scientific development and the requirements are not so widely known as those of other types of buildings. Nearly all architects know at least some of the requirements of residence building. Very few understand those of a theatre. There are, however, in nearly all metropolitan centers such as New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, San Francisco and Detroit, architects with excellent reputations for good theatre designing. Such a one may be retained to design a large house or to criticize a small one. The employment of a good theatrical architect, is, in the long run, an economy. Upon him must rest to a large extent the responsibility for the success of the house; because poorly designed sight lines, insufficient ventilation or an expensive building necessitating excessive investment, can very easily spell ruin for an otherwise practical undertaking.

An example of an unusually long lobby leading over an alley to the theatre proper thus permitting the theatre to be built on relatively inexpensive property with an entrance on a key street

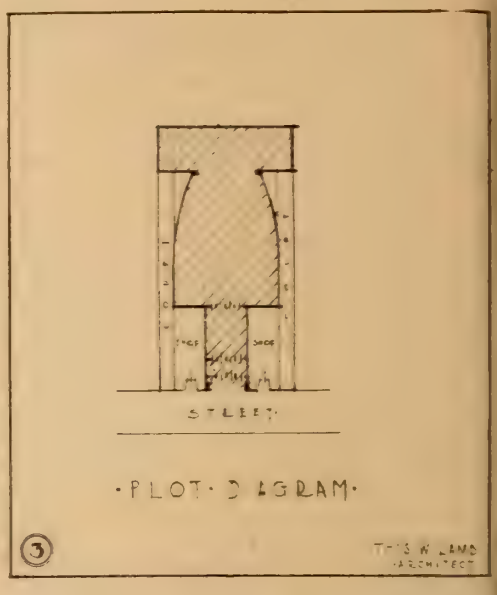
Sketches of Theatre to Utilize Plot

The architect's first task will be to make sketches of the proposed theatre. On these sketches will be determined the amount of court space required for exits, the size of the lobby, the seating arrangement and in general, how to utilize the site to the best advantage. It may be necessary to purchase more property, or again, there may be an excess of property, so that a sketch at this stage is of paramount importance. The sketches will not, of course, be absolutely accurate, for they are made at small scale, but they will convey to the owner an idea of what is permissible and possible on his plot.

At the same time, one should determine whether it is necessary, as a matter of insurance, to build a stage or at least stage walls sufficiently heavy to allow for the installation of a stage in the future. I should say, off hand, that a theatre with a capacity up to 1,000 seats would find a stage a luxury, but above 1,000 seats, a stage is an insurance; that is, a motion picture house of less than one thousand seats is hardly practical for vaudeville as the latter in order to be successful, must cater to larger audiences. If the locality warrants the construction of a 1,500 to 2,000 seat house, and the real estate investment is not too heavy, it is excellent insurance to build a stage. The cost of building a stage, outside of the cost of the extra land required, is about $30,000. This stage enables the production of a special act in conjunction with the motion picture, and also makes it possible to convert the house on very short notice to either a vaudeville or legitimate theatre. In a number of towns a well paying plan is to run a few acts of vaudeville or give a similar performance during the last days of the week. A theatre with the complete stage will permit this.

Methods and Proceedure for Proper Financing

The next large problem is the matter of financing. There are very few theatre owners who are able to build all their theatres independently, although this is, of course, the most desirable way. If it is necessary for the owner to go to one of the large financing companies or even to a local bank to obtain the necessary financial backing, it will undoubtedly be a stringent requirement that he erect, in connection with the theatre, a certain proportion of commercial building. The financial companies and banks are quite adverse to lending money on what is called a "one use" proposition. They prefer to lend money on a building that is at least 50% convertible. A theatre is of such a special construction that it cannot be converted for some other use except at great expense. When the site is purchased, sufficient property should, therefore, be obtained to build a few stores and offices



Typical layout showing the recommendable practice of incorporating shops and offices to make the building commercial. Note the arrangement of the courts for ready exits and the floors above the stores should be sufficiently strong to allow for a dance hall, rooms for public assembly or a light manufacturing establishment. In fact, almost any type of small business building will materially assist in the securing of a sufficient loan. I recall an amusing incident in this connection. We were preparing plans for a large 3,500 seat theatre and a 16 story office building. Naturally in conversations with the owner, we mentioned the theatre first and the office building second. But when it came to writing the letter, which described the whole proposition and which was to be submitted to the financial company, it was necessary to reverse this method and in every instance to name and emphasize the office building and to minimize the importance of the theatre. I cannot be too emphatic on this point in order to bring out the necessity of constructing a certain amount of convertible commercial building in connection with a theatre. In fact, were to construct a house of even two or three hundred seats for my personal investment I should incorporate two small stores and one floor of offices thus insuring a good financial return.

Financing Through Local Sale of Stock in Theatre

An interesting method of handling the financing of a theatre is through the local sale of stock. The usual way is to arrange with some financial company to underwrite either a bond or a stock issue these bonds being secured by the financing company until the building is constructed

Comfort Assured for Capitol Theatre Patrons

PLEASURE seekers are comfort lovers, too. Knowing this full well, the builders of the new Capitol Theatre, New York City, made certain to provide their thousands of daily patrons with every known Theatre Chair comfort by contracting for American Seating Company Theatre Chairs throughout.

The beautiful chair selected, harmonizing perfectly with the color scheme of the theatre whole, offers among its notable elements of seating comfort a generous roominess both in width and depth, back well upholstered, arm rests correctly placed, smoothly operating and noiseless seat-hinges, mattress spring seat, a perfectly level placing with relation to the floor, serviceable hat holder, anchorage firm and unshakeable, no loose parts to annoy, and no sharp outjutting points to catch and tear the clothing. Every adjunct to the greatest possible comfort in theatre or auditorium seating has been incorporated in this unexcelled Theatre Chair.

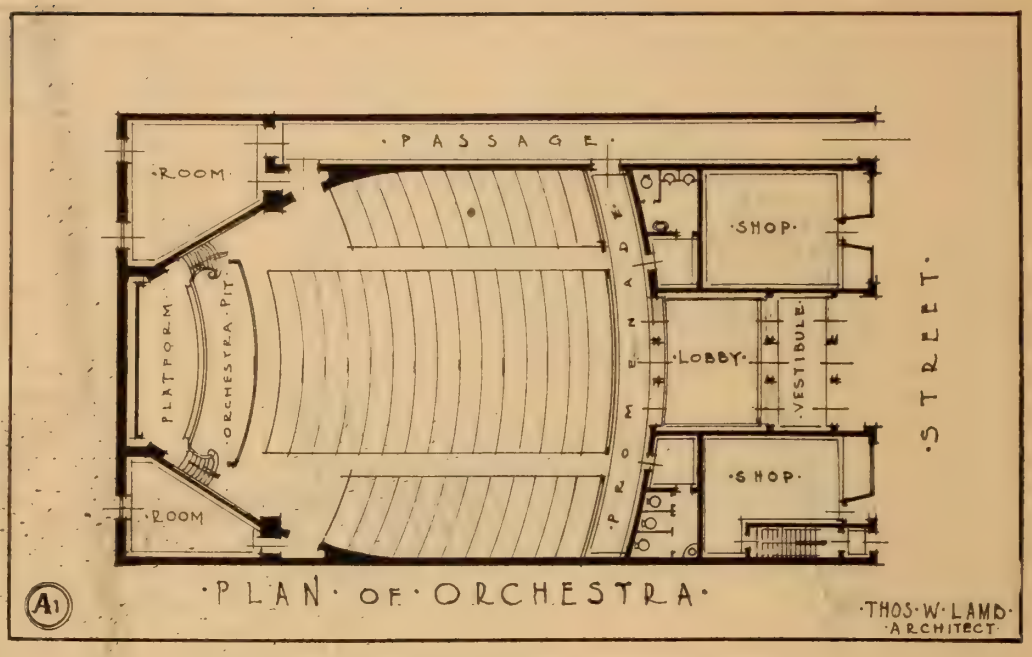
and by the owner after its completion. The financing company with the owner's assistance, markets the stock or bonds locally. The great advantage in this is that each owner of the stock or bonds will be a booster for the theatre and this naturally results in larger returns and free advertising through local interests. It is often possible, when building a theatre, to arrange with the builder (the contractor) to take a large block of either the bonds or the stock in part payment for his services. This plan is very useful as it means that considerably less actual cash is required.

Consideration of Materials Used in the Construction

The materials entering into the construction must now be considered. For the highest grade of construction, use steel encased in concrete, or reinforced concrete. This type of construction is called "absolutely fireproof." In certain localities it is permissible to build theatres that have wood flooring and wood roofing. It is always advisable, however, to install a steel skeleton construction, even in a building of this type. The most careful consideration must be given to the method of designing, fabricating and erecting the steel. The question arises: "What can the motion picture theatre owner know about engineering?" The answer is that he should insist on reasonable safeguards in the construction of the theatre. Providing the architect is paid a full fee, the owner is entitled to a complete and accurate design of the steel. Under no circumstances, if a competent architect has been retained should the contractor be allowed to re-design the steel unless the architect is paid an additional fee for re-checking this re-design of the steel.

Consulting Engineer

After the contract for steel is let, either on the basis of the architect's original design or the checked re-design, the services of a consulting structural engineer should be retained. This cost will be about 1½% of the amount of the steel contract. The engineer will check not only the steel design but will investigate and check all the shop drawings showing the various steel connections. He should be a man of experience either in theatre or bridge construction or buildings of like nature. Experience of this nature is necessary as the structural steel of a balcony in a theatre is very complicated sometimes requiring double cantilever trusses, the calculations for the design of which are so involved that only a man experienced in this particular type of construction is able to properly check the calculations. After the consulting engineer has approved the design and details, these should be filed in the local Building Department. When approved by that department, the steel construction may be started.



Layout for a typical 350 seat house embodying shops, etc.

At this point in the development of the theatre project, the services of another type of engineer should be retained. The function of this engineer is to do the shop and field checking. This work usually costs 50c. per ton for each service, making a total of $1.00 per ton for the work performed. A competent man is placed in the shop where the steel is being fabricated. He makes a test of every connection and measures each piece of steel, assuring the accurate performance of the work in the manner indicated by the drawings. The field checking is similar. A man is placed by your checking engineer to supervise all the erection of the steel, to see that every rivet is tight and that no changes are made without an authorization from the consulting engineer and the architect. This procedure assures that everything shall be carried through in a workmanlike manner.

This question is discussed at some length because of the accidents during the past year. It is absolutely imperative that the builder of a theatre have this triple you will want equipment that is of the highest quality and that represents the very latest and best in projection practice.

G-E Motor Generator Compensarcs are a lasting asset to any theater and are performing dependably in hundreds of the finest theaters from coast to coast.

The principal elements of such equipment are:

1. A motor generator connected to any supply voltage, either alternating or direct current, and delivering direct current to the projection lamps at the proper current and voltage.

2. Motor starting device which starts the motor generator and automatically shuts it off when lamps are extinguished.

3. Control panel with ammeter for reading current and field rheostat by which the current at the arc can be increased or decreased.

4. Two short circuiting switches mounted on the projector pedestals to enable the operator conveniently to shift from one lamp to the other, without interruption between reels.

Emergency equipment: It is also advisable to use A. C. Compensarcs (5) connected to the lighting circuit for use in case of failure of the power circuit to which the motor generator is connected.

With such equipment an exhibitor is assured of the best possible quality of light for his pictures. Compensarcs are safe, easy to operate, efficient, economical and reliable.

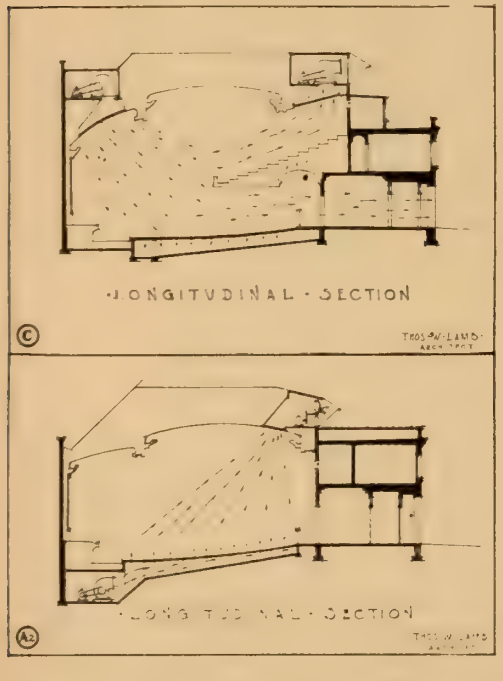
check on the steel construction. In fact, no kind of engineering should be left to one man. There are too many human lives dependent on the results. It is therefore necessary to have the three types of engineers employed to check and re-check the work from the inception to the completion. This removes all doubt concerning the safety of the building after it is finished.

Position of Ticket Booth and Seating Arrangement

The construction plans of the house having been decided upon, the next step is the consideration of administration. Decide upon the position of the ticket booth. There have been long controversies between various theatre owners over this matter. If the house is an "independent," it is best to place your ticket booth as nearly on the street as possible. If the name is sufficient advertising in itself, the booth may be placed inside the lobby. In all cases, however, the booth should be well towards the front of the lobby, or in the vestibule, as it is necessary to sell the patrons their seats as soon as possible after they enter the theatre.

The lobby should be arranged to provide comfortable standing room for the crowds on holidays and also to permit sufficient room for the audience inside the theatre to exit comfortably.

It is usually an advantage to have one ticket taker for both balcony and orchestra and the theatre should be so planned that only one person is needed for this purpose.



Upper—Sketch illustrating the position of the centrifugal fans and the direction of the circulation of the air in the down draft ventilating system

Lower—This view shows the centrifugal intake with a disk exhaust fan on the roof

The arrangements for the seating of the theatre should be given careful consideration. The rows of seats should be sufficiently far apart to enable people to pass those seated when going in or out. This distance should be 2 ft. 8 in. at least although where the property is very expensive and the theatre well attended, it may be possible to reduce the spacings of balcony seats and some of the orchestra seats to 2 ft. 6 in. However, in the great majority of cases, 2 ft. 8 in. or even more is really an advantage.

It is also better to have a wall aisle in the house rather than a wall bank of seats. People walking up and down in intermediate aisles obstruct the view of the patrons seated.

Design of Theatre for Any Particular Type of Show

It is advisable at this time to decide upon the exact type of show which it is intended to produce. The architect should design the theatre to fulfill the owner's requirements. The maximum number of musicians for the orchestra should be determined upon and also whether or not it is the intention that the orchestra should be placed on the stage, in a pit or on a sunken stage. Consider at this time if it is intended to present prologues and where the motion picture projection screen is to be placed.

Regarding this last item, it is considered advisable in the more modernly equipped houses, to use two screens; one placed near the front of the stage and the other a considerable distance back. (This of course applies only to theatres which have a complete stage.) By the use of these two screens, news reels or comedies may be shown on the front screen while the stage in the rear of this screen may be completely set and thus allow the prologue to fade into the feature picture. Should there be no prologue, the setting may well be arranged for a singer, a dancer or a small vaudeville act.

The next important phase requiring attention, now that you have positioned your show, is the unobstructed view for the patrons. The sight lines of the theatre must be designed with exceeding care so that the complete stage and a portion of the orchestra may be seen by everyone in the balcony, and the complete stage, to at least a height of 18 feet, may be seen by everyone in the orchestra. There must be no side seats at such an angle as to make vision uncomfortable or to produce a noticeable degree of distortion in the picture.

Acoustical Properties of Theatre Highly Technical

The design of a theatre when one has in mind the acoustical properties resolves itself into a matter of scientific technique. This is a very complicated problem and does not lend itself to a popular explanation. However, the following considerations are extremely important inasmuch as they make or mar the acoustical properties of the auditorium:

Design, contour and construction of main celing.

Construction of walls and finish of main surfaces.

Location of the orchestra.

Location of fans, motors, etc., also the construction and location of ventilating ducts.

A view of the Capitol theatre, New York City. The perforations shown in the decorative plaster work at the top are used for the sounding board of the organ and for ventilation

The more technical side of acoustics will have to be taken care of by consultation with the architect.

The heating and ventilating combined, constitute one problem. Ventilation has two functions, one to provide fresh air and the other to heat.

Various Methods for Heating and Ventilating

It is possible to heat the auditorium by means of warmed air from the fans, only, not depending upon the use of radiators. However, as a precaution, and also to save expense in operating the house, it is well to have a certain amount of radiator surface installed in the auditorium. This auxiliary heating apparatus may be used when playing to a small audience. It is also a safeguard in the event of a breakdown in the fans. A limited fan ventilating system can be installed in most houses as cheaply as a complete radiator system. A ventilating system, however, is naturally much more desirable.

In the theatre, when all the seats are occupied, a large amount of heat is dissipated by the warm bodies of the people. As a result there are locations in the theatre which become uncomfortably warm. These are usually in the rear of the orchestra under the balcony and in the balcony. It is therefore necessary to give

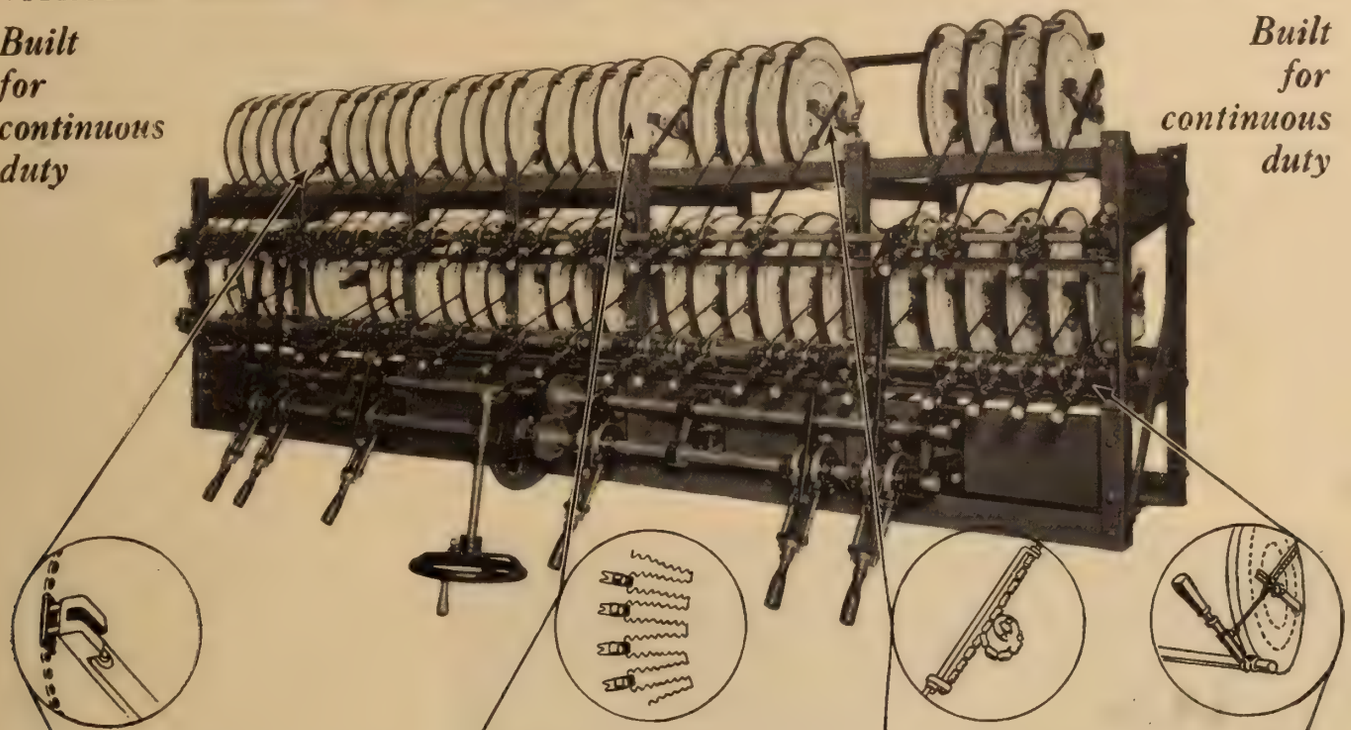
WARD LEONARD DIMMERS

VITROHM DIMMER SLOW-MOTION, CROSS-CONTROL, INTERLOCKING TYPE

Built for continuous duty

Built for continuous duty



Movable Contact (Skate Shoe) The movable shoe is of the self-aligning, self-adjusting type. Springs hold the shoe firmly on the buttons assuring proper electrical contact and permitting the shoe to ride over projections of as much as 1/16" above contact buttons. This form of construction is simple and needs no attention or adjustment. It does not get "out of order" from usage. Moreover, a minimum of mechanical effort is necessary to operate the movable skate shoe over the stationary contacts and at the same time perfect electrical contact is assured. This has been a Ward Leonard standard construction for 20 years.

Stationary Contact Buttons are brass stampings, joined to the resistance wire under extremely high pressure while both metals are bright and dry. The joints are then imbedded in and covered by vitreous enamel, which holds the two parts firmly against any possible movement and protects the joint against oxidation or other chemical action. This also affords protection against mechanical injury. No solder, tin or cement is used. The buttons project well above the enamel, so that dirt cannot readily become lodged between them and cause short-circuit or poor contact.

Space-Saving

Vitrohm Dimmers occupy the smallest space and weigh less for a given rating than any other dimmer.

Continuous Duty

The foundation of all Ward Leonard Theatre Dimmers is a substantial iron plate of proper size, and great strength. It affords complete, permanent and rigid support of the resistance element, contact buttons, terminals and the vitreous enamel insulation. Vitreous enamel insulation is a glassy substance, non-porous and impervious to moisture. It does not contain cement, asbestos chips, or similar material, and it therefore does not have a spongy surface which might permit the atmosphere (always moist) to cause oxidation of the resistance element. When the wire is protected by vitreous enamel against oxidation and disintegration it cannot change in resistance value and therefore cannot have "opens" or "burn-outs". It is therefore obvious that Vitrohm Dimmers are designed and constructed for

Continuous Duty

—to stand full rated load continuously without overheating or burning out. The homogeneous amalgamation of insulation, resistance wire and iron plate insure that the entire surface of the plates radiates the heat which is generated in the dimmer plate when in use.

Delivery

In our 25 years' experience we have not held up or delayed the opening of any theatre. We are always stocked to meet the demand.

Positive Chain Drive

of the contactor arm is another desirable feature of Vitrohm Dimmer construction. A flexible brass link drive is used to operate the movable contact. There are no gears and pinions to become loosened, or "jam". Neither does this mechanism require lubrication which often dries out or "gums" and causes trouble. Adjustment of this chain drive is a simple matter, readily and quickly accomplished by turning the wing nut on a threaded stud, no tools required.

Operating Levers

can be moved with much less effort and with much greater uniformity of motion than in other dimmers, this being due to the movable contact (skate shoe), stationary contact button and positive chain drive.

Price

Because of our long experience and completed manufacturing facilities, we are able to quote prices which compare favorably with those of other dimmers which do not have our superior features. Moreover, our continuous duty dimmers can even successfully compete with intermittent duty dimmers in price

NOTE: Vitrohm Dimmers installed in such houses as Hippodrome and Belasco Theatre, etc., have remained unchanged since original installation over twelve years ago.

particular attention to the cooling of these locations. It is a difficult problem to maintain an even temperature throughout the theatre. This temperature can be controlled only by introducing tempered air and drawing off the foul heated air. This condition exists both in summer and winter.

Ordinances Specifying Definite Ventilating Requirements

In some cities and states there are ordinances specifying certain requirements for the ventilation of theatres. Boston, Chicago and Cleveland require that 25 cubic feet of fresh air per minute be supplied each person. Body odors, heat and the danger of contagious disease germs, when numbers of people congregate, make these laws necessary. A theatre owner moreover profits as a result of these requirements as the theatre is made more comfortable for the audience.

Cold fresh air as taken from the outdoors in winter, should be warmed to a temperature of 68 degrees by passing over heated vento stacks. When the "mushroom system" is used, this warmed air is driven by fans through masonry ducts under the orchestra floor and into the auditorium through "mushroom" shaped iron ventilators under the seats. In a similar manner, fresh air is introduced under the balcony seats, thus permitting the fresh air to be supplied at the two seating levels. Perforations in the ceiling panels in the rear of the auditorium permit the exhausting of the foul air. A suction at this point is maintained by the means of fans.

Another method of ventilating is known as the "down draft system" which is the reverse of the "mushroom system." In this case, the fresh air is supplied by fans through the ceiling perforations and is exhausted through "mushrooms" at the floor. If properly designed, either system operates satisfactorily.

Provisions to Insure Satisfactory Ventilating and Heating

The following are the more important provisions that must be made to insure a satisfactory ventilating and heating system: Fans supplying fresh air (cooled or warmed depending on the season); sufficient open areas for the intake and exhaust; an even capacity balance between the supply and exhaust fans and the properly located intake and exhaust openings (the exhaust and intake openings should be at opposite points, i.e., if the supply is through the floor, the exhaust should be at the ceiling).

Air washers remove dust and dirt from the incoming air and tend to preserve the expensive draperies on the interior of the theatre. There have been instances where interior furnishings have been appreciably damaged within six months of the opening of the theatre through action of dust distributed throughout the theatre by the ventilating system. It is also possible by means of air washers to re-circulate the heated air in the theatre, thereby decreasing the coal consumption, permitting a more economic operation of the heating system. It has been found from tests that the warmed re-circulated air is in every respect as pure as that drawn from outdoors. The humidity of the air used in the theatre may also be regulated by the air washer.

Special System Employed for Summer Cooling

For summer cooling, there is a system which blows the air in at the front of the auditorium and exhausts it through openings such as the doors, windows, etc., at the rear of the theatre. In this type of ventilation, it is necessary that the fans have a very large capacity to insure the circulation of air in all parts of the theatre. If these fans are not of sufficient capacity, many dead spots (places where the air fails to circulate) will be found. The air must travel at least a mile an hour to be effective and in the majority of instances it will be found advisable to increase this speed to two miles an hour. To insure the proper exhaust for this type of system, it is necessary to maintain at all times sufficient openings at the rear of the theatre. Although the fan system does not possess all the advantages of some of the more complete types, by using this system, it has been possible to operate a large number of theatres during the hot summer months that otherwise would have had to be closed.

Air washers provide an excellent method of cooling air in summer. On an extremely hot day, it is possible to reduce the temperature of the air from the street ten degrees. Therefore in case the temperature outside is medium and the humidity high, the lowering of the temperature by the air washer is not great. In localities where artesian well water is available, the temperature may be lowered fifteen degrees by this method.

Refrigeration is the most recent innovation for summer cooling and has proved very effective. The refrigeration system permits regulation to the desired temperature, eliminating all noises of fans and motors and needs no perforations in the theatre ceiling or intake or exhaust air. It is possible to control the heating and ventilating in a theatre through thermostats which automatically open and close regulating dampers or steam valves. These thermostats may be set for any desired temperature.

Ventilating and Heating Systems for the Small House

It is advisable in theatres of small capacity, let us say from 400 to 800 seats, to install only a very small amount of radiator surface and to invest in a ventilating system which can be employed both for the heating and cooling. In general the importance of the installation of proper systems for ventilating and heating cannot be over-emphasized. On this depends, in many cases, the successful operation of the theatre.

To insure the maximum fire protection, a complete automatic sprinkler system should be installed in the back stage, stage proper and dressing rooms. The automatic devices of this sprinkler system respond to the slightest excess of heat and cause precipitation of a deluge of water over any areas from which this heat may arise. A sprinkler system besides giving the moral assurance of minimum fire risks, also reduces the insurance rate for the theatre.

Equipping, Furnishing and Beautifying the Theatre

Last but not least, we come to the equipping, beautifying and furnishing of the theatre. Most people react very definitely to certain colors and while one may hear a number of artists criticize theatres that use red for decoration, you will nevertheless find that there is a very definite reason for employing this color. Red is most desirable because it retains its warmth and illuminating qualities under dim lights. However, red as a decoration can be carried to an extreme. If used in large areas it tends to have an exciting effect. Red is recommended for draperies, wall and chair coverings and carpets, in the case of a large house which embodies many columns and has considerable ornamental plaster. The use of red will lend a magnificent appearance and it is preferable that the red employed be of a shade not too bright, more of a crimson than a scarlet. If a sacrifice must be made of the brilliancy of the house, it has been found advisable to use the wine colors. For a house which is very delicately decorated, is in a refined neighborhood and is not excessive in size, the use of old gold is suggested. This color with ivory, gold and grey plaster work will give the theatre a warm and attractive atmosphere.

Blue should be used very sparingly. If the house is over 500 seats, it is advisable that blue be employed only in conjunction with old gold or yellow. In speaking of these definite colors, plaster decoration is not included because in most theatres plaster decoration should be kept in simpler tones of grey, cafe au lait, ivory and gold. In the larger house where three color lighting is used, it is almost essential that the plaster be kept simple, as any vivid color which might be incorporated in the plaster work would reflect a distorted color under certain hues of modified lighting. A brilliant purple may be employed in the theatre providing sufficient yellow or gold decorations are embodied in the plaster, or a brilliant color like sienna is embodied in the marble. Purple has a wonderful quality when used with three color lighting in that it comprises red and blue. Therefore, when red lights are employed, the purple wall coverings or draperies become a deep shade of red and, likewise, when blue lights are employed these wall coverings and draperies become a deep shade of blue.

Use of Draperies and Wall Coverings for Decoration

Going into the question of draperies a little more deeply, their form should be very carefully considered. In the case of elaborate plaster work, care should be taken to keep the draperies principally in folds and swages and make the most of the ornamentation of draperies by means of tassels, ropes and fringe. If, however, the plaster work is not too elaborate, it is well to embody considerable embroidery or applique work in the draperies as they then become the most ornamental feature of the theatre.

The wall, or panel covering throughout the theatre is an important item because in addition to its beauty and richness, it has excellent acoustical value. These panels should be of brocade, tapestry or embossed velvet because it is quite necessary that some designed pattern be used to avoid an undecorated plain surface. The embossed velvet is the best for acoustical value and in the great majority of cases also proves the least expensive. However, it has the disadvantage of requiring frequent cleaning. Cotton brocades come next in practical use. These are made of mercerized cotton and sometimes have a real or artificial silk top. Providing that this material is heavy it is not necessary to use a lining. This heavy, unlined fabric has very good acoustic value. In the case of tapestry, only the lighter patterns such as the Louis XVI, or some delicate modern pattern should be considered. The method of applying the theatre wall covering is most important as this also affects not only the acoustical properties of the theatre but the life of the covering itself.

Selection of Materials for Floor Covering and Finishing

Floor covering and floor finishing make a very interesting study. There are a number of different opinions in regard to this. A great many theatre owners insist on having cement floors. The use of cement floors in the auditorium is not advisable. It has been found more desirable to use wood finish for the floor in both orchestra and balcony. For mezzanine, lobby, stairs, etc., it makes very little difference, from the point of view of comfort, in the material you use for the under finish. Wood for the floor under the seats gives both comfort and warmth and gives also a very much better surface to which to fasten the theatre chairs and the carpet or rubber flooring in the aisles.

There are some new and very interesting composition floorings on the market which are fireproof and can be used for floor finishes, but their use is prohibitive at present as the price is rather high.

If the theatre is situated in what is classed as a "good" district and the audience is of a refined type, the top covering of the aisles, stairways, boxes, mezzanines, etc., in the auditorium proper should be of carpet as this gives the richest effect and is the most comfortable. Carpets in these locations are subjected to severe and constant wear and it is therefore recommended that a very good grade be used. It is quite possible also to select a color or design for the carpet which will be harmoniously in keeping with the rest of the theatre. Rubber, of course, has a greater durability and is a satisfactory flooring. Its use on stairways, is recommended. In a good many instances, rubber is the best covering one can put on balcony steppings, even though one has installed marble treads on the stairs. It is quite necessary that the sound of footsteps be deadened with some material. It must be taken into consideration that although rubber has the greatest durability, it is not nearly as rich in its effect as carpet. Therefore, this highly desirable feature of the carpet should be taken into consideration when selecting the floor covering.

Durable Materials for the Interior

The materials in the interior of the theatre generally below the four foot line should be as durable as possible as this height is the shoulder line of people passing down the aisles, through the lobbies, etc. Many architects object to putting in a wainscoting as high as four feet but this prejudice is being rapidly overcome due to the fact that wainscoting, plaster work, etc., soon looks shabby from the rubbing which it receives. A wainscoting at least four feet high should be used throughout the whole orchestra and either marble or imitation marble (Scagliola) should be employed. In case scagliola is employed for the main body of the wainscoting, marble should be used as a base. Scagliola will not stand the kicking the base receives.

The capping of the standing rail, balcony fronts and also boxes should be of marble although very beautiful effects have been obtained by using wood cap with a covering of velvet. Naturally, this is not nearly as durable as marble and is a great deal more difficult to keep clean.

The theatre owner has quite a difficult problem on his hands after the architect is finished in that he has to keep up the appearance of the house. In recommending the use of what may seem expensive materials such as marble instead of scagliola, etc., the idea in mind was to simplify the maintenance of the appearance of the house.

Beauty of Theatre Determined by Plaster Design

Usually the real beauty of the theatre is determined by the design of the plaster surfaces since they form the complete ceiling, the upper parts of the walls and the proscenium arch. The best way to contract for the plaster work, even in remote localities, is to employ an expert for all the ornamental parts at least. A number of reliable firms publish catalogues of ornamental plaster work. It is possible for the architect to select from the catalogues designs that most nearly approach the style desired. This material may then be ordered from one of the large concerns and a local plasterer employed to apply it to the building. In a metropolitan center it is a simple matter to contract for the whole work with an expert decorative plasterer.

A view of a well planned and equipped projection room incorporating good ventilation, lighting and general facilities for the comfort of the projectionist

Interior Decorating Scheme of Paramount Importance

After the installation of the plastering, the next phase of your problem is decorating. This matter of decorating is extremely important and should be done by a decorator who is apt at bringing out the architectural features with his colors. In the average house, it is advisable to use simple coloring since one must bear in mind that the theatre is the background for the performance. In some of the larger lobbies, promenades, etc., it is permissible to embody considerable color. The colors by which the best results have been obtained, are those mentioned before in this article—café au lait. French grey, ivory with gold ornamentation. There are certain other colors that may be introduced such as grey green, delicate blue and, occasionally for emphasis, a little black.

Lighting Fixtures Interesting Part of Furnishings

The lighting fixtures are a very interesting part of the furnishings of a theatre. In a number of theatres what are called "illuminated panels" have been used, especially in the instances where three color lighting has been employed. These panels are usually symmetrical in shape such as circles, octagons or ovals and consist of opaque glass with a certain amount of ornamental work in the leading. It is preferable to use various textures of white glass for this purpose, particularly in the case of modified lighting, although it is possible to employ a purple glass without seriously affecting the color lighting. If small cut glass jewels, pendants and crystal bead garlands are used in conjunction with these panels, it is possible to make them highly ornamental. The inexpensive panels are flat and do not project below the ceiling line. The most successful and beautiful panels however, drop about four inches below the ceiling line and have a curved border of glass. The use of these panels is the most effective way of softly illuminating your balcony. They have the advantage over ordinary lighting fixtures in that they do not hang more than four inches below the surface of the ceiling. This permits a minimum interference with light lines. In the last few years, small illuminated panels have been used in the main ceiling to supersede the usual step or aisle lighting for the balcony. The use of these fixtures in connection with aisle lighting depends to an extent upon the particular design of the theatre, though they have also the additional advantage of giving a diffused light over the entire balcony. The selection of the remaining lighting fixtures throughout the house should be in close harmony with the architectural design. Crystal and gold fixtures are very much in vogue at present.

The furnishing of the mezzanines, lobbies, rest rooms and men's smoking room is of more importance than is usually imagined. If the proper design and atmosphere is given these parts of the theatre they will be found to have great popularity among the regular clientele of the theatre.

Now comes the subject which the owner and manager of the theatre hold as of the great importance, i. e., the advertising display. It is on this subject that the architect and the owner usually disagree though this should not be the case. It is an exceedingly difficult problem for the architect with his classical training, to put himself in the position of the theatre owner who is compelled to advertise each particular show in a different manner and who therefore should have a more or less flexible front and lobby to permit of this advertising. The beauty of the theatre and its advertising may be made absolutely co-operative. The display frames in the vestibule and lobby

Front! Consider the front of your theater from the box-office standpoint—the value of appearance.

Midland Terra Cotta gives a theater any desired individuality, a magnificence and charm as no other material can.

When you also consider the lasting beauty, the ease of maintenance and all around practicability of Midland Terra Cotta, it is clear why so many successful theaters are built of it.

may be so arranged that they will tend to enhance rather than spoil the beauty of this part of the theatre. The problem must be most carefully considered because it is very difficult to harmonize the marble and decorative frames of the lobby with some of the modern glaring advertising sheets. It has, however, been beautifully accomplished in some theatres and by proper study, can be obtained always.

Design of Front and Entrance of Theatre Building

The problem of designing the entrance of the building should be one of the first for consideration. On the exterior where it is essential to have electric signs, these signs should be designed at the same time as the theatre front, thus avoiding what has occurred in so many instances, i. e., a beautiful terra cotta front or stone exterior entirely covered by electric signs. If it is necessary for the sake of advertising to cover the front of the building with these signs, this front should be so designed that it provides a simple background for the signs and should not be a thing of beauty in itself. Sign makers, owners and architects should work more closely together to this end. It is essential that the owner insist on the designing of the electrical sign when the construction of the theatre is first started rather than wait until its completion.

So far this article has been devoted to the housing of the audience and very little mention has been made concerning the presentation of the show itself. A great many producers are inclined to say that the architect has very little to do with this particular phase. However, this is not so since the architect through a proper or improper design can make or mar the performance.

Projection Department Equipment and Electrical Apparatus

The matter of the installation of the projection machines and electrical equipment is of paramount importance. This apparatus must be properly used and should incorporate facilities to insure their proper operation. It is of importance that any auxiliary apparatus, such as spot lights, etc., should be given ample room for ease of operation. The matter of the installation of a room for re-winding the film and also a room for the motor generator should be taken care of in the planning of the projection department. The housing of the machines should be in a room of such size that the operator is perfectly comfortable at his work and the equipment should be so arranged that the minimum amount of effort is expended in changing from one machine to another, the operation of spot lights, etc.

It is highly advisable for a theatre owner to install the best in equipment as the good screening of the picture is of vital importance to the success of the theatre. The walls of the projection department should be of hard plaster or tile. The floor may be of cement but in this case should be covered with heavy linoleum or rubber, as it is necessary to have some form of insulation on the floor. The color of the walls of the projection room is of importance, as there should be no reflection of any light that may escape from the machine. A battleship grey or moderately dark green finish should be employed, as neither of these colors is not too dark for physical comfort and yet will not give any degree of reflection of stray light.

The correct placing of the projection screen is essential. In a small house where there is no stage, this should be placed between four and five feet from the floor and of the proper size for the length of the theatre. Care should be taken in positioning the screen to avoid causing discomfort to the people in the front row, that are looking up at the pictures. It is a good idea to keep the screen as low as consistent with good sight lines.

If the screen is positioned back on the stage, it is permissible to place it somewhat higher. That is, instead of being one or two feet off the stage level, it can be placed higher in proportion to the distance back from the curtain line.

The question of the best material for screens cannot be definitely decided, as it rests entirely with the particular type of house. In the case of a theatre which is relatively wide and has a balcony, it is advisable to use a diffusing type screen, that is, a screen with a surface which tends to diffuse the light thrown on it by the projection machine and thus enable people seated in the extreme side seats or the balcony to see a well lighted picture. In a relatively narrow house with straight projection, it is well to consider the reflector type screen, as the reflector type screen has a surface which tends to throw the light projected on the screen back within a relatively small angle of spread. The disadvantage of a reflector type screen in a wide house is that some of the seats will be favored with an extremely bright picture and others with a very dimly illuminated picture. As was stated above, it is not possible to make any definite recommendations to cover all theatres, and it is left with the owner to select the proper screen for his individual requirements. Considerable information along these lines has been published in the various trade papers and by the Eastman Kodak Company.

Effective Harmonious Lighting of Great Importance

An essential feature of the theatre is the lighting. To produce a thoroughly harmonious effect throughout both the house and stage, it is necessary to install good equipment. By this I do not mean that it is absolutely essential to install in every theatre an expensive equipment, but rather one of the highest quality. Where your house is a production house and you wish to present prologues, little ballets, etc., a careful selection of stage equipment is necessary. Sufficient borderlights, spot lights, foot lights and pockets must be arranged on your main stage switchboard so that each can be used separately or in combination.

A bank of dimmers should be installed in connection with the stage switchboard for the gradual increasing and decreasing of the illumination and the harmonious blending of colors. It is advisable to have some form of master control, thus permitting the dimming of any group of lights on the stage or in the auditorium. This equipment gives the maximum flexibility for any effective lighting of the theatre.

In my opinion, your house and stage lighting comes next to music in its effect on the reception accorded the show by your audience. In general, the electrical and mechanical equipment for the lighting and presentation of the picture is the one phase of the theatre equipment in the purchase of which the theatre owner cannot afford to stint his investment. In the long run, good equipment much more than pays for itself.

The organ in the modern motion picture houses has attained a position of pre-eminent importance. I do not believe that it is possible to secure an organ for your theatre which might be termed "too good," as the modern picture presents the complete variation of human emotions and these emotions can be similarly expressed in music by a good organ. The proper blending of music and pictures produce the criterion in presentation. In making the necessary arrangements for the installation of the organ, precaution should be taken that the architectural features of the theatre do not interfere with the propagation of the musical tones. By the proper design of a theatre, it is possible to reduce to a minimum the interference presented to the sound from the organ. Special care should be taken that the openings in the organ screen are not covered with heavy draperies.

Problem of Proper Maintenance

The theatre having been completed and opened to the public the owner is confronted with the problem of maintenance. If in the construction of the theatre, a central vacuum cleaner system has been installed, it will be found that the time necessary for the cleaning will be reduced by two-thirds. A mechanical scrubbing machine for the marble and terrazza floors is also a great time-saver.

The necessity of keeping the theatre clean has been strongly impressed upon me lately through having seen a great many theatres, only a few years old, that present a most undesirable appearance through their neglected upkeep. Such materials as marble, scagliola, etc., have to be taken care of in certain definite ways. Portions of your plaster work require painting from time to time. All wall coverings and draperies need frequent brushing and after a period of several years the wall coverings should also be cleaned. Bronze work must be properly oiled and rubbed. The same applies to all fine stained woodwork. Carpets must be kept thoroughly brushed, as there is nothing causes greater wear on the carpet than grit. In case a vacuum cleaner has been installed, this matter will be properly taken care of.

Were this article to be condensed into one paragraph the key-word of this paragraph would be "co-operation."

It is of the greatest importance that the owner should not wait too long before employing his architect. The owner should also be willing, during the course of construction, to decide the various necessary points at the earliest possible moment. We are living in a wonderful building age, and perhaps the most interesting phase is that of the motion picture theatre. In fact, the owner and the architect are almost in the position of Aladdin. They rub the lamp and a palace appears. However, the lamp must be rubbed the right way and with the proper cloth and oil. Here's where the co-operation of the owner, architect and builder proves of greatest importance.

REASONABLY PRICED MARQUISE EASILY ERECTED

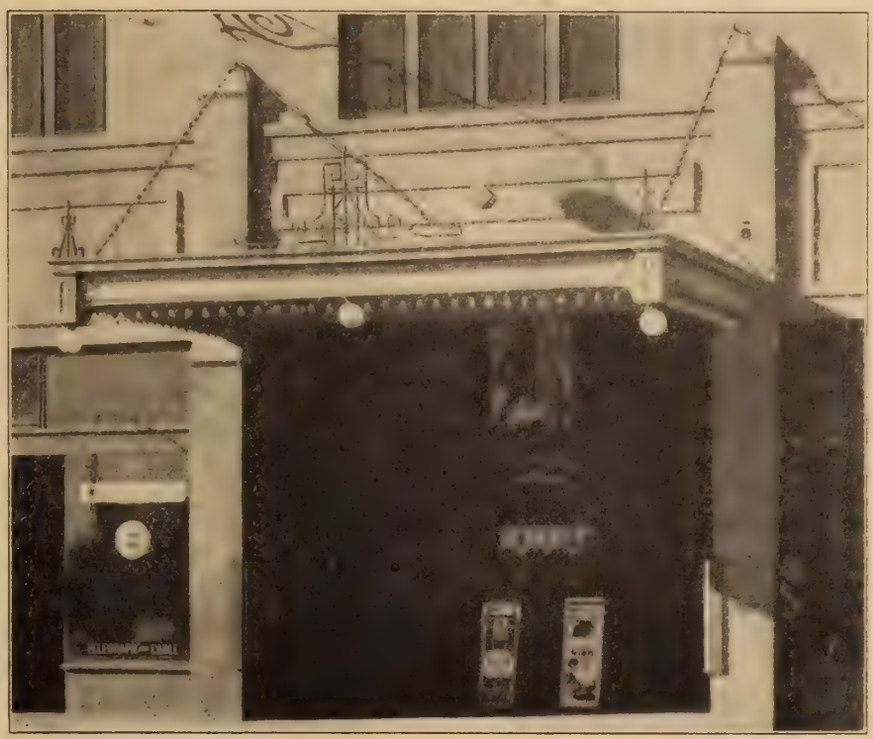
A marquee (or sidewalk canopy) adds a note of "class" to even the plainest entrance. Newman marquise for theatres possess unlimited advertising possibilities, and are excellent for both day and night publicity.

Your patrons will appreciate one of these convenient shelters in stormy weather. Ask us for suggestions—one of these massive-looking porticos will prove a real "business booster" for you.

Factory-to-you Prices

Elaborate ornamentation does not always mean a high-priced marquee. Our quotations are remarkably low, considering the quality, the beautiful appearance and the solidity of construction throughout.

You save $$$ by dealing direct by mail with us as actual makers of these handsome marquise.



Newman marquise and canopies have frames of extra-heavy steel plates, reinforced where added strength will offset strains. The outer coverings are of galvanized steel; the ornamental work is a combination of cast zinc and galvanized iron.

We furnish our standard types knocked down. Each section is numbered so that erection by your local plumber or tinner is very simple indeed and a matter of a few hours.

Ready to Put up

There is no fuss or trouble involved. We furnish all necessary bolts, chains, rods and other hardware.

Write TODAY for our new folder of 28 exclusive designs. Give the length of the marquee and the width over the sidewalk if you wish us to quote prices.

NO OBLIGATION.

SUPERIOR

Include our equipment proposal for your Projection Room before deciding upon your Projectors. Installation of Superior Projectors insures your patrons with Superior Projection.

THE FEATURES:—

1. The elimination throughout of belts and chains, and a direct motor drive.
2. Less parts than any other machine.
3. A simple enclosed speeding device.
4. Unit construction eliminating the use of emergency heads.
5. An automatic take up device assuring equal tension, and eliminating possibilities of film breakage, fire and tearing of film perforations.
6. A perfect framing device eliminating the possibilities of disturbing the synchrony. This does away with flicker, which injures the eyesight.
7. The use of only eight hardened steel gears in the mechanism as compared with nineteen of soft bronze, cast iron and steel used by our competitors.
8. A massively constructed burner capable of running on 100 amperes or more.
9. A condenser mount and housing surpassing any other in accessibility and protection to the condenser lenses.
10. A gun carriage pedestal allowing the entire mechanism to be revolved in a complete circle while the pedestal itself remains fixed.
11. A device which allows the machine to be depressed or elevated to an angle of 30 degrees.

The modern picture theatre must be temperature controlled: to retain patronage, and to effect necessary fuel economy. But still more important, have your theatre's temperature control specified with the same sense you use when selecting the films you feature. Have The Johnson Pneumatic System of Temperature Regulation installed. A Johnson installation will be made by The Johnson Service Company's own engineers and mechanics, not by any local contractor. The Johnson System will perform perfectly, just as your theatre's requirements demand. Its performance will be consistent, without repairs or replacements or interruption, for the indefinite period of the installation's existence. There is a great deal more in The Johnson System than the principle of temperature control. Insist on The Johnson.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

"The Tents of Allah"

Encore-Associated Exhibitors—6357 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

RIDING in on the crest of the "sheik" wave, this picture makes a bid for popular approval through its desert background and the first rate pictorial appeal. In fact the atmosphere easily dominates the story which treats of a half-caste Oriental, a bandit chief, who is said to have kidnapped an American girl. This naturally precipitates considerable conflict which is more colorful than it is convincing.

Charles A. Logue, who wrote and directed the feature, has been more successful with the production than the story. At least he has dressed it up with a picturesque atmosphere which affords the spectator several compelling scenes such as the conflict between the desert tribes, the Arabs on horseback against the horizon and a few attractive marine shots. The plot is shown up with its shortcomings against this background, and still it is not so obvious and hackneyed that it destroys the interest. In fact it is a type of production that will appeal to the habitues of the program theatre.

Many will not find Monte Blue satisfactory in the role of the Oriental chieftain. It isn't that he isn't sincere (sincerity has always marked his efforts) but that he is hardly the type to interpret the character. We discover Monte arousing the enmity of the sultan because he refuses to pay homage to him. This gives the ruler power to sanction the American naval officer's orders to arrest the young bandit for kidnapping an American girl. It then develops that the commander learns that his Moorish wife is not dead and that the chieftain is his son. Which introduces a reunion of husband and wife and the culmination of the romance between the young Moor and the kidnapped girl. Some of the sequences in the treatment of the plot are implausible but they will not irritate the spectator in search of color and atmosphere.

The picture carries a satisfactory cast with Mary Alden and Macey Harlam thoroughly in character. Its title is romantic enough to intrigue the imagination and all things considered it is a fair-to-middling sheik picture.

The Cast

Chiddar Ben-Ek.....Monte Blue
Oulaid.....Mary Alden

By Charles A. Logue. Directed by Charles A. Logue. Photographed by Abe Fried and Gene O'Donnell.

The Story—The chief of a bandit tribe wins hatred of sultan who grants his consent to a United States naval officer to arrest and kill the bandit for kidnapping an American girl. The officer discovers that the chief's mother is his Moorish wife who we had thought dead and that the Oriental is his son. They are reunited and the bandit carries on a romance with the fair American.

Classification—"Sheik" picture based upon conflict and romance.

Production Highlights—The pictorial appeal. The conflict between the desert tribes. The good camera work. The capable work by cast.

Exploitation Angles—Title is attractive. Play it up as a "sheik" picture. Which is still popular enough to collect a crowd. Use stills plentifully.

Drawing Power—Good for second class first run houses.

Scene from Universal's one-reel comedy "Skeletons."

"Bucking the Barrier"

Fox—4566 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IF one can overlook the many inconsistencies of this story and merely accept it as picture entertainment one may find some satisfaction in Dustin Farnum's newest expression. But the gaps are so incredible that it seems as if it had been produced for no other reason than to fill out Farnum's schedule.

Here he is seen as a rugged Klondyke miner who journeys to England to get the inheritance left him by a dear departed friend. Thus the picture dashes from the open spaces to the interiors of society life and back to the far-off places without much thought given to continuity. Once in England the miner has a job on his hands gaining his rich estate. The two half-brotners of the deceased make things unpleasant for him but his Klondyke training stands him in good stead. At which opportunity the romantic interest is introduced via the sister of the dead friend. He offers marriage but she thinks him a fortune hunter and is ready to stop the ceremony when lo and behold, the hero decides that she doesn't love him. So he leaves her. This precipitates a bit of broken pride on the part of the girl who, being deserted, shoots him. He recovers and turns the estate over to her and departs for the Yukon.

The concluding scenes show the unhappy couple reunited some years later in the Alaskan setting, although the melodramatic moments accompany the romance to the end. The hero is rescued from death by the girl after he had been deserted in a storm by one of the half-brothers. And his sight is restored. It is a hectic story without much rhyme nor reason, and vet it manages to hold the interest fairly well. Farnum tries hard to be convincing and human. Some of the outdoor photography is attractive.

The Cast

Kit Carew.....Dustin Farnum
Blanche Cavendish.....Arline Pretty
Luke Cavendish.....Leon Bary
Frank Farfax.....Colin Chase
Cyril Cavendish.....Hayford Hobbs
Tyson.....Sidney Dalbrook

By George Goodchild. Directed by Colin Campbell. Produced by Fox.

The Story—Miner from Klondyke goes to England to secure fortune left by departed friend. The latter's two half-brothers attempt to keep the estate for themselves and are determined ot put the miner out of the way. The man from the Klondyke falls in love with his friend's sister but she misunderstands his motives. At the last minute he decides that she doesn't love him and leaves her. He turns over the estate to her and leaves for Alaska and years later the girl is reunited to him.

Classification—Romantic melodrama.

Production Highlights—The capable work of the cast. The exterior shots. The fairly good suspense. The snow scenes.

Exploitation Angles—Use theme for teasers. Play up title for teaser ads. Feature the star.

"The Woman of Bronze"

Metro—5572 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ON the stage this made a fairly gripping drama since it served as a medium for the expression of Margaret Anglin's emotional capabilities. On the screen it doesn't register so highly since its theme, the eternal triangle in its most obvious form, is employed to give Clara Kimball Young an opportunity to bring harmony out of discord in the home. Deprived of the spoken lines (and such a play needs vocal expression to do it justice) it is nowhere near as good, despite a carefully worked out treatment of the plot and an excellent staging of the production.

It does manage to create a deal of sympathy for the neglected wife who succeeds in winning back the affections of her husband. He, like the true theatrical type of artist, had become enamoured with his model and the spirit which guided him to disobey the conventions was a piece of sculpture which was destined to earn him a rich sum of money until he forfeited his opportunity by worshipping romance rather than art. But the wife steps into the breach and inspires him to fulfil his mission.

It is an obvious story, but neatly handled by King Vidor who has brought forth all the necessary dramatic force to make it convincing. Convincing? Oh, much more than the average triangle theme which serves most of our domestic photodramas. It reaches its climax in a straightforward manner without any overstressed scenes which take up valuable time and celluloid. This climax, incidentally, while it was the strongest moment on the stage, is not so good on the screen. This is due, perhaps to its familiarity. The trespassing lover, dissatisfied with his new amour and unhappy with his wife, attacks the statue with a mallet—the statue which is later to win him the big prize. The touch is akin to that which shows a valuable painting being slashed to pieces. It has been employed too often.

Miss Young catches the psychology of the tormented wife who leaves her husband to work out his own salvation and her faithfulness inspires a sympathetic tug in the heart of the spectator. It should prove to be fairly satisfying. Feminine audiences should like it.

The Cast

Vivian Hunt.....Clara Kimball Young
Paddy Miles.....John Bowers
Sylvia Morton.....Kathrine McGuire
Reggie Morton.....Edwin Stevens
Leonard Hunt.....Lloyd Whitlock
Papa Bonelli.....Edward Kimball

By Paul Kester. Adapted by Hope Loring and Louis Leighton. Directed by King Vidor. Produced by Harry Garson.

The Story—Young husband gives up attempt to win fame by competing for the million dollars to be awarded the successful contestant for a piece of sculpture entitled "Victory." The sculptor's model is the cause of the breach between husband and wife. Eventually he is inspired to finish his masterpiece and there is a reunion of the unhappy couple.

Classification—Eternal triangle drama.

Production Highlights—The effective dramatic touches. The convincing work by star. The good production. The work by a well balanced cast.

Exploitation Angles—Feature the picture as one of the star's best. Tell that it made a big hit as a play with Margaret Anglin in the star role. Get out the feminine clientele since it is essentially a woman's picture.

Drawing Power—Best for those houses with a large feminine clientele. Should go well in neighborhood houses.

"East Side, West Side"

Irving Cummings-Principal Pictures—Six Reels

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

NEW YORK offers a fertile field for drama, with its strong contrasts and its infinite variety of characters and setting. It is, as the opening subtitle of "East Side, West Side" points out, a veritable cross-section of the world, where the utmost contrasts of poverty and affluence are to be found within the range of a few scant blocks.

The contrast is the basis of "East Side, West Side." The plot is based on the interweaving of the lives of two sets of characters—the one, a group of three widely differing girls, living in a scantily furnished room, and the other, a wealthy family not far away, suffering from too much money and not enough interest in life.

The three girls are a strangely assorted trio—one, a girl determined to achieve luxury at any price, another, a victim of tuberculosis, morally weak, but kept straight by her unattractive appearance and by the mothering of the third, who is the heroine of the piece, Lory James.

The first girl leaves them to occupy an apartment on Central Park West. Through the efforts of a kindly doctor, Lory gets some typing work from Duncan van Norman, a member of the wealthy family mentioned, a writer on psychology. This young man has grown extremely self-centered and the doctor feels that an interest outside of his work is what he needs. He responds to the treatment and the girl is installed in the van Norman home as his secretary.

H. G. Wells once observed that a man and woman can rarely work together long without becoming emotional, and what happens in this instance bears him out. Duncan becomes human—falls in love with his secretary—and then social barriers commence to get in their work. Finally, convinced by his mother that she is standing in his way, Lory leaves. Then, when Duncan abandons his inheritance to ask her to marry him, their dawning happiness is suddenly clouded by her inheritance of a half million dolars. But Lory has made her mind up, and being a young woman of determination, there is nothing for Duncan to do but marry her.

Kenneth Harlan gives a well shaded characterization of the neurotic young man, and Eileen Percy is excellent at times as the girl. Wally Van is a reminiscent figure, lending two good comedy sequences to the opus.

From the play by Leighton Osmun and Henry Hull. Adapted by Hope Loring and Louis Duryea Lighton. Directed by Irving Cummings. Photographed by Albert Martinelli. An Irving Cummings Production.

The Story—Contrasts wealthy family in one quarter of New York with three girls living in poverty, in another section. Through a kindly doctor, a friend of the wealthy family, the heroine is installed as secretary to the son, of whom she proceeds to make a human being. When his mother finds that he is falling in love with the girl, she persuades her to go away. He rebels, however, and when she threatens to disinherit him, asks girl to marry him. Girl then inherits a fortune, erecting a new barrier between them, but girl finally surmounts this.

Classification—Heart interest melodrama of New York life.

Production Highlights—The work of Kenneth Harlan and Eileen Percy. Wally Van's cave-man scene and his fight. The pleasing interiors.

Exploitation Angles—Play up the idea that here is a picture showing the shadows and highlights of life in Manhattan. Use the old song, "On the Sidewalks of New York," from which the line, "East Side, West Side" is taken. The three featured players.

Drawing Power—The New York life angle should draw well in the smaller cities. Suitable for second class downtown and for neighborhood houses.

"Dead Game"

Universal—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

AN interruption of a weddin' party furnishes the idea for Hoot Gibson's latest. "Dead Game" lives up to its title and more, for the star is compelled to outwit a pair of crafty villains as well as an ornery lot of cow-punchers to save the girl from the matrimonial noose and lift the mortgage from her ranch. It is a lively little western, somewhat inconsistent in its development, but carrying enough fast-moving action to please most of the boys and a few of the girls.

Hoot learns that his sweetheart's guardian has spirited her away to marry her off to a wealthy schemer. So he mounts his horse, rides into the town, places a bet with the villain that his weddin' won't come off as anticipated and wins. In order to accomplish things he places a dummy in his bed, sneaks out of the hotel and holds up the stage which is bringing her to the place, secretes her in her ranch house and returns to his bed with no one the wiser.

The heroine is sort of negative inasmuch as she doesn't seem to know her own mind First she scorns the cowboy—and then the villain, and after the latter is disappointed she is spirited away again by her crafty guardian. This, of course, makes her out as lacking in intelligence. Then Hoot appears in a different shirt and hat when he makes his departure from the bedroom. Another slight error shows him strong enough to subdue a stray horse in the desert after he has been without food or water for two days.

But these are minor slips which do not discredit the speedy action. The hero is captured by the villain's hirelings and taken into the desert wastes, which gives the arch-plotter an opportunity to stage another weddin' party and Hoot another opportunity to rescue her. He rides through the window and takes her from the altar and the villains are sent on their way. Robert McKim is in character as one of these boys, but Harry Carter overacts. Gibson does his work with his customary vigor. In all a pretty good western.

By Edward Sedgwick. Directed by Edward Sedgwick. Photographed by Charles Kaufman. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Cowpuncher learns that his sweetheart has been supirited away. He is determined to rescue her from an unwelcome marriage and succeeds after various adventures. He proves himself "dead game" in thwarting the villains and marries the girl.

Classification—Western melodrama.

Production Highlights—The lively action. The fair suspense. The scene when Gibson routs the villain and kidnaps the girl. The scene when he steals the girl from the altar.

Exploitation Angles—Title might be worked out in a snappy teaser campaign. Play it up as lively and interesting and a good vehicle for the star.

Drawing Power—Good for small houses in neighborhood. Also suitable for second class downtown houses.

"Refuge"

First National—6000 Feet

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

AND still another picture of the "Graustark" type comes to the screen. Mythical kingdoms, a beautiful countess in distress, plots against the throne, a missing prince who is "present" all through the story, much braided uniforms, clashes with the pretender who would grab the fair Nadia for his own and so on as you have seen it divulged on the shadow stage many, many times with the passing years.

"Refuge," however, is a fairly good picture of its type. The main fault is that it is too long for the plot material and everyone will guess the ending of the story when the countess opens a brooch along about the third reel whereupon is disclosed the mother of the missing prince. The hero who has come to the rescue, dashes upon the brooch, declaring that it is very valuable to him. We sensed the fact that he was the "missing" prince right then and there and for most folks the story ought to be brought to a close at least two, not three reels further.

Katherine MacDonald is as usual attractive, but still insists on continually posing and there are the usual overabundance of closeups found in her series of pictures. The sets are well done, several of them being quite elaborate. The cast is a good one. Hugh Thompson is Gene, who later turns out to be the prince and his two companions, portrayed by Gunnis Davis and J. Gordon Russell, give the needed comedy touches. The work of Gene, Dick and Louis, who are three discharged warriors, recalls "Three Live Ghosts," of yesteryear. Arthur Edmund Carewe as the impostor prince is quite the best actor in the cast and puts up some good fistic battles with the real royal personage.

There are several dramatic sequences but constant repetition has taken the edge off such scenes. Victor Schertzinger has directed well and Florence Hein's continuity is fair. Photographically the work is flawless. "Refuge" has a more entertaining story than several of Miss MacDonald's recent works and it is a fair program picture.

The Cast

Nadia.....Katherine MacDonald
Gene.....Hugh Thompson
Dick.....Gunnis Davis
Louis.....J. Gordon Russell
Prince Ferdinand.....Arthur Edmund Carewe
General DeRannier.....Eric Mayne
Mme. DeRannier.....Mathilde Brundage
Gustav Kenski.....Fred Malatesta
Marie.....Grace Morse
Alphonse.....Victor Potel
The Princess.....Olita Otis

By Lois Zellner. Directed by Victor Schertzinger. Scenario by Florence Hein. Photographed by Joseph Brotherton.

The Story—Deals with the romance of Countess, who in order to escape marriage with Prince Ferdinand, who she detests, weds a soldier who she meets on the road. Her trials and tribulations following this event take up the rest of the action with the climax divulging that her "husband" is the real prince who she has long sought. Prince Ferdinand is killed by a buddy of the hero.

Classification—One of those "Graustark" type of romances.

Production Highlights—The scene in which Nadia threatens to jump from a window of the palace if Ferdinand comes a step closer, but gives in when Ferdinand is about to shoot her lover. The attractive exterior sets. Edmund Carewe's work as Ferdinand.

Exploitation Angles—The title. Tie-ups with banks on the "save now for a refuge in the future" idea. With real estate firms on "Buy a home now. It will be your Refuge." Fashion displays in style shops using photos of Miss MacDonald from the picture. Use beaver board around the marquee to resemble the ramparts of a palace.

Drawing Power—If your audiences like Katherine MacDonald, put it on. It is O. K. for second class downtown houses. Also suitable for small towns.

"The Girl Who Came Back"

Lichtman-Preferred—6100 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ALLOWING for several gaps which need bridging for the sake of coherence "The Girl Who Came Back" shapes up as a satisfying crook melodrama in that it will please the everyday patron who is not too analytical. One thing it has in its favor is a suspensive value which holds the onlooker in a fair pitch of excitement. Again Tom Forman, the director, has succeeded in giving it a coating of realism in the prison sequences, even if he is forced now and then to give way to convenient touches.

The critical spectator, however, will be disappointed to see the escape of the convicts glossed over through a subtitle. A "lifer" tells the two cell mates how to break jail and the next shot shows them safe in a dilapidated retreat. It looks to us as if the picture has not been carefully edited in its most important sequences. Too much is taken for granted. The offering does get off to a good start showing a girl victimized into a fake marriage with an auto thief. They are arrested, the "wife" being taken along as a party to the crime. And there are some good shots of prison life. The girl serves her term and doesn't meet her "husband" again until after he has escaped. Then he is recaptured and the young woman, desperate, takes the key to the retreat to recover the strong box and its contents which were hidden by her "hubby's" cell mate before he was sent to prison.

A title is employed again to get the strangers to South Africa, although previous to the scene there is a shot of the girl "beaning" the other crook in the ramshackle house. This man, incidentally, had helped the lifer and out of gratitude the latter had left him his Kimberley diamond mines. So the next few episodes show the strangers falling in love and climbing to the heights. Each has a deep secret which is not told until the conclusion. Then a title takes them back to America and a Long Island home where her "hubby" bobs up again and confesses to his crimes before he is killed by a fellow crook who had accompanied him to blackmail the crooks who turned to the right.

It's rather complicated and far-fetched, but proves to be interesting even if it doesn't convince. Miriam Cooper contrbutes a performance marked for its emotional quality. She extracts a deal of sympathy for the character who was victimized into the ways of crime. Kenneth Harlan and Gaston Glass as the crooks are satisfactory. The atmosphere is very good, but the costume party seems superfluous and doesn't ring genuine.

The Cast

Ray Underhill	Gaston Glass
Norries	Kenneth Harlan
Convict 565	Joseph Dowling
Valhays	Fred Malatesta
Belle Bryant	Ethel Shannon
Anastasia	ZaSu Pitts

By Charles E Blaney and Samuel Ruskin Golding. Directed by Tom Forman.

The Story—Crook inveigles girl into fake marriage and both are arrested as auto thieves. She serves her term but the youth escapes along with his cell-mate and finding his "wife" begs her to help him steal the contents of a strong box hidden by his pal. He is recaptured, but the girl, after stealing the jewels and money, flees to South America where she meets the cell-mate. They fall in love and marry, the girl believing her "husband" dead. They return to America and find peace and happiness after the other crooks are killed.

Classification—Crook melodrama.

Production Highlights—The prison atmosphere. The good acting by Miriam Cooper. The society scene.

Exploitation Angles—Feature as interesting story of prison life. Get welfare workers interested. Start a teaser campaign on theme. Use stills. Exploit title.

"Patsy"

Truart—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

GIVE ZaSu Pitts half a chance to show what she can do with a character sketch, no matter how frail its story, and she will prove to the satisfaction of all that she is endowed with a fair amount of talent. Miss Pitts possesses an individuality all her own. Consequently she must have suitable material. It has often happened that the roles she interpreted were subordinated to provide opportunities for more colorful characters.

In "Patsy," a picture of a hoydenish orphan, the star is in her element. True, one can anticipate its development, but if one remembers that it is a character sketch—that the story supplies just so much background for the activities of the orphan, one won't be disappointed. We see her running away from the orphanage, this "Amarilly" type, and she takes to the highway attired as a boy. Her destination is California. The girl is getting by nicely, bumming her way and everything, but a fair passenger is kind enough to pay her fare. When she arrives in Los Angeles good fortune smiles upon her. A good Samaritan helps her because of her kindness toward him and soon she is sharing his humble home.

The picture is sketchy and episodic and merely a vehicle for the star. But there is enough incident to make it palatable for feminine audiences everywhere. There is a quality about it which should appeal to the younger generation. The heroine is endowed with plenty of imagination and resourcefulness. She becomes a leader of a gang of toughs and the adventures in this role are fairly amusing to anyone who has not become hard-boiled.

"Patsy" is hokum to be sure. It is far-fetched in most of its scenes and often gets buried by a deal of melodramatic tricks. But the characterization will compensate for its plot shortcomings and the padded episodes. The cast includes Wallace Beery, Tom Gallery, Fannie Midgely, Marjorie Daw, Harry Todd and John MacFarlane. Surely nothing wrong with the interpretation.

The Cast

Patsy	ZaSu Pitts
Pops	John MacFarlane
Bob Brooks	Tom Gallery
Margaret Vincent	Marjorie Daw
Mrs. Vincent	Fannie Midgely
Gustave Luderman	Wallace Beery
Tramp	Harry Todd
Bones	Henry Fortson

Directed by John W. McDermott

The Story—Orphan girl runs away, takes to the road, attires herself as boy and boards a train for California. She is befriended by girl on train and eventually helps old man—who in return for her kindness takes her to live with him. The orphan becomes leader of gang of boys and is instrumental in restoring a girl to her father.

Classification—Character study

Production Highlights—The fine characterization by ZaSu Pitts

Exploitation Angles—Play up that ZaSu Pitts is one of the best character actresses of the screen-

"The Abysmal Brute"

Universal-Jewel—7373 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A GENUINELY human document of the prize-ring which carries a most realistic atmosphere and picturesque incident and which gets under the skin because of its life-like plot and characterization is "The Abysmal Brute," founded upon Jack London's story of the same name. There is something about tales of the roped arena which fascinate the spectator. For one thing they are usually rich in local color and present real adventure and a spark of romance which account for their popularity.

Hobart Henley has never given the screen a more entertaining subject than this, his latest effort. He has caught the true psychology of the character who is reared among the California hills to become a prize-fighter like his father before him and who, coming down to Frisco, finds adventure, romance and success awaiting him. There are no gaps here—no convenient touches added to give it a "kick." This quality it has in abundance without any recourse being made toward the lengthy arm of coincidence. It may be a trifle long and there are some sequences which if shortened would quicken the action and heighten its appeal.

"The Abysmal Brute" is mostly a character study of a shy mountain youth whose modesty makes him his own worst enemy. He is afraid of the opposite sex but still he obeys his father's advice—"If you love a girl, don't give up 'til you have won her!" So he is thrust into a strange world—the world of society, this uncouth pugilist. He is ashamed of his profession and the girl doesn't learn of his association with the manly art until he has conquered her heart. Yet his sincerity has brought such a deep appreciation that she doesn't waver except for a brief instant. Then his courage and determination to conquer her, for he applies cave-man tactics. This is the story in a nutshell—a story punctuated with considerable by-play as it concerns the prize-ring.

Henley's atmosphere and incident are exceptionally good. And his scene when the youth calls on the girl, unannounced, is a gem. The guests are in evening dress and their table manners are perfect, yet they do not become Ritzy before the boy. Who could be a better choice for the title role than Reginald Denny, the actor that made the "Leather Pusher" tales so entertaining? He gives his best performance here, acting in character throughout every scene. Some of the Latin favorites had better watch this fellow Denny. He is stealing some of their thunder. A capital picture, capitally staged, directed and acted. A fine box-office attraction. Get it quick.

The Cast

Pat Glendon, Jr.	Reginald Denny
Marion Sangster	Mabel Julienne Scott
Pat Glendon, Sr.	Charles French
Sam Stubener	Hayden Stevenson
Mortimer Sangster	David Torrence
Wilfred Sangster	George Stewart
Buddy Sangster	Buddy Messenger
Deane Warner	Crauford Kent
Gwendolyn	Irene Haisman
Mrs. MacTavish	Dorothea Wolbert
Violet MacTavish	Julia Brown
Daisy Emerson	Nell Craig

By Jack London. Scenario by A. P. Younger. Directed by Hobart Henley.

The Story—Young California mountaineer is brought up by his father, an ex-pugilist, to become a prize-fighter. He is shy of women, but falls in love with girl at the beach. He enters the ring and is so successful that he is called "The Abysmal Brute." The girl he falls in love with belongs to smart society and eventually she learns that he is a prize-fighter.

Classification—Character study and romance.

Production Highlights—The fine work by Denny. The local color of the roped arena.

Exploitation Angles—The fast growing popularity of star. The rich local color of the roped arena. The name of the director. The author.

Drawing Power—Should go big in every locality. Big enough for first run houses.

"Masters of Men"

Vitagraph—6800 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

VIVID and vital and rich in its patriotic glow is "Masters of Men" which is sponsored by Vitagraph—a picture which this company may well feel proud of since it carries all the qualities which mark success. In the first place it is an adaptation of a vigorous story by Morgan Robertson and features a character study of a young American who found romance and adventure in his search for his soul. In fact the picture presents a double romance, plenty of conflict, a climax which moves with effective dramatic force, and a glamour of a bygone day.

Robertson's story is pitched in the days of the late nineties, just prior to, and, involving the Spanish-American war. It contains all the essentials which provide good screen material. We have scenes when the boy is attending school and who runs away rather than embarrass the girl he loves because her brother is a thief. Indeed he makes it plain that he is the guilty one. Next we discover him as an enlisted sailor of the United States navy. And so the story builds in chapter form—with four chapters being employed to show the character development of the youth. He returns home on furlough once and an officer of his ship provokes a deal of bitter pride as a romantic conflict is suggested. Then we find them shanghaied and members of a motley crew, but with true American pluck they overpower the skipper and take command.

The war breaks out and it is a thrilling scene when the youth shows his bravery under fire. The miniature shots of Cervera's fleet leaving Santiago harbor are splendidly executed—and they will furnish the spectator with sufficient thrills. The boy is so brave that he is made an ensign. He even meets the brother of the girl who is forgiven before he dies and gives up his post to the youth. Then it is a happy welcome the two officers receive from their sweethearts. These girls have carried on a sort of enmity toward each other over the misunderstandings of romance.

The picture carries a punch, dramatic flavor, romantic interest, atmosphere and fine acting as contributed by Cullen Landis, who has his biggest role, Alice Calhoun, who might have stepped from an old miniature in her quaint costume of the nineties, Wanda Hawley and Earle Williams. Their support is highly competent. The romance is mostly subordinate to the dramatic sequences which, of course, does not give the Misses Calhoun and Hawley much opportunity to do anything but appear in costumes of the period. It's a great box-office bet, realistic and sure-fire in its appeal.

The Cast

Lieutenant Breen	Earle Williams
Mabel Arthur	Alice Calhoun
Dick Halpin	Cullen Landis
Bessie Fleming	Wanda Hawley
"Pig" Jones	Dick Sutherland
Sawyer	Charles E. Mason
Mr. Thorne	Bert Apling
Captain Pilker	Jack Curtis
"Nigger"	Martin Turner

By Morgan Robertson. Scenario by C. Graham Baker. Directed by David Smith.

The Story—Treats of the character development of youth who, accused of theft by the brother of his sweetheart, runs away and joins the navy. Later he is shanghaied with a lieutenant and discovers that the girl knows the truth. The two victims are resourceful enough to outwit the skipper of the boat and are next seen participating in the naval battle of Santiago harbor during the Spanish-American war. The youth does such courageous work that he is made an ensign. Later he returns home and renews his courtship of the girl.

Classification—Character study interspersed with romance and adventure.

Production Highlights—The good romantic interest. The detail. The scene when men are shanghaied. The action aboard the ship. The climax showing the naval battle.

"The Go-Getter"

Cosmopolitan-Paramount—5500 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ONE of those stories of an aggressive young man who, starting at the bottom of the ladder, manages to reach the top through a breezy personality and a determination to get ahead may be expected to find expression on the screen every blue moon. Such a story is "The Go-Getter" written by Peter B. Kyne who, while he has not flashed any originality, has packed his tale with sufficient incident to keep it bright and fairly amusing through five reels. Such a picture depends upon the interpretation of the leading character in putting it over.

T. Roy Barnes is a good selection even if he does act his part with too much assurance or in the manner which suggests the seasoned trouper. He plays the role in his familiar lackadaisical way, taking his time and appearing at ease throughout. We discover him leaving a Reconstruction hospital and forging ahead in the business world because he anticipates every move. He even has personal and business cards printed with the name of the company with which he expects to be associated—to say nothing of an engraved announcement of his wedding to the daughter of one of his employers—his method of making a proposal.

It is these bright touches which give the picture its sparkle even if it is not substantial enough to break house records. Barnes gets on famously with the lumber concern. If there are any arguments he paves the way for a settlement of them through his skill at repartee and taking advantage of his breezy personality. It is an old tale refurbished by men who have toiled with scripts and productions a long while. Consequently they know how to dress it up and make it enjoyable. The conclusion is decidedly picturey showing as it does the quaint Cappy Ricks, one of the employers, putting his new salesman to the test by compelling him to combat a crook or three.

Other seasoned troupers are in this number and they know just what to do in scoring their points. Here they are—William Norris, who is badly made up, Louis Wolheim, Tom Lewis, Fred Santley, Frank Currier and Seena Owen. The last-mentioned is mostly ornamental here, there being little opportunity to show any romantic or emotional fervor.

The Cast

Bill Peck	T. Roy Barnes
Mary Skinner	Seena Owen
Cappy Ricks	William Norris
Charles Skinner	Tom Lewis
Daniel Silver	Louis Wolheim
Jack Morgan	Fred Huntley
Joe Ryan	John Carr
Hugh McNair	Frank Currier

By Peter B. Kyne. Scenario by John Lynch. Directed by E. H. Griffith.

The Story—Treats of a world war veteran who belongs to that class of Americans known as go-getters. He is a lumber salesman and becomes enamored with the daughter of one of his employers and being a go-getter inside of a short time he has himself engaged to her.

Classification—Comedy-drama.

Production Highlights—The breezy performance by T. Roy Barnes.

Exploitation Angles—Use stills and feature the cast. Get out a snappy teaser campaign.

Drawing Power—Good for audiences everywhere, small towns as well as city theatres.

"The Soul of the Beast"

Thomas H. Ince Production-Metro—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

HERE'S one of the real novelties of the year. You've been praying for someone to put out "something different." Here it is. Think of it—an elephant as "the Perfect Lover." Sure. He's Oscar. One of the best actors we've seen in lo, these many moons. Does everything but talk. And no one has talked on the screen—yet. Thrills? You bet. Lost of them. And one of the most beautiful woodland backgrounds ever given a film play.

You can't go wrong here. If ever a picture had "audience appeal," it is this one. Jammed full of it. Madge Bellamy never looked more charming than in the role of the forlorn little maid with no one to love but a circus elephant. You've got to hand it to Madge for her work here. She does everything with Oscar, which, by the way, is the elephant's monicker, but whirl him around by the tail. The cast, incidentally, is an excellent one.

The picture opens with some honest-to-goodness circus stuff and a cyclone blowing everything to kingdom come. However, the wind gives up in despair when it tries to monkey with Oscar. He stands pat and puts over a rescue scene in which he saves his pal, Ruth, and dashes into the wilds with her. We'd like to write a lot about Oscar. He's an artist, whether he's called upon for comedy or thrills. And to John Griffith Wray goes the laurel wreath for the masterful direction that makes this novelty possible.

This picture is a gem from a scenic viewpoint. And as for thrills—well, the world war didn't have many more. The canoe chase, the fistic battles, the knife duel and the chastising of the villan by Oscar are a few. The scenes in which Oscar sneaks a few glasses of beer through a window with his trunk and his meeting up with no less a personage than a skunk, will furnish laughs—unless the audience is made up of Eskimos. They never laugh.

The Cast

Ruth Lorrimore	Madge Bellamy
Paul Nadeau	Cullen Landis
Caesar Durand	Noah Beery
Jacqueline Boussul	Viola Vale
Silas Hamm	Bert Sprouts

By C. Gardner Sullivan. Directed by John Griffith Wray. Scenario by Ralph H. Dixon. Photographed by Henry Sharp. Distributed by Metro.

The Story—Ruth, a sort of "Polly of the Circus," is pinch hitting for the "wild girl" in one of the side show cages when a cyclone comes along and takes everything with it, including the circus tent. But Oscar, Ruth's pet elephant, which no wind could carry away, goes to the rescue of Ruth and rides her into the north woods. Here Ruth meets Paul Nadeau, a crippled musician, and romance enters. But Caesar Durand, the town villain, makes Ruth's way a path of thorns until Oscar leaps out of the woods to the rescue. And then things sure go back on Caesar.

Classification—A novel combination of circus and French-Canadian life with Oscar, the elephant, injecting real audience appeal.

Production Highlights—The cyclone destroying the circus and the resuce of Ruth by the elephant. Madge Bellamy's charming portrayal of the little elephant girl. The circus scenes. The very beautiful woodland exteriors. The canoe chase. The scenes in which Oscar gives Berry a fine "shower bath," using his trunk as the shower.

Exploitation Angles—You've simply got to dig up an elephant somewhere when you show this, even if you have to rob the zoo. Get a pachyderm on the street with a flashy display on his back and you'll attract attention for the picture. Dress your front up in circus style. This one is a real novelty. Give it a chance by exploiting it.

Drawing Power—Should pull them in through its novelty. Suitable for any type of audience.

Exchange and Exhibitor Items from St. Louis

ST. LOUIS filmdom scored an excellent victory with the election of April 3 of Walter J. G. Neun, general counsel of the General Film Manufacturing Company, University City, Mo., as president of the Board of Aldermen of St. Louis.

Judge W. J. G. Neun

Neun's election as President of the Board of Aldermen is most timely so far as the film interests of St. Louis are concerned. There is considerable agitation in St. Louis at present in favor of a Daylight Saving ordinance and the president of the board will have great weight in deciding the fate of such legislation.

Neun is a member of the law firm of D'Arcy & Neun, National Bank of Commerce Building, St. Louis, and is a product of St. Louis and a graduate of Washington University Law School. He formerly was a Circuit Judge and an assistant circuit attorney.

The General Film Manufacturing Company has its large studios in the Egyptian Building, University City, Mo., the largest building of its kind in the world.

Citizens of Webster Groves, a suburb of St. Louis, on April 3, by a vote of 1,910 to 1,464. decided in favor of retaining the town's only blue law, an ordinance prohibiting the showing of motion pictures on Sundays. The ordinance has existed since the suburb was organized as a municipality, many years before it had a picture show.

The movement for Sunday movies started last September, when residents of the town, thinking of the long journey to St. Louis the first of every week for a little amusement, suggested the removal of the local restraint. So petitions were circulated and more than 1,300 signatures were obtained. These were submitted to the City Council, which body passed the buck to the town as a whole, voting to submit the question at the municipal election, April 3.

Proponents of Sunday movies did not campaign at strenuously as they could have, but the church and reform element did not sleep on the job and expended large sums to keep Webster blue on Sundays.

Burglars took $400 from the safe of the Shaw theatre, April 1, after battering the door off with a sledge hammer. They broke open a window to get into the theatre office. The St. Louis Amusement Company owns the Shaw.

Carthage, Mo., shook off the reform element on April 3, defeating all the candidates for the five aldermanic positions who had the endorsement of the Christian Council, an organization composed of the Church-Blue Law crowd. The injection of the Sunday closing issue resulted in a very heavy vote.

A motion picture, "A Day With the Careless Driver," is being shown in St. Louis motion picture houses for the St. Louis Safety Council through the courtesy of members of the Exhibitors' League.

Noah Bloomer, owner of the Gayety theatre, Freeburg, Ill., has opened the New Dreamland theatre, Belleville, Ill.

Ed Fellis of the Orpheum, Hillsboro, Ill., has been honored by the citizens of his county by being elected to a place on the County Board of Supervisors on the Republican ticket April 3.

James D. Drake and Phil Cohen have opened the Temple theatre, Alton, Ill., as a combination house. Drake's management of the Lyric and Avenue theatres, East St. Louis, Ill., for Cohen was so successful he decided to expand his operations by taking in the Alton house.

Jim Reilly of the Princess theatre, Alton, Ill., has recovered from his recent illness sufficiently to permit his making the regular weekly trips to St. Louis.

Tom Reed of Duquoin, Ill., has returned from a trip to Atlanta, Ga., where he went to visit a daughter in school. While South, Tom carefully studied the theatrical situation.

"Down to the Sea in Ships," which is playing a special engagement at the Pershing theatre, St. Louis, has enjoyed excellent success and has been held over for another week. The attendance has grown larger day by day, the picture benefitting considerably from word of mouth advertising by those who witnessed it.

G. E. W. Griffith, who plans to open a summer theatre at Centralia, Ill., to be known as the Broadway theatre, was in St. Louis during the week arranging his programs. He plans to open about May 15.

A. C. Norwein, who recently sold his theatre at Bonne Terre, Mo., has accepted a position with the St. Louis branch of the Nash Motor

Out-of-town callers to St. Louis exchanges the past week included: Tom Law of Pana, Ill.; Jim Reilly of Alton; G. E. W. Griffith of Centralia, Ill.; Verna Coffman, Lyric theatre, Moweuqua, Ill.; George Newsum, Mount Vernon, Ill.; Tom Reed of Duquoin, Ill.; Noah Bloomer of Freeburg and Belleville, and S. E. Trade Activities in and About Milwaukee

AN innovation in the form of a "discovery" contest will be the feature of the Sunday, April 15, program at the Alhambra theatre, of which Leo Landau is manager.

Mr. Landau is advertising a noon concert, to be followed by the regular program, and is reserving seats for the performance, with no extra admission charge.

All non-professional entertainers, either vocalists, musicians, or novelty acts in the state of Wisconsin are asked to communicate with Mr. Landau. From the list of those desiring to participate, an interesting program will be arranged.

Sixteen motion picture theatres in the city, including three downtown houses, have been granted a temporary lifting of the ban placed by the health department, against attendance of children under 12. The restriction was placed upon all motion picture houses more than a fortnight ago, owing to the scarlet fever epidemic among school children, and seriously, affected business in many outlying houses, which depend upon juvenile interest in serial pictures to a great extent. Each of these theatres are having a physician to examine all children under 12 seeking admission.

Children may again attend the Princess, American or Whitehouse theatres downtown; or the Astor, Kosciusko, Violet, Tivoli, Venus, Jackson, Rose, Parkway, Arcade, Liberty, Fern, Atlas or Riviera in their respective neighborhoods.

Liens have been filed against four theatres in Milwaukee and in the state as a result of differences with the internal revenue office. Two of these are motion pictures houses the Whitehouse at Cudahy, and the Palace at Racine. A lien for $152 for taxes on admission from July 1920 to May 1921 was filed against the Whitehouse, and for $1,344 against the Racine theatre, said to be due as additional tax on the theatre's income in 1917.

Practically every active organization in Milwaukee took sides in the recent daylight savings controversy, prior to the election of April 3. The ordinance, which was peculiarly worded, read:

Shall the ordinance providing for daylight saving be repealed?

The fact that those in favor of the measure would have to vote "No" and vice versa was thought to have contributed to the defeat of the plan, which has been in force for three years.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners organized the Standard Time League to work for the repeal of the ordinance, and with them in sentiment were such organizations as the Federated Trades Council, Marquette Women's League, Milwaukee chapter, American Institute of Architects, Milwaukee Baseball Umpires' Association, Milwaukee Business Women's Clubs, Milk Producers' association.

Allied with the Daylight Saving Committee, which labored to prevent the repeal of the ordinance were the Parent-Teacher association, Milwaukee Real Estate Board, Engineers' society, W. C. T. U., Chamber of Commerce, Wesley Methodist Church Men's Club, Polish American Housewives' League, West Side Mothers' Club, Bayview Civic Association, thousands of employees of the Schuster stores and Gimbel Brothers.

The vote to maintain standard time was won by a majority of 10,000 votes.

Briefs From Florida Territory

Fort Myers jumps into the lime-light with two distinguished visitors, Thomas Edison and Henry Ford, and, says the report, upon the arrival of the two gentlemen in that city, Mr. Edison went at once to the picture show, while Mr. Ford went for a shave.

Jack Frost, manager of the Strand, Tampa, put over another of his famous Merchant tie-up pages, in the local papers, on the feature, "What's Wrong With the Women?" All of the merchants' ads, which surrounded the theatre announcement, asked the question, "What's Wrong With the Women?" and then proceeded to answer the question with cleverly worded suggestions and reasons for trading at their establishments.

John B. Carroll, manager of the Victory, Tampa, has added a special attraction, or prologue, to his regular picture programs. Members of the Victory orchestra have been used in some of the numbers and they have proven their ability to put over a specialty as well as the vaudeville artists.

Jottings from Kansas City and Vicinity : :

IF for no other reason, the attendance at the semi-annual convention of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas at Wichita, Kas., April 16 and 17, promises to be a near record breaker because of the fact that many Kansas exhibitors recently have been made defendants in music tax suits. Samuel Handy, attorney for the M. P. T. O. K., has instructed all exhibitors not to pay the tax. At the convention, which will be in the Hotel Broadview, he will outline his reasons for instructing theatre owners to refuse to pay any tax. A steady stream of letters from exhibitors, defendants in suits, has been pouring into the office of C. E. Cook, business manager of the Kansas organization, the last three weeks. Headquarters of the Kansas league was moved from the Hodkinson branch to the F. B. O. branch, Eighteenth and Baltimore avenue, last week.

When Milton Feld, managing director of the Newman theatre, Kansas City, introduced his "discovery concerts," he started something. Sunday a record crowd packs the house, the daily newspapers aided with liberal space and the concerts will continue each Sunday of this month. The names of all participants in each of the ten acts, which were selected by Mr. Feld from more than 500 preliminary tryouts, were published in the newspapers and the plan already has proved unusually profitable, as well as furnishing excellent entertainment. The acts varied in type, from grand opera to burlesque, the performers being amateurs of the city, who were more than anxious to compete.

The motion picture committee of the Woman's City Club of Kansas City has issued cards to the 2,700 members of the organization, requesting that they support the following films to be shown in Kansas City: "The Hottentot," "The Girl I Loved," "The Little Church Around the Corner," "Brawn of the North," "Robin Hood," "The Christian," "Nobody's Money," "Grumpy," "Safety Last," and "The White Flower."

Randolph Elliott has joined the sales force of the Associated Exhibitors Kansas City branch and will cover the Southern Kansas territory. While Eddie O'Neill has been employed as a Pathe representative in Northern Kansas, Mr. Elliott formerly was with the Kansas City F. B. O. office. Bob Carnie, formerly with Educational, now is selling Metro product, while A. H. McLaughlin, formerly with F. B. O., also has joined the Metro salesforce.

A conference of the salesforce of the First National branch at Kansas City Sunday, grew so interesting that it was continued until Monday afternoon. The plans and policies of First National in the Kansas City territory were outlined by E. C. Rhoden, branch manager.

A conference of St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha Goldwyn branch managers was called by W. E. Truog, division manager, upon his return to Kansas City from New York last week. Jack Weil of St. Louis and L. P. Hollander of Omaha were the out of town managers to attend the meeting.

Several of the above productions already have shown in downtown theatres, but the dates of showing in suburban theatres and the names of the women members of the committee who will act as hostesses have been published in the daily newspapers, which have been giving liberal space to the plan.

Motion picture scenes of the annual spring ball given by students of the Kansas City Art Institute, which were shown at the Liberty theatre, Kansas City, this week, served as a real drawing card. The film showed the prize winning costumes and others designed in the school.

Applications from a score of nearby towns have been received by the management of the Pantages theatre, Kansas City, for an old fiddlers' contest this week. The stunt has been productive of valuable publicity. The contestants are limited to certain old tunes.

In celebrating the fifteenth anniversary of his motion picture theatre in El Dorado, Kas., last week, W. R. Rowell drew an editorial in the El Dorado Times, an excerpt of which read: "Considering the present amazing proportions of the motion picture industry, it is hard to conceive that only fifteen years in this business establishes a man as a pioneer. For Mr. Rowell is the 'dean' of motion picture exhibitors in El Dorado."

Consummating one of the largest deals of its kind negotiated by a Kansas City vaudeville and motion picture houses in several years, the Mainstreet theatre Tuesday purchased from the Metro Pictures Corporation its thirteen biggest feature releases of the year.

Theatre and Film Row Items from Cleveland

NORTHERN OHIO exhibitors, meet, Mr. H. Hirsch. He has just come from Boston to join J. S. Jossey of the Progress Pictures Company, which specializes in the distribution of Arrow pictures. While new in Ohio, Hirsch is old in motion picture experience, having been associated with the old Mutual Film Corporation and, more lately, with the Lightning Photoplay Corporation of Boston, where he was known as the "serial king," having established a new high record in serial bookings throughout New England. Furthermore, Mr. Hirsch states that he was a bachelor while living in Boston, is now a bachelor and intends to devote his time so exclusively to the distribution of pictures released by the Progress Pictures Company that he will continue in that same state of single blessedness.

H. Hirsch

W. C. Bachmeyer, Metro district manager, while in town last week, tried to diagnose the illness of the local motion picture business. General industry in Cleveland is good. Factories are all working full time. The Cleveland Chamber of Commerce reported to Mr. Bachmeyer that there is practically no unemployment. And still the theatres are way below normal. Going over all the causes and effects, examining the kind of pictures that have made some money out here, Bachmeyer has decided that the public is just tired of spending. But he thinks it is only a temporary attack of economy. In a little while the public will begin to spend moderately, and then the movies will come in for their share of the profits, he says. Cleveland was one of the last cities in the Union to get hit. It will be one of the last to recover, so says Bachmeyer.

Manager M. Goldman of the Select Distributing Corporation sent out letters to all exhibitors in the territory announcing the glad news that Select will continue to do business at the old stand. Almost every letter brought a congratulatory reply. Some exhibitors even took the trouble to come to Cleveland to see Goldman personally and tell him how glad they were to hear of a satisfactory readjustment of Select affairs.

J. A. KOERPEL, Goldwyn central district manager, held a convention in Cleveland recently of all managers in his territory. This included Manager Jack Stewart of Cincinnati; Manager W. W. Willman of Indianapolis; Manager Harry Lorch of Detroit and Manager Nat Barach of Cleveland. This meeting was an immediate outcome of the recent district managers' convention in New York, and was for the purpose of discussing distribution policies for the coming season. The accompanying photo shows the Goldwyn chiefs in session.

H. A. Bandy, district manager for First National in the Central States, left Cleveland for a week's visit in Detroit.

Word has been received in the Cleveland First National office that Madge Bellamy is soon to be in the city. Miss Bellamy was recently named official representative of the Monroe Doctrine Centennial and Motion Picture Exposition to be held in Los Angeles, July 2 to August 4. Her visit through the country is to personally invite the mayors, the state, and the national officials to attend the exposition. The trip is being maneuvered by Thomas Ince.

Milton Mooney, of the First National Cleveland sales family, is on the sick list. It started with a bad tooth, followed by an infection that promised to be serious, but the trouble was caught early, and now Mooney is once more making plans for the future.

Joe Tolland, publicity manager for the local First National outfit, who has been a compulsory guest at Mt. Sinai Hospital, Cleveland, for the past month, was taken to his home last Monday and is now on the slow but steady road to recovery.

Cleveland Motion Picture Company has moved from 600 Film Exchange building to number 219 of the same building.

The Cleveland Fox exchange, beginning April 12th and continuing every Thursday thereafter until further notice, will give exhibitor screenings in their private screen room. The program to be screened will be sent out to every exhibitor in the territory a week in advance. The program will consist of Fox news, comedies, novelties and features.

Max Schachtel, one of Cleveland's veteran exhibitors, and at one time manager of Universal's Cleveland exchange, is very ill, so it was learned the other day. Schachtel is at Mt. Sinai Hospital.

A new 700-seat house has just been opened in Delphos, Ohio. Delphos boasts of about 3,000 inhabitants. But that doesn't keep it from supporting a beautiful, high-class movie theatre, which operates seven days a week and shows only the best releases.

Albany Notes and Eastern New York Briefs

MARVIN W. KEMPNER, manager of the Paramount exchange, in Albany, N. Y., is no chair warmer. A veteran in the business, Mr. Kempner has found that while he can get business with some of the exhibitors who visit the city, that he can accomplish far more by getting out into the territory himself three or four days each week. While some exchange managers in Albany sit down and wait for the exhibitor to look them up, Mr. Kempner has adopted just the opposite tactics and searches out the exhibitor himself. Mr. Kempner will have managed the Albany branch for three years on June 1. Before coming to Albany, he was located in Buffalo, with the same organization.

Marvin W. Kempner

The Clinton Square theatre, in Albany, is boasting of a new Robert Morton organ, with Roland Boisvert, a demonstrator, at the keys.

Phil Markell, of the Atlas, in Adams, Mass., was along Film Row, in Albany, and picked up some comedies at the Pathe exchange.

Sidney Sampson, of Buffalo, one of the big men in the Bond Photo Play company, was in Albany the past week.

Fred Elliott, former owner of the Clinton Square, in Albany, and one of the best known exhibitors in the state, is now known as "King Tut" among his friends. It all came about through Mr. Elliott having recently had his teeth extracted, and as he is waiting for his "crockery," his facial expression, at least according to his friends, closely resembles the ancient ruler of the Egyptians.

Robert Smeltzer, eastern district manager of Pathe, was in Albany last week, conferring with Frank Bruner, local manager, over the distribution of "Safety Last" among the first-run houses.

"Bella Donna" playing for the entire week, at the Leland in Albany, beat out the attendance record for the first two days of "When Knighthood was in Flower." Long lines of waiting patrons were to be seen nightly, while matinees packed the house. Both Tearle and Nagel are popular in Albany.

Moe Mark, Walter Hays, and Eugene Falk of the Mark Strand group of houses, were in Albany the last week, going over the affairs of each of the three houses in this district.

Vic Bendell was in New York Sunday, attending a sales meeting of F. B. O. exchange managers. Mr. Bendell handles the exchange in Albany.

Jane Halloran, connected with the American Releasing exchange in Albany, and who was virtually brought up in the theatrical and motion picture business, is proving herself some salesman these days. Whenever the manager is out, Miss Holloran doesn't hesitate to put across a sale, and some of the best business of the season has fallen to the young woman.

Vic Bendell stands a fair chance of landing a prize in the advance business contest just closed by F.B.O. Anyhow, Mr. Bendell is sure of a new hat, for Phil Selznick, acting as special representative for Williamson's "Wonders of the Sea," while in Albany a few days ago, bet a new hat that Mr. Bendell would land a prize.

Lee Langdon, booker at the First National exchange in Albany, has returned to his desk after an illness of several days.

Among exhibitors in Albany last week were R. V. Erk, of Ilion; Mrs. D. S. Regan, of the Star, in Greenwich; and F. C. Yelverton of the Ballston, in Ballston Spa.

ON April 3, C. R. Halligan observed his fifth anniversary as manager of the Universal exchange in Albany, N. Y., a record in point of service which has never been equaled, or even approached by any film exchange manager in the Capital District. Mr. Halligan also enjoys the unique distinction of having always worked for the one film concern since he entered the business. While Mr. Halligan fairly grew up in the theatre business, handling several theatres before he entered the employ of the Universal, he found conditions so satisfactory with this firm that after managing the poster department, he was promoted to become manager of the exchange itself. Today Mr. Halligan is probably known to more exhibitors in New York State, than any other exchange manager. He has built up a wonderful business over a wide territory.

C. R. Halligan

Alec Herman, manager of the First National exchange in Albany, will attend a conference in New York on April 15. R. H. Clark, general manager of the exchanges in Buffalo, Albany and New York, will be in charge.

Ben Davis has just been made home office manager for the Schine interests in New York State. He will be located in Gloversville.

Word reached Albany the past week that Madge Bellamy will be in the city in the near future, for the purpose of inviting Governor Alfred E. Smith, and other state officials, to the motion picture exposition in Los Angeles, July 2 to August 4.

With "Robin Hood" as its feature, the Troy, in Troy, N. Y., played last week to the biggest seven days in its history.

Trade Jottings from Central Pennsylvania

THE Appell Amusement Company, of York, Pa., which controls a number of motion picture and other theatres in that city, will apply at the State capitol in Harrisburg for a charter of incorporation. The application will be made by Nathan Appell, for many years prominent in the theatre business in Central Pennsylvania, and William H. Kurtz, a lawyer. The terms of the charter will be broad, giving the new cororation authority to establish and maintain opera houses, theatres or moving picture shows; organize, manage and control theatrical, dramatic and operatic companies; purchase, publish and control dramatic compositions, and purchase and control bill-posting plants. The Appell interests already control the York Opera House, the Orpheum theatre and the Wizard theatre, and contemplate the erection this Spring of the Strand theatre, on North George street, all in the city of York.

The formal opening of the big Magaro Coliseum and convention hall, erected by Peter Magaro, at Fourth and Market streets, Harrisburg, on property almost adjoining the New Regent motion picture theatre which he owns, was held during the week of April 2, when the Harrisburg Lodge of Elks held a "Million Dollar Circus" there.

Erward Earle, who won the Movie Star Popularity Contest conducted by Will Hayes, was scheduled to appear in person on April 12, in Chestnut Street Auditorium, Harrisburg, in connection with the showing of screen tests made in the Movie Talent Search, conducted by the Harrisburg Telegraph, in Central Pennsylvania for the National Screen Scouts of Associated Stars and Directors. Dorothy Knapp, the "Venus" who won the National Professional Beauty contest at Atlantic City last September, and Clara Bow, who made her way to the professional screen by winning the national contest conducted by several motion picture magazines last year, also were on the program to appear in person. Motion pictures were shown of the amateurs who were brought out in the Telegraph's search for new picture talent.

The Radio Club of the Mechanicsburg High School gave a radio concert in connection with a motion picture show in the school auditorium, the first entertainment of the sort ever attempted in the town.

President Fred Eden, of the Harrisburg Chamber of Commerce, and several scores of other prominent business men of that city, gave a surprise banquet in the Penn Harris hotel, Harrisburg, in honor of C. Floyd Hopkins, representative of the Wilmer & Vincent motion picture and other theatres in Harrisburg and Reading. The affair followed the return of Mr. Hopkins from Bermuda where he went to recuperate after his recent critical illness. Entertainment at the banquet included selections by Miss Viola Burd, pianist of the Colonial theatre; and singing by Matilda Reeve, soprano, and Robert Smith, basso. The tables were decorated with spring flowers, and favors of cigarette-holders, paper hats and whistles were given to the guests. The committee on arrangements consisted of Charles E. Covert, Charles M. Williams and John A. Rose.

The M. E. Comerford Amusement Company, which controls a big chain of motion picture theatres in Pennsylvania, announces the selection of a site in Plymouth for the erection of a new theatre which will give that town both vaudeville and photoplays.

The State Forestry Commissioner of Pennsylvania, R. Y. Stuart, has authorized the distribution of 125,000 placards by the 2,366 State forest fire wardens in every part of the state, calling attention to the film play, "The Ninety and Nine," which conveys a powerful lesson as to the necessity of care in the prevention of forest fires. John Bethel, Philadelphia branch manager for Vitagraph, is said to have conducted the negotiations with the Forestry Department which resulted in the plans

A theatrical musician of wide acquaintance throughout Pennsylvania, George Reinhart, for many years a drummer in the Grand Opera House orchestra, at Hazleton, died in that city on March 19, from cirrhosis of the liver. He was 59 years old.

Talk of Big Paramount House in Indianapolis Revived

Talk of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's plan to build a $1,250,000 movie theatre and office building on the site of the Hotel English, in Monument Place, started in 1919, when the company obtained a ninety-nine-year lease on the site, was revived last week when Samuel Dowden, Indianapolis attorney for the corporation, said it is advising tenants they may possibly be required to vacate in the near future. No definite date has been decided upon, Dowden said.

The project has been all but forgotten in Indianapolis in the last two years since the furore over the Famous Players movement to obtain a national chain of theatres subsided.

The proposed house would seat between 3,000 and 3,500.

Washington Exhibitor and Exchange Items

HARRY BERNSTEIN of Richmond was a visitor at the Washington film exchanges the past week.

Manager Anderson, of Keene's Crown and Dixie theatres, Baltimore, paid a visit to the Washington exchange of Metro, the past week.

Harry S. Brown, manager at the new offices of Universal on New Jersey avenue was in Baltimore, Friday and Saturday, to see Jules Levy, new assistant general manager, in charge of sales at the home office of Universal. Mr. Levy was formerly district manager, with offices at the Philadelphia and Washington.

Paramount, Fox, Vitagraph and Goldwyn exchanges are talking of forming a film exchange baseball league. Paramount will have a team no matter what the others do. The Vitagraph boys were warming up Saturday.

Special representatives of the New York office of Will Hays were in the city over the week end.

Federal, Arrow and Seaboard Film products, whose physical distribution in the territory was handled by the Seaboard exchange, have separated. Mr. Taylor, now with S. B. Lust of Super-Films, is still handling one of these concern's lines, while Seaboard is still handled in the Coleman office, although H. I. Coleman is not actively engaged in the firm, in which he retains an interest.

Carriers of the Washington Star, were the guests of Sidney Lust, owner of the Leader theatre, at 9 o'clock Saturday morning and at 2 p. m., Sunday afternoon. The Selig serial "The Jungle Goddess" was the attraction, in its local premiere; "All the Brothers Were Valiant," was also on the program. The jungle serial will run fifteen weeks at the Leader.

The outlying theatres of the Crandall chain possess seats for 3,927 patrons at a performance being made up as follows: — Apollo, 1,000; Savoy, 1,093; York, 935; and the Avenue Grand 899. These residential theatres alone can thus accommodate nearly 8,000 patrons each week night.

The gifted young Washington artistes who are appearing in the thematic prologue of the "Mighty Lak a Rose" picture at Crandall's Metropolitan theatre this week are Miss Ruth Peter, soprano and Miss Helen Ware, violinist. The prologue utilizes both of the Metropolitan's proscenium side-stages and is enhanced in beauty by some new and novel lighting effects, originated by John J. Payette, assistant general manager of the Crandall theatres.

"Poor Men's Wives," has been booked for premier Washington presentation at Crandall's Central theatre the full week of April 15th.

A. N. Waters, manager of Crandall's theatre, last week was also appointed to the managership of Crandall's Central theatre in the same block on Ninth street, vice William V. Broylen, resigned.

Miss Gladys Enola Mills, manager of the Capital Athletic Club basketball team, that recently won the championship for the girls of the District of Columbia, has been appointed private secretary to Mrs. Harriet Hawley Locher, directing the Public service and educational activities of the Crandall theatres.

The Crandall patrons' ball team league got under way early last week. Harry E. Lohmeyer's Avenue Grand Team from the southeast, defeated John Upperman's Apollo team from the Northeast sections of the city. The game was played at Union Station Plaza. The first four innings were hotly contested, but the fifth inning on the superiority of the Southeast boys demonstrated itself, the outstanding star of the argument being Linger, demon twirler of the Avenue Grand, who smashed out the only home run of the game.

The frame of Crandall's new Ambassador theatre, at Eighteenth street and Columbia road, Northwest, was completed last week. The steel skeleton of the building is entirely independent of walls or masonry. The upright columns are raised from cement footings imbedded in the earth and the weight of the roof structure thus is carried straight down to the ground. The roof slab will be of gypsum instead of cement. The work on the Ambassador is being carried on under the supervision of Thomas B. Lamb, famous theatre architect and engineer.

The first issue of the Capital Legion, official organ of the District of Columbia members of the American Legion, carries the announcement that the Committee on Motion Pictures, representing the 20 posts in the city of Washington, is headed by Jacob R. Emeigh, as chairman, Charles B. Hanford, veteran Shakespearean actor contemporary of Booth and Irving, now engaged in compiling the official history of the U. S. Navy in the World War, Frank L. Peckham, William Wolfe Smith, past commander of Press Club Post, and chief counsel of the legal division, Veteran's Bureau, and Mrs. Kenneth MacRae, department vice-commander.

Buffalo Briefs and Western New York News

HERE he is, folks. The Hon. F. Ray Powers, office manager at the Paramount exchange, Buffalo, nephew of the famous "Pat" Powers and himself a veteran of some ten years' service in the "fillum" business.

F. Ray Powers.

Ray started about a decade ago with Warner Features for which company he acted as traveling auditor, visiting exchanges through United States and Canada installing systems. Then he became associated with the W. J. Eckert company, public accountants in the Iroquois building, Buffalo, handling accounts for a number of the big film concerns. Then he jumped to Universal, where he was assistant manager of the Buffalo exchange for two years. From "U" he went to Robertson-Cole where he remained a year and a half as assistant manager and city sales manager. After R-C, he went with Realart as assistant manager until that company passed into history, when he was appointed office manager for Paramount. Just now Ray is up to his eyes in work planning to put over Moritz Week which is being held in honor of his chief, Allan S. Moritz, commencing April 15.

Henry F. Thurston, who for the past ten years has operated the Temple theatre in Lockport, N. Y., is to retire from the business and has sold his house to J. Meyer Schine, owner of a chain of houses down state. Mr. Thurston's son will be retained as manager of the theatre.

The Paramount manager and salesman will have Harry Buxbaum as their guest on Friday, the 13th, for a sales conference. Harry sure does pick a great date.

The Buffalo theatre managers at a meeting in the Hotel Iroquois went on record as being opposed to exchanges serving churches, clubs, schools and private institutions with films, claiming that this practice hurts regular theatre business.

Harry Lotz, who is guiding the Select exchange through the storm, is now a regular Shriner. Harry "went through" at the Teck theatre ceremonial and with the use of adrenalin was brought back to life. At first it was thought he would not survive the desert crossing.

"Robin Hood" came to Buffalo last week and knocked all records at Shea's Hippodrome for a row of goose eggs. Never were such crowds seen in or around the big house. The picture is being held a second week.

H. L. Beecroft is now doing exploitation for "Robin Hood" for Feiber & Shea in the Western New York and Pennsylvania territory.

Harry Bernstein and the "Mrs." journeyed to New York last week to celebrate their wedding anniversary with Mrs. Bernstein's parents. Booker Bill Borke is now sporting a new coupe. Charles Goodwin is back on the job, fully recovered from an attack of ptomaine poisoning.

Madge Bellamy is scheduled to appear in Buffalo soon for some personal appearances, according to an announcement by Henry W. Kahn, Metro manager. Rudolph Valentino and his wife were in town Wednesday night for a dance engagement in the Broadway Auditorium. The event, as expected, was well attended.

Anthony Caruso, who had been holding down the Sunday elevator job in the Beyer Film Building, was arrested on the charge of having stolen goods in the Pathe exchange. It is alleged he took a ring valued at 100 berries from Frank Minor, shipping clerk; some petty cash, $9 in stamps, cut-outs, window cards, etc. Probably planning to open his own exchange. Tony was arraigned in court where he confessed having started in the "business" six weeks previous. He appeared in court arrayed in Valentino pants, 20 buttons to the slit, which perhaps influenced the judge to soak him $25 and give him a year's probation.

B. Smith, formerly with American Releasing, and H. Byers, have been engaged by Manager R. T. Murphy as members of the Renown sales force. Bob has set "The Drug Traffic" for a week at the Palace, beginning Sunday, April 15.

Sol Myers and Len Sang, formerly manager and treasurer, respectively, of the Criterion during the Shubert vaudeville regime, have taken over the Circle theatre, formerly controlled by General Theatres' Corporation.

Manager Charles N. Johnston has engaged Miss Margaret Henderson as biller at the Fox exchange, succeeding D. Glasstone. Miss Esther Morris and Miss Finkelstein are two new Fox stenographers.

And now comes an exhibitor who also writes song hits. He's Bill Billon, manager of the Strand, Ithaca, and the name of his latest opus is "Old King Tut." Even Ithaca must have heard of the discovery of the tomb of Tutankh-amen.

N. I. Filkins and his Merit exchange have moved from the Bond Photoplay Corporation building to space in the Select office next door.

N. Merrill, of Waverly, N. Y., owner of a chain of houses in the Southern Tier, has sold all his interests in several towns and has leased for a ten-year period the Amusu theatre in his home town to the Comerford Amusement Company of Scranton. Ill health compels Mr. Merrill to retire from the business in which he started ten years ago. He plans to go to New Mexico to regain his health.

County Judge Bell, of Herkimer, has sustained the decision of the village court of Frankfort, N. Y., in the case of Metro Pictures Corporation against George Loomis of the Loomis theatre in that town. The suit was brought over an alleged breach of contract. Mr. Loomis appealed the case to the county court.

Around Seattle's Photoplay Trade Circles

THE Reginald Barker unit of the Louis B. Mayer Pictures Corporation passed through Seattle recently en route to Edmonton, Canada, where Mr. Barker is staging the outdoor scenes of "The Law Bringer," an adaptation of G. B. Lancaster's story. Fifty persons comprised the party, including Mr. Barker, Earle Williams, Barbara LaMotte, Wallace Beery, Pat O'Malley, Renee Adoree, Josef Swickard, Pat Harmon, and Harry Schenck, unit manager.

"Thirty Days," Wallace Reid's last picture, played a three day engagement at the Coliseum theatre recently and attracted large houses. Manager Frank Steffy advertised the picture as the last opportunity of seeing the former favorite, and also featured Wanda Hawley, a former Seattle girl, as being in the cast.

More than 150 employees of the Jensen-Von Herberg circuit of theatres in Seattle were entertained recently at Chantecler, one of the largest cafes and dance halls in the city. The cafe was celebrating "Strand Theatre Night," and Manager H. B. Wright and the thirty-five employees of the Strand were hosts of the occasion. Members of the general circuit staff and officers and employes of the Liberty and Coliseum theatres were guests of honor. Elaborate programs were printed for the occasion and several special entertainment numbers were provided by Mr. Wright to liven up the evening.

Realizing a "life ambition" to take part in the movies, Marguerite Schechert, four-year old resident of Seattle, left the city last week with her mother for Anchorage, Alaska, to take part in "The Great White Silence," a motion picture being produced there by the recently formed Alaska Motion Picture Corporation, Little Miss Schechert will enact the part of an orphan.

Oliver G. Wallace, guest organist at the Liberty theatre during the "Robin Hood" engagement recently, has just been engaged by Manager Leroy V. Johnson to become a regular member of the Liberty's musical staff. Mr. Wallace first achieved fame as an organist at the Liberty several years ago, and since then has filled long contracts at Grauman's theatre in Los Angeles and the Granada theatre in San Francisco. His rendition of the musical score for "Robin ood" was exceptionally well received here, and Liberty patrons have received with enthusiasm the announcement that he will join Ernest Russell as permanent organist at Mr. Johnson's house.

J. L. Johnston, for the past several seasons advertising, publicity and exploitation manager for the local First National exchange, left the city this week for New York, where a new position has been created for him by the home office of the circuit.

J. L. Johnston

During the time spent in this territory, Mr. Johnston put over some of the most elaborate exploitation stunts that have been seen by theatregoers in any locality. He was in charge of exploitation and publicity for the Portland and Butte exchanges, also, and made the Seattle office his general headquarters. His position in Seattle will not be filled for the present, according to the arrangement plans which take him from this city to his new post in the East.

Gene O'Keefe, former manager of the Blue Mouse theatre here, was a visitor in the city recently. Before joining Mr. Hamrick's organization Mr. O'Keefe was interested in the theatre business in Montana, and after a few months as manager at the Blue Mouse he was forced to return to Montana and look after his affairs there. At the present time he is still interested in the exhibiting game in that state.

Forty Selznick features have just been sold to C. H. Coldwell by E. A. Lamb of the local Select exchange, for exhibition in the Aleutian Islands, a small group of islands located at the extreme southwestern tip of Alaska close to the Bering Sea. The pictures have just been shipped by Mr. Lamb to the Islands.

Mr. Coldwell will exhibit the pictures around the Islands during the coming few months, and will send them back to the local exchange about the first of October, when the last boat leaves the Islands for the United States before the eight month's flow of ice sets in.

L. W. Barclay of the Los Angeles Goldwyn exploitation force arrived in Seattle recently to handle the advance exploitation for "The Christian" when it played at Manager H. B. Wright's Strand theatre for two weeks beginning April 7. During his stay in the city, Mr. Barclay made his headquarters with W. E. Bamford, manager of the local Goldwyn office.

L. K. Brin, president of the L. K. Brin exchanges, left Seattle recently for his Butte office, and from there was scheduled to continue his trip Eastward to New York for a conference with Warner Brothers in regard to the output and conditions for the coming seasons. He was expected to return to Seattle about the middle or latter part of April. "The Beautiful and Damned," the first Warner Brothers picture to play the Blue Mouse theatre here was scheduled to open a week's engagement on April 7.

"Cherry" Malotte, formerly a salesman for Universal, has joined the sales staff of the Seattle F. B. O. office and will hereafter cover the Spokane territory, working out of Seattle. V. S. Brown has resigned as salesman for the local exchange, and is contemplating working out of the Portland office, although he has not definitely decided upon any course yet. A. B. Metzger, head of F. B. O. in Seattle has just returned from a trip to Spokane, Yakima, Walla Walla and other Washington towns, and reports that every reel of F. B. O. film that he handles has been sold and dated in Spokane.

Trade Briefs from San Diego

S. S. BLACHLEY, formerly house manager for the Colonial theatre, has gone north and the management has been taken over by W. C. Everett, treasurer of the Mission Amusement Comany, which operates the Colonial.

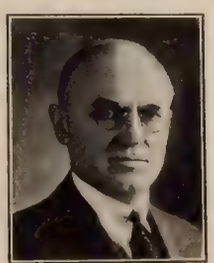
With a seating capacity of 400, the Rivoli, the newest addition to San Diego's motion picture houses, will soon open for business at 658 Fifth street, where a store building has been remodeled for use as a theatre. This house will be added to the string already controlled by W. W. Whitson, who now operates the Plaza, Rialto, Kinema and California, all in this city. The Rivoli will use second runs, and will have an admission of 15 cents. The Electric Products Corporation of Los Angeles has had the contract for the installation of niche and cove lighting for the interior. A Powers' machine will be used.

A new policy has been inaugurated at the Superba, where the management is now offering a playlet in addition to the film programs. This is put on by the Superba Players, consisting of eight members, with Fritz Fields directing.

"The Old Music Master" is the name of the first picture to be filmed at the new studios of the Sawyer-Lubin interests at Grossmont, near this city, according to present plans. The script is by Katherine Chesnaye and the picture, an allegory for children, will be directed by Lule Warrenton, using about 250 juveniles, drawn largely from local schools.

Trade Bulletins from the Spokane Territory

DR. H. C. LAMBACH, co-proprietor with Dr. Howard S. Clemmer of the Clemmer theatre here, was elected president of the Spokane Allied Amusement association at the permanent organization meeting held at a luncheon here April 3. C. M. Van Horn, manager of the Pathe exchange was elected secretary. Dr. Lambach and Mr. Van Horn were president and secretary respectively of the temporary organization which was formed, somewhat in haste, during the hectic moments several months ago when the Washington state legislature began to consider imposing a ten per cent tax on gross admissions. The tax was killed but only after the theatre men of the state had voiced a vigorous protest.



Dr. H. C. Lambach

Officers elected for the permanent organization at the meeting April 3 were Dr. Lambach, president; Charles York, of the Auditorium theatre, vice-president; C. M. Van Horn, secretary; C. E. Stilwell, of the Stilwell Theatre Company, treasurer. The board of trustees, elected at the meeting is composed of Walter Finney, of the Pantages theatre; Chuck Whitehead of Whitehead's Dancing Palace and C. Packeritz, of the Empress theatre.

A constitution and by-laws drafted by Dr. Lambach and Mr. Van Horn were submitted to the members and adopted at the permanent organization meeting.

"We are organizing in line with our policy of offering the public clean, wholesome entertainment," said Dr. Lambach. "We are also organizing to protect ourselves against adverse or discriminatory legislation.

"We are going to invite the men in the various amusement industries throughout Eastern Washington to become members of our organization."

An attorney may be hired to represent the association, according to Dr. Lambach, although no action was taken on this matter at the organization meeting.

"Safety Last," Harold Lloyd's latest comedy has been booked at the Liberty theatre here to begin showing April 14, for a two week's run, according to the announcement of Manager Ray Grombacher. Spokane has always been a Harold Lloyd town and it is expected that "Safety Last" will shatter all and sundry records as a drawing card.

Hornbeck Amusement Company of Indiana Augments Chain

The Hornbeck Amusement Company of Lafayette, Ind., have added the Colonial theatre of Logansport, Ind., to their chain of theatres, purchasing the lease of H. R. Byerly. In the consideration Mr. Byerly assumes the leases on the Alhambra and Strand theatres of Knightstown, Ind., and E. W. Hoover, who has been resident manager of these two theatres for the Hornbeck Amusement Company for the last two and one-half years, will be transferred to the Colonial theatre, Logansport, Ind. The respective parties will assume management of the theatres entering into this deal April 1.

Boston Flashes and New England Bulletins

MONDAY night saw the opening of one of the finest of Boston's suburban motion picture houses, Locatelli's Ball Square theatre in Somerville. The first night marked an epoch in the theatrical history of both Somerville and Medford, for the house occupies a part of both towns. The opening exercises were attended by many state and city officials, including Mayors Coolidge of Medford and Webster of Somerville, Secretary of State Cook and many others prominent in local political social and financial circles. The house is of strictly modern and fireproof construction and has a seating capacity of practically 1,500. The exterior if carried out in Italian Renaissance style, and a feature is a costly organ. The organist is G. F. Penton. Mr. Locatelli, who also runs the Central in Somerville, a well established house, has his eye to the comfort of his patrons, and has included many features making for that end in his newest venture.

Miss Margaret O'Connor, of South Boston, was elected Miss Boston, the beauty queen, at the annual dance of the Movie Boys of Boston, held last Monday evening, the place being the new Rose Croix ballroom in Roxbury. The judges were T. Doherty, of Famous Players-Lasky; J. Kelley, of the Selznick exchange, and Steve Gustin, of South Boston. The beauty queen was presented with a silver loving cup offered by the American Releasing Corporation. The music was furnished by Hooley's orchestra. Jack Martin was chairman of the committee in charge, while Charles F. Freeman served as treasurer and Frank Tobin as secretary.

A chance wanderer into Boston's film district these days, when he nears the corner of Church and Piedmont streets, may well believe that he has had a "wee drap" too much, that he is lost in a zoo, or that Barnum and Bailey, Ringling Bros. and Sells--Floto has hit town altogether in a bunch. Metro has Martin Johnson's "African Wild Animal Hunt," playing the Park theatre opening, the ninth, and being enthusiastic, Moxley Hill had all the many windows of the exchange building painted to represent animal cages, with the animals, every known denizen of the jungles, painted in full colors behind them. The interior was stacked with cases of trophy heads, water buffaloes, zebras, tigers, ibexes, gazelles, and what not. All of these are now adorning the lobby and foyer of the Park, and they alone would bring the crowds without the picture.

A novel picture, "The Finishing Touch," was shown to the ice dealers convention in the American House, Boston, last week. It sounds mighty artistic, but it deals with paint and varnish up to date, and only goes to show another of the legion of uses to which the silver sheet is put today.

The first electrical storm of the season hit Boston and vicinity last Thursday evening. In Quincy, one of several bolts which struck in that section, hit the electric light wires leading to the Quincy and Alhambra theatres. The heavy crash, and various blue lights that flickered in places, threw several women attending the theatres into hysterics, but they were soon quieted with no ill effects.

Contracts for Clinton's new motion picture theatre, which will replace the one in the Doggett block, which was burned down recently, are expected to be given out next week, according to an announcement which comes from that town. Workmen are making rapid progress in removing the ruins of the fire. The plans call for a theatre and about nine stores, and sixteen contractors are at work on their estimates, and report their work about done.

Marguerite Courtot, leading woman of "Down to the Sea in Ships," now playing at Fox's theatre in Springfield, Mass., will be one of the six or more stars who will appear at the annual ball of the Springfield Motion Picture Operators Union on April 18. Of the other are Virginia Pearson, Mary Anderson, Edward Earle, Sheldon Lewis and probably Tom Moore. Since picture stars have in the past sometimes been billed to appear, and have failed to materialize when the ball was given, officials of the union say they have gone to the trouble of having contracts drawn up for their sure appearance, and that any star who agrees to come and then fails, will be walking upside down in the next picture he or she is shown in here.

"When Knighthood Was In Flower" was chosen as the opening feature for the new Coster theatre in Webster, Mass., which has just closed its premiere week to excellent business. The house has a seating capacity of 1,100, large for the town. The theatre is said to be one of the most up to date in Worcester County and is named after George R. Coster, president of the Steinberg Amusement Company.

Two Goldwynners of the Boston exchanges J. Norton Klein, sales manager, and "Buddy" Stuart, exploitation representative

Worcester, Mass., also had its movie ball last week in Mechanics and Washburn Halls. Jack Hauser was in charge of the affair, which was featured by a beauty contest, the winner of which will visit New York with a chosen companion. There were several stars of stage and screen present, and a well-liked novelty was a fashion parade.

All apparatus in the city of Leominster, Mass. ,was called to fight a fire in the Hillery Block on Main street, which caused $50,000 damage, and for a time threatened the entire business section. While firemen were inside the Gem theatre doing their best to confine the flames to the second floor, three and six sheets all over the entrance advertised the showing of "The Third Alarm." Fortunately, the matinee had not begun, nor had the audience started to arrive.

Exchange and Exhibitor Briefs from Des Moines Territory

Twenty-seven managers of the A. H. Blank amusement enterprises in Iowa were scheduled to meet in Des Moines Tuesday, April 10, with H. M. Thomas, the new director general of the theatre chain. Mr. Thomas was formerly director general of the Famous Players-Lasky theatres in Canada.

L. Carlos Meier, new organist at the Des Moines theatre, made his initial appearance during Easter week. Mr. Meier was an instructor at the Midwestern Conservatory in Des Moines ten years ago, leaving there after a few years to study in Chicago. He comes to Des Moines from the Capitol theatre at Winnipeg, Can. A feature of his playing is his preference to use no score, playing from the pictuer and using his own improvisations.

Mr. L. F. Wolcott, owner of the Empress theatre, at Indianola, Ia., visited at the Film Booking Office in Des Moines last week.

Paul Fine, salesman for the Film Booking Office, who has been confined to his home with rheumatism, is back on the job again.

A. W. Plues, manager of the Pathe Film exchange, visited in Dubuque, Waterloo, Independence and Manchester, Ia., the past week.

William A. Waterhouse, owner of the Hildreth theatre at Charles City, Ia., visited in Des Moines Saturday.

R. C. Seery, manager of the midwestern district of the Associated First National, was in Des Moines Saturday attending a sales meeting.

Leo Blank, who formerly traveled in this territory for the Associated First National, has been put in charge of the distribution of Lichtman and Warner Brothers' pictures out of the Omaha office.

Trade Notes of the Connecticut Territory

THE Capitol Theatre Corporation of Willimantic, Conn., has incorporated in that city, with an authorized capital stock of $150,000, to begin business with a capital of $20,000. The incorporators are Abe Davidson, P. A. Quinn and Sydney Synton. Purpose of the corporation is given as construction and operation of modern motion picture houses in that city. For some time Mr. Davidson has been negotiating for a centrally-located site for this purpose. It is reported that he has secured the property he has desired.

Star's, Inc., of Bridgeport, Conn., has incorporated, for amusements and theatrical exhibitors, with an authorized capital stock of $50,000, to begin business with a capital of $2,800. The incorporators are May E. Hogan, Pearl D. Morgan and Thomas P. Gleeson.

Margaret Courtot, leading woman in "Down to the Sea in Ships," which has been playing at Fox's theatre at Springfield, Mass., is to be one of several stars scheduled to appear at the ball of the Springfield Motion Picture Operators' Union ball April 18th. The union has entered definite contracts for several noted figures in filmdom and has agreed to pay a substantial sum for their appearance. Among those scheduled to appear are Miss Courtot, Virginia Pearson, Mary Anderson, Edward Earle and Sheldon Lewis. An attempt will also be made to secure the appearance of Tom Moore. Since picture stars have sometimes been billed to appear at past occasions of this kind and have failed to do so, officials of the union explain they have gone to the trouble of having contracts drawn up for their appearance this time. Any star who agrees to attend the ball this year and fails to do so will be walking upside down in the next picture he or she shows in here, members of the union state.

If the Norwich, Conn., Common Council adopts an ordinance now before it for consideration, owners of theatres, amusement and dance halls will have to keep their buildings heated to at least 65 degrees Fahrenheit next fall and winter, or be liable to a fine of not more than $50 for each offense. The proposed ordinance was introduced at the April meeting of the council, May 7 being designated as the date for a hearing. It is said that the proposed ordinance has resulted from numerous complaints during the past winter to effect that Norwich theatres were often much too cold for comfort. The shortage of coal is considered to have had something to do about it. However, many Norwich people feel that the theatres and other places of amusement should be kept warmer than they have been in the past. Proprietors of motion picture houses, especially those leasing the property, are much interested in and supporters of the proposed ordinance.

Portland, Ore., Exhibitor and Exchange Items

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Company, came to Portland Sunday night, April 1, remained over Monday and quietly moved on with his daughter, Rosabelle, and their party for the North. In the meantime he looked about a bit, visited the local Universal exchange and the new Columbia theatre, which he owns, and chatted with J. A. McMeekin, exchange manager, and William Cutts, manager of the theatre. He expressed delight at the appearance of the Columbia, which was thoroughly redecorated when Cutts took charge.

W. S. Wessling, western district manager for Pathe Exchanges, Inc., has returned from an eight weeks' tour of the territory on which he applied himself especially to the interests in Washington and Idaho. From Spokane, where business has frequently been reported slow, Wessling brings report of increasing activity, with the resultant welcome reaction on exhibitors. Wessling makes his headquarters in Portland, lives at Oswego, a suburb, and spends his spare moments while at home in salmon fishing on the Willamette and encouraging a winning streak in the Oswego baseball team.

Josephine Dillon, formerly attached to the Metro studio scenario and technical departments, addressed members of the Oregon Writers' League recently, giving them tips on scenario writing and revealing the inner workings of the departments with which she was identified.

Salvatore Santaella, director of the popular Rivoli theatre orchestra, has returned from San Antonio, Tex., where he and Mrs. Santaella spent a month visiting relatives. On his trip he visited leading picture theatres and admits that, except for size, the local orchestra can show a commendable quality by comparison.

Prefacing his action with a statement that "You are paying too much for your movies," A. C. Raleigh, manager of John Hamrick's Blue Mouse theatre, precipitously lowered admission prices effecitve Saturday, April 7. The scale had been 35 cents for matinee and 50 cents evenings, with correspondingly higher fees for loges. The new prices are 25 cents for matinees and 35 cents for evenings and all Saturday and Sunday shows. The first program under the new schedule features "Nero," the Fox spectacle picture.

Warner Bros.' "Brass" has been booked by Gus A. Metzger, owner of the Rivoli theatre, for early showing.

King, Dorothy Frend, Mary Burke, Celia Goldberg Harry Spingler, Marion Smith, Nyman Kessler, Elizabeth Kneeland, Grace MacDonald, Frances Welch, and Nathan Ross

Comedies, Short Subjects & Serials

Educational Subjects on Selected List

FIFTY-FOUR Short Subjects released by Educational Films Exchanges, Inc., are listed in the catalog of Selected Pictures just issued by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. Seven of these Short Subjects are classified as "especially well done."

Every Educational Pictures Special released during the the period covered by this catalog of subjects recommended for "The Family Program, Young People and Special Entertainments," is given this formal approval by the National Board. These include "The Battle of Jutland," "The Enchanted City," by Warren A. Newcombe, "How to Grow Thin," "Man vs. Beast," the thrilling African hunt picture, and "Via Radio," produced under the supervision of Scientific American.

Seven Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce are listed, as are eight of the two-reel "Adventures of Sherlock Holmes" from the stories by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, five Tony Sarg's Almanac, eleven Christie Comedies, three Torchy Comedies, three Campbell Comedies, three Mermaid Comedies, two Hamilton Comedies, three Earl Hurd Comedies, two Toonerville Comedies by Fontaine Fox, one Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge, and one Selig-Rork Photoplay.

Christie Completes Snow Scenes at Truckee

Al Christie has returned to Los Angeles after his trip to Truckee where he took Dorothy Devore and a company to film the snow scenes for the Educational-Christie Comedy, "Winter Has Came."

He is shooting the interiors for the picture. Supporting Miss Devore are Babe London, Earl Rodney, Lydia Yeamans Titus, William Chapman, and Victor Rodman. "Winter Has Come" is announced as a May release.

Chaplin, Baby Peggy Divide Honors

The Kinema Theatre of Los Angeles is running "Peg o' the Movies" in conjunction with Chaplin's "The Pilgrim." The picture was highly praised by the critics and the theatre gave it special advertising.

Electrical signs divided prominence between the two stars; the electrical signs on the canopy were divided, the right side to Baby Peggy and the left side to Chaplin.

Kinograms Claims News Scoop

Educational Contends Western Edition Scored on Three Big Events Items

KINOGRAMS, Educational's news reel, scored a 48-hour beat over all other news reels with the three biggest news items of the day in the western edition of the reel for the week ending April 7th, according to Educational.

The Olympic landed at New York late Wednesday afternoon with the biggest and finest shipment of pictures from Europe received in many months. A few hours later Kinograms had shipped to the west a most interesting news reel.

Thrilling scenes opened the reel of the classic Oxford-Cambridge race on the Thames, in which two Americans, Mellen ot New York, the stroke, and R. K. Kane, formerly of Harvard, as No. 4, helped to row Oxford to a glorious victory.

From Goldsborough, England, came a subject that will be of keen interest—views of the christening of Princess Mary's son. The rites took place in Yorkshire village, the ancestral home of the baby's father, Lord Lascelles. The King is shown at the ceremony that made the first grandchild of the English royal house, George Henry Hubert Lascelles. To the people of England, however, the youngster is still "Harry."

America won honors in another great sporting event, the Grand National, the greatest of steeplechases, at Aintree, England. Sergt. Murphy, owned by "Sonny" Sanford, won by three lengths this four-and-a-half-mile race over the most difficult course in the world. He is the first American-owned horse to win the Grand National in eighty-three years of its running. Twenty-eight horses started the race, which was witnessed by a throng of 100,000, but only seven finished the course over the difficult jumps. The shots of this thrilling race in Kinograms made one of the finest race subjects ever shown in a news reel.

Varied Program in Pathe Release

Kiser Artfilm, "Weeping Waters," Shares Honors with "Plunder" Episode

OF the nine releases making up Pathe's program for April 22, the chief attraction of novelty lies in the one-reel Kiser Artfilm, "Weeping Waters," in the Oregon Trail Series. The story of this scenic is based on an Indian legend of the Oregon country in which the sorcery of a witch woman dooms the Indian lover and perpetuates the soul of the maiden as the guardian of Weeping Waters when they have closed over the lover's head.

In "Plunder's" thirteenth episode the heroine and her lover apparently are doomed to a most horrifying fate among crazed natives of a South American jungle where they are overcome by the poisonous fumes of the "Swamp of Lost Souls." This is the penalty they pay in their final effort to secure control of the New York business block beneath which has lain for three hundred years a treasure of enormous value and mystery.

"Speed the Swede," the one-reel Hal Roach comedy release starring Paul Parrott, places the hero, of New York, in Stockholm, where nobody has more English than he has Swedish. When a pretty flapper, to get rid of him, gives him a paper on which she has written in Swedish: "Keep away from me. I just escaped from the Pest House," he becomes the center of a panic which finally reduces him to starting back home in a rowboat.

With Henry Cat and Farmer Al Falfa throwing dice while the whole universe seems to tumble about their ears, the Aesop's Film Fable of "The Gamblers" elucidates the moral: "Never Gamble in a Hen House."

Pathe News Nos. 34 and 35 screen highlights of current world events, and "Topics of the Day" scintillate with witty new angles. In Pathe Review No. 16 the new Pathecolor series deals with "The First Americans" in New Mexico.

Laurel's "Noon Whistle" Is Due Soon

Pathe predicts instant exhibitor and patron approval of the first three films thus far received starring Stan Laurel in Hal Roach one-reel comedies, in alternation with Paul Parrott. These prints are said to reveal popular laughter elements in which Laurel's uniquely comic personality shines beyond expectations, while the productions as a whole are fully up to anything of the kind the Hal Roach studios have turned out.

The first Stan Laurel release on the Pathe schedule, shortly forthcoming, is "The Noon Whistle," which is said to present a familiar subject with new and exceedingly comic trimmings. "The Noon Whistle" will be followed either two or four weeks later with the star exhibiting his burlesque talents in a travesty called "Under Two Jags."

Tom McNamara Back with "Our Gang"

PROMISE of indefinite continuation of the tremendous vogue of "Our Gang" Comedies is contained in Pathe's announcement that Hal Roach has re-engaged Tom McNamara to alternate with Bob McGowan in directing the unterrified youngsters who appear in these two-reelers.

The celebrated cartoonist of "Us Boys" directed "The Cobbler" and "Boys to Board" while going on with his newspaper comic "strips." But it was exacting work, and the pressure of his newspaper engagements made it necessary for him to quit the picture field temporarily.

McNamara is now back on the Hal Roach lot giving Our Gang and its "Zoo" accessory his undivided attention.

Baby Peggy Completes Last Two-Reelers

What will be Baby Peggy's last two-reel Century Comedy has just been completed under the tentative title of "The Orphan." Alf Goulding, the director of the most of her pictures, returned to the Century lot from his sick bed to take over the direction of the final scenes.

The next picture will be a five-reel made at Universal City and directed by Elsie Jane Wilson.

"The Orphan" will make the fortieth two-reel Century Comedy in which Baby Peggy appeared since she began her screen career when she was not quite two years old.

Beside Baby Peggy others in the cast are Lillian Worth, Charlotte Rich and John Ralesco.

Fred Spencer Comedy Title Changed

Fred Spencer's first Century released as "Gasoline Love," will have its title changed to "Speed Bugs." In recognition of his excellent work in this, his first featured Century Comedy, Spencer signed a long contract with the Stern Brothers.

It is understood that Spencer is to have some leading "heavy" roles which will agree with his 325 pounds, and that two stories have already been purchased for his use.

Jimmy Aubrey's Latest Is "The Detective"

The newest Jimmy Aubrey comedy is "he Detective" in which Aubrey does some thrilling stunts which end in laughs. Hellen Kesler plays opposite Jimmy in this comedy.

List Hamilton Comedy With Better Films

"Uneasy Feet," the latest Hamilton Comedy released by Educational, is marked with the asterisk "denoting a particularly good picture" in the latest monthly Photoplay Guide issued by the National Committee for Better Films, affiliated with the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

Five other Educational Pictures are included in this list, which covers pictures reviewed and selected during March. They are "Hot Water," a Christie Comedy featuring Neal Burns, "Tarpon Fishing," Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge, and three Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce, "From the Windows of My House," "The Gray Rider" and "Mixed Trails."

Horsemanship Feature of "Under Red Robe"

Cosmopolitan officials declare that some of the most spectacular feats of horsemanship that have ever been staged for the making of a motion picture are those which will be filmed for "Under the Red Robe," Cosmopolitan's picturization of Stanley Weyman's story of the same name which went into direction of Alan Crosland, who production last week under the directed "Enemies of Women."

For the riding scenes in the picture, the services of more than one hundred cavalry horses will be used, a score of which will be "stunt" horses it is announced. The most thrilling of these riding scenes is said to be one which entails a realistic duel on horseback between Gil de Berault, impersonated by John Charles Thomas, the noted American singer who is making his motion picture debut, and the Duke of Orleans, played by William H. Powell. Another thrill is furnished when Berault and his mount make a flying leap from a swinging drawbridge.

To assist Director Alan Crosland in the direction of these scenes, the Cosmopolitan Corporation has engaged Captain Henry C. G. Mills, who was with the Dragoon Guards of Australia in the war.

Master Minds Clash in Ruth Roland Serial

Following the first successful New York trade showing of Ruth Roland's forthcoming serial, "Haunted Valley," Pathe reports a lively fresh spurt of pre-release bookings.

The exacting role of leading man in "Haunted Valley" is played by Jack Daugherty, who has a long list of leading parts to his credit.

The story is based on a critical clash of master minds in business involving huge irrigation operations with vast machinery plants.

Christie Comedies Score in West

Critics in Los Angeles Press Give "Second Childhood" Feature Honors

Three Los Angeles daily papers reviewed the Christie Comedy attraction, "Second Childhood," at Grauman's million dollar theatre this week and all gave first honors over the other features to the comedy number.

The Examiner said: "The best feature on the bill this week is the Christie Comedy, 'Second Childhood,' with a really funny story, not precisely new, but hysterically entertaining in its developments."

The Herald said: "The film is clean, wholesome and entertaining and also has an interesting plot. The house fully enjoyed the comedy offering as much as the feature."

The Express said: "But Bobby Vernon in knee breeches and bobbed hair as Little Oscar in the comedy yarn from Christie, is worth the price of admission."

The other papers did not review the comedy.

N. Y. Rialto Gives Radio Show in Morning

SWING to the popularity of the subject of radio the Rialto theatre, New York, N. Y., put on a special show last week from 11 to 12 in the morning devoted exclusively to the subject of radio. This special morning performance was given in conjunction with the appearance of Bray's "The Mystery Box," released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"The Mystery Box" is a one-reel combination of cartoon and animated characters, which explain the working of radio, going into the technical explanations and clarifying the mystery surrounding this important subject.

"Gasoline Camel" In Pathe News

Conquering 2,000 miles of the Great Sahara Desert, from Algeria to Timbuctoo, with a caravan of caterpillar automobiles, in which camel power is successfully superseded by gasoline, is, an epoch-making feat exclusively pictured in Pathe News, current No. 28.

This test journey made in constant conflict with the shifting desert sands stands to the credit of two Frenchmen, M. Haardt and M. Adouin-Dubrouil. Not only did their tractors cover the entire caravan route at a good rate of speed, but made the return trip without difficulty or accident, covering a total of 4,000 miles.

Production-Distribution Activities

Fox Signs Three for Leading Roles

FOX FILM CORPORATION announces this week the signing of Peggy Shaw, Jean Arthur and Ruth Dwyer to play leading roles.

Miss Shaw, who was prominent in the cast of numerous Fox specials, the last of which is "The Custard Cup," is now at the Hollywood studio, making her initial picture on the coast as leading lady for Dustin Farnum in his new feature. "The Grail."

Miss Dwyer was the featured player in "The Stealers," former leading lady for Eugene O'Brien, and prominent in numerous specials. She leaves New oYrk for Los Angeles within a few days to begin work immediately in a picture as yet unannounced.

Jean Arthur, the third of this group, has been the subject of much favorable criticism for her dramatic work of the past few years.

Massive Sets Planned For "Dulcy"

"Dulcy," the new Constance Talmadge production being made by Joseph M. Schenck at the United Studios for First National release, is being filmed on an even larger scale than "East is West," according to reports received.

Two gigantic stages at the United Studios have been given over to the sets for this picture, being directed by Sidney Franklin. The production calls for massive mountain cabins of the wealthy, aristocratic New York families, lavish offices of the principals in the play, palatial homes, interior and exterior, and beautiful gowns. The location trips will take the large company supporting Miss Talmadge to Yosemite Valley, Big Bear Lake, San Francisco, San Diego and Barstow, calling for special trains and the transportation of much equipment.

Jack Mulhall is playing opposite Miss Talmadge. Claude Gillingwater has an important role and others of importance in the cast are Ann Wilson, Johnny Harron, Ann Cornwall, Andre de Beranger, Gilbert Douglas and Milla Davenport.

Syd Chaplin Working on Keystone Comedies

Sydney Chaplin will continue his work of reconstructing Keystone Comedies featuring his brother Charlie. Messrs. Price and Aitken found "Doug and Dynamite" so satisfactory that they made an arrangement with Syd for the editing and titling of "Caught in a Cabaret," "The Property Man," "His Trysting Place" and all the other famous laugh-producers.

Cosmopolitan Scores on B'way

Present Three Productions Simultaneously and All Are Given Approval

THREE productions created by the same film company were presented simultaneously on Broadway this week. The three films, all Cosmopolitan productions, are: "Enemies of Women," at the Central; "The Nth Commandment," at the Rivoli, and "The Go Getter" at the Rialto.

Ushered into the Central at a special invitation showing "Enemies of Women," picturized from the romantic novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, has created a sensation.

After eulogizing its picturesqueness, Quinn Martin in the World said: "With all Europe as a background, with the combination of a no-account nobleman, a beautiful and equally carefree Lady Alicia, Monte Carlo, the war, Joseph Urban's imagination and beautiful girls all joining hands and doing more than they have any right to do, it is an eye-full."

The Telegram paid "Enemies of Women" this tribute: "It is without doubt one of the most lavish films ever placed before the public."

The Globe said: "It is the last word in what is known in cinema circles as a box-office attraction."

Equally lavish in praise is the criticism of the other two Cosmopolitan pictures. After writing that he liked "The Nth Commandment," made from a Fannie Hurst sory, Quinn Martin in the World said: "One of the most delicately played cinema characters of recent months is that by little Miss Colleen Moore in Miss Hurst's sentimental yarn of love among the youngsters of the working classes." The Herald is high in praise of Frank Borzage and his direction, writing: "He gives us many scenes of genuine beauty."

The Telegraph wrote: "'The Nth Commandment' has considerable human interest and dramatic force. It is admirably played. The characters are true to type and it is quite amusing in spots.' Writing of "The Go Getter," by Peter B. Kyne, the same paper said: "It is a thoroughly delightful story all the way through and is certain to win its well-merited success."

According to the World, "'The Go Getter' will pick up a good stake in its wanderings around the country." The Times characterizes "The Go Getter" as being a film with plenty of action.

Philly Lauds "U" Jungle Picture

"Hunting Big Game with Gun and Camera" is Highly Praised by Reviewers

UNIVERSAL'S jungle picture, "Hunting Big Game With Gun and Camera," which began an indefinite engagement at the Forrest theatre, Philadelphia, Monday, April 9, was given a most favorable reception by the critics of the various Quaker City papers.

The Public Ledger characterized the film as "remarkable" and "more exciting than fiction." In a long review, packed with praise and commendation, the following noteworthy comments were made:

"That popular old adage, 'Truth is stranger than fiction,' was never better exemplified than in the remarkable series of moving pictures shown at the Forrest theatre last night. There isn't a superfluous foot of film in the whole picture. All this makes 'Hunting Big Game in Africa' something more than a splendid and worthwhile educational subject.

"It's a rattling good yarn that does credit to all concerned in its making."

The Philadelphia North American said: "If anything more could possibly be crowded into 'Hunting Big Game in Africa' one wonders just what it could possibly be."

The Record reviewer wrote: "'Hunting Big Game in Africa' is a real sport. That was demonstrated last evening at the Forrest theatre. There was no question of the thrill of the adventure that came to H. A. Snow and his party in jungleland and on desert and plain, and there was furthermore for spectators a careful selection of the results of his photographic prowess so that only the most interesting incidents were presented in motion pictures."

The Philadelphia Inquirer said: "Beyond doubt these are the most remarkable films which have ever been shown here. They are remarkable in photographic detail as well as in educational value.

"In fact, the entire picture, which was in some nine reels, was so graphic and so engrossing that no doubt many in the audience were somewhat disappointed that there wasn't more of it."

Dr. Clarence H. Woolston of the East Baptist Church, Philadelphia, and a leader in religious thought in that city, was one of those who sought out the manager of the theatre after the show to commend the picture and advocate its widespread exploitation.

Lichtman Release Opens New Theatre

THE Al Lichtman release "Poor Men's Wives," was chosen as the feature with which the magnificent new Palace Theatre in San Antonio was opened. The Palace, which is now the largest house in that city, booked this recent Casnier production for Preferred Pictures for the first week following the completion of the building. A special presentation was put on in addition to the thirty piece symphony orchestra which will be a permanent attraction at the Palace.

The San Antonio Express published a special section in its Sunday edition dealing with news about the theatre and "Poor Men's Wives."

Artistic Booklet for "Alice Adams"

A souvenir booklet, calling attention to the virtues of the current Encore feature, Florence Vidor in "Alice Adams," is being distributed by Associated Exhibitors, its appearance being synonymous with the official release of the picture, which was set for April 8th. The booklet, which is unique in arrangement and replete with artistic appeal, was the work of J. Irving Greene, Associated's director of advertising and publicity.

The ornate cover is in an old-fashioned wall paper design, suggestive of the "funny old house" which was the scene of much of the tragedy, the pathos and the romance in Alice Adams' life. On the front cover, encased in an oval frame, is a charming portrait of Miss Vidor as Alice. In the ten pages are other portraits of the star; Booth Tarkington, of whose prize novel the film is a picturization, and Rowland V. Lee, who directed the production; character poses of Vernon Steele as Arthur Russell, Claude Gillingwater as Virgil Adams, Margaret McWade as Mrs. Adams, Harold Goodwin as Walter Adams, and Thomas Ricketts as J. A. Lamb; an assortment of action stills from the picture, and reproductions of some of the posters and other advertising aids which have been prepared for the use of exhibitors.

Revamped "Americano" Is Completed

John Emerson and Anita Loos have completed their work of editing the reconstructed version of Douglas Fairbanks' picture, "The Americano."

According to Mr. Emerson, "The Americano" will prove a revelation to the trade when a preview is given.

Trade Critics Praise "3 Jumps Ahead"

"Three Jumps Ahead," the current Tom Mix release on the Fox Film Corporation schedule, was the subject of trade press commendation in recent issues.

Following are a few of the excerpts from the reviews of the Fox feature:

Motion Picture News—"This western is far above the average. It gives Tom Mix the best opportunity he has had in many moons to distinguish himself in and out of saddle. Put this down as Mix's best."

Moving Picture World—"Tom Mix gives his admirers the sort of entertainment they like in his new production. A spectacular thrill toward the end shows Mix on his horse, Tony, leaping over a chasm at a magnificent height just after his enemies have destroyed the bridge."

Exhibitors' Trade Review—"'Three Jumps Ahead' is going to make a hit. The story affords good excitement throughout and several first rate thrillers occur."

Metro Production Runs Close to Novel

The Harry Garson production of "Cordelia the Magnificent" for Metro, is said to be vividly faithful to the novel by Leroy Scott, which ran serially in Hearst's International Magazine. It has been picturized as a Clara Kimball Young vehicle.

George Archainbaud is the director. It was adapted for the screen by Frank Beresford and photographed by Charles Richardson. Joseph Wright is art director. The supporting cast includes Huntly Gordon, Carol Holloway, Lloyd Whitlock, Jacqueline Gadsdon, Lewis Dayton, Mary Jane rving, Katherine Murphy and Elinor Hancock.

"Accidental Husband" Sold in Boston

New England rights were sold this week on the Belasco production, "Her Accidental Husband," starring Miriam Cooper, Forrest Stanley and Mitchell Lewis, which the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is distributing.

Sam Grand, head of Federated Film Exchange of Boston, made a special trip to New York for the purpose of seeing this feature screened and immediately completed negotiations to take over New England territorial rights for his company.

He asked that prints and exploitation accessories be rushed to him at once so that he could arrange for the release in his territory at once.

Newspaper Editors See "Front Page Story"

"A Front Page Story," Jess Robbins' comedy on newspaper life with Edward Horton in the leading role, was shown to the State Convention of Newspaper Editors of Kansas at Topeka. The editors voted it to be the most realistic newspaper story ever screened.

Equity Originates Novel Idea

Co-operative Plan Will Reimburse Exhibitors Who Exploit Features

A NEW plan of co-operation was devised at the office of Equity Pictures Corporation during the past week and immediately adopted after a résume of its value and effect as far as the exhibitor, State Right exchangeman and Equity Pictures Corporation is concerned. Under this new arrangement, an exhibitor will be induced to exploit the Equity product with the chance of being reimbursed for every item of expense incurred in his publicity and exploitation.

This new plan goes into effect immediately and covers all exploitation done on the latest Equity special, "Has the World Gone Mad?" and also on the next big Equity's release, "You Get What You Give," now in the making. For this purpose, Equity Pictures Corporation is setting aside the sum of $100 for each and every week of this exploitation drive. The only obligation on the part of the exhibitor in this campaign is to put over the Equity product in some novel and appealing manner and submit a photograph of the stunt to the Equity home office.

The effort, the ingenuity, the novelty of the idea, and the layout will then be carefully weighed by Louis Baum, Vice President of Equity Pictures Corporation, David A. O'Malley, Manager of Equity Pictures Corporation, and G. F. Myers, Director of Publicity for that concern, and the amount of reimbursement determined for the stunt. A check will then be sent off to the exhibitor covering the aproximate cost of his lobby display or his theatre dress-up, which ever it may be.

Novel Diving Invention Used

Diver Descends Without Connection With Surface in "Wonders of the Sea"

IN "Wonders of the Sea," J. E. Williamson's newest undersea picture, now being distributed by Film Booking Offices, two divers are shown ready to descend to the bottom of the ocean. One is dressed in the regulation diving suit, which contains an air pipe and life line connection with the surface. The other wears a self-contained diving suit, consisting of metalled hat, weighted suit and heavily metalled shoes, but with no air pipe or life line connection with the surface.

Both divers descend to the bottom of the ocean, where they investigate coral reefs, locate sunken vessels, have a battle with a deadly moray in which the divers come off victorious, and finally make a thrilling escape from a giant octopus just as it throws off its sacs of ink, which blacken the water much like a smoke screen—a method of defense, a subtitle states, that the octopus uses to conceal himself and outwit his prey.

Both divers undergo the same perils, both struggle against the strong undersea currents, which causes them to walk at an angle of almost forty-five degrees, and both reach the surface equally easily, though one is at all times in ready touch with the surface, where he could signal for help in case of danger, while the other has no surface connections whatever.

The "Self Contained Apparatus and Suit" is the novel invention representing the great improvement which has been made in divers' outfits. With this outfit, first used in London in 1880 to repair the flooded Severn, the diver is enabled to go below the water's surface without the customary air pipe and life line.

The diver breathes into a tube held in his mouth connected with a tank inside his suit containing a chemical known as oxylithe. The moisture of his breath causes the oxylithe to give off the oxygen necessary to sustain life.

Reviewers All Strong for "Luck"

Latest Johnny Hines Melocomedy Is Commended by Trade and Daily Papers

JOHNNY HINES' latest melo-comedy, "Luck," sponsored by C. C. Burr, met with the approval of the critics, both of the trade publications and the daily newspapers.

Writing in Exhibitor's Herald, Ray Murray says: "Hines rings the bell again with a bang-up comedy. He puts this one over, as usual, with his personality, his invididuality and his originality. It is chockful of good humor and laughable incidents."

Roger Ferri in Moving Picture World enthuses as follows: "If you want a comedy melodrama replete with a series of sure-fire dramatic climaxes, clean, wholesome, humorous original gags, plus a cast of players that work at a pace consistent with which the story is unfolded, land on C. C. Burr's 'Luck,' starring Johnny Hines."

In the Morning Telegraph, Sydney R. Smith wrote: "The latest vehicle for exploiting the personality of Johnny Hines gives him congenial opportunities for the display of his abilities as a light comedian."

George Blaisdell of Exhibitor's Trade Review says: "A lively subject, one that should average well and also give satisfaction."

Laurence Reid in Motion Picture News says: "Will satisfy nine out of ten patrons who see it. It is a bright little piece and worthy of patronage."

Leah Baird Welcomed by Texas Governor

Leah Baird has been the guest of honor at a large number of social functions, many of them of an official nature, in Texas during the last two weeks. The round of entertainments began April 3, when the popular player, accompanied by her husband and producing manager, Arthur F. Beck, and a party of screen friends from Hollywood, arrived in Houston. She was received by Mayor Holcombe and a committee of leading citizens, escorted to William Politzer's Iris theatre, and there, in an official ceremony, was presented with the keys of the city.

"Is Divorce a Failure?" the current Associated Exhibitors release which is the first of the Leah Baird 1923 specials had its first Texas showing in Houston, under the auspices of the Houston Woman's Club. According to information received at Associated's home offices in New York, the opening performance was attended by 8,500 persons, despite a driving all-day rain.

Belasco Approves "Gold Diggers" Scenario

The Warner Brothers scenario department at the Coast studios has completed the adaptations of a number of novels and stage plays to be produced by the Warners during the coming season, according to Harry M. Warner.

Mr. Warner announced that Grant Carpenter's adaptation of David Belasco's stage play, "The Gold Diggers," has been approved by the theatrical producer, and that the cast for this production is being chosen by his brothers, Sam and Jack Warner.

Julien Josephson has completed the picturization of "Little Johnny Jones," the George M. Cohan stage play which will star Johnny Hines through an arrangement by the Warners with C. C. Burr.

Foresters Ask Aid for "Ninety and Nine"

The State Forester of California, M. B. Pratt, following the lead of Minnesota, Pennsylvania and other states where danger of forest fires is a constant menace, has sent to the editors of all newspapers in California a personal letter asking them to give all assistance to the showing of "The Ninety and Nine" in their cities.

State Forester Pratt calls attention to the fact that the week of April 22 to 28 has been proclaimed as "Fire Prevention Week" by President Harding. "The Ninety and Nine" teaches a great lesson against fire carelessness.

"The Destroying Angel" Print in N. Y.

The first print of "The Destroying Angel," the second of the 1923 specials featuring Leah Baird, arrived in New York a few days ago and officials of Associated Exhibitors had a preview of the picture. This feature is perhaps the most ambitious Miss Baird has done, and, in the judgment of the Associated executives, is certain to enhance greatly the popularity of this player.

Burr Completes Deal on Two Features

The H. Lieber Company, of Indianapolis, Ind., have purchased the territorial rights for the entire State of Indiana, for the two C. C. Burr features, "Luck" and "The Last Hour." Johnny Hines with Violet Merserau, Robert Edeson, Edmund Breese, Charlie Murray, Flora Finch, Polly Moran, Warner Richmond and Harry Fraser appear in "Luck." The all-star cast seen in "The Last Hour" comprises Milton Sills, Carmel Myers, Pat O'Malley, Jack Mower, Alec Francis, Charles Clary, Walter Long and Eric Maine.

Polly Vann, who has appeared in many productions, is the latest player to be added to the fast-growing list working in C. C. Burr's All Star Comedies. Miss Vann is now playing one of the leading roles in a Chinese story, which is about to be completed.

Novel News Herald for C. B. C. Feature

A novel herald is that which the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation has issued for the George H. Davis production, "The Passionate Friends"—the picturization of the famous H. G. Wells novel, which C. B. C. is distributing.

This takes the form of a miniature newspaper sheet called "The Daily Tatler" and dated today, 1923, intriguing the interest of the reader by its scarehead headlines and stories in news form, based on the content of the picture, and which does not let them know they are reading about a picture until they are at the very end of the story.

"For You, My Boy" Is Ready for Market

The outstanding comment of the independent exchange managers who have looked at the William L. Roubert production, "For You, My Boy," and who are now negotiating for the New York and New Jersey rights, is that it is an unusual and different picture than is now appearing on the screen, according to the producers.

The picture is now entirely finished and ready for the inspection of the state right buyers. Exploitation possibilities have been specially featured in the elaborate sixteen-page press book that has been prepared to go with the picture.

Kane Tells Cubans of Prosperity

Associated Exhibitor Chief is Widely Quoted on Pictures in Havana Papers

ARTHUR S. KANE, president of the Associated Exhibitors, carried the gospel of motion picture prosperity to Cuba on his recent southern trip. With Arthur S. Kane, Jr., he deserted the beaches and golf courses of Florida long enough to go over to Havana for a few days.

Mr. Kane and his son were met at the dock by a party including Rafael Martinez Ybor, Instructor of Consuls; Henry Weiner, general manager of United Artists Corporation in Cuba; Roderick Ross of Chicago, and Paul de Outo, Cuban manager for Universal. A photograph of this group was reproduced on the front page of La Noche of Havana.

Under the heading: "Sport Writer Is Movie Magnate," the Havana Telegram said: "An interesting figure among the recent arrivals in the capital city is Arthur S. Kane, head of the New York film organization which bears his name, and of Associated Exhibitors. Through these organizations the release of pictures starring such screen celebrities as Charlie Ray, of rural role fame, and Harold Lloyd, the goggled comedian, are handled.

"In the old days Mr. Kane was sporting editor of the Kansas City Star, but with the advent of moving pictures he felt an inclination toward that field of endeavor, and decided to cast his lot with film producers, the possibilities of the industry, then in its infancy, looming large in his mind. The wisdom of his decision is clearly apparent when consideration is given the fact that he now occupies a place high in the realms of filmdom, controlling the destinies of a host of screen favorites of today.

"Mr. Kane is authority for the statement that the motion picture enterprise as a whole enjoyed its most properous year in 1922, with every indication pointing toward even greater success during the present season. Over 700 feature films were released last year—a record for the industry.

"Charlie Ray now has in course of production a film which will carry the title, 'The Courtship of Myles Standish.' Over half a million dollars will be spent in making this picture the most elaborate of any in which the master of rural interpretation has appeared."

Wild Animal Release Is Ready

Martin Johnson's "Trailing African Wild Animals" Is Due Immediately

METRO Pictures Corporation has concluded arrangements to release immediately Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's "Trailing African Wild Animals."

For two years Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, accompanied by a large number of natives who formed the "safari' 'or expedition, braved the dangers of endless deserts and treacherous forests for the purpose of making a photoplay of big game which should not only be instructively entertaining, but at the same time a historical record worthy to be preserved for posterity. Many of the species caught by their watchful cameras are even now verging toward complete extinction.

Martin Johnson's efforts as a naturalist have received the commendation of Carl E. Akeley of the American Museum of Natural History, and other eminent authorities, both in the United States and abroad. His contributions to the literature of wild animal life have given him a prestige which explains to a great extent the widespread interest in his photoplay.

More than 100,000 feet of film were exposed during the two years spent in British East Africa. Every known kind of wild animal, and many which are familiar only to scientists and naturalists, were photographed. Of this tremendous footage only six reels have been retained.

Already Mr. Johnson is making arrangements for his next African expedition, to which he will devote five years. His present plans make provision for his headquarters on Lake Paradise, the district around Lake Rudolf, near the Abyssinian border. This region is called by Mr. Johnson the most perfect spot he has ever visited, and he intends to spend a good deal of time.

Nairobi, in British East Africa, was the starting point of the recently completed expedition. Traveling in a northeasterly direction, the party crossed the equator in the slopes of Kenya Mountain, and from there proceeded to the edge of the Lorian swamp region. Finding further invasion into the marshy territory inadvisable, the expedition turned directly west, crossing the Uasa Nyira River north of Kenya, and continuing north to Marsabit. From the latter city, the party traveled over plains, through densely wooded sections, over swamps and deserts for a distance of several hundred miles of land rarely visited by human beings, finally reaching the goal of the trip, Lake Paradise. The return to Nairobi was made around Lake Rudolf, following southwesterly to the shores of Lake Victoria.

Deal Is Concluded for "Broadway Gold"

While M. H. Hoffman, general manager of Truart Film Corporation, was in Los Angeles upon a tour of inspection of Truart's producing units, he was visited at the studio by Louis Hyman, general manager of All-Star Features, and Mr. Bershon, manager of the West Coast theatres. Mr. Bershon was formerly associated with Mr. Hoffman when the latter was general manager for Universal.

While at the studio the rushes of "Broadway Gold," the Edward Dillon production, starring Elaine Hammerstein, scheduled for early release by Truart, were run for Mr. Hyman and Mr. Bershon.

Mr. Hyman made an offer for the picture for California, Arizona and Nevada, and the deal was consummated immediately and tentative arrangements made for the handling of the entire Truart product in that territory by All-Star Features exchange.

Nigh Springs Feature in Sub-Titles

A combination of wording and moving illustration will be one of the distinct features in Will Nigh's coming production for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North. This departure in sub-titling film will consist of the necessary wording accompanied by a scene in one corner of the film showing the characters referred to in the sub-title expressing the action exemplified in the verbal description.

For example, when the conversation between Tom Moore and Ann Forrest is explained by words in the sub-title, the accompanying scene of Tom Moore and Ann Forrest is flashed in the corner of the same film where the wording appears.

Will Nigh, who is now busily engaged writing the sub-titles, expects to finish this part of his job in a week.

Prison League Approves "You Are Guilty"

The Mutual Welfare League of Sing Sing, through their entertainment committee, are the latest body to give their unqualified approval of the latest of C. C. Durr's Big Six features "You Are Guilty."

Mr. Durr gave a showing for the members of the Welfare League, after which the following letter was sent to the producer:

"The feature picture, 'You Are Guilty,' which we were privileged to see here on Sunday evening, was appreciated by every one of the twelve hundred men who were fortunate enough to be present at the showing and I want to thank you for your kindness in thus allowing us a pre-release view of this exceptionally fine picture."

"MARY OF THE MOVIES"

REVEALING THE HEART OF HOLLYWOOD

Scenes from "The Covered Wagon," the special production directed by James Cruze for Famous Players-Lasky from the story by Emerson Hough.

13 Paramount Units at Work

Production in East and West Coast Plants at Highest Point in Years

WITH thirteen companies at work, the production activity of Paramount at the West Coast and Eastern studios is now at the highest point in years. In California nine companies are either at work in the Lasky studio or on location, while in the East three companies are busy at the Long Island studio and one is in Florida.

Out at the Lasky studio James Cruze is shooting the final sequences for "Hollywood." Walter Woods is production editor and the adaptation of Frank Condon's short story to the screen is by Thomas J. Geraghty. George Fitzmaurice is nearing the end of "The Cheat," with Pola Negri starred and Jack Holt featured. Sam Wood has "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" well along toward completion and has just finished some striking vision scenes of the Bluebeard legend.

William de Mille is finishing "Only 38" with Elliott Dexter, Lois Wilson, May McAvoy and George Fawcett featured. Herbert Brenon is now in San Francisco getting prison scenes for "The Woman with Four Faces," featuring Betty Compson and Richard Dix. Jerome Storm has a good start on "Children of Jazz," with Theodore Kosloff, Ricardo Cortez, Eileen Percy and Robert Cain featured. George Melford has just started "Salomy Jane." Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett and Maurice Flynn are featured. Rob Wagner is doing "Fair Week." Walter Hiers is star and the company has just returned from Pleasanton, Cal., for studio scenes. "The Silent Partner" was started April 2 with Leatrice Joy, Owen Moore and Robert Edeson featured.

At the studio in Long Island City Allan Dwan is nearing the end of the second of his series of special productions for Paramount, "Lawful Larceny." Nita Naldi, Hope Hampton, Conrad Nagel and Lew Cody are the featured players.

Dorothy Dalton has started work under the direction of Ralph Ince in "Leah Kleschna," which J. Clarkson Miller has adapted from C. M. S. McLellan's famous play. James Rennie, Alphonse Ethier, Walter Percival and Frederick Lewis are among those in the supporting cast.

Agnes Ayres and the company making "The Heart Raider" are still in Florida on location, but are expected back at the studio in a few days.

Jumble Puzzle C. B. C. Feature Aid

A "jumble-puzzle" is one of the new "interest-teasers" which the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation has prepared for the use of franchise holders and exhibitors handling the Belasco production, "Her Accidental Husband," which C. B. C. is distributing.

This takes the form of an envelope containing twenty small squares on each one of which a large black letter is printed. The directions on the envelope state that the letters, when properly pieced together, spell the name of a big production soon to play, and that to the first five persons sending in the correct answer a week's pass to the theatre showing the picture will be given.

"Madness of Youth" Is Released April 8th

John Gilbert in "The Madness of Youth" was released April 8th by the Fox Film Corporation.

In the role of the clever young thief Gilbert is afforded a chance for some uncommonly convincing acting. The picture was directed by Jerome Storm from a story by George F. Worts. Billie Dove plays opposite the star.

Truart Signs Elaine Hammerstein

Elaborate Producing Arrangements Include New Units and Many Additional Stars

TRUART PICTURE CORPORATION, of which M. H. Hoffman is general manager, is fast completing its production arrangements, so that it will take its place among the foremost of the industry's independent producer-distributors.

During his recent visit to Los Angeles Mr. Hoffman made final negotiations with Edward Dillon, producer-director for a series of four special productions to be completed during the forthcoming year. In order that added value may be given to this series from the exhibition point of view, beyond that offered by the fact that the pictures will be based only upon well known and successful novels and plays, Mr. Hoffman contracted for Elaine Hammerstein to star in the series.

The first of these productions, directed by Edward Dillon and starring Miss Hammerstein, is "Broadway Gold," already practically completed.

As a second production until A. Carlos and Roland West are already at work on preparation for the filming of "The Unknown Purple," the successful stage success of two seasons in New York, written by Mr. West, who is also directing the picture. The management of the Carlos Productions will be under the supervision of Mr. A. Carlos, who for over sixteen years was associated with William Fox motion picture interests. "The Unknown Purple" is the first of a series of three or four productions by the Carlos-West unit to be made during the year for Tiffany-Truart distribution. All of them will be based on famous plays or novels.

The distribution policy of Truart on the independent market will be the franchising of its yearly output through independent exchanges, and in some territories the franchising will be done directly with exhibitors.

Warner Picture Pleases Critics

Trade Paper Reviewers Give Praise to "Little Church Around Corner"

WARNER BROTHERS, "The Little Church Around the Corner," which was shown at the Strand theatre, New York, during the week of March 25, has been acclaimed by the trade paper critics as an entertaining and as convincing a melodrama as has been produced in some time.

The picture was adapted from the play by Charles E. Blaney, with story and scenario by Olga Printzlau. William A. Seiter directed the production. Claire Windsor heads a cast which includes Kenneth Harlan, Hobart Bosworth, Walter Long, Pauline Stark, Alex Francis, Margaret Seddon, Cyril Chadwick, George Cooper and Winter Hall.

Exhibitors Herald said: "Again the Warner Brothers score with as entertaining and convincing a melodrama as has been produced in some time."

Moving Picture World said: "'The Little Church Around the Corner' is good audience stuff. The title is a good draw. A Warner classic that makes good boxoffice material."

Exhibitors Trade Review said: "There are genuine thrills in the scenes surrounding the mine disaster."

Confirming the opinions of the trade paper critics, the Strand theatre, Providence, managed by Edward L. Reed, wired the Warner offices as follows: "Just finished running 'Little Church Around the Corner.' From a box-office standpoint cannot be beat. Did capacity business afternoon and evening. Patrons very well pleased with this production, stick to it and give us more like it."

Neil Hamilton, whose work in "The White Rose" gained him a three and one-half year D. W. Griffith contract.

New Actor Given Long Griffith Contract

NEILL HAMILTON, practically unknown to motion picture patrons, has just signed a contract with D. W. Griffith whereby he is assured work at a good salary with the noted producer-director's organization for a term of three and one-half years.

Mr. Hamilton has been working for Mr. Griffith in the forthcoming production "The White Rose," which it is expected will be shown to the public by the early Summer. His work in this picture so pleased Mr. Griffith that the long-term contract was the result.

Unique Los Angeles Campaign

Civic Organizations and Players Ask Co-operation for "Souls for Sale"

An unusual campaign to tell the world the truth about Hollywood is being conducted from the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Cal., simultaneously with the release of "Souls for Sale," the story of movie life written and directed by Rupert Hughes.

The Truth-About-Hollywood campaign is in three general divisions as follows:

Special showings of the picture to Los Angeles and Hollywood civic organizations, with talks by members of the cast on their experiences and daily life in motion pictures.

Telegrams from the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce to every important chamber of commerce in the United States informing them that a true picture of life in Hollywood and the motion picture community is contained in "Souls for Sale."

Telegrams from motion picture players and directors to their relatives and to newspapers in their home towns saying that they want their own people to know about the life they lead and that seeing "Souls for Sale" is equivalent to a trip to Hollywood.

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce entered whole-heartedly into the Truth-About-Hollywood campaign after "Souls for Sale" was previewed by the board of directors.

The telegram sent by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce to brother bodies throughout the country reads as follows:

"A true picture of life in Hollywood and its motion picture colony is given in Rupert Hughes' new photoplay, 'Souls for Sale,' previewed by Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce today. This film is not an attempt at propaganda, but a dramatic portrayal showing picture making in a big dignified way, faithfully depicting the dangers, hardships and stress which players undergo in their life work of weaving romance for world."

Praise Given "Souls for Sale"

Reviewers of New York Dailies Are Unanimous in Approval of Feature

GOLDWYN'S Rupert Hughes picture, "Souls for Sale," came and was seen and evidently conquered New York on Sunday last at the Capitol theatre.

Quinn L. Martin wrote of it in the New York World: "A remarkable cinema, one that is as interesting a novelty as anything we have seen in the films this year."

Rose elswick, The New York American: "A picture that will make countless fans all over the country rush to their favorite theatre where it is being shown."

Journal of Commerce: "t justified all the preliminary praise that had been lavished on it."

P. W. Gallico, Daily News: "A ten-ring movie circus . . . A great audience picture. It gives you a close and interesting view of certain phases of picture making."

Helen Pollock in the Telegraph: "An unusually stimulating photoplay. . . It has form and purpose, sentiment and sincerity, and during the hour and a half spent in its performance dull moments are scarcer than low rents in Manhattan."

Don Allen in the Evening World: "For the benefit of those who did not read our recent review of 'Souls for Sale,' we wish to repeat that, in our estimation, the Goldwyn production of Rupert Hughes' latest and best screen effort is the best audience picture we ever saw."

Landon M. Robinson in The Globe: "'Souls for Sale' is not a lurid, heartrending melodrama about the underworld. It is the inside 'dope' on the movies. Mr. Hughes takes us behind the scenes and shows us motion pictures in the making."

The Mail: "Distinctly the movie actor's inning. . . A veritable family album of all the movie stars. You can see the movie actors as they see themselves."

The Sun: "With those remarkable, frantic scenes of the burning circus giving it a tremendous pull, it should gross a pile of money."

Jackie Coogan's Name for Honor Tablet

JACKIE COOGAN has been paid a unique honor. The Calhoun County Fair Association, sponsors of what is declared to be the biggest county fair in the State of Michigan, wants to include Jackie's name on an honor tablet in a permanent fair building to be erected.

For its diamond anniversary this organization is erecting among its permanent buildings a Boys' and Girls' Club House, wherein may be placed upon exhibition the products of the youthful inhabitants of Calhoun County.

"The Association," says the letter to Jackie, "is seeking the co-operation of widely known people in the United States who are lovers of children, and who wish to aid the things that make for better childhood.

"A tablet will be placed prominently in the building displaying the names of those cooperating, and we feel here that it will serve as a constant source of inspiration to the boys and girls of this county if that tablet bears your name."

"Salomy Jane" Location Picked

California Hills, Forests of Bret Harte, Are Selected for Production

MOVING in a cavalcade along the picturesque roads near Santa Cruz, the company for the George Melford Paramount production, "Salomy Jane," will take up location soon at Boulder Creek Canyon, Cal. With more than a hundred people, an ancient stagecoach and seventy-five horses in the train, the party will resemble a group of original California pioneers rather than a company of modern motion picture players.

Covering more than 1,000 miles by motor car, the Paramount location hunters found the most fitting place in California for the filming of this epic of early days in the West. The very hills and forests which gave Bret Harte inspiration to pen the original story will be pictured.

An old mining village with its primitive cabins was discovered and 500 logs were ordered to build additional houses and to restore some of the old buildings. When completed the village will be an exact reproduction of a settlement in California in 1850.

The saloon, the general store, the blacksmith's shop—all will be there. The road leading through the town will be tramped down with horses to give true realism to the scene. The shades of miners, buried, perhaps, within earshot of this spot, could look down upon the scene during the filming of the drama and see men living exactly as they lived before they passed on.

Beside Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett and Maurice Flynn, the featured players, seventy-five of the best rough-riders in California will ride the range in "Salomy Jane." The featured players are supported by a cast of well-known motion picture actors. They are: William Davidson, Charles Ogle, William Quirk, G. Raymond Nye, Louise Dresser, James Neill, Tom Carrigan, Clarence Burton, Barbara Brower and Jack Padjan.

Raise Price Twice for "Modern Marriage"

For the engagement of Frances X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne at the E. F. Albee Victory theatre, Providence, with their screen and personal appearance in "Modern Marriage," an unusual scale of prices was put into effect without diminution of patronage. Opening at thirty-five cents top, admission was raised on Wednesday to fifty cents and on Saturday further increased to seventy-five cents.

The campaign was begun with a visit to Mayor Gainer who became their escort through City Hall and around the city. The theatre owners of Rhode Island gave a luncheon at the Biltmore Hotel at which Bushman and Bayne were guests of honor. On another occasion the stars visited the State House and were received by Senator McGrane, who presented the couple to his fellow legislators.

Doug's "Robin Hood" Is Lauded

Editorial Writer Points Features that Must Attract All Classes

"AS much action as a school boy could demand, as much romance as any debutante could yearn for, all the violence that a plug-ugly could demand, a thread of age-long philosophy for the pedant, a pretty presentation of one form of an old, old legend that in one or another of its variations roused our ancestors to ideals and actions that made the warp and woof of their tradition and history for centuries—it was all in the picture," said an editorial writer in the New Orleans Item after he saw Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin hood" when this United Artists release was playing to capacity business at the Tulane theatre.

"The scope of the production, the great outlay required for its effects, plainly show that the theme has been treated as lavishly as the lower, sometimes useless and even demoralizing, spectacles formerly reared upon mere raw, crude fiction of blood and sex. Yet there was plenty of blood and sex here, too—inoffensive and not a whit more improbable than the other kind.

"And the people of New Orleans liked it—liked it well enough to crowd the house at high prices and come out praising their entertainment; to tell others to go and see it.

"This says a great deal in the old debate whether 'The People' want slush, mush and filth as much as was the fashion among obsolete managers and producers five years ago to give it to them on the theory that they would accept nothing else. Public taste itself may have changed a bit in the meantime. Like everything else, public preference or prejudice swings in cycles.

"But the change has by no means been such as the deserved popularity of a spectacle like 'Robinhood' would indicate. The fact is, rather, that the far-sighted and intelligent minority in the 'picture business'—who believe that the people at the core in the mass are sound were right. The purblind and ignorant class so numerous at the top of the business by reason of its strange and mushroom growth from petty beginning were wrong."

"Conquering the Woman" Praise

Chicago Critics Commend Florence Vidor in Associated Exhibitors Feature

THE Associated Exhibitors feature, Florence Vidor in "Conquering the Woman," has just finished a highly successful run in Ascher Bros.' big State-Lake theatre, in Chicago. Big gatherings marked every showing and the reviewers of the local newspapers were enthusiastic in their praise. Thus, Bob Reel, director of the motion picture section of the Chicago American, said:

"Here is the modern 'Taming of the Shrew,' 'Conquering the Woman,' at the State-Lake. Florence Vidor, comely and lovely and always very much a lady, plays the leading role. 'Conquering the Woman' is clever, clean and wholesome, the kind of thing that is bound to please a large majority of people—particularly the romance-hungry younger generation."

Virginia Dale wrote in the Chicago Journal: "This screen comedy sets one to chuckling right from the title."

The opening of the run in Nixon & Nirdlinger's Belmont theatre, Philadelphia, inspired this comment by the Philadelphia Inquirer: "A sort of modern Katherine who is tamed by a cowboy Petruchio is the central figure in 'Conquering the Woman.' It is romantic and well supplied with amusing situations."

Lloyd Climbs to More Popularity

New York Critics Declare "Safety Last" His and Most Thrilling Film

NO disagreement is noted between the New York newspaper reviews of "Safety Last" and the character of the reception given Harold Lloyd's seven-reel comedy thriller by the audiences which crowded the Strand Theatre at every performance all last week. So far as both critics and patrons are concerned, "Safety Last" is speeded on its way as the last film word to date in the realm of feature comedy.

The following appeared in the morning and evening issues on Monday and during the week:

Alan Dale in the New York American:—

"'Safety Last' plays havoc, with your stomach, your head and your spine. But it is not supposed to be a thriller by any means, but merely a series of laughter-provoking episodes. And it is surely that."

Evening Journal:—

"'Safety Last,' Harold Lloyd's seven-reel comedy, is so good that it hurts. Sitting in the front row of the balcony at the Strand, as this reviewer did, to see "Safety Last" offers more excitement than the most fearful roller coaster ever devised for a jaded public."

P. W. Gallico, in The Daily News:—

"As we park at our typewriter, having just come from Harold Lloyd's latest picture and first seven-reel comedy, 'Safety Last,' we feel more like a press agent than a reviewer or critic. Our problem is to find the proper assortment of words that will make you attend the Strand without fail and get your share of the laughter that is being dispensed there."

New York Times:—

"Harold Lloyd's latest effort is filled with laughs and gasps. When people are not rocking in their seats at the Strand they will be holding on to the chair arms to keep them down."

New York Sun:—

"'Safety Last,' which brings young Harold Lloyd and his faithful horn rimmed specs to the Strand this week, is pretty nearly the most amusing movie ever made, and it certainly is one of the most thrilling."

Evening Telegram:—

"At the Strand Theatre the hearty laughs that ring through that playhouse reveal unmistakably that Harold Lloyd has made another hit—and a bigger and better one—in his new film comedy, 'Safety Last.' Here in the new seven reel comedy, he reaches the proportions of a Chaplin."

Helen Pollock in The Morning Telegraph:—

"If laughter really makes people grow fat Mr. Plunkett will be compelled to widen the exits at the Strand Theatre, where Harold Lloyd is appearing this week in 'Safety Last.' Here is the wildest, most irresponsible, devil-may-care comedy we have had in a blue moon, with Mr. Lloyd living up to the title and demonstrating that 'art for art's sake' is his motto, even at the risk of his life."

Evening World:—

"Harold Lloyd, no matter what he does, will always strike us as the best comedian on the screen. And we say this well remembering all we ever saw Chaplin do. Take, for instance, 'Safety Last,' now unreeling thrills by the celluloid yard at the Strand—Harold Lloyd makes of his first seven-reeler a climbing classic."

"If Winter Comes" Is Awaited

Popular Story Will Head Long List of Fox Productions for Season

FROM the number of inquiries received by the New York offices of Fox Film Corporation regarding the William Fox screen presentation of A. S. M. Hutchinson's celebrated novel, "If Winter Comes," it is evident that exhibitors in all parts of the world are eagerly awaiting the opportunity to book this much talked of special production, according to Fox.

Every day, according to officials of the Fox organization, requests are made for information as to when the production will be released. The majority of these, it is announced, result from the numerous inquiries made by theatre patrons who have read the book and who are deeply interested in seeing the famous characters of Hutchinson's novel come to life on the screen.

The screen version of "If Winter Comes" will head the long list of special productions to be released by the Fox company during the 1923-24 theatrical season. Plans now are being made to give the picture a special Broadway showing, it is announced.

More than a year was required to complete the screen translation of Hutchinson's novel, nearly six months being spent in England photographing the exteriors in the actual locations referred to in the superlative descriptive phrases of the author. The production was staged by Harry Millarde, who directed "Over the Hill," "The Town That Forgot God," and other triumphant William Fox productions.

A. S. M. Hutchinson, and Basil McDonald Hastings, who wrote the stage version of the story, co-operated in every way in the selection of the cast and in other details connected with the making of the pictorial version of the story. A notable cast of screen artists, headed by Percy Marmont as Mark Sabre and Ann Forrest as Lady Tybar, will be seen in the various difficult roles in the photoplay, it is stated.

Credit Rating for Theatres

Motion Picture News,
516 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. C.

Gentlemen:

Will you kindly insert this news item in your paper in the next issue:

The Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America, comprising nearly all Supply Dealers of Greater New York, have, at the urgent solicitations of prominent theatre owners, engaged Hoy Reporting Service to establish a credit rating for all motion picture theatres in the States of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

Mr. Hoy, of the Hoy Reporting Service, was asked what plan his agency would adopt in arriving at a basis of credit. He outlined the following interesting method:

All theatres would be given in the beginning credit for one month's purchases. Theatres not paying on or before the 10th of succeeding month, will, by this neglect, be placed on a cash basis until their credit is re-established. Mr. Hoy pointed out the urgent necessity of monthly settlements for his clients, due to the enormous outstandings at present, most of which are many months past due.

Mr. Hoy's ten (10) years' credit experience in dealing with theatres finds him very confident that all theatre owners will welcome the first opportunity presented to prove they are worthy of credit consideration.

A movement is now on to have this same agency establish offices in other centers through the country.

Very truly yours,

Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America.

W. H. Rabell, Chairman of the Publicity Committee.

Cumberland Theatre Company Formed

Announcements came to this department of the formation of the Cumberland Theatre Company with R. T. Hill as president, Tullahoma, Tenn. All booking will be done from Tullahoma and will cover the following theatres: Strand, Tullahoma; Rivoli, Winchester; Oldham's McMinnville; Princess, Lawrenceburg. Mr. Hill has been the successful manager of the Strand theatre, Tullahoma, for many years and will spend most of the time in the supervision of the above houses. In the meantime, the Cumberland Theatre Company is negotiating for more houses in this territory to be added to the chain.

Athol Opera House Being Remodeled

Remodeling of the Athol, Mass., Opera House is to be begun April 1, the contract calling for completion of the work by October 1. The present upright posts will be eliminated and replaced by steel girders from wall to wall. It is planned to seat 775 in the auditorium and 400 in the balcony. While the house is closed for alterations, programs will be given at the Lyric building. Improvements are intended to make the Opera House modern throughout. A new entrance will be built on South Street.—Agard.

Camera to Screen

OUT of three hundred or more pretentious motion pictures that will be made for the season of 1923-1924, twenty-five or thirty will stand out conspicuously. The future alone will reveal the producers whose names will be registered upon this roll of screen honor, but it is a matter of considerable pride of the STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES to recall that many of the past years best pictures went through our plant from camera to screen.

WITH the continually increasing number of prominent producers depending upon us for complete laboratory service, we are looking forward to an even greater contribution to the screen successes of this year. These producers know that a picture to be among the best, must be well photographed.

THAT'S why they rely upon the STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES for daily service and release prints. Experience has taught them that our service gives them more for their money and that distributors and exhibitors are better satisfied with STANDARD PRINTS.

JESSE L. LASKY . . . . . PRESENTS
"The COVERED WAGON"
A JAMES CRUZE PRODUCTION
NO period in all history is so romantic, so melodramatic, so thrilling, so full of motion picture possibilities as the days of '49.
Paramount has brought those days to life again in "The Covered Wagon."
It is the greatest subject a picture ever had, and it is the greatest production ever attempted.
Look on the other side for further FACTS which will give you some idea of the bigness of this picture as a theatrical attraction.

"The COVERED WAGON"

The Buffalo Hunt

One of the many thrills in "The Covered Wagon"

FIVE hundred bison, the only large herd in existence, were used in the hunt scenes.

Several hundred mounted men actually risked their lives in these scenes, which are absolutely genuine from start to finish.

"The Glimpses of the Moon"

by Edith Wharton

Scenario by Edfrid Bingham and E. Lloyd Sheldon.

with Bebe Daniels and Nita Naldi

HERE are glimpses of the full moon of a glorious romance, one of those moons of gorgeous glamour—and yet how close it came to bitter poison!

Being Allan Dwan's first production since "Robin Hood" and being based upon Edith Wharton's tremendous-selling novel of the same title,

—which appeared serially in Pictorial Review last year,

—your best expectations will fall short of the reality, with its minute-by-minute growth of excitement created in all audiences by this Paramount Picture.

Think of a girl,

—played by the beautiful Bebe Daniels

—who loves so passionately that she will marry the man of her heart,

—even though he cannot put a roof over her head save through friends' charity, —and yet so ambitious and cynical of love's endurance that she adds a clause to the marriage contract calling for—

—for what? That's the plot, that's the bitter drop of poison, the drama that rises to the heights of Paramount's best!

See "The Glimpses of the Moon" at your own theatre. Show this advertisement and find out when.

ONE of 8

of one month's releases of Paramount's Super 39

To make a great motion picture out of the best among best-selling novels is a feat that Paramount has many times performed. Here it is once again!

Think of the great pictures you have seen recently, "Manslaughter", "To Have and To Hold", "Kick In", "Adam's Rib", "Java Head", "Back Home and Broke"—all of them Paramount pictures—and then you'll realize more than ever that—

If it's a Paramount Picture it's the best show in town

What the Expert Says:

" 'The Girl I Loved' is a production that any audience should like," says Exhibitors' Herald. "Sympathetic, humorous action and genuine appeal portrayed in what is probably Charles Ray's best work for the screen. Don't fail to see this production. We believe it is one you will like, and as such one you will want to pass along to your patrons. Ray's acting is an outstanding and memorable feature. He has a part that calls for the highest form of suppressed emotion."

ANNOUNCING

FISHER PRODUCTIONS

VICTOR B. FISHER
Supervising Director

"The Superlative in Motion Pictures"

Executives of wide motion picture experience will direct the destinies of this concern.

Authors of repute, directors who are leaders in their line, stars whose names—and abilities—are recognized the world over, will contribute their best effort and talent to the pictures bearing the Fisher name and trade-mark.

Three (3) productions a year will be made.

So far as expenditure of time, money and human endeavor can make them, these photo-classics will be master-pieces of screen art.

They will be aimed to more than satisfy the great army of motion picture lovers.

Hence they will embody every element tending to create—and maintain—sure-fire box-office attraction.

FISHER PRODUCTIONS will be a synonym, not for Better pictures, but for the BEST pictures—always.

The industry, and the public, in each Fisher screen creation, will be assured of a promise fulfilled.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

OF course Harold and his wife scented trouble when brother-in-law's youngsters were parked with them over the week-end. But they had only the merest inkling of what they were in for.

How was Harold to know that he would have to put a nipple on the baby's bottle? Why is it anyway that nipples are always three sizes too small, and babies' bottles rounded at the bottom? And who could tell that a pet menagerie would break loose?

Trouble? Yes, but just look at that darling baby. Isn't he worth all the trouble he costs?

You'll be sure of it when you see Harold Lloyd in "I Do."

SOMEHOW Lloyd feels that the bathing pool of the Sultan's Harem is no longer safe. Where will he go? How can he rescue his sweetheart from the Sultan's clutches? These are only two of the perplexities which beset Harold Lloyd in "A Sailor-Made Man." When you see his uproarious adventures you'll wonder how he could cram so much hilarity into one short hour.

If you've lost your funny-bone—

IF you think no motion picture in the world can make you laugh a good old-fashioned laugh again—take this prescription. It's tested and unfailing, specially compounded for just such a critical case as yours.

Encore Pictures

ENCORE PICTURES are chosen from hundreds of new motion pictures offered us each year—chosen because they actually entertain the private audiences who see them in advance.

This line of high-grade pictures includes:

Harold Lloyd in "Grandma's Boy," "I Do," "Now or Never," "Never Weaken," "Among Those Present," and "A Sailor-Made Man."

Constance Binney in "A Bill of Divorcement"—an absorbing drama revealing the depths of human feeling.

"Head Hunters of the South Seas"—a truthful record of a thrilling adventure.

Florence Vidor in "Alice Adams"—a wonderfully faithful and artistic picturization of Booth Tarkington's prize-winning novel—and other superlatively fine productions.

* * * *

To be sure of having all the better photoplays shown in your neighborhood you should form a Better Pictures Council to work with the managers of your local picture theatres.

More than 480 communities have organized such Councils. Every month the members receive impartial reports of all worthwhile photoplays, not Encore Pictures alone. The Council recommends the best pictures to the theatre manager and endorses them to the public.

Thus everybody benefits—theatre goers can make known in advance what pictures they want to see, and the theatre owner is assured of good audiences.

Why don't you take the initiative in getting better pictures for your community? Write me personally for the booklet, "Getting Better Pictures—the Plan that Works." Arthur S. Kane, 35 West 45th Street, New York City

IF you think a comedian is only certainly change your mind when you see this poor timid, lovable boy learn the secret of Courage. And shrewd, loving Grandma—she knew what he needed! No wonder "Grandma's Boy" was voted among the best ten motion pictures of the year.

HAROLD and Mildred find in "Never Weaken" that true love runs a dangerous course, often high in the air. Lovelorn Lloyd perched on a girder, doing his level best to get back to solid ground—and to his sweetheart—may not sound funny, but it is an uproarious spectacle.

WHEN a fellow who has never been outside his home town gets into society, and is asked to tell of his African hunting experiences—just what would the book of etiquette advise? Use his imagination, is our guess.

And in "Among Those Present" Lloyd does use his imagination—recklessly and wondrously as you can judge from the expression of his hostess.

IT doesn't seem quite fair to ask a painfully respectable, undomesticated bachelor to play chaperon to a full-of-the-mischief, four-year-old girl in a crowded Pullman. But in "Now or Never," Lloyd does find a way out of his troubles—after his own fashion.

The Lion of all Pictures of Hunting in the Jungle

AS INDISPUTABLY as the lion is king of the African wilds, so is Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's TRAILING AFRICAN WILD ANIMALS supreme above any other picture of like subject ever attempted or achieved.

Not only does it bring to the screen such breath-taking scenes as rhinoceri charging with death in their wicked little pig eyes, of a herd of elephants crashing through the forest in a stampede upon the camera man, of lions brought down within a few feet of the hunters.

But also—you see Mr. Johnson and Mrs. Johnson themselves facing the beasts.

For the first time the hunter is seen risking his life with the wild beasts of prey.

Those who made the picture were closer to the big game of Africa than the camera was. The camera man used a telescopic lens which makes the animals on the screen appear to be within arm's length of the observer.

As for thrills—

Carl E. Akeley, of the American Museum of Natural History, America's foremost authority on big game, especially African big game, wrote, after seeing Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's TRAILING AFRICAN WILD ANIMALS:

"THE picture is by far the finest thing in wild-life pictures that has come out of Africa, or any other place for that matter.

"It is accurate and truthful, chuck full of beauty and thrills.

"It is the most thrilling picture I have ever seen."

Governor Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, at whose request Mr. and Mrs. Johnson brought their TRAILING AFRICAN WILD ANIMALS to the Executive Mansion at Harrisburg for a private showing, wrote:

"The picture is by far the finest big game picture I have ever seen. From the point of view of beauty and interest it stands all by itself.

"If anything more striking was ever filmed outdoors than the pursuit of those gigantic African elephants by little Mrs. Johnson, I never saw or heard of it."

Two years' time and two hundred and fifty thousand dollars were spent in making this amazing picture which has been cut down to give your patrons a lifetime of thrills in an hour.

WILD ANI

There's the Lion —and Mrs. Johnson

This lion is one of a herd of more than a dozen which the camera caught as they broke cover. Few men have even so much as seen so many lions at once, much less photographed them.

In the picture you see first the lion in the open, you see Mrs. Johnson fire upon him, then close in as he turns upon her — and finish him.

A Woman in the Wilderness

Mrs. Johnson, weighing only 110 pounds, was with Mr. Johnson throughout every step of the expedition.

They took turns in risking life; the one holding an animal at bay with the rifle while the other handled the camera.

A woman in the wilderness of the African jungle, taking chances few men would even consider taking!

Lions charging into the very lens of the camera—man-eaters in the act of trying to slay. Your patrons can see them from your theatre's seats.

It took two long, dangerous years for Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, to hack and fight their way through a thousand miles of African jungle.

They risked life every second of that time. They shot 100,000 feet of film.

This has been cut to 6,000 feet of thrills that make you gasp.

"The elephant picture recalls vividly the most thrilling experiences of my life. I shall not blame you in the least if, when the final stampede of elephants comes on the screen, you feel inclined to run."

The elephants were photographed in the hitherto mysterious region of Africa near the lost Lake Paradise, a part of the continent no white man ever before had laid eyes upon.

of THRILLING TRUTH

One incautious movement, one whisper or sneeze, a slight shift of the wind—and this amazing picture might never have reached America.

Any unguarded action, and a herd of elephants, with tusks that impale a man like a fly on a pin, might have thundered down upon the camera-hunters.

It takes about five lions to tackle a giraffe. This tallest of animals can jab a lion to pieces in short order with his hoofs, which work like the business end of a crowbar.

Not for Another Five Years

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson soon are going back into the African jungle for more pictures.

They will spend five years there.

They do not count on returning alive—though they hope to—for they will penetrate even beyond Lake Paradise, which no member of the white race except themselves has ever reached.

With the best of luck it will be 1928 before there will be available again such pictures of big game as these.

Show TRAILING AFRICAN WILD ANIMALS now. Your audiences will remember it for five years—and clamor for the next one.

"MAN vs. BEAST"

Educational Pictures SPECIAL

"Walking up to within ten feet of the infuriated beast, Shuman glanced along his rifle. Should he miss——"

LOVE of adventure has made big game hunting the favorite subject of the day.

Leading the way for the numerous feature pictures of this type now being offered was Educational's Special "Man vs. Beast."

No more realistic or thrilling picture has been made than this film story of the expedition of Louis Shuman into the heart of the Dark Continent.

Originally a five-reel picture but cut to two reels because of Educational's policy of releasing only Short Subjects and of giving exhibitors only the best of action in its pictures without waste footage, "Man vs. Beast" is crammed with thrills in every foot.

Stirring scenes of perilous combat between men and the most ferocious wild beasts, actually coming to death-grips before the camera, and rare shots of the most wary denizens of the jungle, make this a subject of exceptional interest and unusual box-office value.

"Here is the most remarkable jungle picture we have ever seen," said the management of the Capitol Theatre, St. Paul.

And

reviewing it for hundreds of newspapers, wrote

"'Man vs. Beast' is one of the most dramatic pictures I have ever seen."

Box-Office author-

FILM DAILY:—A rather attractive entertainment that should please the majority. Henry McRae has certainly secured fine atmosphere for the picture and the scenes of the river with its burden of logs and the numerous views of the lumberjacks at work, also at play, furnish a realistic idea of life in a lumber camp. Folks are going to marvel at the agility of the men on the logs, their daring in riding a single log in the rapids and other equally intrepid stunts that supply some of the action and thrills of the production. "The Man from Glengarry" offers a pleasing variation in dramatic entertainment and as such should please the majority of picture goers.

MORNING TELEGRAPH:—This story is an adaptation of the well-known novel by Ralph Connor, and the familiar title ought to help to make a large portion of the public curious to see the picture. The treatment of the original story has been well handled and an interesting picture results. Warner Richmond plays the part of the boy. E. L. Fernandez, as Louis Lenoir, succeeds in getting the real Latin personality into the role; Pauline Garon is charming as the flapper, and Marion Swayne plays well as the minister's daughter and is quite brave in her scene in the river. This is a good picture of its type and all who love stories of the great outdoors will like every scene of it.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD:—Among outdoor specials "The Man from Glengarry" should occupy an interesting place. Ernest Shipman has exploited some of the thrilling phases of the logging industry in Canada in connection with a melodramatic story by Ralph Connor. A fight on the logs, mid-river, stands out as one of the effective moments. The novelty of this scene which ends in the rescue of the girl who nearly drowns in attempting to stop the fight will appeal to those who like to see fights staged in an original style.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS:—A graphic account of life among the lumberjacks in the reaches of the upper Ottawa River. The picture is certain to be accepted as something worth while. It releases some first-rate incident—much of which is positively startling when it shows the lumberjacks piloting the logs down the river and hopping about from log to log with the agility of jack-rabbits. The picture travels at a good pace, is well constructed up to its final reel, exudes volumes of atmosphere and is staged amid awe-inspiring backgrounds.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW:—"The Man from Glengarry" holds good interest and should generally satisfy those who see it. There is plenty of action throughout the story and the outdoor scenery used through the picture is well worth seeing.

SCREEN OPINIONS:—Class A. "The Man from Glengarry," one of Ralph Connor's best stories, lends itself well to the screen, and in the present picturization the spectacular and sensational features have been given special attention.

AMUSEMENTS, Minn.: — This picture should go over big with lovers of fast-action outdoor pictures. It moves fast, has sufficient fights and thrills, and some real unusual photographic effects.

VARIETY:—Smashing melodramatic action picture of the northern logging camps with magnificent scenic features.

in a colorful romance of Old Cuba when the Cavalier descendants of the Castilians were fighting for liberty — a drama of hearts, flowers, swords — and a great soul.

To get the correct atmosphere for the picture the entire company spent several months in Cuba to take the exterior scenes.

Of the many characters created by Richard Barthelmess we believe his pantomimic artistry is most appealing in this story of a young American's loves and adventures.

Miss Dorothy Gish has never surpassed in heart interest her part as the Spanish Dancer, a world-famous coquette, who gives her life for love of the American boy—and Cuban liberty.

We believe that the artistry of these players; the splendid character studies of all the members of the supporting cast; the fine quality of production achieved by Inspiration Pictures, Inc., and its president, Charles H. Duell; the unusual sympathy and understanding in direction by John S. Robertson; the excellent adaptation by Edmund Goulding of Joseph Hergesheimer's colorful story; the wonderful photographic work by George Folsey; the exceptional skill in art direction by Everett Shinn — all these elements have resulted in a picture which will be heralded not only for its artistic merit, but for its entertainment value and its BOX OFFICE PULLING POWER.

The April Edition Will Be Better Than Ever

The Year's Most Stupendous Drama!

"You tell where you hid him," said Rance, the sheriff. "I saw him come in."

"No, no, he's not here," answered the girl, struggling to keep her eyes from lifting to the loft where her wounded lover lay.

Convinced, the sheriff was about to depart.

"Well, we'll get him and string him up before the night is over," he said.

She breathed a moment in relief. Then to her horror, something soft and wet dropped on the sheriff's outstretched hand. Then—another drop.

They stood silent a moment.

"Blood," he said, stepping back and pointing his gun toward the loft. "So he's up there."

"No, Jack. It's not him," she breathed, in blind, mechanical denial.

Rance flung the girl violently aside, made a grab for the ladder and lowered it into position. Then deaf to the girl's pleadings, shouted:

"Ramerrez, you bandit, you thief. Come down."

One of the many stirring situations in a big, thrilling heart drama that will grip every audience.

BIG FIRST PICTURES

Here's real news! First National is giving you just as big productions for the summer as at any other time of the year. It is not holding up the big ones for Fall. It doesn't have to. First National has plenty of big ones for all time.

"THE GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST"

Edwin Carewe's stupendous production of David Belasco's Great Masterpiece

An epic of the days when men struggled, laughed, cursed, gambled, killed, loved, and worked out their strange destinies—a big heart drama.

"CHILDREN OF DUST"

A Frank Borzage Production

A human interest drama that is a page of life—a picturization of Tristram Trupper's "Terwilliger" which was one of the big serials in the Metropolitan magazine. A tale of the old Gramercy Park section of old New York.

JACKIE COOGAN

In

"Toby Tyler"

The story of a small boy who runs away from home to join a circus, beguiled by the glitter of the greatest show on earth. This is probably Jackie's strongest picture. Taken from a famous novel; presented by Sol Lesser; produced under the personal supervision of Jack Coogan, Sr.

"A MAN OF ACTION"

A Thomas H. Ince Production

Starring

Douglas MacLean

One of the greatest mystery comedy dramas ever offered. It keeps everybody guesssing from start to finish. An unusual supporting cast including Marguerite De La Motte, and Raymond Hatton. By Bradley King; directed by James Horne.

"PENROD AND SAM"

A Booth Tarkington Story

The author of "Penrod"

One of his famous stories of American boy life which was one of the year's best sellers. You know what kind of a box office attraction "Penrod" was. This goes it one better. Directed by William Beaudine.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE

In

"Dulcy"

This is the next of Miss Talmadge's bigger pictures. If you played "East is West" you know what kind of work she is now doing. Her consistent advertising in the Saturday Evening Post makes her a bigger attraction than ever. An uproarious comedy by George Kaufman and Marx Connelly. Directed by Sidney Franklin; presented by Joseph M. Schenck; continuity by John Emerson and Anita Loos.

You Can Depend on First

NATIONAL for SUMMER

Right when the hot weather hits you, you need big pictures—pictures with unusual entertainment value to combat the summer amusements of the outdoor season. Here they are. Just look over the list for June, July and August.

"THE BRASS BOTTLE"

A Maurice Tourneur Production

A fascinating comedy-drama taken from the novel and play. This production which is personally directed by Maurice Tourneur, is interpreted by an all star cast.

"TRILBY"

A Richard Walton Tully Production

This wonderful photoplay is Mr. Tully's interpretation of George du Maurier's great classic, famous the world over. A tale of the London and Paris Latin quarters, where dwell all the artists of note. Directed by James Young.

RICHARD BARTHELMESS

In

"The Fighting Blade"

A thrilling period drama from the pen of Beulah Dix. Such a story as Barthelmess' countless followers will delight to see him in. A thrilling tale of the efforts to overthrow Cromwell and re-establish the Royalist line. One of "Our Dick's" very best. Presented by Inspiration Pictures, Inc., Charles H. Duell, president.

"THE WANTERS"

A John M. Stahl Production

A sparkling comedy-drama with New York society life as the background. You have seen what Mr. Stahl could do in "The Dangerous Age" and other pictures. We think this will be better. Presented by Louis B. Mayer. Written by Lelia Burton Wells. An all star cast including Marie Prevost and Robert Ellis.

"HER REPUTATION"

A Thomas H. Ince Production

Another drama with the Ince Punch. An all star cast including May McAvoy, Lloyd Hughes, Casson Ferguson and Winter Hall. Directed by John Griffith Wray under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Adapted from the novel "The Devil's Own" by Talbut Mundy and Bradley King.

KATHERINE MacDONALD

In

"The Scarlet Lily"

One of the American Beauty's best pictures. Miss MacDonald has given one of her most promising roles in this story of a girl who seeks to earn a livelihood for herself and a helpless dependent as an artist designer. Adapted by Lois Zellner from the story by Fred Sittenham. Directed by Victor Shertzinger.

Overdoing the Special

A FAVORITE exhibitor complaint—extra length features—has increased a hundredfold these last few months.

Nor do these protests come entirely from the little fellows. The managing directors of the big houses are voicing their objections also—not so vociferously perhaps—but in sufficient volume to convince us that we are over-doing the "special."

* * *

We have spoken to several producers and distributors about this unsatisfactory state of affairs.

Invariably, we get the same explanation.

First, we are told—usually a bit impatiently—that good pictures can not be made if the production staff is tied down to arbitrary five reel footages.

This is undoubtedly true but because a picture is nine thousand feet it doesn't necessarily follow that it isn't four reels too long; and certainly there should be a reasonable amount of product of the footage the average exhibitor will tell you he prefers—5,000 to 5,500 feet.

But there are plenty of five reelers, you say. Are there?

Inspect pages 1776-77 of the April 7th issue of Motion Picture News where in "The Check-up," our chart of exhibitors' box office reports, 250 features—the releases of the last seven months—are listed.

Some interesting facts are disclosed.

Of the 250 pictures, 170 are more than five reels in length. One hundred and four are more than six reels long and 96 are seven reels or more.

* * *

Any exhibitor will tell you that a feature of more than six reels is too long to fit into a well balanced bill—a bill that contains a news weekly, comedy and something of a scenic, educational or industrial nature.

We do not think that anyone has a complaint against the "Robin Hood's," the "Knighthood's" or the "Covered Wagon's." If a production of their calibre runs ten or twelve reels, all well and good. It is just the average feature, demanding strong supporting numbers to get it by, that receives and deserves the kicks.

For these seven, eight and nine reelers, there is no real defense. There are, however, excuses.

The producer claims that the exhibitor refuses to believe a five reel picture anything better than a program release and in consequence declines to pay more than a program picture price for it.

The story the exhibitor tells is quite different. He contends that productions are deliberately padded as an excuse for labeling them "specials" for which exorbitant rentals are exacted.

* * *

But claims and counterclaims—probably both admitting of argument based on fact—are not going to remedy something that is obviously wrong. And they don't take into consideration the wishes and well being of those most vitally concerned—the theatre-going public.

The public most assuredly wants variety in its motion picture fare. It insists on having the "short stuff" and only the unusual feature will hold attention over an hour.

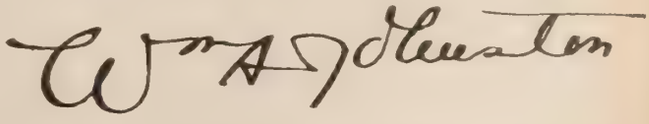
Ask any showman who knows his business if this isn't a fact.

* * *

Good pictures have, can and should be made in five reels.

Our job—meaning the industry as a whole—is giving the public what it wants.

That's just plain business sense.



PICTURES AND PEOPLE

SCIENTIFIC folk, literary folk, society folk—and some ordinary folk met at dinner at the Waldorf Tuesday evening to say Godspeed to Robert J. Flaherty, maker of "Nanook of the North," who left Thursday for Samoa to discover new Nanooks in the South Seas. "Nanook" was run off at the conclusion of the dinner to the delight of everyone present, many of whom had already seen the picture. We have a lot of faith in Mr. Flaherty's artistic and dramatic faculties and we look for another motion picture treasure when he brings back his film.

TAKE heed of this optimistic note: Business conditions have suddenly taken a very favorable turn for the motion picture interests in New England. The exhibitors and exchange men are registering joy due to the wage increase of 12½ to 15% in the textile industries. Our Boston spy informs us that this is only 2% lower than the highest wages paid during the war.

* * *

WHILE Sol Lesser and Michael Gore are in Gotham they will make a careful survey of the holdings of West Coast Theatres in Educational and First National franchises for the State of New York.

* * *

STRAIGHT from the Coast comes a busy wire telling us that Tom Mix is busy planning the formation of a polo team with A. Frank and other executives of the Ambassador Hotel. Tom has fifteen or more perfectly sound polo ponies which are ra'rin' to go. Other items announce the fact that Amy Leslie, for thirty-eight years dramatic critic of the Chicago Daily News, was one of the judges of the Cocoanut Grove dancing contest at the Ambassador the other night. The motion picture stars who attended found that they were part of a merry-go-round and circus which had been specially built for them.

* * *

IT will occasion some surprise among Jack Lloyd's friends to know that he has been married for three years. The young benedict, a member of the Mermaid Comedy Company at Hollywood, gave away the secret last week and introduced his wife, Irene Vernon, formerly a New York comedy actress, to film circles in Los Angeles. The couple met when they were both members of "The Flirting Princess" in New York four years ago. They eloped to Jersey City a few months afterward and found a parson eager and willing to tie the nuptial knot. Later Mr. Lloyd succumbed to the lure of motion pictures. The love nest is in Hollywood.

* * *

ADOLPH ZUKOR and S. R. Kent, who went to Europe several weeks ago to look over film conditions, have returned to New York.

* * *

VISITORS from the Coast include Jack White and E. H. Allen, producer-director and general manager respectively of Mermaid Comedies, who are in New York for the purpose of conferring with E. W. Hammons, the Educational chieftain, over production and distribution activities for the fiscal year. Messrs. White and Allen will remain in the metropolis long enough to take in a few of the shows and several of the ball games before returning to California.

* * *

STRAIGHT from Paris comes the report that E. Costil, general manager of the Cinema Departments of the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont, has embarked on the S. S. Paris and will arrive in New York by the 21st of this month. Mr. Costil, according to the cable, will remain here for some time in the interests of his company, which is considered the largest motion picture company of Europe.

* * *

AMONG the 100,000 visitors in our midst are George A. Blair of Eastman Kodak and George Kleine of Chicago.

* * *

MYSTERIOUS are the goings-on that keep the A. M. P. A. boys busy these days. 'Tis rumored about that their Naked Truth Dinner, which will be given a week from Saturday night in the ballroom of the Biltmore, is the last word in three-ring circuses. A ten spot takes the boys (shush—for men only) into the big show. Come prepared to have the laugh of the season—come prepared to hide your head under the table as you feel the import of the pointed shafts of satire and good-natured ridicule. Silver-haired Harry Reichenbach is charge d'affairs.

ADELE WHITELY FLETCHER, editor of Motion Picture Magazine and managing editor of the Brewster Publications, has been tendered a new contract by Eugene V. Brewster, the owner and publisher as a reward for her valuable services in making the magazine' circulation builders. Miss Fletcher's ability rests in her knack for gauging the pulse of the public and giving the fans what they want in Pictures and People.

* * *

FIRST National has discovered in Matt Taylor a right smart young man and adaptable to their way of doing things. Consequently he has signed on the dotted line to take a chair of publicity. Success and all that sort of thing. Matt has a way of getting his "copy" over. He believes in the pithy paragraph and the slashing of superlatives.

* * *

THE Palace theatre at Indianapolis has hit upon one of the best good will builders in its history. Each week a one reel film of activities at one of the public schools is shown. The theatre produces the reels through a local film company and school authorities are willingly co-operating to the extent that the fact that the film will be shown at the Palace is announced in every class room.

* * *

THEODORE C. Deitrich, accompanied by Mrs. Deitrich, will sail next Monday for Europe on the steamship "Bremen." They will visit Germany, Austria, Italy, Norway, Sweden, France and England, in all of which countries Mr. Deitrich will investigate existing conditions in the motion picture industry. Three months will slip by the calendar before they return to New York.

* * *

REX BEACH is back in New York putting his personal touches in the matter of titles and cuttings to the film version of his story, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," which is being made at the Paramount Long Island studio.

* * *

ONE of the busiest stars in pictures, Colleen Moore, is planning a vacation which will be spent in Europe. It is rumored about that she will make the trip as the bride of John McCormick (west coast representative of F. N., not the tenor) to whom her engagement was announced some time ago.

* * *

C. L. YEARSLEY, director of publicity and advertising for First National, is convalescing in a New York hospital from an operation performed upon him last week. The many friends of Bill hope for a speedy recovery.

WORD comes from the Coast that "The Covered Wagon," which opened the other night in Grauman's Egyptian theatre, Hollywood, went over with a bang. If it carries a sign like the one adorning the New York Criterion, it will have the folks uttering "Ohs and Ahs!"

HERE'S one for the book. Norma Talmadge has bought a half interest in Buster Keaton, the horse, not the doleful brother-in-law. The colt has been winning some purses at Tia Juana. If the steed is anything like his namesake he'll draw away from the field.

* * *

MR. H. H. HURN, Central Division Sales Manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation returned from a flying trip to Exchanges in the Central West and left last week for Chicago in the interests of the Elmer Clifton special "Down to the Sea in Ships."

During Mr. Hurn's trip through the Central Division Territory he visited the Exchanges in Detroit, Omaha, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and Minneapolis.

According to a general summing up of personal conversations with exhibitors Mr. Hurn states that in his opinion business has greatly improved throughout the middle west and that in a few months conditions will be back to normal.

* * *

EXHIBITORS, wouldst be humorous with Swedish gentlemen? Take heed and profit by the sorrow of Lawrence E. Goldman, counsel for the M. P. T. O. Western Missouri. Last week on the morning of the Western Missouri convention in Kansas City, President Charles Sears requested Mr. Goldman to have a sign made, notifying exhibitors where to register. To a Swedish friend went Goldman.

"Olaf, a big sign, so big," instructed Goldman, giving approximate measurements with his hands. "A nice Swedish sign, Olaf, reading, 'Exhibitors Register Here,'"

The latter was received with a laugh and self assurance that Olaf understood correctly what was desired. But, not so. When the sign was delivered and placed in front of the convention room in the Hotel Baltimore, it read:

"Uppmsare Registrera Har."

Not an exhibitor registered for the convention—and Goldman paid for the sign out of his own funds.

* * *

MRS. and Mr. (that's just the way Jack wrote it) Jack Alicoate postcard from Paris that they are having the time of their lives forgetting the worries of the "fillum" business. Jack, as you probably know, is one of the "props" of the W. K. Film Daily and recently bounded into fame as the author of the stage play, "Extra." It didn't stay long on Broadway, but at least genial Jack can say to the skeptics "I put something over, and I'll do it again." Wedding bells rang out their glad tidings for him recently when he took Gertrude Bambrick for his bride.

FIRST NATIONAL did itself proud last Wednesday night when it tendered a farewell dinner to Horace Judge at the Astor Hotel. The exploitation chief of F. N. sailed Saturday for London where he will spread the gospel of his company up and down Piccadilly, the Strand, Rotten Row, Trafalgar Square, Fleet Street and other highways and by-ways of the British capital. Horace was noticed registering deep feeling over the many eulogies paid in his honor. He gave mute testimony of his deep appreciation. His voice was choked with emotion but his eyes were eloquent.

TWO animal pictures and a drama were selected by the National Board of Review as worthy of the asterisk—namely, Metro's "Trailing African Wild Animals," Universal's "Hunting Big Game in Africa," and First National's "The Bright Shawl."

ALLOW us to give the retort courteous to First National and Inspiration for their exceptionally fine production, "The Bright Shawl," which might be an enlarged miniature so suggestive is it of a quaint old romance of yesterday. Adapted from Joseph Hergesheimer's vivid story of the same name which records the adventures of a patriotic Cuban family and their courageous American friend who enlisted his services for the cause, it comes to the screen like a breath of fresh air in Indian summer. The silversheet has never revealed a more beautiful production, nor one directed with such appreciation for its romantic glamour. It fairly exudes a fragrant charm which saturates the picture so that it glows like a May flower kissed by the sun and the dew.

The honors for making this such a memorable achievement rest with John Robertson, who can be trusted to create a moving story,—who has a firm grasp upon the technique of the photoplay,—who, when given a script, knows just what to accomplish in making it compelling to the eye and intriguing to mind.

The spectator sits back transported over the marvelous background and atmosphere. The spark of romance, the tingle of adventure embrace him so that Time and Worry are forgotten. He is thrust into the picturesque city of Havana for an hour. Years have slipped off his shoulders and he is revelling in this rich glorification of romance of the fifties. There is Richard Barthelmess faultlessly attired in the costume of the period and piloted through episodes of love and danger—who faces a tyrant and a temptress as a gentleman should. He charms you with his careless abandon when the net of intrigue is woven around him and wins your admiration for his courtesy with the ladies. And Dorothy Gish is a dashing, vivacious, capricious little hoyden who dances her way into his affection.

The scenes are richly colorful and thoroughly saturated with a glowing atmosphere. Everett Shinn, the art director, is responsible for these backgrounds, having reproduced them down to the most minute detail. Such a story, written by an expert story-teller, has been given to men thoroughly grounded in their art. The result is the production perfect.

ROBERT G. VIGNOLA will arrive in New York from his five months' world tour on April 27th, according to cable advices received this week by his personal representative.

Accompanied by his father, his sister, and Phil Carle, his assistant, all three of whom sailed from New York several weeks ago to meet him in Naples, Mr. Vignola will sail on the Aquitania from Southampton on April 21st which will bring him to New York on the 27th.

The director of "When Knighthood Was In Flower" has reduced his weight by fifteen pounds, according to the cable, and is full of pep and energy and ready to plung back into his work. Until his apartment is set in order he will make his temporary home at the New York Athletic Club of which he is a member.

Report Tabulates Fires in Film Shipments

Interesting Details Given Regarding Causes for Destruction in Transit

THE BUREAU OF EXPLOSIVES of the railroads of the United States has issued an interesting report regarding film fires while in transit in railroads and some of the causes which brought about the fires. The report covers a period from March, 1909, to June, 1921.

According to "Fire Prevention" of March, 1923, "The greatest single property damage reached $41,000 in a fire at Wilmer, Texas, and the most severe loss of life was in the Chicago car disaster of November 24, 1914." Here is the way these 29 fires occurred:

Damaged fiber board box. Possibly took fire from spark.

Fiber board box fell from an express truck under car wheel and was set on fire by friction or sparks.

Small fire in car reached films and this caused great damage.

Films in fiber board box took fire. Cause unknown. Box was not destroyed.

One leatheroid box and one wooden box loaded, near stove and radiators.

No interior containers used, merely packed in fiber board box. Sparks from dropping box ignited films.

Old fiber cases used, and were stored four feet from heated stove.

Four reels in paper wrapped package was placed on floor of combination baggage car and smoking coach by passenger. Evidently ignited by lighted match, cigar or cigarette.

Films inside metal box took fire, possibly from spark, cigar or cigarette.

Two wooden boxes loaded too near steam heated coils.

Fire either spontaneous origin or due to spark from match, cigar or cigarette.

In tin cans packed in trunks with other articles as show outfits, excess bagage took fire and exploded from fire originating in sodium peroxide in same shipment.

Fire of unknown origin spread to six boxes of films which had not been placed to permit ready removal in case of fire.

Films in metal box on express truck near heated stove caused fire.

Metal box of films falls from a rack in express car to door sill, about four inches, and took fire.

Forty metal boxes of film on auto truck took fire.

Ten wooden boxes of films involved in fire of unknown origin.

Box of films on express wagon noted smoking, and when opened films found destroyed.

Metal box of films noted smoking with hissing noise shortly after loading on wagon. Soft fiber lining of case became worn and probably allowed friction between metal spools and box.

A sealed baggage car of parcel post matter, including box of motion picture films destroyed by fire. Supposed spontaneous combustion. Steam in one end of car.

Box of films for export, fell from platform to wooden floor, distance of six inches when yellow smoke issued from box, films taking fire.

Fire of unknown origin involved parcel post shipment of motion picture films. The films were in end of car.

Defective packing (blamed by reports on fire). Two boxes of film not packed according to regulation, took fire, while being loaded. Probably due to worn defective fiber lining; leaving exposed metal, resulting in friction spark.

One metal box developed fire after being thrown into a wagon, either due to friction or instability of the films. Use of brass or aluminum spools and fittings would minimize fires if used in place of present steel fittings.

Parcel post shipment of film in mail storage car, loaded next to steam pipe caused fire. No evidence of outside box.

Inside of mail storage and 100 sacks of mail damaged by fire attributed to motion picture films in boxes.

Two boxes of motion picture films forwarded in mail storage car, contrary to post-office department rules. Fire badly damaging car and contents attributed to films.

Metallined box of film noticed smoking when placed on wagon. Fire destroyed shipment. A match may have been dropped in box during packing.

The majority of these cases, it is noted by fire protection, occurred in flagrant violation of good shipping sense, disregard of I. C. C. and post office department rules, and in careless handling of shipments.

Late Wire Briefs from the West Coast

SAM RORK has purchased the Cynthia Stockley story, "Ponjola" and has engaged Anna Q. Nilsson for the leading role. Charles Logue is now preparing the continuity. Production will start in three weeks.

Universal has contracted through Arthur H. Sawyer for the appearance of Barbara La Marr in one super-special with an all-star cast.

Richard Walton Tully has transferred his long term contract with Virginia Brown Faire to Associated First National.

Royal Palm Orchestra to Vie with Soup Strains at Naked Truth Dinner

EVERYTHING was all set for the A.M.P.A. to obtain the services of a well-known Broadway impresario and his company to furnish the music for the A.M.P.A's Naked Truth dinner at the Biltmore Hotel, April 28. The details were all arranged for the noted one to appear when the plans hit the long incline.

The details were vague and uncertain. The impresario had an invitation to play at the White House; he was considering a million dollar offer to conduct the music at a new motion picture palace now under construction and he was about to be tendered a dinner in his honor. Under such a nerve strain even so important an event as a Naked Truth dinner had to be sidetracked.

Into the breech jumped Herb Crooker, the A.M.P.A.'s genial fixer. As a result of his intervention, coupled with a lucky break of open dates, the advertising men have secured the services of the Royal Palm Orchestra, under the direction of James Parke, for their dinner. The boys of this orchestra are collegians who have obtained an enviable reputation in playing for dances and social functions around the city and are ranked among the highest musicians in semi-professional circles. Tom Wiley, financial fixer for the A.M.P.A. is sponsor for the statement that they are the highest.

The final meeting of the dinner committee will be held next Tuesday evening. It will be purely perfunctory, as all the plans have gone into execution a long time ago. Nine acts are at present being rehearsed in every available space, ranging from a fire escape to a hotel ballroom. Seven of the acts will be presented by A.M.P.A. members, while two are to be given by professional talent.

According to present indications every one of importance in the industry will attend, including Will Hays, the executive heads of all big producing and distributing companies, well-known exhibitors in the vicinity of New York, and representatives of all the trade papers.

Expert Praises Work of Arbitration Board

"It is both interesting and encouraging to learn that one of the newest of America's industries and at the same time one of the most important of our industries is settling its business difficulties by means of arbitration boards, rather than by recourse to the courts," said Dr. Samuel McCune Lindsay, acting president of the Arbitration Society of America, speaking at the dinner of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce.

"I have had the opportunity of observing the actual workings of the New York Arbitration Board, operating under the arbitration clause of the new mutual contract between distributors and exhibitors," Dr. Lindsay continued, "and it seemed to me to be conducted in excellent fashion. I listened to perhaps twenty cases. The testimony was brought out clearly, the arbiters (three distributors and three exhibitors) discussed it fairly, and the verdicts they rendered seemed to me to be real justice. And they must have been, for all the litigants were satisfied."

Dr. Lindsay said he had been escorted to the New York Arbitration Board by Will H. Hays, who was largely instrumental in working out the details of the new mutual contract, which contains, as one of its most important features, the arbitration clause.

N. Y. Printers Ask Aid to Repeal Censor Law

The Allied Printing Trades Council through its president, Peter J. Brady, has issued an appeal to motion picture theatre owners of New York State to bring pressure to bear upon political leaders and the assemblymen in their districts for the repeal of the censorship law for the abolishment of the Motion Picture Censorship Commission. The law has already passed the state Senate and is now awaiting action in the Assembly.

Elaborate Plans for the Monroe Centennial

Film Industry to Take Prominent Part; Screen Stars Touring Country for Exposition

PLANS for the holding of the Motion Picture Exposition and Monroe Centennial Celebration in Los Angeles from July 2nd to August 4th are rapidly taking definite form. From present indications it will prove the greatest celebration of its kind ever held, rivalling New York's celebration of the Hudson-Fulton Centennial in 1909. Located as it will be at the production center of the film industry in the United States, motion-picture interests are preparing to take a prominent part in the exposition's activities.

Ruth Roland

The Misses Ruth Roland and Madge Bellamy, the industry's representatives of the Centennial, have been busy during the past week carrying the message of the coming event to governmental executives in different parts of the country. Miss Roland, accompanied by Garrett Graham of the exposition's publicity department, first went to New Orleans from Los Angeles via the Southern Pacific Railroad and made stops at all the big centers en route to extend invitations to the Los Angeles jubilee this summer. From New Orleans Miss Roland came by water route aboard the Southern Pacific's steamship Momus to New York, where she personally presented Mayor Hylan with an invitation from Mayor Cryer, of Los Angeles.

Miss Bellamy, meanwhile, has been pursuing a busy itinerary in the East. The highlight of her week's activities has been an interview with President Harding and Mrs. Harding at the White House in Washington during the course of which she extended an invitation to the Centennial and received the chief executive's acceptance. At the same time the President posed for a motion picture, taken by Miss Bellamy with a gold inlaid camera which she is carrying with her on her tour in behalf of the exposition.

Last week Miss Bellamy attended a series of functions in New York City, the most important of which was a luncheon on Friday, April 13th, at the Hotel Astor, where she met representatives of the daily and trade press. In a leat little speech she informed the gathering of the coming celebration in Los Angeles and expressed her pleasure at meeting the members of the Metropolitan press. During her stay in New York, Miss Bellamy appeared at the International Travel Show and the annual dinner of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce. Leaving New York, Saturday, April 14, she went to Philadelphia, attending the fifth memorial service for the late Stanley V. Mastbaum. She then proceeded to Washington, thence to Baltimore, Harrisburg and Pittsburgh.

Meet Mrs. Raymond McKee and Ray himself. Mrs. McKee was Miss Marguerite Courtot until April 4th. Photo taken outside of the Little Church Around the Corner just after the ceremony. Both players were co-starred in Hodkinson's "Down to the Sea in Ships."

The exposition proper will occupy about twenty acres in the Exposition Park at Los Angeles. The great show to be given will be held in the Coliseum, which has just been completed there, and which has the largest auditorium in the world, seating 80,000 people. This monster stadium will be dedicated by the American Historical Revue and Motion Picture Exposition and the local budget calls for an expenditure of $300,000.

The events covering this dedication will require thirty days to stage all the various episodes in connection with the historical items with which the company has been identified in the past, such as the Discovery of America, the First English Settlement, the First Continental Congress, the Founding of the Army and Navy, the Birth of the American Flag, and the Declaration of Independence.

Arrangements are being made for daily peformances during the period of this month, and the Revue will be presented in tableaux, melodramatic, and pageant forms on the biggest stage ever built.

There will also be a water course, replete with water falls, electric fountains, and deep pools for fancy diving exhibitions. There will be hundreds of features representing appropriate novelties, and all the remarkable achievements which the mechanical genius and the moving picture experts will devise.

The celebrities of the film industry are to take part, and for this purpose a special day will be set aside in behalf of the Actors' Fund of America in which all the professional people of the West are interested, which will be especially under the direction and authority of Daniel Frohman, the President of the Fund, who has been promised the co-operation of all the moving picture organizations in California and the personal co-operation of the chiefs of the profession.

The event has already received the personal and official endorsement of the Government of California, the Mayor of Los Angeles, the City Council of Los Angeles, its Board of Supervisors and Chamber of Commerce, and the other business organizations of the Western city.

It has also been decided to award prizes to the participants in the Revue and Exposition, for their display of floats and items of parade. The opening parade is expected to be at least five miles long.

New York Bill Provides For Admitting Children

BILLS amending the penal law of the state to the extent that unaccompanied children under sixteen years of age, in New York City, may be admitted to the motion picture theatres of that city, under certain conditions, have now been introduced in both houses of the New York State Legislature, the companion bill having been introduced in the Assembly last Monday night by Assemblyman Steinberg, of New York City. It is generally conceded that the bill stands a fair chance of passage.

Amended Lien Bill Due For Early Passage

The bill which was introduced in the New York State Legislature some time ago, seeking to amend the lien law in relation to liens on motion picture films, will probably be passed this week, at least so far as the Senate is concerned.

The bill provides that persons and corporations operating motion picture laboratories shall have a lien on positive or negative prints in their possession, including the distribution and exhibition rights therein, and shall retain such film until the payment of any sum due from the owner is made.

The possession of motion picture films by any person delivering the same to a laboratory is to be presumptive evidence of the consent of the owner to the work which may have been done. No lien granted shall be waived or impaired by the taking of any note for money so due for the work and labor performed.

Pioneer Demonstrator of Kinetoscope Dead

The death has occurred at Ottawa, Ontario, of Andrew Holland, a pioneer resident of the Canadian capital and for years an official of the House of Commons staff. One of the prized possessions of the late Mr. Holland was a personal letter from Thomas A. Edison complimenting him on the success of the first demonstration of the Kinetoscope in New York City almost 30 years ago, the projection machine devised by Mr. Edison having been used by the Holland Bros. during the early days of moving pictures.

The deceased had also demonstrated Edison's projector in Canada and Australia. Mr. Holland introduced the use of the typewriter in several Canadian cities.

North Carolina Exhibitors Meet in June

THE annual convention of the M. P. T. O. of North Carolina will be held at the Oceanic Hotel, Wrightsville Beach, on June 28th, 29th and 30th, it was announced this week by Secretary Henry B. Varner. Hon. Will H. Hays will be invited to attend the convention and address the exhibitors of the state, and invitations will also be extended to the organizations of South Carolina and Virginia to send representatives.

Drastic Illinois Measure Proposed

Would Make Anything Illegal on Sunday But Sacred Concerts and Religion

ONE of the most drastic Blue Sunday measures ever submitted to a legislative body, was introduced unexpectedly in the Illinois State Senate, at Springfield, on April 12th, by Senator MacMurray, Chicago, and referred to Senate Committee on licenses and miscellany.

The terms of the bill are sweping and stringent and except for "sacred concerts and services of a moral or religious nature conducted in good faith by a religious organization" the bill would prohibit any form of paid Sunday entertainment.

All theatres, including moving picture houses, would be closed. Baseball, where admission is charged, would be forbidden. Pool and billiard halls and bowling alleys would be closed. Golf would be permitted, except on paid courses, but it would be an offense to hire a row boat in a public park, and picnics, where tickets are sold " or a free will offering accepted," would be prohibited.

This measure is said to have the backing of the Lord's Day Alliance and according to the Rev. Harry L. Bowlby, executive head of this organization, Illinois is one of ten states in which the Lord's Day Alliance is planning to clamp the lid on Sunday amusements this year. The other states are Tennessee, Arkansas, Alabama, Indiana, Wisconsin, New York, New Jersey, California and Oregon.

Reports from Springfield, the state capital, indicate that a bitter fight is in prospect over the measure, which is said to have been introduced only after careful preparation by the reform organizations, and on the other hand, already has aroused a storm of protest and indignation from people of all classes throughout Illinois.

The Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners already are making plans to take an active part in the fight on this unreasonable legislation and will co-operate with other bodies and individuals throughout the state.

F. Scott McBride, superintendent of the Illinois Anti-Saloon League, made the following statement in reference to the proposed situation: "Our organization wants it strictly understood that this proposed legislation is not part of our program and we have nothing to do with it."

Miss Jessie Binford, superintendent of the Juvenile Protective Association, said she did not "believe in such a law—it's too drastic."

"You cannot legislate righteousness into people's hearts," was the comment of Rev. R. Keene Ryan, pastor of the Garfield Park Presbyterian Church. "I am opposed to any Puritanical blue laws. Let the people rule!"

Chief of Detectives Hughes, of Chicago, points out that "taking liberties from people makes them dissatisfied and, therefore, lawless."

The great daily papers of Chicago have united in scathing editorial comment adverse to the proposed legislation and a wave of anti-restrictive law sentiment appears to be sweeping the state, but to combat the well organized efforts of the reform element, organization is necessary and leaders in motion picture circles and others are taking prompt measures to effect co-operative effort and unite against the measure.

Ohio Launches Lord's Day Alliance Fight

THE proposed open fight against the Lord's Day Alliance has already been inaugurated by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio. Four open warfare letters have already been sent each member of the House, Senate and Governor Vic Donahey.

The letters in each instance stated specific facts pertaining to the measures mentioned and in each case the methods of this organized faction of religious fanatics were exposed and attention was called to the fact that exhibitors were cooperating with all church bodies but were fighting a clique who presumed, without authority, to speak and act for all church members and were thus acting as political dictators with very little visible following as to actual numbers.

Non-Theatrical Chamber of Commerce Launched

The Motion Picture Chamber of Commerce of America (non-theatrical) was formally launched on Monday evening, April 9, at the club-rooms, in New York City, when a dinner-conference adopted a constitution proposed by a committee of five, consisting of William R. Kelley, Arthur James, Edward P. Earl, George Zehrung, and F. S. Wythe.

Sidney Morse, director of the bureau of social and educational service of the Masonic Grand Lodge, presided, and defined the new organization as "an organization of all non-theatrical interests in the motion picture industry, whether producers, distributors, or users of non-theatrical films, and whether for educational, scientific, industrial, commercial, or entertainment purposes; also makers of projectors, films or accessories."

One of the first tasks of the newly organized chamber will be to institute a nation-wide campaign for the repeal of restrictive and burdensome legislation, such as that which the Steingut Bill aims to eliminate in New York.

Forty-five organizations took part in the organization meeting.

New Companies Incorporate for N. Y. Business

During the past week, the following motion picture companies were incorporated in New York State, the amount of capitalization as well as the directors chosen for the first year being given: Standard Attractions, Inc., $1,000, Hyman Emerson, Abraham J. Eder, B. H. Berman, New York City; Cosmopolitan Playhouse, Inc., $10,000, L. I. Fink, M. L. Elkin, Etta London, New York; Border Amusement Company, Buffalo, $150,000. Charles Long, Tonawanda; R. J. Krotz, and J. T. Gilbert, Buffalo; Simrud Amusement Corporation, $5,000, Louis Kahn, D. S. Simons, Max Rudnick, New York; Louis F. Werba Corporation, $45,000, Louis F. Werba, Edward S. Golding, Harry Bryant, New York; Blyler Enterprises, Inc., $5,000, James and Jane Blyler, Belle Greene, New York; Arthur West Theatrical Enterprises, $60,000, William G. Lovatt, Sylvia Schwartzman, Arthur West, New York; John E. Coutts Tabloid Circuit, $10,000, J. E. Coutts, J. Girsdansky, New York.

Hot Fight Is Due on Six Per Cent Tax Bill

WITH the understanding that leaders of both parties are rather in sympathy with a bill introduced by Charles R. Miller, providing for a six per cent tax on gross receipts of all forms of amusements, those following motion picture legislation in New York state pricked up their ears the past week and will fight tooth and nail the bill which would exact hundreds of thousands of dollars from the theatres of the state if it became a law. The bill is said to assure receipts of at least five million dollars to the state each year. That nothing in the line of amusement is to escape is evident in one section of the bill, which states:

"and every other exhibition and contest and sports held in the state, shall be taxed."

There is a provision, however, to the end that amusements and sports for the benefit of educational and religious organizations are exempt.

Nothing occurred during the past week in connection with the censorship situation. The bill is still in the Assembly ways and means committee, and apparently no effort is being made to have it reported out.

Cohen Office Replies to Steffes' Statement

Statements attributed to W. A. Steffes, whose candidacy for the presidency of the M. P. T. O. A. at the Chicago convention is being boomed by Northwestern exhibitors, have brought forth a statement from the Sydney Cohen office in reply.

Steffes, at the Minneapolis convention last week, made an attack on what was termed Cohen's unauthorized severing of relations with Will H. Hays and also criticized the manner in which the national organization was run.

The statement from the Cohen office reads in part:

"We are in thorough accord with Mr. Steffes in working for the interests of exhibitors. Mr. Steffes himself voted with the other members of the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to reject the Hays contract and asked us to register him accordingly. If that is the break with Mr. Hays that Mr. Steffes has referred to then he was a party to the break. As to Mr. Steffes' criticism of the current issue of Exhibitors' Bulletin as an example of camouflaged mudslinging we have only this to say. The Bulletin is an honest discussion of exhibitor problems in the light of present-day events in New York City and other large centers based on information received from state and regional gatherings and from exhibitors in all parts of the United States.

"No accusation whatever has ever been made against the Minnesota unit of our national organization which we regard as one of the live active elements of exhibitor organization. The attitude assumed by Mr. Steffes in regard to the Hays contract may or may not reflect the opinion of his fellow exhibitors in Minnesota and after all matters of that kind must stand or fall on the question of fact. There never was a time when Mr. Steffes or any other official of the national organization or a state organization or any exhibitor in the United States was not entirely welcome at national headquarters, particularly so when constructive thought helpful to the independent theatre owners of the country might result from same."

First National Officers Named for Year at Atlantic City

ELECTION of officers constituted the chief business of the second day's session of the annual meeting of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., at the Ritz Carlton, Atlantic City Wednesday.

Sol Lesser of Los Angeles was elected first vice-president, succeeding J. B. Clark of Pittsburgh, who was added to the board of voting trustees, vice Fred Dahnken of San Francisco. All other officers and trustees were re-elected. The list follows:

President, Robert Lieber; secretary-treasurer, H. O. Schwalbe; first vice-president, Sol Lesser; second vice-president, John H. Kunsky of Detroit; third vice-president, Jacob Fabian of Paterson, N. J.; voting trustees, J. G. Von Herberg, Seattle; M. L. Finkelstein, Minneapolis; Robert Lieber, Indianapolis; J. B. Clark, Pittsburgh, and Nathan Gordon, Boston. The vacancy in the board of voting trustees was created by the purchase by Sol Lesser and his associates of the Turner and Dahnken interests in Northern California.

Addresses at the morning session were made by Joseph M. Schenck and Dr. A. H. Giannini of the Bank of Italy, N. Y. Will H. Hays spoke at the banquet in the evening.

Chinese Protest Picture Exaggerations

The Chinese Students' Club, of Ohio State University, Columbus, O., has made a protest to the Ohio department of film censorship of Ohio against alleged exaggerations of native Chinese life, to be found in many modern motion picture productions.

In the protest, which came in the form of a formal communication with the censorship offices, the club stated that these exaggerations prejudice the American mind unfavorably toward Chinese people and civilization.

Kansas Convention Subscribes Funds

Exhibitors Raise $5,000 in Opening Session for Support of Organization

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas literally assumed a new lease on life at the semi-annual convention in Wichita, Kansas, Monday and Tuesday. A fund of $5,000 to support the organization was raised in such a short period of time that it surprised even those in charge. An additional fund of $700 also was subscribed to fight the music tax.

The consolidation of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas and Western Missouri was left to a committee appointed to confer with the Missouri committee at the national convention at Chicago. The Kansas committee consists of: R. R. Biechele, Kansas City, Kansas; M. D. Shanberg, Hutchinson, Kansas; E. E. Frazier, Pittsburg, Kansas; A. F. Baker, Kansas City, Kansas; and Stanley Chambers, Kansas City, Kansas.

Only one resolution introduced failed to pass, that being a resolution endorsing the exhibitors' distributing corporation. It was tabled as it was felt exhibitors were not sufficiently familiar with the proposition and it was desired to await future developments.

R. G. Liggett unanimously was re-elected to his second term as president. Other officers elected: First Vice-President R. R. Biechele, Kansas City; Second Vice-President Harry McClure, Emporia; Third Vice-President I. E. Runyon, Hutchinson; Fourth Vice-President A. Davidson, Neodesha; Secretary C. N. Smith, Kansas City; Treasurer Fred Mein, Kansas City.

The board of directors was changed to seven men instead of five, the following being elected: M. B. Shanberg, Hutchinson; Stanley Chambers, Wichita; A. F. Baker, Kansas City; Harry McClure, Emporia; R. R. Biechele, Kansas City; J. B. Tackett, Coffeeyville, and G. L. Hooper, Topeka.

A talk which will serve as a precedent, and which was cheered to the roof of the Broadview Hotel was made by Captain C. L. MacLean, superintendent of the Kansas State Industrial School for Boys and state commander of the American Legion.

"There is not a boy in my school, or one in one thousand that is there as a result of motion picture shows," Captain MacLean said. "Juvenile delinquency never comes as a result of attending motion picture shows. As superintendent of an institution which handles 'bad boys' I never have found a case where a boy's delinquency could be traced directly or indirectly to attending picture shows. I regard the films which are used as part of the educational program in my school just as I have as many instructors."

A tie-up with the Kansas State Parent-Teacher Association also is of significant importance. In a talk before the convention, Mrs. Z. Wetmore, national committeewoman of the parent-teacher association and state chairwoman of the state organization, urged that inserts in exhibitors' advertising stating that the production had been endorsed by the parent-teacher association be used.

The Kansas body in the future will be a closed organization serving only exhibitors who are paid-up members. Well-equipped headquarters will be established in Kansas City and the organization operated upon a strictly business plan.

A. A. Kiplan and H. H. Kipald of the Minnesota exhibitors' organizations attended the convention, but were not speakers.

The banquet Monday night was attended by 150 and was the most elaborate setting ever staged, it being sponsored by the exchange men of Kansas City.

These delegates to the National convention were named: E. E. Frazier, Pittsburg; R. R. Biechele, Kansas City; S. A. Davidson, Neodesha; Stanley Chambers, Wichita; G. A. Kubaugh, Abilene; L. A. Wagner, Eureka; C. M. Patee, Lawrence; M. B. Shanberg, Hutchinson. Alternates: H. L. Gees, Mulberry; William Meyn, Kansas City; Fred Mein, Kansas City; Lee Gunnison, Atchison; G. L. Hooper, Topeka; Willard Frazier, Paola; H. P. Warham, Manhattan; I. E. Runyon, Hutchison.

Illinois M. P. T. O. Hold Annual Convention and Name Board of Directors

MEMBERS of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners met at the Sherman Hotel, Chicago, April 18th and 19th for the annual convention of the association. President Rubens, who refused to consider a re-election, was in the chair and important amendment to by-laws and election of directors occupied the first day's session.

An amendment proposed by W. D. Burford was adopted which provided for the election of twenty-seven directors, sixteen to be from territory outside Cook County and eleven from Cook County, the board to meet within forty-eight hours and elect the president and other officers of the state organization. A second amendment was adopted giving members one vote for each theatre when more than one is owned by members and dues for theatre paid up.

The debate was heated but feeling prevailed that voting power would be an inducement to chain theatre men to join the organization and would not give them undue influence.

The directors elected were Ben Berve, W. D. Burford, Adam Dernbach, J. F. Dittman, Kenneth Fitzpatrick, Felix Greenberg, Joe Hopp, Chas. Lamb, J. C. Miller, Wm. Olson, Wm. Pearl, Charles Pyle, Glenn Reynolds, Dee Robinson, J. H. Rubins, and W. W. Watts from outside Chicago, and Sam Abrams, C. E. Beck, Leo Brunheld, Geo. D. Hopkinson, Andrew Karzas, V. Lynch, H. C. Newell, Ludwig Siegel, Mike Seigel, John Silha, and Sidney Selig from Chicago.

Wednesday night a large get-together dinner was the big feature. Three hundred exhibitors and exchange men gathered round the tables in the Tiger Room and enjoyed the speeches and entertainment. J. J. Rubns was toastmaster and kept the crowd laughing by his clever boosting for the forthcoming Palace of Motion Picture Progress.

In the second day of the convention a notable array of out-of-town speakers, including Messrs. Sydney Cohen, Al Steffes, W. J. O'Toole, Theodore Hayes, Woodhull and others were scheduled to appear and lively sessions were anticipated as the uniform contract, music tax and the National Association's record were also to be taken up on the floor of the convention.

Memorial Service Held for Royale Rothermel

Memorial services for Royale Valray Rothermel, organizer and former president of the Filmcraft Association and prominently identified with the motion picture world from its inception, who died last February at the family's Western home in Tucson, Ariz., were held Thursday evening at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in West 69th Street, Rev. Nathan Seagle, rector, officiating.

The church was filled with friends, including the fraternity brethren of the deceased from Pi Kappa Alpha chapter of Alpha-Upsilon of New York University.

Mr. Rothermel, who during the past year made his home in Greenwich Village, was an influential and rising figure in the motion picture world when he gave up his brilliant prospects to fight in the great World War. At Brest his health became impaired and he steadily declined until the end came at Tucson.

Steffes Heads Minnesota M.P.T.O.

Large Gathering Attends Annual Session and Many Resolutions Are Enacted

PRESIDENT AL STEFFES and vice-president Theodore Hayes, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Minnesota were re-elected by acclamation at the closing session of that state's annual convention on April 12th.

Clyde Hitchcock was elected secretary and Fred Holzapfel treasurer, the vote in every case being unanimous.

A large crowd attended the closing banquet, which was held at the Hotel West, and was marked by cheers for Al Steffes for national president, but the fighting president of the Minnesota organization refused to make a formal statement of his candidacy.

The Minnesota division passed many resolutions at their session, among the principal of which was the one regarding the music situation. Steps are to be taken to effect a compromise of matters in dispute between its members and the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers.

It was resolved that members be urged to make no individual settlement of the controversy, but that all such matters be handled by the association. It was proposed to take immediate steps to secure the co-operation of legitimate theatres, hotels, cafes, bands and orchestras in the matter. Terms of the compromise are to be left up to the association.

In order to explain to non-members of the association the many constructive movements and accomplishments of the body it was resolved that every member be pledged to call upon non-members and ask their aid in subscribing to the fund now being raised to finance the organization.

Based upon financial conditions resulting from depressed prices in farm products a resolution was passed urging producers and distributors to revise quotas now imposed upon pictures distributed in the territory.

Among other resolutions passed were those advocating clean films, community co-operation, limiting features to five and not over seven reels, showing one or more short subjects on each program, and engaging the services of a competent person to act as secretary and organizer of the association.

Hays Introduces Films Into Schools

THE Will H. Hays office recently introduced films into school class rooms for educational purposes, which should be a welcome piece of news to motion picture exhibitors. These films will not compete in any way with those shown in theatres.

One exhibitor aptly spoke as follows: "We will not have competition from the class-room films, but actual assistance, I believe. In this manner, the school children, becoming used to motion pictures with their lessons, will seek motion pictures for entertainment outside of school hours. The fact that school children have to read lesson books in the class-rooms does not decrease, but rather increases their desire for reading —only when they seek reading after school the type they choose is that which entertains them. So it will be with the films, I believe; and I really think the introduction of motion pictures into the schools will make for us millions of new fans."

At the meeting in the Hays office, which was between a committee of educators and a committee of producers, the latter group offered to the teachers $5,000 with which to begin experimental work. The gift was accepted and the work will begin at once.

Sydney S. Cohen Serves Notice on Music License

In a letter addressed to the American Society of Authors, Composers, and Publishers under the date of April 12th, Sydney Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. of A., serves notice of the termination of any agreements that he may have had with that organization. After calling attention of the publishing concern to the expiration "a long time ago" of his music license arrangement, he writes:

"As a result of my study of the situation and from my interviews with hundreds of people throughout the United States, including not alone exhibitors but legislators and the Government's legal experts and other persons holding both private and public office. I have concluded that the monopolistic control of which you now boast as the justification for the extension of your society, not only has earned the condemnation of all fair thinking people but will soon reap its just reward in suitable legislation which will prevent in the future any repetition of your methods of oppression, supplemented by your system of espionage."

Alleged Fake Operator Is Taken in Canada

F. J. Halsey, who was arrested in Toronto, recently, on a warrant issued by the Kitchener police, and who is also wanted in Guelph, Canada, in connection with the operation of what is alleged to have been a fake motion picture advertising scheme in which the name of William A. Johnston, publisher of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, was fraudulently used, was taken to Guelph, from Kitchener, by Provincial Constable Mennie last week and charged with obtaining money to the amount of $30 from George Wallace, a local clothier.

As Crown Attorney Kearns was not ready to proceed with the case, Halsey was held without bail. It is said the accused is also wanted in Kingston, Woodstock and Oshawa on similar charges.

Finest of China Cinema Houses Completed

Just at the time of the announcement by the Commerce Department of the increasing utilization of industrial motion pictures to exploit American products, the department received news of the completion of a new cinema theatre, reputed not only the largest in Shanghai, but perhaps the finest in China.

Many American firms now appreciate the beneficial influence of the screen in promoting new and mutually helpful international trade relations. The China organizations of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce offers film laboratories, makers of industrial film and users of industry and trade promotion films its services and advice in securing efficient distribution in China. American films predominate to the extent of eighty per cent.

Industry Golfers Display Form in Coast Event

Seventy golfers of the film industry at Los Angeles heeded the call of President Nat Deverich, and Secretary J. C. Jessen, and attended the second handicap tournament of the Motion Picture Golf Association, held at the California Country Club at Culver City, on Sunday, April the 8th. The following are the gross, handicaps and net scores of players under the eighty mark:

Baby Hardy	89—26—63
William Farnum	92—24—68
Colin Kinney	95—24—71
Al Crowley	87—16—71
Wid Gunning	93—22—71

The permanent low gross trophy, the Larry Semon cup, won in the first tournament by L. H. Beuhl, was awarded to Johnny Mescall, cameraman of the Goldwyn Company, whose low gross was eighty-four, he having taken the first half in forty-two, and repeated the performance on the second half in the same number of strokes. Second low gross has not been awarded, as three tied for this trophy, a cup given by MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Mike Farley, Assistant Director at Fox studios, Edward Hawks, of Hawks-Morosco productions, and Al Crowley, Exploitation Director for the Los Angeles Goldwyn exchange, all made gross scores of eighty-seven.

The winner of the lowest is Babe Hardy, scenario writer and comedian of the Vitagraph-Semon Company, who played far ahead of his usual game. The second low net was won by William Farnum, who receives the cup given by Sam and Jack Warner.

In the afternoon prizes were offered to the best ball of each foursome and these were won by Harry Beaumont, A. D. Ripley, Jene Hornbostel, Walter Hall, Wallace MacDonald, George Ovey, Richard Schayer, Brandon Hurst, Clyde Cook, Mike Farley, Slim Summerville and Sam Warner.

Builder of Knickerbocker Files Suit Demurrer

Frank L. Wagner, builder of the Knickerbocker theatre, Washington D. C., filed on Thursday last, a demurrer in District Supreme Court, to the suits brought by legal representatives of Jacob Urdong, local merchant, and his wife, Rose Urdong, victims of the tragedy.

Wagner avers that the declarations seeking to hold him and others connected with the building's construction as responsible for collapse of the building, due to the fall of the roof, not only fail to show the cause of action but show no specific negligence on his part.

Samuel Goldwyn Signs With First National

Deal Closed For Series Of Fitzmaurice Productions, Also, "Potash and Perlmutter"

AFTER months of rumor and no little anticipation, First National has closed a contract with Samuel Goldwyn for a series of George Fitzmaurice productions and the motion picture version of "Potash and Perlmutter."

The production of "Potash and Perlmutter," will be the first release under the new agreement.

The negotiations which terminated in the signing of a contract have been under way for many weeks, during which Mr. Goldwyn was given every opportunity to study First National's distribution system. The deal was not closed until he had been thoroughly convinced of the facilities offered for the marketing of motion pictures.

During the past year, Mr. Goldwyn has been laying plans for active participation in the motion picture business on a scale that, it is said, will surpass even his earlier activities. He is credited with having interested more authors of importance in writing for the screen than any other producer.

Mr. Goldwyn was among the first to recognize the need for great stories in pictures, handled by directors of big capacity. His first step in his new enterprise was the engagement of George Fitzmaurice. His second was the acquisition of the screen rights to Montague Glass' play, "Potash and Perlmutter."

It is announced that Mr. Fitzmaurice's initial production will be one of Hall Caine's most popular stories, exteriors for which will be made in the vicinity of Rome, Italy. Barbara La Marr, Montague Love and other prominent actors will be sent overseas to make exteriors for this picture, planned as a super-special.

Ouida Bergere, who has written the continuities for practically all of Mr. Fitzmaurice's greatest productions will prepare the script for the Hall Caine story and for those to follow.

Coincident with the distribution of the film, 700 newspapers throughout the English-speaking countries will carry topical articles by Montague Glass introducing Potash and Perlmutter. Also Mr. Goldwyn's serial story, "Behind the Scenes," now running in The Pictorial Review will appear in approximately 1,300 daily newspapers syndicated by the United Press.

In speaking of the contract just closed, Richard Rowland, general manager of Associated First National, said, "We are highly gratified at securing the Samuel Goldwyn-George Fitzmaurice productions in which we have every confidence. It would be difficult to find a better producer-director combination than Mr. Goldwyn and Mr. Fitzmaurice.

"In the George Fitzmaurice photoplays, we are assured of pictures of extraordinary merit. Mr. Fitzmaurice will be given every facility for the making of great productions."

Goldwyn Will Distribute "The Last Moment"

The new J. Parker Read, Jr., production, "The Last Moment," an original screen story by Jack Boyle, has been acquired by Goldwyn Distributing Corporation for early release.

Mr. Read, unable to find just the right motion picture stars at liberty for the three leading roles, had recourse to the Broadway stage and picked three young stars—Henry Hull, Doris Kenyon, and Louis Wolheim.

Other members of the cast are Louis Calhearn, William Nally, Mickey Bennett, Harry Allen, Donaly Hall, Danny Hayes, Jerry Peterson and Robert Hazelton.

Chas. Furthmann Joins Universal Scenario Staff

Charles Furthmann has been assigned to the post of associate editor in Universal City's scenario department, in which capacity he will serve as an assistant to Editor-in-Chief Raymond L. Schrock.

The above scenes will give an idea of some of the settings and situations to be found in Edwin Carewe's elaborately staged film version of "The Girl of the Golden West." Distribution will be by First National.

Jail Looms for Breach of Ohio Censor Laws

The bill of Representative J. H. T. Gordon, which would have removed the jail sentence penalty for the violation of Ohio's motion picture censorship laws, and, which would have increased the fines imposed for such infractions, has been vetoed by Governor Vic Donahey of Ohio.

Those who supported the bill when passed in the legislature declared it necessary because under the present law convictions were few, due to the jail sentence clause, while objection was raised on the ground that the bill will permit imposition of fines without jury trial.

The Governor of Ohio declared that while increased fines were provided, ranging from $25 to $300 for the first offenses, and from $300 to $500 for subsequent offenses, he regarded the new proposal as making the restrictions less stringent than under the former statute.

Waldemar Young Is Elected Writers' Guild Head

Waldemar Young was elected president of the Screen Writers' Guild of the Authors' League of America at the annual election at the Writers' Club recently. Elmer Harris was named vice-president; Richard Willis, treasurer; and Arthur F. Statter, secretary. The foregoing with the following constitute the board of directors:

Milton Schwartz, Jack Cunningham, June Mathis, Percy Heath, Grant Carpenter, Charles Kenyon and Frank E. Woods.

Members of the council board elected for three years include Mary O'Conner, Frances Marion, Elmer Rice, Eugene W. Prisby, Harry Carr, Ralph Block, Rupert Hughes, Lionel Belmore, and Montague Glass.

Universal Buys W. Somerset Maugham's "Magician"

Universal announces the purchase of screen rights for W. Somerset Maugham's popular novel "The Magician,"

The plot concerns a young doctor who saves the life of a brilliant and beautiful woman through a miraculous operation. They fall in love but their romance is interrupted by the sinister machinations of a hypnotist.

Universal plans to make an all-star Jewel production from this story. Maugham will be called into consultation in its adaptation to the screen.

Goodman Secures Stars for Feature

Daniel Carson Goodman announces he has signed three stars for his next production for Equity Pictures Corporation. They are Mary Carr. Mildred Harris and Charles Emmet Mack. He contemplates engaging six other luminaries as the production progresses.

The services of Charles Emmet Mack were secured through the consent of D. W. Griffith.

F. B. O. Will Distribute Anti-Dope Picture

THE Ince anti-dope picture starring Dorothy Davenport Reid and supported by James Kirkwood, titled "Human Wreckage," will be distributed by F. B. O., according to plans just consummated by P. A. Powers and Mr. Ince.

Seastrom Names Mae Busch for Leading Role

Mae Busch has been selected by Victor Seastrom, to play Mollie, one of the three leading roles in Mr. Seastrom's picturization of Sir Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man." This will be Mr. Seastrom's first American production under his contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

The Swedish director has been at the Goldwyn studios for the past four or five weeks, reading manuscripts, novels and plays and seeing various screen players.

Mr. Seastrom, Vice-President Abraham Lehr and Casting Director Robert B. McIntyre are now interviewing players for the other leading roles in the Hall Caine story.

Paul Bern, formerly Goldwyn's editor-in-chief, is making rapid progress in the preparation of the continuity.

Rob't Mantell in Richelieu Role for Cosmopolitan

Robert Mantell has been engaged by the Cosmopolitan Corporation to play the role of Cardinal Richelieu in "Under the Red Robe," in place of Tyrone Powers, who was originally announced for the part. "Under the Red Robe," a picturization of Stanley Weyman's famous story of the same name, is now in production at the Tilford studio on West Forty-fourth street. John Charles Thomas and Alma Rubens are featured. Alan Crosland is directing from the scenario of Bayard Veiller.

Stahl Engages Marie Prevost and Robt. Ellis

Marie Prevost and Robert Ellis have been engaged by John M. Stahl for leading roles in his newest Louis B. Mayer production for First National release. This news, just received from the Coast, is accompanied by the announcement that the actual filming of the picture will be started this week.

Cincinnati Lyric Sold to Group Interests

The theatrical pool combining the Keith interests and those of John Harris, of Pittsburgh, and I. Libson, of Cincinnati, has completed a deal for the purchase of the Lyric theatre building in Cincinnati. Ben L. Heidingsfeld, Cincinnati attorney, on his return from New York after holding conferences with E. F. Albee, president of the B. F. Keith circuit, announced that the property has been taken over in his name.

The future policy of both the theatre and the office building has not yet been decided upon, Mr. Heidingsfeld said.

The theatre, which has been in litigation for some time, is being operated temporarily by I. Libson as a moving picture house. Although the purchase price could not be learned, it is said to be in the neighborhood of $1,000,000.

"The Bright Shawl" Will Open at N. Y. Strand

"The Bright Shawl," a John S. Robertson production starring Richard Barthelmess and presented by Inspiration Pictures, will have its Metropolitan premiere at the Strand theatre on Broadway on Sunday, April 22, according to an announcement from First National, which is distributing the picture.

Joseph Hergesheimer, author of "Tol'able David," is responsible for "The Bright Shawl." Edmund Goulding adapted the story to the screen, and John S. Robertson, director of "Sentimental Tommy" and "Tess of the Storm Country," was behind the megaphone. In the leading feminine role is seen Dorothy Gish.

Sword and Archery Instruction for Screen Players

A fencing gallery as well as an archery field has been added to the equipment of the Thomas H. Ince studios to accommodate the Associated Authors company which is filming "Richard, the Lion Hearted," a screen adaptation of Sir Walter Scott's classic, "The Talisman," for release through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation. An expert has been engaged to train members of the company in swordsmanship, while a small army of extras are learning to handle cross-bows for the spectacular scenes of the fight staged at Joppa, Palestine, by the Crusaders and the Saracen infidels.

"Master of Woman" New Releasing Title

"The Master of Woman" has been selected by Louis B. Mayer as the releasing title for Reginald Barker's new picture for Metro, now being produced under the book name of "The Law Bringers." Written by G. B. Lancaster, the novel was prepared in scenario form by Monte M. Katterjorn.

Vera James in Supporting Cast of Wm. Desmond

Vera James has been cast in a role supporting William Desmond in "McGuire of the Big Snows," which Richard Stanton is directing. It is a secondary feminine role; Louise Lorraine plays the lead opposite Desmond.

Indiana Governor Against Censors

Declares "Specified Regulation" Creates Desire to See Taboo Pictures

GOVERNOR WARREN T. McCRAY of Indiana is definitely on record against "specified regulation" of the photoplay industry.

In a brief speech at a luncheon of the Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays during the annual meeting in Indianapolis last Friday week he declared that he did not favor "specified regulation" of motion pictures because he felt that to forbid folk from seeing things was to create a desire to see them.

The Governor never has had an opportunity to act officially on censorship, but his statement is taken here to indicate what he would do with a censorship bill should one come before him. In the last two sessions of the Indiana legislature censorship advocates have met with decisive defeat, chiefly because of efforts of women comprising the Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays. Their creed is that the best way to get clean movies for their families is to indorse the good in monthly bulletins and ignore the bad.

Jason N. Joy of New York, executive secretary of the committee on public relations of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, praised the work of the indorsers at the Friday session.

Miss Julia Landers, head of the visual education department of the Indianapolis public schools, praised the indorsers' idea and strongly censured censorship.

"Boosting good things instead of advertising bad things is the right idea," declared Miss Landers.

Thomas Meighan was the guest of the convention Thursday afternoon and evening. He declared he had "never earned a dollar by appearing in an immoral or off-color play," and scored censorship because of the ruin it does to really great pictures. C. C. Pettijohn, counsel for the Hays' organization, also spoke.

Mrs. Fred L. Pettijohn of Indianapolis was unanimously re-elected president. Other officers chosen were: Mrs. David Ross, Indianapolis, first vice-president; Dr. Edna Hatfield, Edmondson, Bloomington, second vice-president; Miss Arthur Twining, Ft. Wayne, third vice-president; Mrs. Wolf Sussman, Indianapolis, fourth vice-president; Mrs. Bloomfield Moore, Indianapolis, corresponding secretary; Mrs. O. C. Lukenbill, Indianapolis, treasurer; and Mrs. Francis Ake, Indianapolis, recording secretary.

Helpful to Exhibitors Who Would Help Themselves

HERE is a lot of truth back of the statement contained in a letter from James H. Patterson, Lo-Net theatre, Wellington, Ohio. He writes: "The Booking Guide is exceedingly helpful to any exhibitor who is willing to help himself BY USING IT."

It will not be news to the thousands of exhibitors who have profited by adopting the valuable suggestions published in each issue, but it should prove food for thought for the theatre-owners who have given it passing attention.

A physician would be of little use to a sick man, if the patient merely looked at the medicine prescribed. It might do a lot of good, but it has to be taken to find out just how much.

It took science some time to find out the various effects of chemicals on certain ailments. Motion Picture News has had years of experience in publishing a paper for exhibitors. This experience has been used in compiling the BOOKING GUIDE. Suggestions from exhibitors have also played a great part in its make-up.

The leading showmen of the country have devised ways of exploiting pictures. THE BOOKING GUIDE tells when they appeared in THE NEWS.

Profit by their ideas—USE THE GUIDE.

Elaborate Presentation for "Covered Wagon" on Coast

The presentation was a feature of the premiere of "The Covered Wagon" at Grauman's Hollywood Egyptian theatre on Tuesday, April 10th. Sid Grauman was in personal charge of the staging of the Paramount special. An elaborate prologue was greeted with special approval and excited widespread comment.

The overture consisted of our grand-parents' favorite airs. Colonel J. T. McCoy introduced some twenty-five Arapahoe Indian chiefs, squaws and warriors, who were brought to Los Angeles from the reservation in Montana especially for their appearance in the prologue. Previous to the presentation of the prologue an Indian maiden sang Cadman's "From the Land of the Sky-Blue Water." "Pioneer Days" was the name given the prologue, which opened with Indians in the foreground in camp getting their first glimpse of the gigantic train of prairie schooners coming over the mountains in the distance. After the covered wagons approached the Indians departed. Scarcely had they left when the advance guard arrived and made camp. Four big prairie schooners with four horses each moved across the stage prior to the establishment of camp. The fifty odd participated in a Virginia reel and in singing and extending thanks for their safety thus far.

Fisher Productions Organize on the Coast

Announcement was made this week of the formation of Fisher Productions, which plans to enter the independent ranks of producers. The new concern has engaged studio space at the Hollywood studios and commenced the assembly of a technical force and a cast for their first production. Three productions a year are announced.

The officers are: Aaron L. Jaffe, prominent San Francisco manufacturer, president; S. L. Blake, formerly affiliated with the Anglo-California Trust Company of San Francisco, secretary; and Victor B. Fisher, treasurer.

Among the players already signed by the Fisher Productions is Virginia Lee Corbin, who will head an all-star cast in the company's initial production.

Karachi, India, Contracts for U. S. Pictures

A recent report from Consul Aura M. Warren in Karachi states that a contract has been concluded between Madans, Ltd., motion picture distributors in India, and a well-known American motion picture corporation, for the exhibition of American motion pictures in Karachi.

Goldwyn Signs Lew Cody to Long Contract

LEW CODY'S acting in Goldwyn's Rupert Hughes picture of Hollywood life, "Souls for Sale" has won him a long-term contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. He will begin work for that concern again as soon as he completes a contract with another firm. Cody was an actor on the speaking stage before entering pictures, having acted in stock and repertoire companies.

Goldwyn also announces that it has executed a contract with Edmund Lowe by the terms of which it acquires the services of that young actor. He will be cast in important roles in some of the corporation's big forthcoming productions.

No announcement has yet been made as to which picture Mr. Lowe will first be cast in.

Charles O'Reilly Lauded at Installation Dinner

Charles L. O'Reilly heard a lot of nice things said about him at the installation dinner of the T. O. C. C. held at the Ritz last Thursday. Both as an individual and as newly elected president of the organization he was lauded.

Harry Reichenbach, as usual, waxed eloquent as well as humorously. Will H. Hays paid high tribute to the new head of the New York exhibitors, as did Charles Pettijohn.

Dancing followed the dinner and added gaiety to the party, as did the appearance of several vaudeville stars.

S. Carolina Puts Through Ten Per Cent. Tax Bill

After the regular session of the South Carolina General Assembly had adjourned, word went out that the motion-picture industry had escaped the proposed 10 per cent admission tax, and it was with genuine consternation that leaders of exhibitor circles learned a few days later that the measure was rushed through its three readings under a suspension of rule during the last day and is now a law and is going to be enforced unless it can be repealed through a special session of the Legislature.

It was believed that the bill had been tabled and would not come up again, but the dire need of the state for additional funds led to its revival during the last moments and it was railroaded through without giving those interested an opportunity for a hearing, it is said.

There is only one slim chance of escaping it and that is appeal to a board which is to be named by the Governor to hear complaints on the different provisions of the sales tax bill. Efforts are already being made to present a strong batch of arguments regarding its unjustness immediately upon the naming of this board by the Governor.

Loew-Metro Club Names New Officers

In the election of officers of the Loew-Metro Club, held Tuesday afternoon in the executive offices of Loew's, Inc., Colonel J. E Brady was chosen as president; David Loew, vice-president; Rose Quimby, recording secretary; David Blum, financial secretary and Charles Quick, treasurer.

A board of governors elected includes Paul Berger, Charles Sonin, J. T. Mills, Charles K. Stern, Len Cohen, David Loew and Max Wolff. More than 250 members were present.

Goldwyn's Cosmopolitan Releases

"Enemies of Women" and "Little Old New York" Head Fifteen Productions

FIFTEEN pictures produced by Cosmopolitan Productions will be distributed for next season in conjunction with the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. This release list follows the merger for distribution recently consummated by William Randolph Hearst and F. J. Godsol.

"Enemies of Women" now enjoying a run at the Central theatre and Marion Davies in "Little Old New York" will be the first two releases. The list of productions follows:

Marion Davies in "Alice of Old Vincennes," by Maurice Thompson.

"The Helmet of Navarre," by Bertha Runkle, with Bert Lytell.

"The Garden of Peril," by Cynthia Stockley.

New Stories Purchased for Talmadge Sisters

Joseph M. Schenck this week announces the purchase of two stories for production in the near future with Norma and Constance Talmadge as the respective stars.

"Secrets," a Broadway stage success now running at the Fulton Theatre with Margaret Lawrence in the featured role, will serve as a vehicle for Norma, and Constance will appear in "Barbara Winslow, Rebel," from the novel by Elizabeth Ellis, an English authoress.

Holbrook Blinn to Appear in "The Bad Man"

Holbrook Blinn, who starred in "The Bad Man" during its run on Broadway two seasons ago and on the road since, will appear in the same part in Edwin Carewe's screen production of the play, which will be distributed through First National. The announcement that Blinn has been secured to interpret the stellar role was made by Carewe before leaving Los Angeles for Atlantic City, where he will attend the First National convention.

Some moments taken from the First National release titled "Within the Law," in which Joseph M. Schenck presents Norma Talmadge in the starring role Bobby Vernon in scenes from "Take Your Choice," an Educational-Christie comedy.

Goulding Completes Script of "Broadway after Dark"

Edmund Goulding, who was engaged by the Warner Brothers to adapt several plays, has completed the script of "Broadway After Dark," which will be produced under the supervision of Harry Rapf, for the Warner organization. This production will, in all probability, be used as a starring vehicle for Marie Prevost. No director, however, has been assigned to direct the picture.

Mr. Goulding was personally selected by David Belasco to adapt the Belasco stage success, "Tiger Rose," which will feature Lenore Ulric. He has already started work on the adaptation. Sidney Franklin will direct the production, the actual shooting of which will begin on or about the first of June.

Donald Crisp Back in U. S. as Paramount Director

After two years in England, Director Donald Crisp is back in the United States and on his way to California where he will remain until about the middle of May. He has signed a new contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and will be back in New York in June to direct Elsie Ferguson in "Declassee," the recent stage success which will be made into a Paramount picture at the Long Island studio.

At the London studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which has now been closed, he directed "The Bonnie Brier Bush," "Appearances" and "The Princess of New York."

William Russell Feature Fox Current Release

THE Fox Film Corporation program for the week of April 23d contains a William Russell feature, an Al St. John special two-reeler, and a Sunshine Comedy.

"Boston Blackie," the title of the Russell vehicle, is scheduled for the 29th. The picture, which has been adapted for the screen by Paul Schofield is from "The Water Cross," by Jack Boyle, Scott Dunlap directed.

Al St. John, will be seen in "The Author," a two reel special comedy.

The Sunshine Comedy is "Where There's A Will."

First National Signs Two More Screen Stars

Announcement was made this week of two more screen players who have been placed under a long-term contract to appear in future First National attractions. They are Colleen Moore and Maurice Canon, a French favorite.

Miss Moore, just out of her teens, has had a varied experience on the screen. She played her first important role with Hayakawa in "The Devil's Claim," and later was signed by Neilan, for whom she made "Dinty" and "The Lotus Eaters." Rupert Hughes gave her leading roles in "The Wall Flower," "The Bitterness of Sweets" and "Come on Over." In "Slippy McGee," an Oliver Morosco production, she played the leading feminine role.

Maurice Canon is a newcomer to the American screen, but for years has been an idol of the French public, playing featured and stellar roles in a number of successful plays. His first American appearance will be as Zouzou in Tully's forthcoming production of "Trilby," which will be released through First National.

Theodore Roberts and Gloria Swanson seen in "The Prodigal Daughters." Famous Players-Lasky.

Scenes from "Broadway Gold," starring Elaine Hammerstein. The subject will be distributed by Tiffany-Truart via the independent market.

Picture-Sermons Used by Pastor

Popular Evening Lectures of Newark Minister Based on Photoplay Dramas

DR. HENRY ROSE, of the Church of the Redeemer, Newark, N. J., is delivering a series of immensely popular lecture-sermons on Sunday evenings in a manner which should be of interest to exhibitors, and to clergymen as well everywhere. These lecture-sermons are based, usually, on a current motion picture, and occasionally a Broadway stage play, and are illustrated by colored slides made from production stills.

On the evening of Sunday, April 15th, Dr. Rose based his sermon on "The Famous Mrs. Fair," and despite the fact that it was cold and rainy, approximately 1,000 persons were on hand.

Dr. Rose and his church are known and discussed by church-men and the general public from one end of the country to the other because of the novel policy which he has adopted to get his practical applications of the Christian religion over to the greatest possible number of people, to kep those to whom he ministers informed of what is going on in the world at large, and to take advantage of the many worthwhile things which are being brought home by agencies other than the church.

To illustrate the breadth of subject matter which he covers it may be said that subjects announced for the future include "The Dangerous Age," "Icebound" and "So This Is London," current Broadway stage successes, and Sir Conan Doyle's latest spirit photographs.

Following his usual custom, Dr. Rose first saw "The Famous Mrs. Fair" at a private showing, then prepared a lecture running between five and six thousand words, and chose for his illustrations such scene from the photoplay as would make his desired points clear. His lecture in the case "The Famous Mrs. Fair" was merely a running recital of the story of the photoplay, emphasizing as he went along the big moral, namely that the development by a woman of a career outside her home is fraught with terrible dangers.

His lecture-sermons are sent to more than twenty other ministers of the Gospel throughout the United States who are doing things along the same lines.

Monte Blue and Marie Prevost Loaned by Warners

While plans for the coming season are being formulated by the Warner Brothers, two of their players under contract have been loaned to other producers to appear in one picture only, according to Harry M. Warner.

Monte Blue, who recently completed the leading male role in "Main Street," has been loaned to Universal, and Marie Prevost, who is co-featured with Mr. Blue in "Brass," is to appear in Louis B. Mayer's production, "The Climbers."

Tom Mix in Story of the Days of the Gold Rush

A story of the early days of the gold rushes to the Hudson Bay territory has been selected as the theme of "The Journey of Death," the latest William Fox production starring Tom Mix, which has just been completed at the West Coast studios. The action takes place at one of the northern trading posts and is declared to embody some beautiful photography of the snow country.

This latest Mix picture was directed by John Ford from the story by Jules Furthman. The supporting cast includes: Kathleen Key, Eugene Pallette, Will Walling, Frank Campeau, Frank Leigh and Fred Kohler.

Distinctive Will Make "Green Goddess"

A DISTINCTIVE Pictures Corporation production for Goldwyn release next season is "The Green Goddess," by William Archer. The play served George Arliss for three years as one of the greatest stage successes he has had. When Distinctive acquired the film rights to the play, it stipulated that Mr. Arliss should act the title role in its screen adaptation.

And now Distinctive has engaged Alice Joyce to act the part of the wife of the British Major. Henry T. Morey will play the part of the British Major. Mr. Arliss, of course, will appear as the Rajah.

The picture will be directed by Sidney Olcott. Harry Fischbeck will be the cameraman. Work will begin on the film as soon as Mr. Arliss concludes his engagement in Winthrop Ames' stage production of "The Green Goddess."

Mayor John Hylan Presents Cameraman with Rifle

H. A. Snow, producer of "Hunting Big Game in Africa," received a latest model elephant gun from the hands of Mayor John F. Hylan, of New York City, early this week, when Snow made his official farewell visit to the New York City Hall, before starting on his second expedition to the Dark Continent.

The rifle tendered to the hunter by Mayor Hylan was a gift from the Winchester Repeating Arms Company. A distinguished group of film men, hunters and public officials were present at the presentation. Included in this group were E. H. Goldstein, treasurer of the Universal Pictures Corporation, the film organization which is releasing "Hunting Big Game in Africa"; and R. E. Hill and Peter P. Carney of the Winchester Company. A number of magazine editors and newspaper men also were there.

Title Selected for Assoc. Authors' Production

"Richard the Lion Hearted" is the title which has been chosen for the Associated Authors' screen version of "The Talisman," now in course of production at the Thomas H. Ince studios for release through Allied Producers and Distributors' Corporation.

"Steadfast Heart" is Put in Production

THE new story by Clarence Budington Kelland, now running serially in Collier's Weekly, "Steadfast Heart," will be the third Distinctive production distributed by Goldwyn. The producing company expects the picture to be one of the best it has made. The company is now on location in Fredericksburg, Va., under the direction of Sheridan Hall.

The company was delayed at the little Virginia town on account of the illness of Edith Roberts who has the leading role. This is the second picture Miss Roberts has done for Distinctive, the first having been Kelland's "Backbone," recently completed and which is scheduled for an early showing at the Capitol theatre, New York.

A scene from "The Prisoner," Universal production starring Herbert Rawlinson from the story by George Barr McCutcheon's titled "Castle Craneycrow."

B. P. Fineman Starts Work on First of Series

Work on "Don't Marry for Money," the first production B. P. Fineman has engaged on since his return from the East, has been begun at the Principal Pictures studios on the Coast, which Mr. Fineman has leased.

House Peters was signed for the leading part. Rubye de Remer will be seen in the principal feminine role. Christine Mayo, George Nichols, Hank Mann, Cyril Chadwick, Wedgewood Nowell, Aileen Pringle and Charles Wellsley have the principal supporting roles.

The story is by Hope Loring and Louis Duryea Lighton. Clarence Brown is directing and Frank D. Ormstron has the post of art director.

Two Named for Balzac's "Magic Skin" Cast

Two motion picture actresses have been selected by George D. Baker, in consultation with Goldwyn production officials, for leading roles in Achievement Films' picturization of Honore de Balzac's novel, "The Magic Skin." They are Bessie Love and Carmel Myers.

Miss Love, who has just completed one of the principal roles in Marshall Neilan's second Goldwyn picture, "The Eternal Three," will act the part of Pauline in "The Magic Skin" and Carmel Myers that of the Countess.

This production will mark Miss Myer's first appearance in a Goldwyn picture. Charles Whittaker is putting the finishing touches to the continuity and Mr. Baker expects to put it into production soon after the middle of April.

Harry Garson Starts Work on "Old Madrid"

Production of "Old Madrid," Harry Garson's new production for Metro, starring Clara Kimball Young, has been begun under the direction of Thomas Heffrom. The picture will be an adaptation from the novel, "La Rubia," by W. H. Roberts.

The action of "Old Madrid" is laid in Spain, and considerable attention has been given to the settings, the planning and designing of which occupied two months of the time of Joseph Wright.

Appearing opposite Miss Young is Lewis Dayton. Albert Roscoe, the sea captain in "Java Head," likewise has an important role. Wedgewood Nowell, Louise Bates, Arthur Hull, Lillian Adrian and others are also in the cast.

First National Closes Important Foreign Sales

The announcement of the sale of fifteen First National pictures for Austria, Hungary, Yugo-Slavia, Bulgaria, Poland, European Turkey and Greece, is made this week by First National Pictures. The Sascha Film Industrie, of Vienna has purchased for the above territory, "Daddy," "Toby Tyler," "The Dangerous Age," "Scrap Iron," "The Hottentot," "Fury," "Daughter of Two Worlds," "The Rosary," "Dangerous Business," "Brawn of the North," "Her Mad Bargain," "White Shoulders," "Money, Money, Money," "The Scoffer" and "The Devils' Garden."

"Daddy" and "Toby Tyler" will be distributed in Brazil by the Compannia Brazil Cinematographica. The Madan Theatres, Ltd., of Calcutta, India, have purchased "Penrod" for India, Burma and Ceylon.

Gladys Walton to Star in Circus Life Story Again

Gladys Walton is shortly to be seen in a role similar to the one that she enacted in "Pink Tights," a circus story, in which she made her first hit as a star. Her new vehicle is titled, "Sawdust," and is also a story of life under the "big top." Jack Conway has started production work on this subject at Universal City. It was adapted to the screen by Hugh Hoffman from a magazine story by Courtney Riley Cooper.

She will be supported in the cast by Niles Welch, Edith Yorke, William Robert Daly, Frank Brownlee and Mathew Betz.

McConville to Scenarioize "Cape Cod Folks"

Bernard McConville has been engaged by the Louis B. Mayer studios to scenarioize "Cape Cod Folks," the old New England classic. According to Irving G. Thalberg's announcement, "Cape Cod Folks" will be a Mayer special, filmed with an all-star cast. No director has been assigned for the production as yet.

Mr. McConville goes to the Mayer studio from the Mack Sennett lot where he just completed the scenarios of "The Extra Girl" for Phyllis Haver and "Mary Ann" for Mabel Normand.

Strong Cast to Be Seen in "Broadway Gold"

The principal roles on "Broadway Gold," the Tiffany-Truart production, will be taken by Elaine Hammerstein, Elliot Dexter, Kathlyn Williams, Harry Northrup, and Eloise Goodale. Edward Dillon directed the subject.

"Abysmal Brute" and "Bavu" Available Immediately

UNIVERSAL has advanced the release date of two big Jewel productions, "The Abysmal Brute," and "Bavu." This announcement has just been made at the Universal home office. As the result of a consultation between Carl Laemmle, president of Universal and Art Schmidt, its general sales manager, the Universal chief decided to make these two Jewel productions available at once.

"Rupert of Hentzau" to Go via Selznick Dist. Corp.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made on Wednesday of this week from the offices of W. C. J. Doolittle, president of the Selznick Distributing Corporation, that "Rupert of Hentzau," produced under the supervision of Myron Selznick and recently completed at the United Studios, Los Angeles, would be distributed by the Selznick organization.

Elaine Hammerstein appears as Queen Flavia, and Bert Lytell is seen in the dual role of Rudolph Rassendyll and King Rudolph of Ruritania. Lew Cody is cast as Rupert. Claire Windsor plays the part of Helga Von Tarlenheim. Marjorie Daw has been given the role of Rosa Holf. Colonel Sapt is enacted by Hobart Bosworth. Adolph Jean appears as Count Rischenheim. Bryant Washburn is cast as Fritz Von Tarlenheim. Irving Cummings is in the part of Berenstein. Mitchell Lewis plays Bauer, the treacherous valet. Elmo Lincoln has the role of Simon, the woodsman. Nigel de Brulier portrays the part of Herbert. Mother Holf is played by Josephine Crowell.

First-Runs Are Closed for "Enemies of Women"

Arrangements for the first-run showing of "Enemies of Women" in various key cities are now being made by the Cosmopolitan Corporation. The picturization of Vincente Blasco Ibanez's romantic novel began an indefinite run in Los Angeles this week, opening in that city on Tuesday night at Grauman's Rialto theatre. At the opening were a number of film stars, including Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Pola Negri, Marshall Neilan, Cecil B. De Mille, Anita Stewart, Colleen Moore, Holbrook Blinn, Forrest Stanley, T. Roy Barnes, Robert Frazer and the Talmadges.

"Enemies" will have its first Chicago showing at the Roosevelt theatre, where it begins and indefinite run on April 30. Meantime, the film has been playing in the Central theatre, New York, where it had its world's premiere on Easter Sunday.

Stills from "The Forbidden Lover," with Barbara Bedford and Elliott Sparling. Distributed by American Releasing.

Reconstructing Fine Arts Studios

Modern Structure to Be Built on Old Site; Improvements to Cost $250,000

A WRECKING crew is busy at the Fine Arts studios in Hollywood, Cal., tearing down the wooden buildings that have been standing on the "lot" since 1913 and which were constructed and used by D. W. Griffith during the filming of his "Intolerance," "The Clansman" and other well-known plays for the screen.

In place of the wooden structures the studio is to erect stucco buildings of the latest design and with every modern improvement. Twenty-seven new dressing rooms and fourteen executive offices have already been constructed as part of the studios' expansion plan. Arrangements have been made to remodel the plant without interfering with production activity of the various companies working there.

The wooden buildings facing on Sunset boulevard and extending a distance of one city block, are to be dismantled to make room for the construction of a row of cement buildings of Spanish architecture, which the studio is to rent out as stores to private individuals. One of the city's largest banking institutions has already arranged to establish a branch bank in the building nearest to the corner of Sunset and Hollywood boulevards.

According to Nat Deverich, president, and John Rikkleman, secretary and treasurer of Fine Arts, an appropriation of $250,000 has been made for the proposed improvements to the property, which for the past three years they have been operating on a leasing basis to independent producers.

When the reconstruction work is completed the studio will be one of the most up-to-date film plants on the West coast, they state.

The atmosphere and settings of "The Soul of the Beast," an Ince production for Metro release are strikingly set forth in the above group of shots."

"Fortune of Christina McNab" Due in May

"The Fortune of Christina McNab" is announced by Playgoers Pictures for release May 27. Christina, a Scottish girl, accustomed to live on cold mutton and a dress allowance of next to nothing a year, suddenly finds herself left with an income of $150,000. How to spend it is a problem involved in the picture.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 725 S. WABASH AVE.

Among the Exchanges

GEORGE CAMPBELL has joined Manager Manske's sales force and is covering part of Iowa and Northern Illinois for American Releasing. He was formerly connected with United Artists.

The battling First National team, under the captaincy of G. L. Sears, is booked to play the up and coming Universal nine, led by Lipton Astrachan, on April 28th. An effort will be made to get the Cub's Ball Park for the game, and a large crowd of rooters is sure to be on hand for this first film row contest of the season.

Heavy bookings of super features are reported by exchange managers. Manager Fichenlaub, of United Artists, informs us that forty houses, outside of the big circuits, are booked to play "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," day and date, starting April 29th, and Sales Manager Bond of First National, comes right back with the information that fifty prints of "The Pilgrim" are working this week, the first general release date.

Robert R. Jersey, formerly connected with Kansas City exchanges, is now covering Illinois and Northern Indiana territory for Goldwyn.

H. L. Conway has become connected with United Artists and is selling their pictures in the Indiana territory, B. O. Tonte is another new member of United Artists' staff having come from the above exchange to be the booker.

The Northern Illinois rights for "Luck," Johnny Hines' latest picture, have been contracted for by Second National Pictures of Illinois, Inc.

Herbert Washburn has joined the Hodkinson sales force. Until recently he was connected with United Artists.

Joe Friedman, of Celebrated, is back on the job after two weeks' vacation at Atlantic City, New Jersey. Mr. Friedman was accompanied east by his wife.

John Delson, formerly with Paramount's Kansas City exchange, has taken Salesman Ford's place and is covering suburban territory for Universal. A. J. Gallas is now selling Universal's great animal picture, "H. A. Snow Hunting Big Game in Africa with Gun and Camera," in the Chicago territory.

One of the most comprehensive advertising and exploitation campaigns ever put on in the Chicago territory, has been undertaken by Assistant General Sales Manager Stern, Publicity Director Hill and Manager McCurdy, previous to the opening of "H. A. Snow's Hunting Big Game in Africa with Gun and Camera," at the Randolph theatre, April 22nd. One hundred and ninety twenty-four sheet billboards in the city and one hundred and sixty along railroads leading into Chicago, have been posted. Ten thousand, three sheets and boards on all elevated stations were used in addition for out-door advertising. Fifteen hundred miniature elephants, twelve inches high, have been placed on counters of stores and in windows throughout the city, and a large amount of newspaper publicity obtained. Twelve thousand school teachers will be guests of the Randolph theatre during the run of the Snow picture and fifty thousand matinee tickets already have been arranged for for the school children. The Hamilton Club, which Mr. Snow addressed last week, has arranged for a dinner showing of the picture on Friday night, at which time newspaper editors, writers and other well known persons will be present, as well as the club membership. Manager McCurdy has transformed the two big lobbies of the Randolph theatre into jungle scenes, using native grasses and full sized elephants in each lobby, with the ticket booth made into a replica of a native hut.

Paul St. Denis, formerly connected with the booking department at Universal exchange, is now assistant to Publicity Director Hill.

Manager Reingold, of Goldwyn Pictures, is a hard man to find in his office these days, as he has been dashing around the territory closing up exhibitors on "Souls for Sale," which he informs us has aroused unusual interest among the trade.

Messrs. Sears, Bond and Sobler, of First National, were guests at a farewell party given for Joe Wolf, of Paramount, at the Rainbow Gardens, Saturday night. Mr. Wolf, who has been connected with the local offices of Paramount for the past three years, has been transferred to New York. His friends, of whom he has a host, are glad to hear of his promotion, but sorry to see him leave Chicago.

Art ad used on "All the Brothers Were Valiant" prepared by Richard A. Addison of the Pickwick theatre, San Diego, Cal.

District Manager Hickey, of Goldwyn Pictures, made a flying trip to Minneapolis and other cities of the northwest.

Around the Trade

THE new city council of Chicago at its initial meeting on April 17th, registered its opinion of the drastic Sunday blue law introduced by Senator James E. MacMurray in the legislature, in no uncertain way. The aldermen voted forty-three to three to express their disapproval. The resolution declared, among other things, that there were enough blue laws already, and that the MacMurray bill was "against the freedom of the people," and that similar legislation was "sapping the life blood of the people." Earlier in the day two of the ministers' associations, Methodist and Baptist, went on record in favor of the bill. The resolutions were presented to the Methodist ministers by the Rev. W. S. Fleming and to the Baptist clergy by the Rev. M. P. Boynton. They were identical in character and the reverend gentlemen presenting them are both known as active "reformers."

Last Sunday was the silver anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Linick and many prominent theatrical and society people gathered in the Tiger Room of the Hotel Sherman on that evening to celebrate the event. Among the guests who are well known in motion picture circles, were Mr. and Mrs. Aaron J. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Peter J. Schaefer, Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Zukor, Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Loew, Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Ascher, Mr. and Mrs. John J. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Newhouse, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph T. Kettering, Mr. and Mrs. Norman E. Fields. There were one hundred and seventy guests there for dinner at 6:00 P. M., which was followed by dancing and a cotillion. It was one of the most elaborate parties given in Chicago in many months.

The National theatre has put a policy into effect which certainly assures its patrons of plenty of entertainment for their money. "The Pilgrim," with Charlie Chaplin, another feature and vaudeville are being offered to the public at the National this week for ten to thirty cents admission.

Mrs. Katherine McKee, of Liberty, Illinois, it is reported, will reopen the Liberty theatre, of that city, as soon as foreclosure proceedings, which she instituted against Ross Palmer, are settled. She formerly owned this house, having disposed of it to Mr. Palmer on February 1st.

Harry Miller is now booking the National theatre, as well as the Windsor, on North Clark street, recently having secured an interest in the former.

Aaron Saperstein, of the Palais Royal and Lincoln, is also running the Lexington theatre, on Crawford avenue, which he reopened last week.

Burglars forced their way into the box office of Ludwig Siegel's Prairie-Garden theatre in the early morning hours of April 16th and got away with forty dollars in change, which was in the safe. The marauders did considerable damage in breaking their way through three doors and practically wrecked the safe, which Mr. Siegel is going to replace with a stronger one.

Sam Katz, of Balaban & Katz, was in Atlantic City this week, attending the First National meeting.

The opening of "The Covered Wagon" at the Woods for an extended run was scheduled for Sunday, April 22nd, and Special Representative Flynn, of Paramount, has been in Chicago for some time, making elaborate preparations for the event, which is one of the important occasions of the year in motion picture circles.

Rupert Hughes, noted author, stopped off in Chicago, en route from Hollywood to New York, this week. Mr. Hughes is widely known to the trade as author of the novel, which is the basis for "Souls for Sale," as well as of several other stories adapted for the screen.

Gus Truelich, who has turned exhibitor and has been managing the Orchard theatre at North avenue and Orchard streets for the past month, tells us that business is looking up at his house and that he is glad to be back in the exhibitors' ranks.

The recent personal appearance of Madge Bellamy at the Bugg theatre, brought Manager Clarence Wagner into the limelight once more and he was highly praised for the efficient manner in which he handled her appearance and the crowds during the time she operated her "gold plated" motion picture camera.

Peter J. Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, is again at his desk in McVicker's theatre headquarters, after an extended European trip.

WHAT SHOWMEN THINK OF CURRENT RELEASES

Exhibitors' Box-Office Reports

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Bella Donna—

An elaborate piece of sheikery. Its beauty and opulence rarely equalled. Pola Negri's magic name packed them in. (Middle West.)

The attendance held up good all week with this one. (Middle West.)

Magnificent feature. Played to big business for second week. (Middle West.)

All that it is claimed; drew well on two weeks' run. (Middle West.)

Grumpy—

Excellent picture which did a good business despite very unfavorable weather. (Middle West.)

Did not make the hit expected. (East.)

Mr. Billings Spends His Dime—

Picture only fair. Business poor. (East.)

Not many laughs in this. Pleased his followers, however. Fair business. (Middle West.)

The Go-Getter—

Too frothy, and too episodic. We didn't do very well with this picture. (Middle West.)

Picture fair; business the same.

Racing Hearts—

Good feature, which the names of stars helped put over. Business excellent. (Middle West.)

The White Flower—

Good picture and good business.

The Nth Commandment—

Good picture, but did light business only.

Adam's Rib—

Business did fine on second week. (East.)

The Glimpses of the Moon—

Generally pleasing picture, without any special feature. Business good, helped by strong surrounding program. (East.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Daddy—

People liked this picture as well as any of Jackie Coogan's and most thought it better than "Oliver Twist." Business very good. (Middle West.)

What a Wife Learned—

You can't keep them away from this house. But more good comments were heard on this one than on any film feature in many weeks. (East.)

Brawn of the North—

A fair picture. Business just fair. (East.)

Heroes and Husbands—

Picture much below par. Business bad. (East.)

The Isle of Lost Ships—

Improbable but interesting and gripping sea story. Business good. (Middle West.)

The Pilgrim—

Great picture; big business on two weeks' run. (Middle West.)

METRO

All the Brothers Were Valiant—

One of the best films shown at this house in lo, these many moons, and as a result the S. R. O. sign was kept up most of the time. (East.)

A fair picture. Business very good. (East.)

Peg O' My Heart—

Failed to get over. Not type of drama bulk of patrons want. Miss Taylor's performance splendid. Stage play killed off some box office value. (Middle West.)

Picture previously reported. Business fair on second run. (East.)

Where the Pavement Ends—

Production out of ordinary, but business was just average. (Middle West.)

A Noise in Newboro—

A charming light picture that took the crowd. (East.)

Jazzmania—

Mae Murray's fans liked her. Critics were not enthusiastic about it, but it drew well. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

The Abysmal Brute—

A red-blooded man's feature. Went over big. Star is popular. (Middle West.)

Hunting Wild Game in Africa—

Heavily advertised and very well liked. (East.)

The Flame of Life—

Poor picture. Business away off. (East.)

Driven—

A wonderful picture. Played to record business. Held over for second week. Has everything. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood—

The best box office attraction in several weeks. Big crowds all week. (Middle West.)

Wonderful from every angle. Cleaned up. (Middle West.)

After breaking all house records, this one upheld this city's record as a one week town. Business was off from the start and remained so for the entire second week of the run. (East.)

ALLIED PROD. & DIST.

The Glorious Adventure—

Opening in new house did as well as expected. Lady Diana does some excellent work. The novelty of colors should prove attractive to picture goers. (Middle West.)

FOX

The Town That Forgot God—

Good picture and business was good.

Romance Land—

One of Mix's best. A sure winner. (East.)

Silver Wings—

Another "mother picture"; average drawing power. (Middle West.)

PATHE

Safety Last—

The best picture Harold Lloyd ever made. Held it over for third week and may run it the fourth. Broke all records the first week. We never expect to do such a business again. (Middle West.)

Filled the house during the first week. Second week to run. (East.)

VITAGRAPH

The Ninety and Nine—

Opened big but closed little. (East.)

Picture fair and business proved the same.

GOLDWYN

Lost and Found—

Few recent films have combined beauty of scenery, strength of plot and thrills and interest of this one. Did good business during week's run. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

Down to the Sea in Ships—

Wonderful. Can't say enough about this picture, as an artistic production, and as a money getting. Had crowds waiting in front of box office all the time. Turned 'em away for every performance. (Middle West.)

Second Fiddle—

The star, Mary Astor, comes from an adjoining state, which made the picture a good drawing card for a week's run. (Middle West.)

WARNER BROS.

The Beautiful and Damned—

As good as the book. Those who liked the one, liked the other. Splendid production, well staged, well acted. Above average. (Middle West.)

Considered a good picture by patrons and drew well. (Middle West.)

Good picture. Played to good business. Marie Prevost growing in drawing power. (Middle West.)

Brass—

A fine picture and a good box-office attraction. (Middle West.)

F. B. O.

The Third Alarm—

Good melodrama; satisfactory business on two weeks' run. (Middle West.)

ASSOC. EXHIBITORS

Till We Meet Again—

Fair picture, nothing new, but nothing tiresome. Just an average program picture. Will go all right in a neighborhood house. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Fabiola—

A picture of great dignity and high purpose. Did good business at advanced prices. (Middle West.)

Women Men Marry—

A good drawing card. Business good all week. (Middle West.)

Only a Shop Girl—

Business fair, but the picture came in the same class. (East.)

The Hills of Hate—

Plenty of thrills, with love theme, danger, escapes and excitement equally proportioned. Our regular clientele of thrill-seekers likes this one and we had pretty fair business for Holy Week. (Middle West.)

I Am the Law—

A big picture that attracted big audiences all week. (Middle West.)

'Safety Last" Premier Showing Is Well Publicized

Palm Beach, Fla.—Manager Stanley C. Warrick, of the Beaux Arts theatre, who gave "Safety Last" its world premier showing, through an arrangement with Elmer Pearson, general manager of Pathe, made while Mr. Pearson was on a short vacation at Palm Beach, put an extensive publicity campaign back of the picture.

Manager Warrick began his "Safety Last" publicity in the Palm Beach newspapers on the day that his contract was signed. It made an exhaustive "front page story." From that day on, the Beaux Arts theatre program contained an attractive announcement. It was used also on cards sent out to the Beaux Arts mailing list, together with other descriptive matter. The "Safety Last" campaign book's best examples of display ads were placed daily in the local papers, and the news columns of the Palm Beach News and Post told of the great coming event under such headings as: "Palm Beach Has Honor of First Showing 'Safety Last.' Warrick lands Lloyd Premiere for Palm Beach Over New York." "Warrick Praised for Getting Movie."

Manager Warrick scored a special hit in newspaper display advertising when he caused to be inserted a nearly full-size facsimile of a telegram from Pathe General Manager Pearson advising him of the shipment of an original print of "Safety Last," and adding: "Do not neglect to arrange with your bank for storage in their vault during engagement when not in use. Refund any patrons' admission who does not declare 'Safety Last' the funniest and most thrilling entertainment ever witnessed."

Race Track Front Is Built on "Garrison's Finish"

GALVESTON, TEXAS—Manager Charles E. Sasseen turned the entrance of the Tremont theatre into a miniature race track for "Garrison's Finish," by boxing in most of the space with beaverboard cut and painted to represent a race track with the grandstand packed with people and through an aperture in the beaverboard which acted as a sort of shadow box could be seen horses racing past.

The front was striped in yellow and green and the title of the picture and the stars name were painted in black and stood out plainly on the yellow background.

Shop Girl Popularity Contest Used on "Only a Shop Girl"

Madison, Wis.—A newspaper contest for the most popular shop girl in Madison was arranged by the Wisconsin State Journal and the Parkway theatre to exploit "Only a Shop Girl." Prizes were given. Girls were nominated not only from all the department stores, but also from some of the factories. Daily cuts were run showing new entrants, runners-up, leaders, etc., and interest grew tense. The contest ran two weeks before the show began.

In order to stimulate more interest in movies in general and to encourage reading movie news, the Capitol Times is running a movie title contest. A daily prize is given for the best short continuous story made up of titles of motion pictures strung together. Much ingenuity is used in telling good stories made of titles, and the page is eagerly read.

Department Store Tie-up Made to Boost "Bella Donna"

New Haven, Conn.—Mendel's department store, which recently tied up on "My American Wife" with a style show, again cooperated with Poli's Bijou theatre on "Bella Donna."

This time they tied up Pola Negri and the Egyptian angle of the picture with the present wave of publicity given the very late King Tut-ankh-amen. Lewis Garvey, publicity man for Poli, and Russell B. Moon, Paramount exploiteer, got out 5,000 cards each with a small sample of voile with Egyptian design attached. The cards read:

"And now, here is a reproduction of the beautiful Cleopatra voile as worn by the characters portraying Egypt and its tombs of kings with the beautiful, fiery Pola Negri in the Paramount Picture, 'Bella Donna,'" etc.

These were distributed by the theatre and the effect was that every woman naturally saved the sample for future consideration.

Mendel's also prepared a window in which cut-out mannikins with the star's heads taken from the Paramount posters were used. These figures were life-size and the voile and paisley silks were draped around the figures. The window also contained a big display of the Curtis stills, art-photographic studies of the big sets used in the picture.

Thorough Promotion Campaign Put Behind "Christian"

Seattle, Wash.—Manager H. B. Wright, of the Strand theatre; J. W. Sayre, advertising manager for Jensen & Von Herberg, and L. W. Barclay, Goldwynner, put over a thorough exploitation campaign, with increased newspaper advertising, for "The Christian."

The newspaper campaign was started a week in advance. For the two weeks' run a total of over 800 inches of newspaper space was used.

A tie-up was made with the Pacific Coast Biscuit Company. Fourteen thousand Mae Busch kisses were distributed by girls on the streets the day the picture opened and through restaurants and dealers handling the kiss. Fourteen dealers put in window displays. Three book windows were put over—in the Wilson store and the two Frederick & Nelson book shops.

The Greenstone Millinery Company designed a hat for Mae Busch. This was forwarded to the studio and Miss Busch was photographed wearing it. The photos were used as the basis of window displays in the three Greenstone stores and in newspaper publicity.

The first Monday night was made "Officials' Night," when the city and state officials and club leaders attended the Strand as guests of the management. This gathered newspaper space.

Puts Over Double Page Ad on Paramount "39"

MC RAE, Ga.—When Manager H. L. Liggett of the National theatre signed up for the Paramount "39" series he decided to capitalize upon that fact as far as possible, so he put over a double-truck co-operative ad hinging on the acquisition.

The center portion was take up by a one page stock mat, showing stars and directors and containing a statement from the theatre management, and flanked on both sides by three columns of merchant ads, tied up with the others, each carrying the Paramount trademark.

Tropical Lobby Display is Built for "Adam's Rib"

TAMPA, FLA.—"Adam's Rib" was given a most attractive lobby display by Manager John B. Carroll of the Victory theatre. The entire lobby was transformed into a tropical jungle by the use of foliage and Spanish moss. The moss was fastened to wires, all over the top, and down the sides of the lobby.

Over on one side, set back so as to appear through the foliage, was an immense cut-out of Eve, while on the other side was one of Adam. These cut-outs were made from the 24-sheet and were exceptionally fine.

Tags with Rope Are Used as "The Fast Mail" Stunt

BARNSDALL, OKLA.—Tags bearing two feet of thin rope formed one of the exploitation stunts on "The Fast Mail" during its run at the Runyon theatre.

Several thousand of the tags were printed and hung on door knobs throughout the city and in the neighboring villages. On one side was printed: "Thrills, Thrills, Thrills. Charles Jones in 'The Fast Mail' is so thrilling you will need this rope to tie yourself in the seat." The other side bore a one-column ad cut.

Musical Scholarship Given as "Daddy" Exploitation

Chicago, Ill.—The Chicago theatre, in co-operation with the Chicago Journal, has started an advance exploitation feature on "Daddy" that is proving highly beneficial.

The story deals with the little son of a famous violinist. Taking this angle for an exploitation cue, the Chicago theatre and the Journal found a willing co-operator in the reputable Chicago Musical College and offered a year's free tuition to some deserving youngster.

The stories were run under the heading: "Is there a Musical Prodigy in Your Club and is it You?" The copy was published in the Junior Journal section of the paper which has built up a tremendous following among youngsters by running articles and letters prepared especially for juvenile reading. The section is almost the official organ for scores of boys' clubs around Chicago.

The initial announcement was wound around a little heart-interest copy stating that Jackie Coogan as the boy of "Daddy" wanted some Chicago youngster, who loved music, to be given the same opportunity that the screen juvenile had in the picture. And it stated that offer was being made through the Chicago Musical College and the Chicago Journal. A two-column cut was used with the article.

Every Angle Utilized in Drive for "Adam's Rib" Showing

Omaha, Neb.—H. B. Watts, manager of the Strand theatre, put over an exploitation campaign for "Adam's Rib" that went into every possible angle of publicity and advertising, gathering in a rich harvest of front page space. Some of the many features, briefly outlined, included:

"Adam and His Ribs," used as heading on news story with cut re: National League for Prevention of Spinal Curvature. Society page picture of Pauline Garon displaying gown of ermine with pearl lining. One-quarter page rotogravure section of Anna Q. Nilsson in prehistoric scenes.

Leading Omaha minister picked subject of Adam and Eve for sermon week before picture opened and was written up at great length by all three Omaha papers.

Special inserts printed and furnished to laundry, who included them in all bundles of laundry for a two-week period.

Personally written, specially filled in letters to all members of the Omaha Grain Exchange, all grain dealers and commission men.

Serial story of picture as furnished in press sheet run in four installments.

Small bottles filled with water and distributed to clubs and through drug stores. They had tags on them calling attention to a new drink, "Adam's Ale," with instructions to place on ice for two hours, then drink, and if they didn't get a kick out of it, they would out of "Adam's Rib," playing at the Strand theatre.

Color contest for kids. Picture of prehistoric monster with Garon sitting on head. Prizes for best coloring.

Cartoon puzzle, in colors, in magazine section. Hundreds of answers were received on this.

Telegram from De Mille was good for story.

"Adam's Rib Society" started among girls who objected to being called flappers.

Curtis photos displayed by Fine Arts Society in Public Library.

Editorial headed "Adam and Eve," suggested by Watts.

Arranged with chairman of Omaha manufacturers when welcoming 600 out-of-town dealers to ring in picture, saying that if this was in the days of Adam and Eve that he would welcome them with a club instead of the glad hand, etc., etc.

Orchestra at Brandeis' half-million-dollar restaurant played specially arranged musical number called "From Fig Leaves to Flappers," suggested by "Adam's Rib," now playing at the Strand theatre. Starting with creation music, working up big numbers through various movements and ending up with modern jazz.

Insurance Policy is Stunt on "The Hottentot"

PEORIA, ILL.—Almost every form of insurance has been used in exploitation, but a new angle was evolved when "The Hottentot" played the Madison theatre.

The exploitation consisted in the issuance of a formal policy insuring the Madison's patrons against death from laughter.

The idea, which was originated by Des Robinson of the Madison, provided fifty dollars' compensation for any death from apoplexy or heart disease occurring within the Madison theatre during the showing of "The Hottentot."

"White Flower" Put Over with Displays and Advertising

Birmingham, Ala.—Manager Thomas G. Coleman, of the Galax theatre, put "The White Flower" over with a strong advance advertising campaign and with plentiful use of poster displays.

For two weeks prior to opening a campaign was started by the use of house slides, taking his copy from catch lines in the press book. He played up the fact that the film was actually taken in Hawaii, and put this idea over time after time. Betty Compson's name was stressed throughout.

He had an advance showing for the Better Films Committee. This committee endorsed the picture highly, calling it "beautiful."

The entire lobby was made up from cut-outs of stock accessories. A display was made from the 6-sheet cut-out and was the center of attraction. Betty Compson was shown riding the waves, which were painted on beaverboard, a moon was seen rising out of the water. This scene was framed with palm trees. Painted drops carried out the skyline. Cut-outs from the 6-sheet were also used on each end of the marquee.

A 24-sheet cut-out of Betty Compson was the central figure of a marquee display, and on each side of this was a sign.

Cut-outs Prove Great Aid to "Safety Last" Campaign

Denver, Colo.—Cut-outs were used with particular effectiveness in the exploitation campaign conducted in connection with the showing at the Princess and Rialto theatres of "Safety Last."

Following the newspaper display announcements picturing the spectacled comedian swinging high above the street by the hands of a big clock, the theatre management got busy with a series of 24-sheet cut-outs showing his filmed climb of the twelve-story building—a different stage of the climb each day. These were mounted and posted in conspicuous places with tremendous effect on street crowds. Meantime, reproductions were printed in the newspapers, with captions after the following fashion:

"It's no use to try to describe this picture. Words completely fail. You can see it next week, beginning Sunday, at both the Rialto and Princess theatres. It is in seven reels. But no one with a weak heart should go to see it! . . . . In the above illustration Harold Lloyd is shown beginning his famous climb up the front of a twelve-story office building in Los Angeles . . . . Watch this space tomorrow, and we'll show you what happens when Lloyd gets to the sixth floor."

"Mighty Lak' a Rose" Good for 250 Window Tie-Ups

CHICAGO, Ill.—"Mighty Lak' a Rose," with its possibilities for window tie-ups with florists, phonograph dealers and piano stores, proved readily exploitable when it played here, at the Chicago theatre.

In Chicago alone, 250 window tie-ups were secured with the Victor and Columbia dealers. This was exclusive of other music tie-ups and floral establishments. The fact that the Chicago play date covered Valentine's Day was used by florists as a reason for emphasizing the sign: "Send Her a Rose for Valentine's Day and Take Her to See 'Mighty Lak' a Rose."

With Mother's Day in the offing, this picture of heart appeal presents another good opportunity for florists.

Copies of "Bella Donna" in Newspaper Campaign

ST. LOUIS, MO.—In exploiting "Bella Donna," Ed Olmstead, publicity man of the Missouri theatre, bought 100 copies of the photoplay edition of Robert Hichen's novel at 65 cents each and gave them to the St. Louis Times as a premium for subscription.

The times printed a quarter page ad announcing that for every six-month subscription taken between the dates, April 4 and 14, a book would be awarded. The copy of the ad gave a big display to the fact that "Bella Donna" was a Paramount picture and the first made by Pola Negri in America.

This ad ran continuously for ten days prior to the showing.

Word Contest is Conducted on "The Third Alarm"

MEMPHIS, TENN.—The familiar word contest was used with excellent success by Pantages theatre in connection with the showing of "The Third Alarm."

This contest consisted of offering twenty prices ranging from three months' season passes down to single tickets, for those who constructed the greatest number of words from the letters in "The Third Alarm" at Pantages theatre.

"Robin Hood" Gets Tie-up with Meat Company on Odd Still

Mount Vernon, N. Y.—A brand new tie-up on Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood" was evolved by Leland Hayward of the United Artists' staff, who exploited the picture at the Westchester theatre.

He gathered himself an armful of material, and in looking for some black and white stills for window display purposes, he ran across an off-stage picture of Douglas Fairbanks holding a huge papier mache "prop" ham and playing an imitation tune across the hambone with a huge Robin Hood bow—much as the "heavy" in an old-fashioned orchestra used to caress the "bull-fiddle."

"Say it with hams," was the thought that flashed through Hayward's agile mind, and he slipped one of the off-stage stills into his portfolio. In Mount Vernon he wandered around looking for a likely looking meat market. This he found in the establishment of the Independent Beef Company's place. It took him three days to sell the idea of a connection between the famous hero of twelve centuries ago and the Independent Beef Company's prize hams. At the end of three days, persistence won and for several days the still, glued to a 22x28 card, held the post of honor in the Independent Company's window, beneath the inscription: "If Robin Hood were alive today he'd buy our prize Hams."

"Lost in a Big City" Gets Excellent Exploitation

Providence, R. I.—"Lost in a Big City," which played recently at the Rialto theatre, was given a strong exploitation campaign, through the personal appearance of John Lowell, the star-producer, and Baby Ivy Ward, who appeared in his support, as well as L. Case Russell, the scenarist, and Evangeline Russell, one of the principals. They were feted and dined and were the guests of many civic and social organizations, and appeared before thousands of people daily at the Arcadia ballroom, where they were introduced and gave a little talk to the public.

Among some of the stunts used to get publicity were a bowling match betwee John Lowell and the local champion; Mr. Lowell's welcome to the city by Governor Flynn and Mayor Gainor; the appearance of Mr. Lowell before the Town Criers, an organization of advertising men, where he talked on advertising as related to motion pictures; his singing over the radio from the WEAN broadcasting station of the Shepherd stores; co-operative tie-up advertising between the Providence Tribune and the picture, which gave the theatre a full page of free advertising on Sunday, the day before the picture opened; the co-operative advertising with the Emery theatre, where Manager Martin Tuohey staged a local revue made up of about si ty Providence children. This was arranged by having Baby Ivy Ward attend a performance at the Emery and be introduced from the stage, where she invited the members of the kiddie revue to be her guests at a special matinee performance of "Lost in a Big City" at the Rialto theatre.

"Back Home and Broke" Is Exploited by Stranger

SOUTH PITTSBURGH, Tenn.—Strangers in a small town as a rule create excitement. When you dress them up and put signs on them, you are then creating something for the population to talk about. Manager Ogg of the Imperial theatre took advantage of this fact to put "Back Home and Broke" over.

A stranger drifted into town. Manager Ogg secured his services and dressed him up as a tramp, had him to go all over town Saturday before opening of show on Tuesday. He carried a sign on his back reading, "Back Home and Broke."

Bank Tie-up on "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime" Run

St. Louis, Mo.—Herschel Stuart, managing director of the Missouri theatre, and Ed Olmstead, publicity man for the house, got a quarter-page advertisement for "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime" through a tie-up with the National Bank of Commerce.

The Hook-up line was this: Mr. Billings says: I bought romance with my dime, but it's safer to put your dimes to work, etc.

The display was livened up by a cut of Walter Hiers taken from the Paramount press sheet.

Menu Card Stickers Are Used to Exploit "Adam's Rib"

Hamilton, Ohio—Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Palace theatre, made good use of the menu card tie-up in exploiting "Adam's Rib," concerning which he writes:

"When 'Adam's Rib' came along, we printed a few thousand stickers and by means of distributing some much coveted passes, arranged with the cashiers of every lunch room and restaurant in town, to paste these strips—NOT on the Bill-of-Fare proper, but on the 'Daily Special,' which in most places are changed for breakfast, dinner and supper.

"An inexpensive stunt, which created considerable talk and attracted much attention, and which is feasible where restaurant tie-ups have not been over-done. Speaking for Hamilton, this was the first "hook-up" of this sort."

Thorough Sales Campaign Made to Put "Adam's Rib" Over

Jacksonville, Fla.—Manager Guy A. Kenimer, of the Arcade theatre put over an unusually thorough advertising campaign for "Adam's Rib" recently. Advertising on the screen, in the lobby and on the billboards was started much earlier than usual on this production.

A week in advance 1,800 cards were mailed, playing up the director, the cast, title and story and giving the playing dates. Special cards with photos and catchy phrases were placed in the most prominent windows in the downtown section.

A lobby especially suited for such a display was decorated to bring out the contrasts in the picture. The entire front of the lobby was made to represent a cave. Spanish moss, palmettoes and branches of trees were arranged so as to completely cover sidewalks and ceiling. The regular lobby lights could not be used, so a baby spotlight was focused on a six-sheet in the back centre of the lobby. This sheet emphasized the caveman. The arcade that led from the lobby to the box-office and theatre was decorated in carnival style. Ribbons were strung from the chandeliers and walls, balloons and Japanese lanterns were hung from these. Paper streamers were thrown over all of this wherever it would be made to stick. All the lights were red and blue.

Stage Too Small; Manager Films Style Revue

FORT SMITH, Ark.—During the run of "Racing Hearts" three local merchants tied up with Manager Hugo Plath, of the Palace theatre, on a style revue. Since the Palace stage was too small to handle it adequately, a film was made showing the local girls in the latest of fashions, which created great interest.

Across the front of the lobby were hung 24-inch hearts which spelled out the title of the picture. In the center of the lobby was a beaverboard automobile which was designed and painted to resemble the car driven by Miss Ayres in the picture. The wheels of this automobile were made to revolve by means of a small motor.

Straw Hat Out of Season Is "Bella Donna" Ballyhoo

COLUMBIA, S. C.—After Manager C. W. Irvin, of the Imperial theatre had to wear a straw hat on the streets during a cold spell, as the result of losing a bet, he realized that it attracted wide attention.

As a result, Manager Irvin got his doorman, who is well known in Columbia, being an amateur minstrel star, to wear a straw hat. He had cards on his front and back reading:

"You may think I am rushing the season, but we have a habit of doing things first at the Imperial. Next week, we present Pola Negri in 'Bella Donna' for the first time it is shown in the South."

Women Jockeys Add Novelty to "Hottentot" Stunt

SEATTLE, WASH.—Female impersonators in ballyhoo stunts are not new, but real women jockeys proved an attention-getting stunt when Manager Leroy V. Johnson used the race-horse ballyhoo for "The Hottentot" at the Liberty theatre.

Horses familiar to Seattle fans from the local racetracks were used and increased the publicity and word of mouth advertising that the picture received. The theatre played in luck, for a snow-storm started with the ballyhoo and it made the sight of horses on the street even more unusual.

Banners advertising "The Hottentot" and the colors of the famous Ince entry were worn by all the riders.

Attractive Nautical Lobby is Built on "Down to the Sea"

Cleveland, Ohio.—One of the outstanding features of the exploitation campaign staged by Martin Printz for "Down to the Sea in Ships" at the Circle theatre was the novel and attractive lobby display that carried the boat idea out in full.

In the first place, the ticket booth had a boat-shaped base built around it, so that the upper part looked like a ship's cabin. A big wheel in the box-office window added the resemblance to a wheel-house on a ship. Lighthouses, with flashing lights that went on and off automatically, were placed at either side of the lobby entrance. A big sign announced at what hour the ship sailed. Another big sign stated what the first class passage cost.

But the big thing about the display was the ship's bell. This hung directly over the box-office window. A rope hung from the bell within the easy reach of the cashier. Intermittently, and especially just before each performance, she rang this bell. People walking on Euclid Avenue who had no intention of going to a picture show stopped to investigate.

Radio Exposition Is Held with "Mystery Box" Showing

St. Louis, Mo.—Herschel Stuart, managing director, and Ed. Olmstead, publicity man, put over a highly successful co-operative campaign on "The Mystery Box," making radio an aid instead of competition and lining up the St. Louis Post Dispatch in all its departments for the Missouri theatre showing.

The Post Dispatch was sold the idea of making a few hundred feet of film to add to "The Mystery Box" and show their own broadcasting station, KSD, in action. Naturally, the Post wanted every radio fan in the city of St. Louis to see their broadcasting station on the screen, so it advertised and advertised, telling Mr. and Mrs. St. Louis all about Radio Week.

After an advance showing of the "Mystery Box" every radio dealer wanted to come in, and they did to the extent of a special radio section in the Post Dispatch consisting of twelve pages, and each ad was a direct tie-up with the Missouri theatre.

Along with the newspaper scoop came a $25,000 radio lobby display in the lobby of the theatre, which turned into a regular exposition and didn't cost the Missouri a cent. Arrangements were made with the Post and they broadcasted from their station each night announcing "The Mystery Box" running at the Missouri one week in advance, and during the week of the Radio Show they broadcasted the concerts of Yerkes's Flotilla Orchestra right from the stage, all of the broadcasting apparatus being in full view of the audience.

"Mad Love" Sundae Tied Up with Run of Photoplay

BALTIMORE, Md. — Thomas D. Soriero, general manager of the Century theatre, and William N. Robson, Goldwynner, arranged a tie-up on "Mad Love" with the Hendler Creamery company, through which that company sent letters to its 800 ice cream dealers giving the formula for a "Mad Love" sundae and enclosing window strips to use in connection with same.

A publicity story sent out stated that this was the favorite dish of the Polish star. The formula, which may be used anywhere, is: One dip of vanilla cream, add a bit of crushed pineapple, a bit of cherry syrup and a small dish of chocolate syrup. Top off with cherries.

"Gimme" and "Mad Love" Given Strong Exploitation

Providence, R. I.—A strong exploitation campaign was put over for a double bill, "Gimme" and "Mad Love" at the Victory theatre, by Harry Crull, general manager; Matt Reilley, house manager and Goldwynner Buddy Stuart.

A striking street ballyhoo was made by taking a 24-sheet poster of each production and placing them on the sides of a large truck drawn by two fine white horses.

The heralds for both pictures were placed in various stores and restaurants throughout Providence. The Boston Store agreed to place the heralds in each package done up. A tie-up was made with the Waldorf, Astor and Belmont lunch rooms by which the heralds were distributed there. The big hotels of the city, the Narragansett, the Dreyfus and the cigar stands in the Biltmore Hotel also allowed heralds to be placed in them. Eight newsboys inserted the heralds in their newspapers in return for passes to the pictures.

"Gimme" buttons prepared by the Goldwyn e ploitation department for that feature proved very valuable among the boys of Providence. Eight hundred were distributed to the students of the technical high school and an additional 800 at the Summers street high school. Thirty boys were engaged to help distribute buttons at the schools and practically every newsboy in the city wore a button.

Shriners' Parade Is Utilized to Exploit "The Christian"

Akron, Ohio.—An indoor circus was being conducted by the Shriners of Akron at the time that Eddie Carrier, Goldwynner, was exploiting the showing of "The Christian" at the Allen theatre, and he made excellent use of the parade in exploiting the photoplay. This was done by placing a banner carrying the title of "The Christian" and the name of the theatre and date of showing on each side of one of the elephants in the parade.

The backs of twenty passenger buses were also decorated with "The Christian" banners, five by eight feet in size.

Four congoleum rugs, nine by twelve, were obtained gratis from the Akron Dry Goods Company. The title of the photoplay was painted in large red and white letters on the rugs, together with the announcement of the store: "Watch It Wear." The rugs were then placed in the street and on the sidewalk of the busiest section of Akron, proving an exceptional attention getter.

New Ending Contest Boosts Run on "Broken Chains"

SIOUX FALLS, S. D.—The well nigh universal desire to write scenarios was utilized when "Broken Chains" was shown at the Colonial theatre as the basis of a contest, tied up with the Daily Argus-Leader in which cash and ticket prizes were offered for the best new endings to the picture.

The contest was advertised daily under a double column head for four days, netting a total of about 250 new endings to the photoplay. Several of these were published in the columns of the Argus-Leader with the name of the writer, and as nearly everybody in Sioux Falls knows everybody else, these native attempts at scenario writing were eagerly scanned.

The prize for the best new ending of the picture was $10 in cash. Additional prizes consisted of groups of ten and five tickets to "Broken Chains" at the Colonial.

Novel Prologue Arranged for "Town That Forgot God"

Dayton, Ohio.—J. Howard Lichtenstein manager of the State theatre, arranged a novel prologue for the showing of "The Town That Forgot God," which he describes as follows:

"I built a tower on the stage, sixteen feet high, which resembled a hill, using a complete black drapery effect. On top of this platform I placed a double quartet of boy singers from one of the local churches. They were attired in their regulation church garb and they sang "The Holy City." A faint red spot light on one side and a strong blue spot on the other was the only light on the boys. At the finish of the song a large cross, six feet high and four feet wide, appeared in the distance blazing a fiery red. On this scene the screen was droppd and the picture flashed."

New Angle Gotten on Quatrain Contest to Exploit "Omar"

Louisville, Ky.—A special quatrain contest, differing from those used elsewhere, was arranged in connection with the run of "Omar the Tentmaker" at Louisville theatres.

Instead of asking the fans to fill in the mythical fourth line, the Louisville Courier-Journal had a pen artist make a line drawing illustrating some quatrain from "Omar's Rubaiyat." The contest ran for six days, six line drawings being used and twenty-four of the quatrains, six each day.

The question to decide was which of the quatrains was illustrated by each of the six drawings. There were eighteen superfluous quatrains printed and it became a matter of elimination.

To show how keen interest was in the solution of this literary puzzle, there were 2,000 answers submitted. Shortly after, when the interest was at its height, "Omar the Tentmaker" opened at B. F. Keith's National theatre.

Envelope Teaser Stunt Is "Dangerous Age" Aid

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—San Francisco wives, unless they differ widely from those in other parts of the country, must have suspected scandal looming up when they received a sealed envelope, the front of which read. "For Married Women only—Don't Show This to Your Husband."

There was bound to be a glimmer of disappointment for the inside message consisted of a teaser advertisement for "The Dangerous Age" at the Tivoli.

"Hottentot" Jockeys Dance to Exploit Pictures

LOS ANGELES, Cal.—When "The Hottentot" played at the Kinema theatre, the jockeys who participated in the picture were brought to a co-operative stunt pulled at the Cinderella Roof Dance Palace, the largest and most frequented ballroom in Los Angeles. for a special night called "The Hottentot Handicap Night."

Fourteen of these steeplechase riders rode to the ballroom on their horses. The equines, properly blanketed to advertise the picture. were left on the street outside the ballroom. The men. in jockey costume, enjoyed the festivities inside. took part in the dancing and acted as judges of the dancing race that preceded a specialty number called a comedy steeplechase. The entire program was widely advertised and not only drew record crowds to the Cinderella Palace but also gained valuable notice for the picture.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

"Playing It Wild"

Vitagraph—5400 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT'S rather difficult to determine just what William Duncan had in mind when he directed this picture. The title suggests a comedy idea, and the star, who produces his own photoplays, has succeeded in kidding the old-fashioned hokum westerns to some extent. Yet this number has a serious side, which is more than balanced with humorous twists and turns. It is one of the most enjoyable program features which have come along in some time, since it features an intrepid cowpuncher who possesses a roving disposition and who bobs up in the midst of a hot political fight between the crooked sheriff and an honest candidate.

There is a slight confusion at the start when Edith Johnson is pictured as a bride. The hero is discharged from the ranch and Duncan's co-star is next seen as the daughter of the newspaper proprietor—an utter stranger to him. This is remedied when it is discerned that she is playing a dual role, although the bridal figure vanishes from the story after the introductory footage. Duncan wins the newspaper plant and proceeds to run the paper vigorously and fearlessly—his policy being to elect the honest candidate and rid the community of the crooked sheriff.

Of course the romantic element is mostly subordinate to the incident—which is natural considering the girl's animosity toward the man who beat her daddy at cards. It is in the cowpuncher's masquerade as an outlaw that the picture releases its highlights, there being some new gags and not a little excitement. Particularly amusing is the scene when he lives up to his threat of pulling the sheriff's nose.

The subtitles are written in the vernacular of the plains and are highly picturesque. Most of these western captions go no further than such words as "ornery," "hombre" and "plumb loco," but this picture carries a complete vocabularly. Thus they aid in adding a proper atmosphere. The feature is well cast, there being some rare types, although Miss Johnson might have played her role more spiritedly. "Playing It Wild" is a semi-humorous western with a political twist. Duncan's hokum is highly enjoyable.

The Cast

Bill Rucker	Frank Weed

By C. Graham Baker. Directed by William Duncan. Produced by Vitagraph.

The Story—Cowpuncher with roving disposition rides into Western town and gets in bad with crooked sheriff. He wins a printing plant through gambling and proceeds to elect an honest candidate. He develops a romance with the newspaper man's daughtetr and through a series of adventures in which he assumes the disguise of a bandit he succeeds in electing his candidate.

Classification—Western melodrama involving political fight.

Production Highlights—The satirical vein in this Western. The snappy action. The subtitles. The good work by cast—all fine types. The scenes of the bandit's pranks.

Exploitation Angles—Since plot deals with political fight, you can get out a teaser campaign concerning it. Bill it as an interesting Western with Bill Duncan in a fascinating role.

Drawing Power—Good for any second class first run theatre. Should go big in program houses and in small towns.

Here is a characteristic scene from Stan Laurel's comedy for Pathe, "The Noon Whistle."

"The Purple Dawn"

Aywon-State Rights—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY have involved the racial barrier formula with an Oriental romance, and the result is a good box-office attraction which should please most any patron not expecting too much. Of course the idea is a familiar one, and the conventions are faithfully followed, but at the same time it manages to tell its story in a satisfactory way. The pattern of the little Oriental girl whose sorrow is unrequited love has served as fiction since time immemorial. In this instance tragedy does not take her in its embrace, the author seeing fit to allow her to live to find happiness with a man of her own race.

The plot is well developed and releases a suitable amount of atmosphere as well as the element of sympathy for the pitiful figure of the Chinese girl, the foster daughter of a wily Oriental who would save her for one of his own color. The girl is attracted to the white youth, and through melodramatic incident carrying a fair amount of action he is victimized by a group of crooks. The girl saves him from the dope peddlers and reunites him to his white sweetheart. And then the unfamiliar twist. Instead of drowning herself, as the scene suggests, the fair Lotus Blossom goes back to her promised husband. The author, who directed as well, has injected too much realism which is certain to jar upon the nerves of sensitive patrons. Some of this action needs trimming—such as the horse-whipping scene and the sequence in the river shack. Bessie Love is appealing as the heroine, and Edward Peil and Bert Sprotte are convincing as the villains—particularly Peil, who can play the wily Chink to the life. Do you remember him in "Broken Blossoms." It is a suitable program offering for the steady patron.

The Cast

Red Carson	Bert Sprotte
Bob	Wm. E. Aldrich
Quan Foo	James B. Leong
Wong Chong	Edward Peil
Mui Far	Bessie Love
Ketchell	J. P. Ogden
Ruth	Priscilla Bonner

By Charues R. Seeling. Directed by Charles R. Seeling. Photographed by Vernon Walker.

The Story—Treats of the romance of a Chinese girl who gives her heart to an American youth rather than obey the wishes of her foster father, who wants her to marry a Chinese friend. The boy does not respond. Later he is captured by band of crooks and tortured, but the Chinese girl watches over him and reunites him to his white sweetheart.

Classification—Racial barrier story. Romantic melodrama.

Production Highlights—Good atmosphere and first rate realism.

Exploitation Angles—Stories of an Oriental flavor are always popular. Play this up as interestinf little romance. Feature the cast. Play up Bessie Love. Use atmospheric prologue.

Drawing Power—Suitable for small downtown houses.

"The Affairs of Lady Hamilton"

Oswald-Hodkinson—7900 Feet

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

THIS production brings to the screen one of the most beautiful women, photographically, that we have encountered in some time, in the person of Liane Haid, who appears in the name role, Lady Hamilton. The entire story is woven about her, and would have been "stale, flat and unprofitable" if her beauty had failed to measure up to its needs.

We are not unaccustomed to having a woman referred to on the screen as the "toast of London," only to have her appearance fall miserably short, but in this instance, at least, we were not disappointed. Coupled with this beauty is a not inconsiderable measure of ability, with the result that her Lady Hamilton is a pleasing and interesting performance.

We cannot overlook, however, the consistently unusual work of Werner Kraus, who appears as Lord Hamilton. This actor, who understands screen pantomime as few do, has "walked away" with nearly every picture in which he has been seen, and "The Affairs of Lady Hamilton" is no exception. He makes the jealous husband a fascinating character, with all of the little mannerisms that make it live.

The story, which is historical in origin, deals with the life of Lady Hamilton, who rose from obscure village maiden to the leader of the court at Naples, where she makes possible Lord Nelson's victory at Trafalgar Bay. Brilliant scenes of court life, huge mob scenes, the battle of Trafalgar, and the like, make up a fascinating pageantry of historical romance, with more than the usual number of lavish and massive sets.

Admiral Lord Nelson appears prominently throughout the latter part of the story, well played by Conrad Veidt. The other members of the cast are well typed, as a whole.

Personally, we distinctly enjoyed this picture. Whether it is of a type suitable for his house is a problem that must be solved by each exhibitor individually.

The Cast

Lady Hamilton	Liane Haid
Horatio Nelson	Conrad Veidt
Sir William Hamilton	Werner Kraus
Queen Maria Carolina	Else Heims
King Ferdinand of Naples	Reinhold Schunzel
Arabella Kelly	Gertrude Welcker
George Romney	Theodor Loos
Charles Francis Greville	Anton Pointner
Josiah Nesbit	Hanas Heinz v. Twardowski
Jane Halling	Kate Waldeck
Dr. Graham	Hugo Doblin
Captain Hart (Tug)	Friedrich Kuhne
Capt. Sir John Willet Payne	Heinrich George
Tom Kid	Louis Ralph

Produced by Richard Oswald from "Life and Loves of Lady Hamilton" and "Lord Nelson's Last Love."

The Story—Deals with the life of Lady Hamilton, who starts as an obscure village maiden, goes to London, poses in a health emporium, becomes Romney's model, becomes protege of Greville, nephew of Lord Hamilton, marries Lord Hamilton, ambassador to Naples, becomes the leader of the Neapolitan court, falls in love with Lord Nelson, and is influential in obtaining aid which enables him to win the battle of Trafalgar Bay.

Classification—Historical drama.

Production Highlights—The large number of massive sets. The battle of Trafalgar Bay. Werner Kraus as Lord Hamilton. The beauty of Liane Haid. The excellent historical atmosphere.

Exploitation Angles—Tie up with schools on the historical angle. Feature pictures of Liane Haid prominently. Play up Warner Kraus, if you have played any of the other pictures in which he has appeared.

Drawing Power—Best suited for showing in downtown houses with transient patronage.

"A Noise in Newboro"

Metro—5188 Feet

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

WE are familiar with the idea which possibly originated when "Sis Hopkins" made her bow, establishing the popularity of the story of an unhappy country girl who makes a success of going to the city and ultimately returns to the old home town to "knock 'em dead." Such is the basis for "A Noise in Newboro"—if not an entirely new idea, always a safe one. Viola Dana is cast in the role of Martha Mason, awkward, unattractive, but endowed with gray matter, shunned and otherwise unkindly treated by nature and natives of a country town. Martha's talent for artistic work smoulders, but is fanned into a flame of desire to run away from her handicaps of environment and take a fling upon her own. So the picture begins with Martha as one of a graduating class from Newboro's public school, when she was even deprived of receiving a diploma because there weren't enough to go around. Discouraged and crushed, she finally convinces her father that the way to spend the two thousand dollars, her own inheritance, is to permit her to use it to take her to New York to school.

Seven years in New York has done wonders for many a country girl. When we next meet Martha she has acquired fame, fortune and a studio of her own upon the merits of her work and is surrounded by numerous admirers. Nevertheless, she has the "back home" complex and refuses to accept an eligible young man until she first returns to Newboro to keep faith with her childhood sweetheart and to provide additional comforts for her family.

The "noise" starts upon the arrival of Martha, accompanied by a city girl friend. It grows louder as the picture runs along, depicting how unwelcomely Martha is received by the former sweetheart, to whom she believes herself still engaged. Incidentally developments show him up as the town "bully" and that he is playing unfairly in town politics. It so happens that a fearless, but dying newspaper needs a "scoop" to put it back on a paying basis. Martha's story supplies the need and starts a revolution in the old town, making a "Noise in Newboro" that wakes up the community and ends in righting wrong all around. Then Martha goes back to the city that has been kind to her, there to become the bride of a man proud to claim the hand of Martha Mason, famed artist, whose trip back home instigated "A Noise in Newboro."

The Cast

Martha Mason.....Viola Dana
Ben Colwell.....David Butler
Anne Paisley.....Eva Novak
Buddy Wayne.....Allan Forrest
Leila Wayne.....Betty Francisco
Eben Paisley.....Alfred Allen
Harry Dixon.....Malcolm McGregor
Dorothy Mason.....Joan Standing
"Dad" Mason.....Bert Woodruff

Story by Edgar Franklin. Adaptation by Rex Taylor. Directed by Harry Beaumont. Photographed by John Arnold.

The Story—Country girl leaves the small town where she is unhappily excluded from social activities, being unattractive, and goes to New York to school, where she eventually becomes a famous artist. She goes back to the home town to keep faith with a man whose intentions, when a boy, she misunderstood, finds him engaged in unscrupulous city politics and to the daughter of the town's most wealthy citizen. Her coming excites comment and the uncovering of wrongs ending in a local revolution.

Production Highlights—Graduation exercises opening the picture, natural and convincing. Scene of riot when Newboro finds they have been fooled by small politicians.

Exploitation Angles—Good possibilities for tie-up with garages, shops dealing in automobile accessories and supplies. Can also tie up with art shops and use a Viola Dana doll, one designed to resemble Viola Dana, as Martha Mason.

Drawing Power—Anywhere that rural comedy-drama is welcome this is safe, especially in localities where Viola Dana has individual following.

"Vengeance of the Deep"

American Releasing—4753 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS is a picture which depends for its appeal upon its marine shots which, while they are of the studio, are fashioned in a realistic manner—with the result that the offering may be catalogued as something of a novelty. The locale is the South Seas, although the plot is not burdened with overworked types and incidents which have characterized most of our tales modeled after this w. k. pattern. Put the picture down as somewhat thrilling—what with the pearl diving activities which take up most of the action. The deep sea scenes look genuine, and this calls for praise for the good camera work.

The figures are a vicious skipper who rules with an iron hand, his daughter who provides the conflict and romantic interest, a few native pearl divers and a young beachcomber whose latent honesty comes to the surface under the response of the girl. The skipper precipitates some stark melodrama when he deliberately runs down the native chief's son, who has embarked in his skiff. This character, inspired to avenge himself, musses up the air pipe which sustains the skipper's chief diver. A tiger shark brushes through the water, lending an uncanny touch.

The final scenes show the beachcomber and the diver discovering a treasure chest with all its attendant melodramatic hokum. The conclusion shows the skipper and the other unruly characters very much hors de combat and peace is restored in the islands when the beachcomber is placed in charge of the pearl fisheries.

"Vengeance of the Deep" is a crisp melodrama which is sure to excite the interest of anyone in search of adventure. It is adequately played by Ralph Lewis as the skipper. The others in the cast are competent. The technical equipment of the picture is first rate throughout, and because the story gets away from the beaten track it is sure to be favorably received.

The Cast

Captain Musgrove.....Ralph Lewis
Ethel Musgrove.....Virginia Brown Faire
Jean.....Van Mattimore
Frederico.....Harmon McGregor
Tagu.....William Anderson
Native Chief.....Smoke" Turner
Kiliki.....Maida Vale

Story and direction by A. B. Barringer. Scenario by J. L. Lamothe and Agner Parsons.

The Story—Brutal lord of South Sea island has daughter coveted by white diver, but the girl is attracted to a beachcomber. Her father runs down the native chief's son and the latter revenges himself by attacking the white diver. The latter and the beachcomber discover a treasure chest at the bottom of the ocean, but the young derelict is attacked by a giant clam. He saves himself and rescues the girl.

Classification—Deep sea adventure story.

Production Highlights—The submarine shots. The atmosphere of the ocean bed, etc.

Exploitation Angles—Title has advertising value. Also play up the adventure and romance of story. Feature the submarine shots and bill it as a fascinating adventure picture.

Drawing Power—Should go well in small houses in downtown districts. Also suitable for neighborhood and small town theatres.

"Madness of Youth"

Fox—4791 Feet

(Reviewed by Lillian Gale)

THERE is always room for a novelty picture. "Madness of Youth," although offering other essential attributes, wins a place for itself upon strength of its appeal as a motion picture apart from the ordinary. It has a splendid beginning, finishes strong and lets down only during the run because of the need of "pepping up" which might easily be accomplished by the shortening of some of the longer sequences. Withal, it is a made-to-order vehicle for John Gilbert, lending opportunity to promote his popularity and offering possibilities to bring out his ability as an actor and star. Indeed, he delivers some splendid acting, supported by an exceptionally well balanced cast. Opposite the star is Billie Dove, a surprise in improvement, who radiates charm, looks well and remains steadfastly in the role of a care-free, beautiful daughter of a rich man and who develops admirable independence when it comes to the serious matter of choosing a husband.

There is a commendable production behind "Madness of Youth." One sequence, in particular, shows a costume ball described as a winter frolic in the home of a millionaire, embracing some novel and highly entertaining features. The sets are lavish, the direction adequate. Only the story is weak, being slightly difficult to follow. However, since it is one of those romantic types of narrative based upon a popular theme, it is fairly convincing despite the fact that it wanders far from logic. It describes the last adventure of a youthful crook who, like a wolf in sheep's clothing, covers himself as a suspect of robbery by assuming the role of a sort of an evangelist. He finally preaches salvation to others with a view to protection, until his preachment boomerangs and he, himself, becomes a convert of right living. Perhaps the fact that during preparation for his final "haul" he meets a woman who awakens the best there is in him, has something to do with his sudden conviction that the straight and narrow way is the only one that will make him an eligible husband for the right kind of girl. An interesting and entertaining picture is "Madness of Youth" and one sure to arouse much argument and comment.

The Cast

Jaca Javalie.....John Gilbert
Nanette Banning.....Billie Dove
Peter Reynolds.....Donald Hatswell
Ted Banning.....George K. Arthur
Theodore P. Baning.....Wilton Taylor
Mme. Jeanne Banning.....Ruth Boyd
Mason (Butler).....Luke Lucas
The Dancer.....Julianne Johnston

Directed by Jerome Storm. Story by George F. Worts. Scenario by Joseph Franklin Poland.

The Story—Describes the final adventure of a youthful crook of good blood, whose weakness is a desire to rob the rich. He protects himself from suspicion by assuming the role of an evangelist, known as "the holy man," going about preaching, making converts of others and then when the psychological moment offers, makes his "haul" and "get-away." His carefully laid plans, however, do not provide for such an obstacle arising as his falling in love with the daughter of the man he plans to rob. She unconsciously awakens the better man and when the way is prepared the mad youth finds himself a convert of his own preachments, and that what he desires more is to live aright and become eligible for the hand of the girl who brings about the change of heart and desire.

Classification—Novelty treatise upon hypnosis, auto-suggestion, or both. Embraces romance, serious moments, laughter and borders upon being spectacular.

Production Highlights—Scenes during the indoor winter carnival given in millionaire's home when the "holy man" preaches salvation to the pleasure seekers. Incidents leading up to boomerang of crook's preachment, himself a convert of right living.

Exploitation Angles—Varied and plentiful, cast production and star.

Drawing Power—Timely theme. Likely to meet with approval in any class of theatre.

"Bavu"

Universal—6968 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

UNDOUBTEDLY this play was written with the screen in mind since it carries all the essentials which provide an exciting hour. Presumably burdened with dialogue, it showed itself as lacking in punch, and it may be that it appeared unconvincing. These faults have been remedied in the film translation, and what transpires has all the earmarks of a good, old-fashioned blood and thunder melodrama.

The background of this picture is the Russia at the height of the revolution, and doubtless the author was inspired through the vital figure of Lenin. For dramatic purposes he exposes his central figure, from which the play takes its name, as an ignorant, uneducated, uncouth brute, who, drunk with power after the overthrow of the czar, plots to wreak vengeance upon everyone who comes across his path. He uses the call of patriotism to cloak his mad impulses, and through the power of his eloquence and his vital personality he has the peasantry completely under his domination.

It is a simple story—one easily anticipated. Really the action revolves around the conflict of three figures, Bavu, Mischka, the educated servant who has charge of passports and licenses, and the princess in whose home the commissioner was formerly employed. It is to save her that the two men scheme to overthrow each other.

Stuart Paton, the director, has excellently brought forth the atmosphere and considerable vivid touches—such as the mass meeting of the rabble and the pillage and looting of the city. Once in a while the offering reminds us of a serial, because of its hectic action. There is no let-down. In fact, it keeps going with plenty of movement, color and thrills to the end. The finish shows the ignorant Bavu being outwitted by his educated rival. There is a pursuit over the snow which results in the death of the vicious peasant.

"Bavu" gives Wallace Beery another opportunity to show his masterly skill at characterization. His make-up, his eloquent pantomime and fascinating mannerisms are deftly suggested. In fact, he makes the picture. Since he is in nearly every scene the picture compels attention. His support is competent. An exciting melodrama, this "Bavu," which holds the interest because of its characterization and incident. Watching Beery you forget its obviousness and the fact that it carries few dramatic twists.

The Cast

Felix Bavu.....Wallace Beery
Princess Annia.....Estelle Taylor
Mischka Vleck.....Forrest Stanley
Olga Stropik.....Sylvia Breamer
Prince Markoff.....Jos. Swickard
Kuroff.....Nick De Ruiz
Piplette.....Martha Mattox
Shadow.....Harry Carter
Michael Revno.....Jack Rollens

By Earl Carroll. Scenario by Raymond L. Schrock and Albert G. Kenyon. Directed by Stuart Paton. Photographed by Allen Davey. Produced by Universal.

The Story—Russian revolutionist incites the peasantry to burn the city. Mischka, a former servant in nobleman's home, is commissioner of licenses under the new administration. He loves the princess and in order to get her out of the country it is necessary to have the passport sealed with the revolutionist's ring. A fight follows, but Mischka escapes with the girl while Bavu drowns in the pursuit.

Classification—Melodrama of Russian upheavel.

Production Highlights—The action and suspense. The good exteriors and atmosphere. The fine performance of Wallace Beery in title role.

Exploitation Angles—Universal has nifty campaign book on this picture, which uses a "punch" ad, "Everlastingly Exciting." Use it. Play it up as melodramatic account of life in Russia during the revolution.

Drawing Power—Should prove interesting for all second class first run houses.

"California or Bust" is Snub Pollard's latest for Pathe.

"Prodigal Daugthers"

Paramount—6216 Feet

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

THIS is sure a modern picture. It deals with our jazz hounds and their feminine counterparts, with life in dear old Greenwich Village, with flapperism as indulged in by the 1923 sisterhood. What more would any house want to drag them in. This is a picture possessing those qualities of which box office totals are made. The story isn't original, but it introduces new touches—radio concerts and talks, one of which is picked up by an aviator, parlor parties as indulged in by our sheiks and shebas, with a stolen kiss ever and anon as the colored jazzists pour forth their quivering melody, rolled stockings, short Poirets and so on and so forth through a review of weaknesses of present-day youth. But who will gainsay that this is not just what a jaded public is seeking as entertainment

The picture starts out with a real thrill. It shows an aviator coming to earth in response to a radio message, picking up the heroine and going away for a ride in the skies, the approach of a terrific lightning and rainstorm, which sends the aircraft to the terra firma. It is the big thrill of the picture.

Gloria will surprise her admirers in this picture—for, lo and behold, she really acts, yes, sir, acts as she has never done before, and we'll wager she will make you sit up in some of the scenes toward the close of the "fillum." As for her gowns, which, by the way, are an important asset to every Swanson picture they are le dernier mot in styledom.

The star is fortunate in having a very capable cast in her support. Theodore Roberts as J. D. Forbes, the father, is, of course, good. Ralph Graves is the leading man. Vera Reynolds, who we do not recall seeing before on the shadow stage, gives us a colorful picture of just what a flapper looks—and acts like. Others are Charles Clary and Robert Agnew. The subtitles are attractive, but some of them need toning down. The climax, showing the homecoming of the prodigal daughters, who have seen life, possesses real punch.

The Cast

"Swiftie" Forbes.....Gloria Swanson
Roger Corbin.....Ralph Graves
Marjory Forbes.....Vera Reynolds
J. D. Forbes.....Theodore Roberts
Mrs. Forbes.....Louise Dresser
Stanley Garside.....Charles Clary
Lester Hodges.....Robert Agnew

Adapted by Monte M. Katterjohn from the story by Joseph Hocking. Directed by Sam Wood.

The Story—Deals with two daughters who rebel against convention and who, after being reproved continually by their father, leave home to "be their own bosses." One marries, hubby tires of wedlock and leaves wifey; the other sees that men must always figure in her affairs and eventually becomes disgusted when she is almost caught in a raid on a cabaret and rushes home to father.

Classification—Very much modern society drama.

Production Highlights—The wreck of the airplane during the realistic storm. The lavish interiors. The fireworks display. Scenes in Greenwich Village.

Exploitation Angles—You can always tie up with the fashion stores on photos of Gloria in her lavish costumes. Might put on a jazz dance with a colored orchestra as a prologue.

Drawing Power—A good box office attraction anywhere.

"The Bright Shawl"

Inspiration-First National—7503 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

MOST artistic production through which palpitates a colorful tale of romance and adventure is "The Bright Shawl," adapted from Joseph Hergesheimer's story of the same name. Anyone familiar with the tale will appreciate the difficulties which confronted John Robertson in moulding it into a moving and compelling photoplay—considering the fact that its protagonist is not so sharply drawn in the book.

This romantic adventure of the fifties, when Cuba sought independence from Spain, comes to the screen a fascinating picture—one which is saturated with colorful backgrounds, detail and adventurous incident. Its figures are made intimate and human, and as they are piloted through scene after scene they take the spectator with them. There's a fine glamour of romance which hovers over the picturesque, though pitiful, character of the dancer, who, through her affection for the courageous American, turns against her countrymen. One follows this young adventurer's exploits as he accompanies the Cuban patriot to his home with the deepest interest. There is surprise and suspense with every change of scene. Moreover, the picture carries an authenticity which embellishes it with realistic atmosphere. The painstaking attention to detail marks every setting, and these backgrounds help wonderfully in emphasizing the romantic glamour.

Everett Shinn, the art director, has created genuine reproductions of Spanish atmosphere—and these are complete down to the most unimportant detail. And John Robertson has treated the story so that its romantic song of yesterday will linger in the memory—like a tone poem of Schubert's played upon an old-fashioned harpsichord. It's a spirited story crammed with picturesque incident that features a theatre scene, intimate love episodes, furtive courtship and a dramatic duelling contest. And when the little dancer, delightfully played with romantic fervor tinctured with spirited and hoydenish fancy by Dorothy Gish, dies, she catches the spectator in a tight embrace of sympathy. This very able pantomimist never created a more compelling role, nor one which fitted her personality any better. She fairly exudes color and magnetism, suggesting always the highly sexed little dancer which the author painted. Richard Barthelmess lends dignity and warmth to his role of the American. His repression is most commendable.

The Cast

Charles Abbott, an American.....Richard Barthelmess
Andres Escobar, a young Cuban patriot.....Andre de Beranger
Domingo Escobar, his father; also a patriot.....E. G. Robinson
Carmenita Escobar, his wife; Andres' mother.....Margaret Seddon
Narcissa Escobar, their daughter; Andres' sister.....Mary Astor
Vincente Escobar, Andres' elder brother..Luis Alberni
Cesar Y Santacilla, a Spanish captain..Anders Randolf
Gaspar de Vaca, also a Spanish captain.William Powell
La Clavel, an Andulusian dancer.....Dorothy Gish
La Pilar, a spy; a sweetheart of Spain....Jetta Gondal

By Joseph Hergesheimer. Scenario by Edmund Goulding. Directed by John S. Robertson.

The Story—Wealthy New Yorker becomes interested in the freedom of Cuba and accompanies a Cuban friend to his home and is thrust into dangerous adventures and two romances. The American succeeds, with the aid of Spanish dancer who has worked for Cuban liberty, in saving his sweetheart and her father and mother. The dancer gives him the bright shawl as a token of her affection.

Classification—Romantic drama.

Production Highlights—The exceptionally fine staging and art work. The rich atmosphere. The work of the star and Dorothy Gish Exploitation Angles—You have a famous author, director and star to exploit here as well as Dorothy Gish. Play it up big as exceptionally colorful romance. Use plenty of atmosphere, dressing ushers in Spanish costumes.

Drawing Power—Should prove a great drawing card everywhere.

Albany Notes and Eastern New York Briefs

WITH a fat check in his wallet and lugging a silver loving cup, Vic Bendell, manager of the F. B. O. exchange in Albany, returned to town from New York after having been declared the winner in a sales contest which his company has been conducting during the last three months. The cup represented the biggest increase in business of any F. B. O. office in the entire United States, while the cash prize came to Mr. Bendell for his efforts toward new business in his territory, which runs north to the Canadian border. Everyone in town extended their congratulations to Mr. Bendell, who only went with F. B. O. in December after six years spent with Goldwyn in Albany.

The Leland in Albany has just signed a contract with the Fox exchange for five special pictures, including "The Town That Forgot God," which will run the week of April 23.

W. W. Berinstein arrived in town from Elmira on Saturday, and, in company with George Roberts, spent Sunday in Little Falls, where he is erecting a $150,000 theatre.

A. J. Herman, manager of the First National exchange in Albany, spent Saturday and Sunday in New York attending a sales meeting.

Exhibitors in Albany are openly divided on the question of Sunday shows for that city. The proposition has been discussed at one or two meetings of exhibitors during the past month. The neighboring cities of Troy and Schenectady have Sunday shows. A few of the Albany exhibitors, however, are opposed to the idea and announce that any attempt on the part of their associates will result in the fight being carried to a finish. In view of the split, there will probably be no serious attempt made toward enacting a city ordinance allowing Sunday shows in the Capital City.

The growth of the serial idea in first-class houses is shown in the fact that J. J. Walker, owner of the Barcli in Schenectady, N. Y., has booked the first serial in the history of the house. He will show the varioius episodes of "The Haunted Valley."

Ormond Roberts has been named to manage the Palace in Troy, N. Y., owned by W. W. Berinstein.

Trade Jottings from Central Pennsylvania

FOR the entertainment of the twelve children who are pupils with Gifford Pinchot, jr., the live-wire, 7-year-old son of Governor Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, in the Pinchot experimental school, a special showing of the "Robin Hood" film was given in the Executive Mansion, in Harrisburg, on the night of April 11. Besides the pupils their parents and friends were also invited. Joseph Berrier, of Harrisburg, clerk to the Pennsylvania State Board of Motion Picture Censors, was in charge of the presentation of the film. The event was the result of a personal invitation by telegraph from Douglas Fairbanks, star of the film, sent by him from Hollywood, to the Governor, C. Floyd Hopkins, representative of the Wilmer & Vincent theatrical and motion picture interests in Harrisburg and Reading, co-operated with Mr. Berrier in arranging the entertainment. The "Robin Hood" film opened for a week's run in the Colonial theatre, a Wilmer & Vincent house in Harrisburg, starting April 16.

There was standing room only in the big Chestnut Street hall, Harrisburg, on the afternoon and evening of April 12, when the amateurs aspiring to become film actors and actresses, through the medium of the Harrisburg Telegraph's "search" by the Screen Scouts for new screen artists, were shown in films that had been taken two weeks before in the Majestic theatre. This was the first of a series of such exhibitions of the skill of amateurs from all parts of Central Pennsylvania. As an added attraction there appeared in person at both performances, Edward Earle, the film star; Dorothy Knapp, "America's Venus"; Clara Bow, Marjorie Evans and Al Haynes, another professional, who entertained the crowd and answered questions about the film world and explained how films are made. On the day before the shows in Chestnut Street hall, Dorothy Knapp, Clara Bow, Marjorie Evans and Al Haynes took a short flight in one of the airplanes of the United States government aviation field at Middletown, near Harrisburg.

On Sunday, April 15, the annual Stanley V. Mastbaum memorial ceremonies were held at the Eagleville Sanatorium. The program was held partly in a big tent on the lawn of the sanatorium and partly indoors for the inmates of the home. Among those who, it was announced before the ceremonies would be on the speakers' program are Lieutenant-Governor David Davis, of Pennsylvania; Judge Horace Stern, of Common Pleas Court, No. 2, Philadelphia; Justice John Kephart, of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania; and Judge John J. Monahan, of Philadelphia. Music was provided by the Stanley Theatre orchestra, Philadelphia, under direction of Albert F. Wayne. The committee in charge of the ceremonies consisted of Lawrence D. Boggs, chairman; Al Boyd, John J. McGuirk, Abe Sablosky, Lew Sablosky, Frank W. Buhler, Morris Boney, Charles Segall and Abe L. Einstein, all of Philadelphia.

Damage totaling $1,000 was done to a business building at Fourth and Market streets, Harrisburg, owned by Peter Magaro, owner and manager of the Regent Theatre, nearby, by flames on the afternoon of April 9. The fire swept through four cellars under stores in the building, and did about $9,000 additional damage to stock of the tenants. The losses were covered by insurance. The theatre property was not in danger.

The Diamond Theatre, Hazelton, has been leased from Martin P. Meyers by Hank Dombroski, who has undertaken the management of this picture house.

The organ in the Victoria Theatre, Tamaqua, will be presided over in the future by Miss Julia Johnson, who for ten years had been organist in a Shamokin theatre.

The stockholders of Carr & Schad, Inc., which controls a number of motion picture theatres in Reading, at their annual meeting re-elected H. J. Schad as president of the corporation; C. H. Schlegel, vice president; Mrs. Robert Nevin, secretary and treasurer, and F. A. Marks, counsel. The board of directors consists of the above officers and H. D. Kern and W. S. Essick.

TRADE MARK

Columbus discovered America; Edison the electric lamp; and Peary the North Pole.

Harold Lloyd discovered how to mix laughs and thrills in one amazing picture,—"Safety Last."

They ought to declare a holiday when you show it. It deserves a monument.

His biggest and his best.

Snub Pollard Comedies

Two parts each

If everybody and everything got better as steadily as these Pollard comedies, there would be no need of cooing Coue twenty times twice daily.

Have you seen the newest three or four?

They are twice as good in every way.

"The kind that are liked"

"'The Newly Rich' is a good two part comedy with many a hearty laugh throughout. The kind of comedies that are liked here."—Adolph Kohn, Pastime, Granville, N. Y. (Ex. Herald).

"We have used four Snub Pollard comedies and found them all very good. The new gags get a lot of laughs."—E. D. Probst, Comet, Delano, Minn. (Amusements).

"A sure bet for laughs"

"'Light Showers' is a sure bet for laughs. The water stunts are great."—Anderson and Weatherby, Gem, Omaha, Neb. (Ex. Herald).

"'Hook, Line and Sinker' is a very good comedy."—Rae Peacock, Mystic, Stafford, Kan. (Ex. Herald).

Around Seattle's Photoplay Trade Circles

LEROY V. JOHNSON, manager of the Liberty theatre, officially became a member of the Seattle Board of Theatre Censors last week at the first meeting that the newly organized board has held. One of the first out-of-the-ordinary duties that was scheduled to come before the board was the investigation of several motion picture films made in Japan and announced for showing in the Oriental district of this city.

Leroy V. Johnson

The pictures, including a detective story thriller "The Mother's Sin," and another, "The American Family," were brought to Seattle by a Japanese resident of the city and were widely advertised as a great treat for the Japanese. "The management," however, announced that while everyone was welcome to attend the pictures in Nippon Hall, "The American Family" was not considered suitable for viewing by Americans. "Nice picture, just don't like to have Americans see," were said to be the words of the Orientals in charge of the entertainment. As a result of this, George Bouckeart, president of the censorship board, and Mrs. Beatrice Lung, secretary, were calling a special meeting of the board to investigate the photoplays before they were exhibited to any audiences.

The pictures have no subtitles, but were to have been presented in the Japanese manner, with a "speaking man" telling the story as the films are shown. This manner has been adopted because so few members of a Japanese audience are able to read rapidly the difficult Japanese writing, it is said.

It is thought highly probable that the films were brought into the United States to be exhibited as a result of the great success which a Chinese grand opera company enjoyed when it was recently in this city.

Roy Boomer, manager of the Spokane Universal exchange, and John N. McMeekan, manager of the Portland office, were in Seattle for several days recently. Frank Talbert, traveling auditor of the Universal Film Company. was also in town, en route to San Francisco after having visited the exchanges along the Coast and in British Columbia.

H. M. Ganfield has just joined the local force at Universal as feature salesman. He was formerly the eastern Washington and Montana salesman for Vitagraph. The first print of "The Abysmal Brute" has arrived here and has been enthusiastically praised by all persons who have seen it.

The entire output of Al Lichtman, C. C. Burr and Principal Pictures to be handled by Al Rosenberg's De Luxe Feature Film Company have been bought by the Silver Bow Amusement Company, operating two theatres in Butte, Montana, according to advice received from Louis Rosenberg, De Luxe sales manager, who has just returned to the city after a trip around the territory.

"Are You a Failure?" is the latest Lichtman released to reach the local exchange. It has already been booked into the new Rialto theatre in Bozeman, Montana, which is scheduled to open about the middle of May, and local bookings are expected to be announced soon.

Although much of the paper and accessories for the picture have not arrived yet, "Quicksands," the latest American Releasing Corporation product, has already been sold by Manager Louis Amacher in three cities and showings were expected to take place before the first of May. Among the bookings announced were week runs at the Blue Mouse theatre in Tacoma, Charles Stilwell's Casino theatre in Spokane and William Sullivan's Rialto theatre in Butte.

Among the Paramount pictures booked into the Jensen-Von Herberg theatres in Seattle during April by George Endert, manager of the local Famous Players exchange, were "The Nth Commandment," "Grumpy," "The White Flower," "Adams's Rib," "Nobody's Money" and "The Glimpses of the Moon." "The Go-Getter" and "The White Flower" were scheduled for showing the week of April 15 at the Liberty and Coliseum theatres respectively, and "The Nth Commandment" was booked to play the Strand at the culmination of "The Christian" run.

W. E. Bamford, manager of the Goldwyn exchange, has been out of the city for the past week on a tour around the local territory, having spent most of the time in Spokane. F. M. Barclay, exploitation manager for the Goldwyn Company, who came to Seattle recently to exploit "The Christian" has left for Bellingham, where he expected to spend a few days in arranging publicity and exploitation for the run of the picture there.

"Masters of Men" has arrived at the Vitagraph exchange and H. A. Black, manager, has been arranging trade showings for the picture. A Vitagraph all-comedy bill was scheduled for presentation at the Columbia theatre the week of April 15, as Manager R. W. Case had booked "A Front Page Story" and Larry Semon in "The Counter Jumper."

"The Man from Glengarry" has been received by J. R. Beal, manager of the Hodkinson exchange, and has already been sold to John Hamrick for a run at the Blue Mouse theatre in Tacoma.

Trade Bulletin from Spokane

DR. HOWARD S. CLEMMER, veteran showman and co-proprietor with Dr. H. C. Lambach, of the Clemmer theatre, is getting worlds of publicity through a cartoon contest being conducted by the Spokane Chronicle. Dr. Clemmer was selected as one of the subjects for the contest and hundreds of pen and ink and crayon likenesses have been turned in.

Dr. H. S. Clemmer

Although some of the Baptist preachers of the city drew up a resolution condemning Charles Chaplin's "The Pilgrim," for alleged caricature of the clergy, the picture ran without interference at the Liberty theatre here and played to big houses the week of April 1.

Manager Ray Grombacher, of the Liberty, billed the Chaplin feature, with Pola Negri's "Mad Love" and with this combined bill did business. "The Pilgrim" was protested by ministers at Walla Walla and was not shown there.

Constance Talmadge's "East Is West" found a great reception in Spokane, in spite of that fact that strong bills competed at other houses. "Driven," the Universal feature, was shown at the Casino theatre the week starting April 8th.

Jottings from Kansas City and Vicinity

A BANDIT slipped into the office of the Main Street theatre, Kansas City, Monday night, locked Sam Branson in a vault, passed approximately $6,000 out of a window to a confederate, and leisurely walked through the crowded lobby to the street. The loot, the receipts of Saturday and Sunday, was covered by insurance. The theatre was packed with the largest crowd of the season, yet not one of those in the audience knew the hold-up was taking place. Branson was found an hour later, bound and gagged, lying face down on the floor of the vault. Jack Quinlan, the manager of the theatre, had missed Branson and had been searching the building for him almost an hour before he was found.

A new attendance record was almost established Sunday and Monday at the Royal theatre, Kansas City, when 10,000 persons paid admission to see "Robin Hood," on the first two days of a week's run. Although booked as a week's run, there is little chance now of the showing ending this week.

Dr. Carlos DeMandil, orchestra leader at Frank L. Newman's Royal theatre, Kansas City, was injured in a motor car wreck Tuesday. A taxi in which he was riding downtown lost its right front wheel. The car tipped to the right and Dr. DeMandil's right arm was badly bruised. He was taken to his home.

Foot-stirring strains of "Money Musk," "Rye and Straw" and "Polly Put the Kettle On," have served to swell the attendance greatly at the Pantages theatre, Kansas City, a combination motion picture and vaudeville house, during the last week. Virtually no expense was attached to an old fiddlers' contest, which received liberal support from the press, resulting in a landslide of entries in the event. Top prize was $10.

Cleveland Adams, assistant general manager in charge of Universal exchanges in the Kansas City territory, has returned to Kansas City after an absence of several weeks.—"Business?" "Great!" explodes "Cleve."

Joseph Cooper, well known exhibitor of Oklahoma City, Okla., took advantage of a few hours to visit friends in Kansas City, Sunday. He was on his way from New York to Oklahoma City.

By use of lattice work around the front of the theatre covered with flowers, colored balloons and Japanese lanterns, pots and palms in the lobby and on top of the marquee, Showalter Lynch, of the Kansas theatre, Wichita, Kas., made an attractive Mardi Gras atmosphere of "While Paris Sleeps" last week. The equipment cost very little and greatly increased the attendance, according to Mr. Lynch.

William K. Jenkins, president of the Enterprise Distributing Corporation, who was in Kansas City last week, en route to Atlanta from the West Coast, is liberal with predictions that a prosperous era for independent pictures is ensuing. The fact that all-independent producers are busy making better pictures with more elaborate settings is cited by Mr. Jenkins as evidence of his assertions.

A "field day," regulation Navy style, is being celebrated in the Kansas City First National office this week. Curtains down, walls and ceiling being washed, mops on the floor, and a look of discomfort on everybody's face.

Apparently there is at least a wee bit of solid foundation to the "prosperity" talk that is passed up and down Kansas City's film row. Jule E. Hilli, Goldwyn manager, has purchased a Nash sedan, "Bill" Warner of the Paramount office has acquired a sport model Nash roadster, "Bill" Flynn of the Richards & Flynn exchange is the proud owner of a 7-passenger Peerless, while Ford coupes are as plentiful as 1-sheets.

Buffalo Briefs and Western New York Notes

ARTHUR L. SKINNER, manager of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, now that summer is coming, is lining up all the "big ones" he can lay his hands on. Mr. Skinner believes that the summer is going to be a good one for business. "Why lay down in the summer, cut out advertising, chop the quality of your pictures—and send your patrons to your competitors' house," that's Art's idea. He's right, of course.

Arthur L. Skinner

The Buffalo Motion Picture Corporation, with offices in the Ellicott Square, is bankrupt. The company has filed a voluntary petition setting forth liabilities of $71,238 and assets of $11,876. The petition is signed by E. A. Jones, vice-president of the company. Most of the money is reported to be owed to the following Buffalo men: J. J. Roesch, Peter Ernst, E. E. Person, E. A. Jones, G. P. Spohr, L. E. Moschel, W. J. Simon and J W. Lansing. The People's Bank holds a note for $9,000 The assets include about $8,500 in posters and ad accessories and some $18,000 in contracts, the money on which, however, will not be forthcoming until the pictures are shown. Earl L. Crabb, former manager of the old local Strand and now owner of the System in Syracuse, at one time had an office in New York, where he was general manager of the company.

Col. F. L. Schweppe, owner of the Colonial and Amusu in Elmira and one of the best known exhibitors in this neck of the woods, died suddenly last Friday of pneumonia. He was taken to the hospital on Thursday.

The Eastman, Rochester, will show "Down to the Sea in Ships," according to an announcement by A. W. Carrick, Hodkinson manager, who is also authority for the statement that William Fait the second has arrived in Rochester at the home of the Eastman manager. Eight-pound boy and everyone's feeling fine, thank you.

J. Meyer Schine took over the Temple theatre in Lockport this week. Mr. Thurston, former owner, is planning to give his entire attention to his oil interests in Indiana.

The will of the late Patrick J. Kelly, one of the owners of the Hi-Art theatre in Lockport, has been filed for probate. The estate is valued at upwards of $5,000, the document states. Everything is left to a brother in Ireland. Work has commenced on the new Associated Theatres, Inc., house in Lockport at East avenue and Elm street. The house, which will open in the fall, will have a seating capacity of 1,800 and will cost $150,000. John Moon & Son of the Lock City have the general contract.

Jacob Rosing, his wife and sons have left for a trip to Europe. Mr. Rosing is one of the principal stockholders in the Lafayette Square theatre. Prior to his departure there was a farewell party in the directors' room of the big house at which liquid dynamite was served. At least Manager Fred Shafer never felt better in his life. He went to the fight the same night and complained of seeing four boxers in the ring all the time.

Manager Henry Bernstein of Universal has engaged F. E. Duffy, a former exhibitor, to represent the company in the Utica district. George Schaeffer of "U" has purchased a new Nash sport model.

The New Rex theatre in Geneseo, N. Y., which Manager Frank Aprile has just thoroughly overhauled, redecorated and newly equipped, will reopen May 1. Mr. Aprile will add an orchestra to the program.

William L. Sherry has been in town with Distinctive's first release through Goldwyn, "Backbone," which he screened for Vincent R. McFaul at Shea's Hippodrome last week.

Jack Mooney, who at one time was in charge of Hodkinson's Buffalo office, and who is now a special representative for Hodkinson, was in Buffalo last week for a conference with First National Manager E. J. Hayes. Jack looks great.

Watkins, N. Y., is about to have a new theatre. D. S. White, who now operates the Glen theatre in that Southern Tier city, will build the house.

Miller Stanton has taken over the Pictureland theatre in Cohocton, N. Y., which he is remodeling. Al Wilcox, who formerly managed this house, has just married a Rochester school teacher.

With the H. A. Snow pictures at the Olympic and the Martin Johnson films at the Criterion, Buffalo is getting its full share of African wild animal pictures. The Olympic originally planned to show their feature the week of April 22, but moved it up a week when the Criterion suddenly booked in the Metro picture. The Olympic is operated by Universal. In connectioin with the Criterion showing, Manager Lionel Edel arranged a Boy Scout party in co-operation with the Enquirer, inviting every scout in the city to see the pictures Saturday morning as a guest of the theatre and the paper. The invitations were also sent out via radio.

Elmer Dodds, well known in Buffalo, where at one time he was manager of the Educational exchange, is now general manager of the Associated Theatres, Inc., interests in Corning, N. Y., including the Regent, Princess, Liberty and State theatres. Elmer of late has been engaged in an independent exchange business in Syracuse.

Burlesque is now the policy at the Cataract theatre, in Niagara Falls, N. Y. Charlie Haymans had been showing pictures there. Herman Lorence broke all attendance records at the Bellevue theatre last week with "Safety Last," the Harold Lloyd comedy.

Exchange and Exhibitor Items from St. Louis

PLANS to rob the safe of the Rivoli theatre, 208 North Sixth Street, St. Louis, on Monday morning, April 9, were frustrated by Patrolman James Dunn. He found the rear door of the theatre open and summoned aid. The police then found that the would-be robbers had carried the safe containing two days' receipts from the front lobby to the rear of the building. They had hammered off the combination in an attempt to open the strong box. Indications were they intended to return later and carry the safe away in an automobile. Four suspects were arrested.

The St. Louis Symphony Orchestra will probably have to seek another home next season. Henri Chouteau, who recently purchased the Odeon building and theatre, has converted the amusement place into a motion picture house. If it proves as successful with the movies as Chouteau hopes he will not lease the house to the symphony orchestra or for other concerts.

"We are making a test and should know within the next several days whether the Odeon will be made a permanent movie house or revert to its former policy," Chouteau said.

Henry Fredericks, 33 years old, a bricklayer, sustained a fracture of his left leg and severe scalp lacerations when he was knocked from a scaffold on the second floor of the new theatre under construction at Leffingwell avenue and Morgan Street, St. Louis, on April 11. Fredericks and Dickson Corly, a negro hodcarrier, got into an argument and Corly knocked him from the scaffold.

Members of the St. Louis Film Board of Trade and the newly formed St. Louis Film Sales Association attended the opening baseball game between the St. Louis Browns and Cardinals at Sportsmen Park on April 14th in a body. Reservations were made for 150 and the film men occupied one of the large sections in the grandstand. The Browns won, 3 to 0. Prior to the game a banquet was served at the Elks Club.

Mannion Park, 8614 South Broadway, St. Louis, leading South Side summer garden and moving picture theatre, has been purchased by A. Sauter. He is said to have paid James P. Mannion $50,000 for the garden. He will continue to operate it as formerly.

Charles Goodnight, of De Soto, Mo., spent several days in St. Louis the past week. His son underwent an operation at one of the local hospitals on April 12.

The Rivoli theatre is installing a Robert Morton orchestral organ. The instrument was purchased from the Superba theatre, Los Angeles, Cal., and reached St. Louis a few days ago.

The music program of the Missouri theatre, Grand Boulevard and Lucas Avenue, St. Louis, is to be broadcasted every Saturday night by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch broadcasting radio station KSD. Manager Herschal Stuart features his music and vocal selections, the Missouri's symphony orchestra, directed by Isadore Cohen, being recognized as among the most capable in the country.

G. M. Luttrell of the Majestic theatre, Jacksonville, Ill., has arranged a Universal Week, May 6 to 12, inclusive. He was in St. Louis during the week arranging his programs.

Out-of-town exhibitors seen along Picture Row during the past week include: Charles Goodnight, De Soto, Mo.; C. E. Brady, Broadway theatre, Cape Girardeau, Mo.; C. W. McCutcheon, of Charleston and Sikeston, Mo.; O. Giese, of the Oh Gee theatre, Edwardsville, Ill.; Paul Moren, of Bonne Terre, who recently purchased A. C. Norwein's theatre in that city, and Tom Reed of Duquoin, Ill.

Miss Florence Patke, of the Mid States Distributing Corporation, has completed a deal with Walter Thimmig of Fine Arts whereby he takes over the distribution of the pictures controlled by her exchange. Miss Patke will assume the office management of the combined exchanges, which arrangement will permit Thimmig to spend much of his time on the road.

Dan Cupid has been flying about in the vicinity of the Metro exchange recently, judging by the matrimonial returns from that sector. Miss Marie Beirne, for seven years bookkeeper for Metro, tendered her resignation to Charley Werner a few days ago, stating that sh is to become the bride of Gordon Gantz. The bridegroom-to-be formerly was connected with the local Select organization, but is now connected with a local wholesale drug company. Miss Edith Yawitz, who has been with Metro for four years, has also announced her engagement to a Minneapolis, Minn., youth. The wedding will take place next month.

J. Frank Shea, who has charge of the presentation of "Down to the Sea in Ships" in St. Louis, returned to New York a few days ago. He plans to return in a few days and later will go to Dallas, Tex. The sea feature enjoyed a very successful two weeks' run at the Pershing theatre.

District Manager Le Beau, of Paramount, was in town for several days while Manager R. J. McManus took a swing around the territory.

Manager McKean of Fox reports that business during the past few weeks has been the best enjoyed by his exchange in some time.

Washington Exhibitor and Exchange Items

SPECIAL showings were given by Paramount last Saturday night at the White House and Sunday before the National Press Club at the Shubert-Garrick of the Emerson Hough classic, "The Covered Wagon." Mr. and Mrs. Harding made the pre-view at the White House a private informal reception for a little over a hundred of their friends in official life. A film on Americanization problems was also shown there. A special orchestra of 25 pieces was brought from New York for these showings.

All exchanges in the extensive Washington film district were called upon the past week by two special representatives from the staff of Will Hays. Visiting all of the thirty-odd exchange centers in the United States, they are tabulating data as to the fire regulations of each community, underwriters' requirements, insurance risks and rates, and means of securing better co-operation between exchange and local fire departments and fire marshals. They seemed favorably impressed with conditions in the New Jersey avenue exchange, according to Mr. Roberts of Fox and Mr. Parker of Universal.

Cameramen, still and movie, and amateurs have been busy on the Mall in Potomac Park here the past few days filming the blossoms of the famous Japanese cherry trees presented to Mrs. Taft by the Empress of Japan several years ago. One local movie man declares that when he was taking views not only all the staff of the Japanese embassy but also every resident Japanese in Washington was there.

Last Monday Miss Jean Acker called with Representative (ex-Governor) Yates of Illinois and family at the White House, being photographed by the White House cameramen, who number practically all the news and news-reel photographers in the city.

Eugene T. Crall, chairman of the committee on arrangements for the Washington convention of the Virginia Exhibitors, was in Washington Tuesday. He announced that the dates for the convention had been definitely fixed for April 23 and 24, and that the popular theatrical hotel, the Arlington, will be the convention headquarters. It is expected that the convention will be featured with interesting talks and many private screenings, as possibly 200 exhibitors and others and the Virginia and Carolina groups will be here.

The Washington F-I-L-M Board of Trade announces the appointment of Miss Agnes Conradi as executive and corresponding secretary, vice Maitland LaBelle, resigned as of May 1, and now on leave.

The Florida theatre, a colored house operated by new lessors, the Kahn interests, was closed for repairs for several days. It reopened Saturday, April 14th.

S. H. Dudley, one of the largest promoters of movies and tabs in the colored theatrical world, operating in Baltimore, Washington and Virginia points, is contemplating extensive enlargements and alterations in his Mid-City theatre on Seventh street. Adjoining property, acquired by him, will be used; existing structures will be razed. Dudley now has at least half a dozen good colored musical tabs on the road and several other vaudeville teams, all of which show on the bills at all his theatres in the Middle South.

C. K. Broderick, editor and publisher of the Valley Register, a weekly paper at Middletown, a prosperous mountain community in Western Maryland, was a visitor at the United Artists exchange in Washington, booking attractions for the opening week at the new Memorial Hall of the American Legion post there. He was accompanied by Dr. R. V. Hauver, who is associated with him in the period devoted to launching the Legionnaires' theatrical venture. The new hall is said to be the finest of its kind in any town of only 750 inhabitants, representing an outlay of some $55,000. Within a radius of three miles of the town there are, however, over 3,000 people, as the community is the center of a flourishing mountain orchard and dairy district. The opening, Friday, April 27th, will feature "Way Down East," vaudeville and musical comedy, minstrel shows, followed by "Orphans of the Storm" and a drama by home talent. The proceeds, above expenses, will pay off the indebtedness on the hall. After May 5 the Legion post, through Leslie Coblentz, nephew of the Frederick capitalist, will manage and book all attractions there.

Ben Lust, theatre supply dealer, of the Mather Building, will move May 1st to the front suite, 702, in this building.

A youthful Florida masher annoyed some girls at the Savoy theatre early in the week and received a sentence of time and a $25 fine.

Goldwyn, having now prepared for the absorption of the Cosmopolitan production interests of William Randolph Hearst, announces a six weeks' sales contest which is resulting in every member of the local exchange being on his toes for the next couple of months, according to Manager Walter Price of Goldwyn.

The Federal Film Service, Inc., has moved into its new suite at 908 Mather Building, adjoining the suite of Federated Films. H. L. Colman and W. L. White are now associated in the Federal service. Mr. Colman is booked to sail on the Canopic May 29th for Europe, where he plans to distribute products of various independent film producers.

The exchanges of Washington are reported to be displeased with the practice of letting a Baltimore exhibitor, Mr. Durkee, operate the film delivery truck service between Baltimore theatres and Washington exchanges. It is intimated that the film board has authorized Special Exchange Representative Fowler of Washington to put on a new truck to handle motor deliveries of films exclusively. It is claimed that scores of Baltimore exhibitors have protested the ditching of Durkee, but on the other hand film center men of this city object to letting their product be handled by an exhibitor at Baltimore. This whole matter is considered as "loaded" by local exchange men, and, therefore, no official statement can be obtained from the board.

Theatre and Film Row Items from Cleveland

"DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS" is reported by local exhibitors to be the biggest hit of the year. It played at Reade's Hippodrome this week to 45 per cent above the normal receipts. A simultaneous week's run at the Circle theatre, Cleveland, was also way above normal. The opening day's record exceeded the best previous day's receipts by 40 per cent. The Circle on the opening Sunday played to three capacity shows out of five. And the following Monday evening, during two shows, it played to more people per show than it did on Sunday per show. Business increased in like proportion all week. And in Toledo, the story is even better. Playing at the Alhambra, an 800-seat house, "Down to the Sea in Ships" took in 4139 admissions during the six performances of the opening day. This means that it played to over five capacity houses out of six shows—a most unusual record. The previous record of the Alhambra had been held by "Over the Hills." The week of May 20, "Down to the Sea in Ships" will play fifteen first-run neighborhood Cleveland houses, each boking being for a solid week.

L. B. Cool is running a short season of pictures at the Colonial theatre, Akron. In the winter the Colonial plays vaudeville. In the summer it plays stock. In the intervals between seasons, of which this is one, it plays pictures.

Charles Miles has inaugurated a policy of the biggest first run features at the Miles theatre, Cleveland. He starts the new policy the week of April 15th with "Dr. Jack" which is booked for two weeks. "Tess of the Storm Country" follows for another two week's run. Then comes "Safety Last" for three weeks. At last Cleveland is seeing some real competition. Heretofore, the Loew interests have had a monopoly on big features productions, owning eight first-run local houses. Reade's Hippodrome entered the field this season, which added spice to the situation, and now Miles comes in to split the interest three ways. The Miles has heretofore featured vaudeville. Pictures have been shown as an added attraction. Now the picture's the attraction. In addition, several acts of Pantages vaudeville will be shown, but the real policy of the house will be big features for extended runs. Loew's Stillman has been the only Cleveland motion picture theatre specializing in this policy up to this time.

Next week, it's a case of dog eat dog here in Cleveland. Or, to be more exact, a case of lion eat lion. For animal jungle pictures are to be featured at two leading first-run houses. The Martin Johnson Jungle pictures, released by Metro, will be at the Stillman, with Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson appearing personally to relate their experiences of photographing the pictures. And the Snow animal pictures, released by Universal will appear at Reade's Hippodrome. Manager William Raynor has dressed his theatre all up in jungle attire. A huge elephant greets the paying guest as he passes the ticket taker. Once inside the lobby, he is overwhelmed with quasi-tropical plants that decorate all the posts, plaster of paris lions, and a huge painted jungle scene that is most effective.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson arrived in Cleveland Saturday morning at 8:30. They went immediately to the Stillman theatre to give a talk before the newsboys, for whom a special screening of the Johnson jungle pictures was arranged by Fred Desberg, managing director of Loew's Ohio theatres. On Monday noon, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson told of their experiences before the City Club. They made personal appearances at each performance at the Stillman theatre from Sunday until Tuesday. On Tuesday they left for Youngstown.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitor's League held its monthly meeting last Tuesday at the Winton Hotel. The policy of luncheon meetings inaugurated by President O. F. Bellas, is meeting with signal success. There was a goodly gathering with a representation of over seventy-five local theatres. Topics of purely local interest were discussed.

Paul Gusdanovic has been appointed a member of the executive board of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors League to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of M. B. Horwitz from the board.

F. B. Rogers has resigned as manager of the local Pathe exchange. Rogers has been in Cleveland as Pathe manager ever since last summer. His future plans have not yet been announced. Neither has his successor been named as yet.

Miles Gibbons, Pathe short subject sales manager has been in town all week. Gibbons used to be manager of the George Kleine exchange in Cleveland four or five years ago, before the palatial theatres were built in the present Playhouse Square. He says Cleveland has advanced rapidly since he was located here.

Victor Shapiro, Pathe publicity expert, has spent the week in Cleveland whipping the advance notices on "Dr. Jack" and "Safety Last" in shape for an early showing at the Miles theatre.

Portland, Ore., Exhibitor and Exchange News

COL. G. T. WOODLAW, owner of the Circle theatre and one of the veteran exhibitors in Oregon, left Portland Friday, April 13, on a circuitous journey that will take him to his former home in Chattanooga, Tenn., in time to commemorate the birthday anniversary of his mother. En route he will visit for some time in Los Angeles, and after a visit with his mother he will return home through New York City and Canadian cities. The colonel plans to be at his mother's home for her birthday every year the parent lives.

Col. G. T. Woodlaw

Colonel Woodlaw presents a unique claim in the amusement world, for he heads what he declares is the only independent, co-operative motion picture theatre in the United States. Woodlaw for several years operated the Circle, which mixes a first and second run policy at a great financial advantage. A year or so ago he organized the Circle Theatre Company, composed of his employes, and divided the business among the men who had served him long and well. He retains the presidency of the company, but its management and its profits are, pro rata, in the hands of employes.

John Hamrick, owner of the Blue Mouse chain of theatres in the Northwest, including Portland, Seattle, Tacoma and Astoria, arrived in the city this week to take over, temporarily, the active management of his Portland theatre. Which means the retirement of A. C. Raleigh, well known as former manager of the Columbia theatre for Jensen & Von Herberg and of the Guthrie theatres at Salem. Vic Gauntlett, publicity man for Hamrick, will soon take charge of the local house until a permanent manager can be assigned. The job undoubtedly will go to a newcomer in the local field. The Blue Mouse recently made an admission cut from 50 cents to 35 cents, and after next week may have other decided policy changes. Hamrick is bringing back for a second run Mary Pickford's "Tess of the Storm Country" at 25 cents top, as compared with the 50 cents price originally charged.

Fred L. Kiser, head of the Kiser Studios, Inc., who have been making a series of two-reel story-scenics for Pathe release, including "The Silver Salmon," "Fleeced for Gold" and others, has returned from an extended visit in New York and Hollywood with ambitious plans for production of feature length dramatic pictures. Kiser reports he has contracted for release with one of the large independent companies, but has not named the agency, pending completion of production plans.

Boys in the neighborhood of the charred ruins of the American Liefograph Company studios, destroyed by fire a fortnight ago, broke into the vaults of the concern and stole 20 negatives valued at $1,000 each last Thursday night. The films were recovered and the lads were arrested within a few days.

President Frank McCrillis had told boys they could have film scrap about the studio ruins, but not to molest the films in vault and undamaged by fire. By crawling through a transom at night the boys stole six negatives in cans. Detectives recovered the loot and the boys confessed. Thursday night the same lads, with others as well, made their entry the same way and stole the 20 negatives, including the six original taken and returned.

Several hundred Portland children will be entertained Saturday morning, April 21, at two showings of "Timithy's Quest," at the Liberty theatre under the auspices of the Oregon council of the National Motion Picture League and the Portland Parent-Teachers' associations. Shows at 9:30 and 11 a. m. are expected to accommodate all children at this, the second of such parties. Comedy and educational films and an organ concert by Henri Keates, as well as a "community sing," will complete the program. The theatre is offering loving-cups to the boy and girl who submit the best review of the feature picture, not to exceed 100 words, by the Monday following the party.

Starting Saturday the Liberty theatre will give much attention to its annual spring fashion show, which will be presented as a feature of the program four times daily in connection with the showing of Schulberg's "Poor Men's Wives." Portland merchants co-operate heartily with the Liberty's fall and spring fashion shows, and they are important local events for the women folk. This spring Manager Paul Noble has prepared unusually expensive settings and an elaborate lighting system for the show.

Hazel Benson, former Jensen & Von Herberg employe and especially well advised on house management, has returned to Portland from Los Angeles, where she was doing newspaper work for a year, to become assistant house manager of the People's theatre, owned by Jensen & Von Herberg.

Manager Charles Couche at the People's has booked Paramounts' "The Nth Commandment," which will open Saturday, April 21.

Among recent bookings on Manager Paul Noble's list at the Liberty theatre are Tourneur's "Isle of Lost Ships," Goldwyn's "Souls for Sale," First National's "Within the Law" and "The Ne'er Do Well."

Two new roadmen have been added to the staff of the Portland exchange of Associated First National by Manager C. W. Koerner. Frank Vanderhoff, formerly with Famous Players, will cover part of the city and the coast strip, and W. G. Carruthers, recently with F. B. O., has been assigned to the Williamette valley territory. B. A. Stover, whom Manager Koerner brought from the Butte, Mont., exchange when he was transferred here is covering the Eastern Oregon route. Stover is an addition to the staff, Koerner having made three divisions of a territory formerly covered by two men. The vacancies filled were caused by the resignation of E. M. Froude and the transfer to the Seattle office of Frank Harris.

Portland's official board of censors let heavy axes fall on Paramounts' "Bella Donna" this week when viewers appointed by the board declined to pass upon the availability of the Pola Negri feature. Viewers passed the buck to the board and that body promptly condemned the picture. C. M. Hill, manager of Famous Players exchange here, however, induced the three members of the board to reconsider, and that has been agreed to. The picture eventually will get the "approved" stamp of the board, without which it cannot be shown in Portland, but certain eliminations will be demanded. Members of the board expressed the exact opposite to the opinion of the Los Angeles viewer, widely quoted here, that the producers had made a "Pollyanna" of the picture.

Oklahoma City Items and Southwestern News

PRACTICALLY every theatre in Dallas, Texas, paid mute homage to the memory of Sarah Bernhardt recently at the hour set for her funeral. Performances were stopped at as near 3 p. m. as possible and the theatre kept silent for seventy-eight seconds, one for each year of her life.

This unusual tribute was paid the great French actress by moving picture, vaudeville and musical comedy houses alike. As soon as it was learned that other cities in the United States were holding short but impressive house observances, the Dallas theatres determined to follow suit.

Hershel I. Smith, owner of the Palace Theatre at Wortham, Texas, was killed April 1st, when an automobile he was driving turned over, pinning him underneath. Bob Nunn, riding with him, was injured.

Mr. Smith was brought to a doctor's office in Corsicana, where he died soon after. His back was broken and left side crushed.

Don Gilpin has purchased the Queen Theatre at Frederick, Okla., and will redecorate and add new equipment in the near future.

T. A. Shea will build a new moving picture theatre at McGhee, Ark., in near future.

Mr. James H. Cooper the popular manager of the Criterion Theatre at Oklahoma City, Okla., has returned home from a three week's trip to New York and other eastern cities.

Mr. K. Weinberger, traveler for the Fox Film Exchange at Oklahoma City, left April 8th for a business trip through Arkansas.

John Brickle and Homer Cathey will erect a new moving picture theatre at Hardy, Ark., in the near future.

The Saenger Amusement Company has let contract for a new strictly modern fire-proof moving picture theatre to be built at the southwest corner of Main Street, Texarkana, Ark. The theatre will be ready for opening by next season.

The Best Theatre was opened at Helena, Ark., March 25th to capacity business.

J. P. Brundidge has commenced work on the new Hope Theatre at Alice, Ark., which will be modern and fireproof.

Price McCall has started the construction of a new modern moving picture theatre at Mena, Ark., to cost $15,000. The building will be 48x140 in size and will seat 600 in auditorium and 150 in balcony.

The Royal Theatre at Van Buren, Ark., has been purchased by J. C. Dotson and will be moved to the Opera House building, formerly occupied by the Victory Theatre. The Victory Theatre will be moved to the Clay building at 711 Main Street.

John Hicks, of Oklahoma City, has purchased the Crystal Theatre at Booneville, Ark., from Mr. Donathan.

Charles B. Clarke has purchased the Royal Theatre at Malvern, Ark., from H. L. McDonald and will add new equipment and make improvements.

Harry M. Paul has taken over the management of the Dunlap Theatre at Clarksville, Ark., and will add new equipment and improvements.

Around the Des Moines Branches

H. M. Weinberg, territorial manager of the Associated First National, spent a week in Cedar Rapids and left April 14th for Omaha.

Mr. J. D. Williams, general manager of the Ritz-Carlton pictures in New York City, was a recent visitor at Associated First National.

M. C. Rice, manager of the opera house at Algona, visited the Famous Players exchange last week and contracted for "Super 39."

W. E. Barker, booking manager of Famous Players, accompanied Branch Manager A. W. Nichols to Minneapolis last week to go into conference with other bookers in regard to new productions.

Mr. Nate Chapman of Iowa City was a visitor at Famous Players-Lasky last week.

Theatre and Exchange Briefs from Canada

FOLLOWING the resignation of H. M. Thomas from the post of theatre supervisor of the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation, to return to the Blank Theatre Enterprises at Des Moines, Ia., several changes have been made in the management of theatres in Montreal operated by the Famous Players. Mr. Thomas was resident manager of the Capitol theatre, Montreal, and Harry Dahn has been appointed his successor there. Mr. Dahn previously had temporary charge of the Montreal Capitol and has managed Famous Players' houses at Regina, Sault Ste. Marie, Calgary, and Toronto.

Mr. Thomas also had direct charge of the St. Denis theatre, Montreal, one of the largest theatres in Canada. Stewart P. Dunlo, former assistant manager at the Montreal Capitol, has been appointed manager of the St. Denis. William Spencer, advertising manager of the Montreal Caiptol since it was opened two years ago, has been appointed assistant manager of the Capitol in succession to Mr. Dunlop.

The Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, has acquired Loew's theatre, Montreal, which has been in direct competition with the Capitol theatre. This acquisition marks the termination of Marcus Loew interest in Montreal. As yet, no arrangement has been made regarding any possible change in the personnel of the Montreal Loew house.

Basil Horsfall of Montreal, formerly identified with the distribution of English-made productions in Eastern Canada, has organized the Magnet Films, Limited, with head office in the Albee Building, Montreal. The new concern is specializing in the distribution of short features and comedies. At the same time, Mr. Horsfall is identified with the presentation of "The Bohemian Girl," the first Canadian run of which was staged in the Grand theatre, Toronto, during the week of April 2 with special prologue, stage setting and opera singers.

Countless friends of Harry Brouse, proprietor of the Imperial theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, and a franchise holder for Eastern Canada in the Associated First National Exhibitors, are greatly concerned over an unfortunate trouble which is now affecting Mr. Brouse. Without warning, Mr. Brouse lost his sense of sight through the bursting of a small blood vessel, it is stated, and he has been confined to his home in Ottawa for the past week. Many enquiries have been received at the residence of Mr. Brouse regarding his condition, although no general report had been made locally regarding the accident.

Mr. Brouse is one of the pioneer exhibitors of Canada and is one of the owners of real estate and store properties in the Canadian Capital. He is also identified actively with a number of industries in Ontario and Quebec and one of his recent moves was the purchase of the Alexandra Hotel, one of the leading hostelries of Ottawa.

A confusing situation has developed in Montreal, Quebec, with regard to the observance of time for the summer months following the decision of the Montreal city council to abandon the daylight saving measure this year. Many industrial plants, business firms and stores have adopted "summer time" on their own account, their places of business to open and close one hour earlier than usual. On the other hand, churches, schools, institutions, railways and others will observe the regular timetables. Not one exhibitor in the city, which is the largest center of the Dominion, will turn to "summer time," the theatre men being entirely opposed to advancing the clocks.

K. Keltie, owner of the moving picture theatre at Yarmouth, N. S., is remodelling his house from top to bottom. The theatre is closed for the alterations and it will not be reopened until the middle of May.

Robert Stevens has made a fine initial success of the new Espanola theatre at Espanola, Northern Ontario. Although this theatre has seating accommodation for only 425 persons, the cost of construction was $40,000 and the house is attractive in every respect. Mr. Stevens has organized a four piece orchestra. Among the features which he has already played are: "The Hottentot," "Tess of the Storm Country," "Manslaughter" and "Mighty Lak' a Rose."

Manager I. Allen of the Globe theatre, Vancouver, B. C., broke all house attendance records in the presentation of "The Game of Life," the English production, during a recent two weeks' engagement.

A special screening of "The Town that Forgot God" was conducted in the Parliament Buildings, Winnipeg, Manitoba, under the auspices of the Manitoba Tducational Association during its annual convention on April 6, a large number of school teachers from points around Manitoba viewing the picture. The production was loaned for the occasion by the local office of the Fox Film Corporation. The first Winnipeg run for the release has been secured by the Lyceum theatre for the week of April 23.

The condition of Harry Brouse, proprietor of the Imperial and Family theatres, Ottawa, and prominent in Associated First National Exhibitors' circles, remains unchanged, according to the latest announcement. Mr. Brouse was afflicted with sudden blindness several weeks ago and he has been confined to his home. He can just distinguish between daylight and darkness but otherwise his power of sight is gone. Mr. Brouse has received countless messages of encouragement from many friends.

The Fern theatre, 413-415 Bank Street, Ottawa, Ontario, one of the small but prominent theatres of the center, has been sold to Jacob Polowin and Sophia Levinson for $30,000. The theatre building, which is a three-story structure, was built thirteen years ago by Thomas Clarey but it was taken over by the Bank of Nova Scotia about five years ago.

Butte Bulletins and Montana Trade Items

THE employes of the American and the Rialto theatres and their friends were guests on a recent Wednesday evening after the close of the theatres of Manager W. J. Sullivan at a dancing party in the American hall. Mr. Sullivan calls these series of parties that have been given all through the winter "get-together affairs" and he extended invitations to all the film managers and their employes. Music was furnished by the orchestras from both theatres. An abundance of good things were in evidence and at midnight the splendid lunch was served.

W. M. Hughart and George J. Ekre, salesmen of the Fox corporation from eastern and western Montana respectively, have been spending a few days in Butte attending a sales conference at the Fox Exchange.

One of the old theatres that has been closed for several months is the Empress, and it has just been opened by a local stock company.

Maurice Carney has been appointed manager of the shipping department of the Fox Branch in Butte.

C. S. Sturgle, exhibitor from Red Lodge, Beartooth theatre that was formerly called Theatorium, is now advance agent for the road attraction "Butterfly Kiddies."

Budd Denton, identified with the staff of the Fox Exchange here, has been confined at the Murray hospital as a result of a minor operation.

Harry Sigmund, manager of the Associated First National Exchange here, has recently made a number of promotions in his office staff. Jules Shae is now booking clerk; Mary Fern is Biller; and Mary Shae is assistant cashier.

Chris Dahle has left the office of the First National of Butte with the best wishes of the management to accept a position with the Pathe Branch in Seattle.

George Waran, salesman of the Universal Branch, has gone to Spokane to accept a position with the Pathe people of that city.

William Heineman, at one time connected with the Pathe of Butte and lately identified with the First National of Seattle, is back in Butte again to act as Montana Manager for Warner Bros., arranging with Greater Features to handle the physical distribution of his product throughout the state.

San Francisco Exchange and Exhibitor Notes

THE Imperial theatre, which has been closed for a short time for extensive changes, was scheduled to open Tuesday night, April 17th, with "When Knighthood Was in Flower" as the feature. Numerous up-to-date innovations have been made. J. Partington of the Rothchild Entertainments will be the manager.

Both the New Mission and New Fillmore theatres have offered a decided change in their musical presentation. The music instructors have changed places.

Little crippled children in the "Children's Home" were made happy recently by the motion picture "Robin Hood," which was presented with the compliments of Douglas Fairbanks and H. L. Rothchild.

W. D. Clarke, who was Eugene Roth's assistant at the Portola in 1912, has returned to San Francisco, and after taking a vacation in the Yosemite Valley will undoubtedly again hitch up with one of the houses, because he had a name of doing things right.

Frankel and Horowitz, who control the situation in San Leandro and Haywards, are said to be spending plenty of the "long green" in the remodeling of their Hayward theatre.

John Triguerio of Ft. Bragg was in the Universal office arranging for service for the opening of his beautiful little Liberty theatre on April 14th.

Due to inclement weather, the local "Gene Sarazens" have been obliged to postpone their early morning workouts on the links.

Karl K. Kennedy has been made manager of a syndicate that will include 15 or more theatres around San Francisco, it is stated.

The New Fox theatre, in Oakland opens in July under the management of J. Barrett McCormick.

Mr. Sol Lesser, Mr. Abe Gore and Harry Arthur recently passed through the city on their way East.

All Star Features are meeting with success, placing the Al Lichtman Preferred Pictures, "Are You a Failure?" now playing the Granada theatre, San Francisco, and "The Hero," now playing at the California theatre.

Mr. A. A. Richards opened his new theatre in Modesto.

Photoplay Personals and Events in Southeast

ONE of the most ambitious plans ever conceived in the South of its kind, is the projected school for Paramount salesmen, which is getting under way rapidly in Atlanta, Ga., to be conducted under the personal supervision of district manager Fred Creswell. Mr. Creswell has been in conference with various influential agencies and clubs in Atlanta with a view to receiving full co-operation in the establishment of the school, which will mean a world of publicity for the city of Atlanta, and reports that plans are progressing nicely and that the first class will soon be under way. It will be open only to high-class young men living in the Southeastern States, and after graduation they will be assigned to the sales force of the various Southern exchanges of Paramount. It will be conducted along similar lines to the schools operated in the home office of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in which Mr. Creswell was formerly an instructor, and his assistant here, Ernest Dawson, is enrolling and checking applications as to suitability for entry in the school.

The Atlanta theatre, Atlanta's legitimate stage show house, will evidently be used consistently as a picture theatre during the "closed season" for road attractions. "Robin Hood" is having a highly successful three-day run, and it is announced that following this Griffith's "One Exciting Night" and a revival of "The Birth of a Nation" will be shown at the Atlanta.

The following theatre owners of the Southeastern States were seen on Atlanta's film row during the past two weeks: Ben Title, the New Gem, Jacksonville, Fla.; R. P. Higgenbothen, Pastime, Leeds, Ala.; Will B. Woods, Gadsden, Ala.; Jasper and Doris Johnson, Parish, Ala.; George L. Denton, Amusu, Lenoir City, Tenn.; Harry Sample, Fort Pierce, Fla.; Saul Harriss, Capital, Little Rock, Ark.; Miss M. Luckel, Bijou, Mobile, Ala.; John Snider, Bessemer City, Tenn.; C. D. McConnell, Grand, Prattville, Ala.; O. T. Chaffin, Community, Avondale, Ala.; T. H. Wingfield, Monroe, Ga.

C. K. Howell, prominent theatre architect, responsible for some of the finest houses in the South, has returned to Atlanta and opened his offices here. He designed the Metropolitan, Atlanta; the Fairfax, Miami; National, Greensboro, and the Lucas, Savannah, Ga.

M. E. Forsyth has been appointed postmaster of Union Springs, Fla., and his theatre, the Strand, will in future be managed by Mrs. Forsyth and daughter.

G. M. Phillips, formerly manager of the Strand, Atlanta, has been made manager of the Vaudette, succeeding H. M. Phillips.

E. J. Sparks, owning theatres in Lakeland, Orlando and St. Augustine, Fla., spent several days in Atlanta en route home from a trip to New York.

George E. McDermotte has assumed charge of the Southern Enterprises theatres in Macon, Ga., succeeding J. H. Stellings, who goes in another line of business.

A. L. Hicks has been appointed exploiter in the Charlotte office of Paramount. Heretofore one man has divided his time between Charlotte and Atlanta.

C. K. Goss, representing the Gardiner Velvet Screen, is calling on exhibitors in this territory

The First National exchanges report a strong revival of interest in Mary Pickford's "Daddy Long Legs" and all prints working full time out of both the Atlanta and Charlotte offices.

S. Weil, representing Universal's service department, has been spending some time in the Atlanta exchange.

Harold R. Kistler, of Aalanta's Pathe sales force, has just returned from a three months' trip through the Florida territory.

S. M. Beery, for the past four years sales manager for Southern Theatre Equipment Company, has gone with the sales force of Arthur C. Bromberg attractions and Educational.

David Pribce, Paramount's Atlanta manager, has been on a trip to some of the key towns.

Exchange and Exhibitor News of Carolinas

A LARGE realty deal affecting theatrical property was consummated the past week when James Howard and Percy W. Wells, of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, purchased the Grand and Victoria theatres, which they have been operating for several years under lease from the owner, James M. Sulke. The consideration is in the neighborhood of $175,000, and the Wilmington theatre owners are now the possessors of two more of the most valuable real estate sites in Wilmington, already owning the Bijou and Royal theatres there.

As soon as the deal was completed it was announced by Mr. Wells that the Grand theatre will be permanently closed on April 28th and converted into stores. Mr. Wells believes that the town is overseated with theatres, and that the removal of one theatre will do much to revive business in Wilmington, which has been at such a low ebb for many months that no profit could be seen on any of the theatres.

A woman exhibitor, Mrs. Phelps Sasseen, in the small town of Easley, S. C., has recently put over a whirlwind campaign and special lobby display on "The World's a Stage" that has been exciting the interest of everyone in the State. Mrs. Sasseen runs the theatre while Mr. Sasseen travels for Al Lichtman Corporation.

H. H. Anderson, of Charlotte, who formerly owned a circuit of theatres in the Carolinas, is again in the theatrical industry, having purchased an interest in the Strand, Charlotte, recently opened by Laurence Lester, of Columbia, as a combination vaudeville and picture house.

C. L. Watters, who received his theatrical training under the Howard-Wells organization, is another man who is stepping out as manager of the Opera House, Goldsboro, N. C., which house he has operated with wonderful success since January 1st.

The Riggan opera house, Henderson, N. C., suffered a fire loss of at least $15,000 last week, fully covered by insurance. Damage will be immediately repaired, it is stated.

A discarded church in Wallace, N. C., has been converted into a motion picture theatre, the Wanoca, by J. A. Rowan and associates.

S. S. Stevenson, of the Princess, Henderson, N. C., has recently embarked in the garage business as a side line.

The White Way, Dunn, N. C., formerly operated by Marsh Marrow, has been closed.

Film Flashes from the Florida Territory

THE Florida Legislature is now in session, and the first bill, directed at motion pictures, has been introduced in the Senate by Senator Wells, and in the House by Representative Stokes. The measure provides that all stereopticon, moving-picture shows, lectures, theatrical performances etc. shall be exempt from all occupational license taxes, where not less than 50 per cent of the gross receipts go to charity.

Both the Victory and the Strand theatres of Tampa have "Suggestion Boxes," with paper and pencil handy, so the patrons of the houses may register their suggestions, and kicks, and drop 'em in the box. Jack Frost, manager of the Strand, is also running a trailer, which is worded to the effect that it is the desire to have the co-operation of their patrons, and asking for their suggestions on how to better the show in any way, with the promise that it will be acted upon immediately..

R. E. Jordan, manager of the Baby Grand theatre of Winter Park, was a visitor in Tampa, Fla., this week. Mr. Jordan says that he has had a very profitable season. This proves good showmanship, as his town is but four miles, and with a wonderful road too, to the big first run houses of Orlando. You gotta give 'em shows to keep 'em home.

Foyer display on "My American Wife" at Loew's Palace theatre, Memphis, Tenn., arranged by Manager A. B. Morrison. Tapestry wall paper formed a background for the cut-out and the border was painted gold

Jack Frost, manager of the Strand, Tampa, has added to his staff a lobby expert, who is turning out some nifty stuff in the way of lobby displays. This week he designed a lobby for "The Glimpses of the Moon," that was very attractive. Cut-out moons and stars, all hand painted, were suspended all around the lobby, with all the poster and display boards made up with special hand painted designs. In the work shop back stage, the writer got a flash at next weeks display, which will be on "Heart's Aflame." It is a little more elaborate than this weeks display.

The annual meeting of the Maceo Amusement Company, Tampa, was held this week. The stockholders were well pleased with the showing made by President Charles A. Sappal the past year, and extended to him a rising vote of thanks and confidence. The same directors were elected, and at the directors meeting, which followed, the same officers were retained for the coming year, with the exception, I. E. Swan was elected secretary to replace H. H. Freeman, who left the company with the closing of their St. Petersburg house.

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

"Haunted Valley"
(Fifteen Episode Serial—Pathe)

RUTH ROLAND, whose serial escapades in the past have thrilled wherever they have been shown, seems to outdo herself in the matter of daring if the first three reels of her latest effort are an indication of what might be expected to follow. Truly Ruth Roland is a marvel for daring and never has more swift action been crowded into one of her past series of exploits.

"Haunted Valley" simply teems with excitement. It is a gigantic western and along with the swift action, abounds in the usual amount of romance seen in a Western. Just how the star manages to really escape with a whole skin from some of the daring stunts she accomplishes is hard to imagine.

Mystery, intrigue and suspense, as usual are the predominant characteristics of this serial. It is a story of business—of a gigantic engineering project with Ruth Roland as its dominating spirit. The project is about to go to smash because of the villainy of a presumed friend. From him Ruth Ranger (Ruth Roland) borrows one million dollars, for which she gives as security Haunted Valley, which to her seems entirely inadequate. Along with this security goes her promise to wed unless she meets her obligation at the time specified. Every obstacle, of course, is placed in her way to prevent payment of the loan.

Haunted Valley is in reality the richest of land because on it is buried the secret of a vast treasure. Mallinson, the villain, is aware of this secret and in an underground office has a device through which the entrance to the valley by any person can readily be seen. By another process he can make it extremely difficult for any person to preceed far into the valley without being blown to atoms. Ruth's first hair-breath escape is through this series of exploded mines. Another is when she accomplishes the feat of transferring from a motor boat to a seaplane, both going at top speed.

Miss Roland is supported by a splendid cast, the principal members of which are Jack Daugherty, Larry Steers, Francis Ford, Edouard Treboal and Eulalie Jensen. The serial is well directed by George Marshall from the story and scenario by Frank Leon Smith.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Speed the Swede"
(Roach-Pathe—One Reel)

PAUL PARROTT'S fondness for flappers embroils him in a series of situations that afford plenty of opportunity for comedy. Just escaped from a breach of promise suit in America he lands in Stockholm. In a Swedish restaurant he is attracted by a fair damsel, who shortly becomes bored with his attentions. Presumably writing an address for him she hands him the piece of paper. He offers it to another flapper for translation and at her alarm the restaurant immediately becomes deserted. Each proffer of the message for translation brings the same result. The interpretation is finally screened as follows:

"Keep away from me. I just escaped from the pest house."

It is not hard to imagine just what complications such a message might develop, nor is it hard to imagine that Parrott would not take full advantage of the many humorous situations. He does.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Cold Chills"
(Educational—Two Reels)

HERE is a Mermaid comedy that packs as many laughs in its two-reel footage as are found in some of the feature-length variety of laugh-provokers. The comedy is frankly of the slapstick order with no pretensions at subtlety or a very high grade of humor; some of the gags will be recognized, too, as orthodox comedy material, but rapid-fire action, amusing incident, and laughable situations range throughout. The middle and last portions, which introduce a mystery element, become a veritable burlesque on some of the mystery melodramas that have scored on stage and screen. In this respect, "Cold Chills" ranks above the average Mermaid offering.

Louise Fazenda appears in the role of a Swedish maid whose employers, the Joneses, have just returned from abroad. On the dock, the police await Diamond Dick, who is also aboard ship incognito. Dick, concealed in one of the Joneses trunks, eludes capture, but only after a series of laughable mishaps in which the cables warping the ship to the dock and a collapsible gangplank are brought into play. Miss Fazenda gets in some clever work in this part.

With the arrival of the trunk, secreting Diamond Dick, in the home of the Joneses, the siderable damage on the nerves of the maid fun gets a fresh start. The trunk, which has a trick top, permits Dick unobserved to work conand the other inmates of the house. He helps himself to everything within reach, including Jones' trousers. The police arrive, but the mysterious intruder continues his alarming tactics. Next, Diamond Dick's gang appear on the scene while the mysteries and the chills multiply. Finally, Jones summons the help of friends at a neighboring masquerade ball. Their un-announced arrival in masquerade attire serves only to terrorize the already distracted maid at every turn. Diamond Dick is finally captured and his gang frightened off by the masqueraders.

"Cold Chills" presents Louise Fazenda at her best, and she is supported by an adequate comedy cast. The sub-titles are also good for some laughs.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"California Or Bust"
(Roach-Pathe—Two Reels)

IN this two reel comedy Snub Pollard and Marie Mosquini take a journey which is filled with humor from Iowa to California. Pollard has been seen to better advantage at times in the past, but there's many a laugh from the time the hero and his bride are rendered homeless by a cyclone until they make the return trip from California.

Their determination to seek happier climatic conditions on the southern west coast and the consequent journey is fraught with numerous situations which reach their climax when they run into a veritable deluge on the California State line. There they discover what appears to be a holdup by a tribe of Indians. They hasten to notify the authorities and the quickly formed posse rides them back over the line in wrath and disgust when it is discovered the holdup is a part of the day's work of a moving picture outfit.

There's considerable hokum in the picture, but enough real humor to bring out a number of good laughs.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"The Two Twins"
(Metro—Two Reels)

COMEDY with a capital "C" would be our way of describing Hunt Stromberg's most recent offering, "The Two Twins," with Bull Montana as one of the pair, Chuck Rissner, the other. It borders upon hilarious farce which is easily visualized if you can picture, Montana, weighing 175 pounds and his running mate about an even size, cast as two kiddies, Montana in Lord Fauntleroy attire and Riesner in dainty girlie clothes, with long golden curls.

The two are known as the toughest of the "gang" who claim a public orphanage as "home." They pick up their small change by operating a "shoe shining" establishment. A society woman telephones the orphanage and asks the matron to lend her the two "worst boys she has." She wishes to cure her husband of a desire to adopt children. The matron, eager to be relieved of the twins, dresses them for the occasion and they make their initial appearance at a garden party given in honor of their coming, the guests being indulged members of juvenile society. Laughs come thick and fast, gained upon genuine comedy situations, the boys making every effort to appear childlike and gentle. Then the husband comes home and soon recognizes the two as those who started shining his shoes earlier in the day and deserted their posts because another customer settled herself in the chair and displayed a trim ankle and sheer hose.

In a "stop thief" chase which develops when the so called children are denounced as imposters, the boys encounter their own father, a policeman, who recognizes his long lost son portrayed by Montana, when he sees Bull's tin ear. He makes policemen out of both of them, but with new uniforms and regular "jobs" they cling to the habit of "shooting buts" and sharing the spoils, as tough as when they were the terrors of the orphanage. Lots of action, hundreds of laughs—an all around good comedy. —LILLIAN GALE.

"100 Per Cent Nerve"
(Range Rider-Pathe—Two Reels)

LEO MALONEY'S nerve in this Western is something that is seen only on the screen. Such a character in real life would surely be a bearcat. His exploits are truly marvelous in the face of tremendous odds and he accomplishes them with the ease of every day occurence.

The hero is a ranger who is placed on a ranch for the purpose of cleaning up a bunch of rustlers. His advent on the scene finds the foreman forcing his unwelcome attentions on the rancher's pretty daughter. Maloney promptly proceeds to show the villian up. Eventually he discovers the calf-branding plant of the rustlers and single handed brings them to justice to find that the discharged foreman is the real leader of the band.

There is an abundance of hair raising incidents in the picture, with some particularly good riding by both Maloney and the rancher's daughter. Also there are some lively tussles in which both figure to the discomfort of the outlaw band. It's well up to the standard of past Maloney pictures.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Comedies, Short Subjects & Serials

Champions Appear in "Fighting Blood"

TWO short subjects are scheduled for release by the Film Booking Offices of America during the week of April 15th. They are "Private—Keep Off," a Carter DeHaven comedy and "Some Punches and Judy," the fifth round of H. C. Witwer's Collier's Weekly stories, one round of which is issued every second week.

It is in "Some Punches and Judy" that the famous battle between Ad Wolgast and Joe Rivers in 1912 is reproduced on the screen, with George O'Hara, star of "Fighting Blood" and Rivers himself acting as the principals. To assure perfect realism Wolgast was obtained to coach O'Hara and in the picture, the former champion is seen at the ringside. The fight ends in a double knockout, and according to reports, is one of the most powerful and exciting ring battles ever pictured on the screen.

Oldest Civilization in Pathe News

Pathe News in its current number 30 claims to present the first and exclusive motion pictures of results of excavation operations by American scientists on sites of ancient Mayan cities in Yucatan, which flourished in quite a high state of civilization 600 B. C. The remains of these cities, in fact, are generally accepted as relics of the oldest civilization existing on the American continent.

These relics gain added interest owing to evidences presented by some archaeologists which connect with the inhabitants of the Mayan cities racially with those of the sunken "lost island of Atlantis," first referred to by Heroditus in written history.

"Hams and Yeggs" New Hallroom Comedy

"Hams and Yeggs" is the diverting name that has been given the newest Hallroom Boys Comedy which has just been received at the New York offices of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation for release.

Percy and Ferdie, naturally, do the hero act—in their own peculiar way.

Jean Havez wrote the story.

Nine Pathe Releases April 29

Stan Laurel Starts as Star in Hal Roach One-Reel Comedy, "Noon Whistle"

STAN LAUREL starts his career as a star in Hal Roach one-reel comedies in Pathe's program of nine releases announced for April 29.

The vehicle for Laurel's debut is called "The Noon Whistle," in which the comedian's uniquely comic personality is said to find the fullest play. The character is that of a cheerfully stupid new hand in a lumber yard planing mill plant where, in working out gag after gag, the comedian comes through unscathed while the domineering foreman is driven frantic and then "fired."

In this program "Plunder" reaches its 14th episode and leaves the heroine, Pearl White, the apparently hopeless victim of the most frightful catastrophe in the whole course of this stirring serial—fighting single-handed three desperadoes in the storeroom of a South American plantation in the midst of flames, in whose path is a quantity of explosives. She is left in this plight after a happy love scene and the winning of the quest which leads straight to possession of the ancient pirate treasure.

Snub Pollard and Marie Mosquini are seen in the Hal Roach two-reel comedy, "California or Bust." A cyclone which tears the roof from over their heads causes the move westward by the overland route. The hero's courage in flying to the rescue of pioneers beset by Indians plunges them into the heart of a motion picture outfit—when the comedy that had been "fast" becomes "furious."

"One Hundred Per Cent Nerve," is the two-reel western of the Range Rider Series starring Leo Maloney, which adds hard-riding and hard-fighting drama to this program.

The Aesop's Film Fable called "The Jolly Rounders" deals with the efforts of a bachelor hippopotamus to instil courage and defiance of wifely rule into a married hippopotamus.

Pathe News Nos. 36 and 37 with current wide world events pictured, and Topics of the Day, No. 17, screening the best flashes of current wit, are released in this program.

Fox Releases "King Tut" Special

Timely Short Feature Shows Graphic Scenes on Site of Ancient Tomb

SHOWMEN have an opportunity to take advantage of the widespread interest in Egypt in the timely short reel feature, "The Land of Tut-ankh-Amen," to be released immediately by Fox Film Corporation. This picture is being released in addition to the regular program scheduled and is now available at the Fox exchanges, according to an announcement from the Fox Film Corporation.

This motion picture, which it is claimed was actually taken at the site of the tomb and the adjacent territory, rich with the ruins of ancient Egyptian civilization, is particularly timely, giving visual foundation for the countless newspaper stories describing the business of tomb hunting in the historic Valley of the Kings.

Views of the prominent visitors and members of royalty attracted to the scene of the excavations are shown in this reel. The Queen of the Belgians and General Allenby, leader of the Allied Armies in Egypt and Palestine, are shown on their way to the tomb.

The workers of the Metropolitan Museum of Art Expedition are shown exploring the tomb which has proved to be a treasure house of relics which have amazed the world.

In the Fox picture the spectator is taken on a trip via means of the camera from Cairo, where most of the tourists start on their journey, to the Valley of Kings, right up to the tomb.

Views across the River Nile show the fertile plains of Thebes containing the burial grounds of the common people and also the site of the Colossi of Memmon. Beyond the Temple of Rameses is shown the Valley of the Kings, a gully five miles long, where royalty was buried. Many royal sepulchres, hewn from solid rock, are shown in the vicinity of the tomb of Tut-ankh-Amen, which is shown in several closeups.

Christie Comedians In Black Face Roles

AL CHRISTIE is well along in production of "Roll Along," an Educational-Christie Comedy that is attracting considerable attention from people in the inside of the motion picture industry in Los Angeles, producers, directors, and newspaper critics.

"Roll Along" will be in the nature of an experiment, as a comedy of this type has never been attempted seriously by a high-class producing organization. It is a comedy in which all of the cast, made up of well-known Christie players, appear in black face.

Negro comedies have been attempted before, but with negro actors. Christie's innovation lies in the idea that white players, under careful direction, can bring out the comedy of the negro with the skill of the trained white comedian.

Herman Starts Soon on Next Comedy

Having finished "Sky High," Al Herman will start soon on his next Century Comedy, the working title of which will be "Taking His Degree." The story centers around the vicissitudes of taking "degrees" in the lodge and is the work of Sig Neufeld and Mark Sandrich. Edward I. Luddy wrote the continuity and has originated all the gags to fit the situation.

Those in the cast already chosen are the Century giant, Jack Earle, Billy Engle, Otto Friese and Marjorie Marcel. All but Friese appeared in "Sky High."

Buddy Messinger in New Comedy

Buddy Messinger, the Century boy star, will shortly start on a new Century Comedy, which is based on an original story written by Archie Mayo. The story concerns itself with baseball as played on the back lot by young America. The difficulty of making an education and tiresome studies jibe with keeping up a 100 per cent average as a batter, will form the theme of harrowing adventures on the part of Buddy whose dislike for work makes him the sort of hero that many boys and most parents will sympathize with.

Power Demonstrations in Pathe Review

Picture screen demonstration and analysis of natural phenomena—such as the unseen force exerted by heat and atmospheric pressure—are practically as vivid and clear as those of the scientific laboratory where they are photographed.

In current No. 17 of Pathe Review the two natural forces mentioned are demonstrated in the section called "Playtime Science." The force of atmospheric pressure—16 pounds to the square inch at sea level—is pictured from a familiar experiment.

Fox Shows Sinking of Battleship Iowa

Exclusive moving pictures showing the sinking of the famous old battleship Iowa off the Panama Coast during the U. S. Navy spring target practice, appeared last week in Fox News release No. 54. A complete print of the pictures, which the Navy officials are said to have declared were the best ever taken, has been presented to the Government and it will be preserved for historic record.

The sinking of the hero ship which fighting Bob Evans commanded at Santiago during the Spanish-American War, marked the culmination of the Navy maneuvers in which both the Atlantic and the Pacific fleets participated.

Real Round Up Shown in "Man Next Door"

"The Man Next Door," by Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon," has a thrill in it that Victor Schertzinger, the director, says is unequalled in any picture of the West. The scenes are of a round-up on the ranch of Col. Wright, father of the heroine in the story, and were shot at Victorville, Cal., on the Palo Verdi ranch. Five thousand head of cattle were used in this round-up, which was especially staged by the owners of the Palo Verdi ranch for Mr. Schertzinger. Fifteen cameras were used in taking the scenes and they were placed behind safety barricades.

Two-Reel Picture Has Thrills

Educational's "Man Versus Beast" Attracts Much Favorable Comment

THE two-reel Educational Pictures Special, "Man Versus Beast," released just prior to the present flood of big game pictures, continues to attract much favorable comment from newspaper critics and exhibitors who have played it, according to Educational.

Due to its short-subject policy and its desire to give only the best of action in its pictures, this five-reel picture was cut to two reels by Educational, all the meat and action of the longer subjects being retained.

Many of the largest beasts of Africa are stalked and slain in front of the camera and the climax comes when Louis Shuman, the leader of the expedition, encounters two rhinoceroses and drops them within ten feet of the camera.

"Here is the most remarkable jungle picture we have ever seen. It is as interesting as 'Nanook of the North,'" was the report of the management of the Capitol theatre, St. Paul, Minn. "It is the very best of thrilling entertainments—a picture that is different from anything we have ever seen," was the comment of a brother exhibitor, L. Rubenstein of New Orion, Minn.

The newspaper critics were almost unanimous in their praise, the New York World in its review of this picture saying, "The most exciting film on Broadway," and the Times Herald of Waco, Texas, stating that "'Man Versus Beast' is especially remarkable for the large number of thrilling close-ups of conflicts between men and ferocious wild beasts."

These are but a few of the thousands of comments by exhibitors and newspapers following the showing of this condensed animal thriller.

Christie Closes Foreign Deals

Gaumont of London Again Contracts for Latest Series of Comedies

WITH the signing this month of a contract between the Christie Film Company and Gaumont of London for the latest series of Christie Comedies, the Gaumont company gets the entire Christie product for Great Britain for the seventh consecutive year. This is the biggest individual contract for Christie Comedies outside of the United States and Canada which are handled exclusively through Educational. This gives all of the Christie Comedies to Gaumont for British distribution ever since the start of the Christie organization.

Other important foreign territories closed recently for Christie Comedies include a renewal with Australasian Film Company for Australia, covering the present series of twenty Christie Comedies.

Famous Players Corporation has secured the second Educational-Christie series for Japan, while these comedies are acquired by Cinematograph Harry for France.

In Holland, the new series of Christies have been sold to Ralph Minden, of Motion Picture Sales Agency there. For Spain and Portugal, S. A. Sellecine has secured the first series of Educational-Christie comedies. In South America this series and also the second series are being handled by Max Glucksman.

Australasian has also acquired the first series for Dutch East Indies, Siam, Federated Malay States and Straits Settlement. These contracts and others for minor countries not named above give the Christie product distribution in every country where American films are being marketed.

Kid McCoy Appears in "Fighting Blood"

Still another notable has joined the delegation of prominent persons who have thus far appeared in F. B. O.'s "Fighting Blood" series being produced at the Powers lot by Mal St. Clair. The latest important figure is Kid McCoy, long regarded among the cleverest of all boxers of American ring history. McCoy has an important role in "Fighting Blood" No. 11, in which he boxes George O'Hara, the star.

Weird Novelties For "Haunted Valley"

Pathe reports early and active demand by exhibitors for the attractive novelties supplied for the exploitation of Ruth Roland's new serial, "Haunted Valley," which is to be released early in May. At least two of these are said to be accepted as making a special appeal to the many thousands of children who are among the most faithful "boosters" of the breezy and exciting Roland type of chapter picture.

First, there is a "night mask," a ghost face with luminous teeth and eyes which fairly reek of the dread mysteries of "Haunted Valley."

Also for kid bally-hoo purposes, the "Haunted Valley" film photo packets supplied are more convenient for handling and more thrillingly attractive in the scenes reproduced than anything else of the kind heretofore provided.

The "Haunted Valley" campaign book has just been issued.

"Imperfect Lover" Is Current Release

Originally called "The Leather Slingers" (a parody on "The Leather Pushers"), Archie Mayo's first Century Comedy has had its name changed to "The Imperfect Lover."

The story which stars Brownie, "the Century Wonder Dog," has its theme based on the prize ring. Brownie proves himself the friend and ally of Bobby Dunn, several pounds lighter than his heavy opponent, Vernon Dent, who tips the scales at 275 and who challenges him to a fight in the ring for the hand of blonde Ena Gregory, as well as for her homestead. Brownie proves how a brindled pup may be a most unfair referee as he continually steps in to ring the bells and save his friend from being knocked out.

Firpo In Selznick Short Subject

Giant Argentinian, Who Seeks Dempsey's Title Shown at Work in Gymnasium

"WILL HE CONQUER DEMPSEY?" is the title which the Selznick Distributing Corporation has selected for the two reel short subject which it has scheduled for release on April 21st.

That Luis Angel Firpo is a logical and dangerous contendant for Jack Dempsey's championship crown is generally conceded, and the Selznick film, which was produced by Philip Rosen, shows the potential champion hard at work training in the private gym of Philadelphia Jack O'Brien, and also includes shots of road work and private glimpses into the life of this latest find in the heavyweight class of pugilists.

Firpo is known as the "mystery man" of the ring. He came to this country about a year ago an unknown Argentinian, fought a few battles, and returned to South America without creating any particular interest here. A few months ago he returned but it was a new Firpo, a man who was able to walk into the Garden ring and knock out Bill Brennan, a veteran of the squared circle, and one who has kissed the mat but few times in his career. Brennan is the only man who has given Dempsey a real battle since Jack became the idolized champion of the world, and it really looked for a time as though he was going to win the championship. But Firpo experienced no difficulty in sending Brennan down for the count in the twelfth round.

The Selznick release shows Firpo going through his exercises with several sparring partners including Jack O'Brien, Stoessel and other well-known ring celebrities. It is a picture said to be replete with interest and action, but clean withal, and of the type which can be shown to women and children because it presents the manly art at its best.

Cameraman Takes Own Auto Smashup

Fred Parrish, Fox News staff cameraman at Denver, Colo., narrowly escaped death last week while filming the Rocky Mountain automobile races at Brighton, Colo. Parrish was taking pictures from another car which preceded the racers, when one of the racing cars crashed into it, breaking off the left rear wheel and turning Parrish's auto completely over. He was thrown clear off the wreckage and sustained a broken wrist and a dislocated shoulder.

Walter S. Walker, Jr., president of the racing association, who was driving the car for Parrish, was pinned underneath the car and sustained a fracture of the skull. Despite his injuries, Parrish returned to the wrecked car and pulled Walker to safety. The camera rolled clear off the wreck and the film was not damaged.

Equity Announces New Sales on Special

Increased activity was noted in the Equity Home office when two domestic territories and one foreign sale were closed on their latest "Special" production, "Has the World Gone Mad." This all resulted from the recent drive started by Equity Pictures Corporation to clean up the open territory on this picture.

The first sale to be announced is the one closed with the Creole Enterprises of New Orleans, La., for the states of Louisiana, Mississippi and part of Florida. The second domestic sale was consummated with the True Film Company of Dallas, Texas. With the closing of this deal go the rights for the states of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. This now means that Equity has completed the sale of "Has the World Gone Mad?" for the entire South.

The foreign sale was made with the International Variety & Theatrical Agency of New York and includes the rights for the continent of Africa.

Newspapers in Tieup on "Shopgirl"

Two newspapers in one city tied up simultaneously on contest ideas on one picture in Washington in connection with "Only a Shopgirl," the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation feature.

This was effected through the Strand Feature Service, the Washington franchise holder—both the Washington Morning Herald and the Evening Times being so interested in this all-star cast feature which numbers Estelle Taylor, Mae Busch, Wallace Beery, and James Morrison in its cast, that they have both tied up on contests of slightly different types.

Laemmle Scholarship Is Praised

Chicago Visual Education Director Commends Action of Universal Chief

CARL LATMMLE, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, has received praise and commendation from all sides, especially from educators and collegiate leaders, for his recent steps taken to interest the country's colleges and universities in motion picture advancement.

In offering a scholarship for the student qualifying as the best scenario writer, and an endowment to the college where this student attends, he has awakened a nation-wide interest in the part the schools of the land can play in making the screen a national expression.

The latest to voice appreciation for what Laemmle is doing, is Dudley Grant Hays, Director of Visual Education of Chicago, and president of the National Academy of Visual Institution. The following letter has just been received from him by the Universal chief:

"I can see in the movement you are starting to interest students in colleges to make a careful study of scenario writing, and to endeavor to put forth their best thought in the line of film production by contributing scenarios which may be of help in the future production of wholesome films, a great opportunity for public good. I believe that such a movement will result in teachers of literature making this thought part of their regular work with classes in literature.

"In former days the art of entertaining by means of written or spoken words received considerable attention from instructors with their classes. The great movement in recent years of entertaining by means of pictures on the screen has to a large degree supplanted some of the fundamental notions back of that which prevailed with the older type of expression. To acquaint pupils with modern methods of visualizing by means of pictures on the screen, rather than by word pictures is something that should receive more attention, I believe, than has been given to the topic.

"It has often occurred to me that splendid work might be done, not only in the universities and colleges, but also in high schools, by allowing credits to be given to the pupils who prepare the best screen review of films that they see portrayed in their respective communities. This thought, coupled with the plan you have in mind, will make a fine arrangement, I believe, to help clear up some of the wrong atmosphere prevalent in recent years in the screen world."

"Temptation" Pleases in Philly

Critics Lavish in Praise of C. B. C. Feature at Karlton Theatre Premiere

THAT "Temptation," the C. B. C. Film Corporation all-star feature, starring Bryant Washburn and Eva Novak, and supported by Vernon Steele, Phillips Smalley, and June Elvidge, smashed its way over the top this week on the occasion of its world-premiere at the big Karlton theatre in Philadelphia is shown by newspaper reviews.

The picture opened there on Saturday, and the reviews which followed it up were flattering throughout.

The morning Inquirer said:

"Here is a picture that is unusual because it makes you forget you are looking at a 'movie' and interests you in the gripping story of real people."

The Bulletin said:

"A Cast that deserves to be called 'all star.' Bryant Washburn does specially fine work and the other members of the cast are sincere and convincing. Plenty of strong situations logically woven. Splendidly costumed and staged. Women especially will love it—and it can't help interesting their men-folks."

The Record said:

"Full of real 'meat'—it does more than please the eye—it makes you think, as well. A powerful story, directed understandingly. Miss Novak and Washburn fine. Grips the imagination."

The North American said:

"The picture tells an interesting story, and tells it in a setting that is convincing rich where it should be rich, meager where it should be meager. As interesting a picture as we have seen."

Arrow Closes Foreign Deal on Serial

D. J. Mountan, foreign manager of the Arrow Film Corporation, announces the disposal of the rights of Arrow's new serial, "The Fighting Skipper," to Jupiter Film Corporation, New York City, for Spain, Portugal, Latin America, including Mexico, Central America, British, Dutch and French West Indies, British, Dutch and French Guinea, Colombia, Venezuela, Brazil, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

Doris Kenyon, starring in the J. Parker Read production, "The Last Moment," to be released by Goldwyn.

"Poor Men's Wives" Is Praised by Press

"Poor Men's Wives," Gasnier's recent production made by B. P. Schulberg, has completed a week's run at the Karlton theatre, Philadelphia.

This Lichtman release was as enthusiastically received by the press of Philadelphia as it was by the critics in New York during its run at the Criterion theatre on Broadway, it is claimed.

The Gazette commented on its skillful treatment and went on to say: "Poor Men's Wives" proves one important thing: that box office value and hokum are not necessarily synonymous terms."

The reviewer on The North American commented that it was "an unusually good and very faithful picture of real life. One of the principal features is the excellent acting and team work of the entire cast and the director."

The Record had these comments to make: "'Poor Men's Wives' is certain to receive popular acclaim. All is not tragedy in this dramatic story. The directors did well to treat it with considerable humor."

"Scarecrow" Approved at Showing

"The Scarecrow," a Film Guild Production starring Glenn Hunter, for distribution through W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which has just been finished, was shown privately to Mr. MacKaye, its author. He has just returned from a tour of the South and West, where he has been giving special readings from this play to University students.

"Literature and the movies used to be at odds with each other," Mr. MacKaye said. "The serious-minded student was disposed to look down upon the boy who confessed to a liking for the films. But with the introduction of the photoplay into the classroom, I believe that literature and the motion picture will work hand in hand."

All Critics Boost "Safety Last"

Harold Lloyd's Latest Wins Commendation Of Reviewers in Many Different Cities

OUT of a deluge of newspaper reviewers' ardent praise of "Safety Last" wherever Harold Lloyd's seven-reel comedy has begun its career of extended runs, Pathe quotes significant expressions which come under the head of information. As in the case of the New York reviewers, these writers, first of all, are impressed with the fact that Lloyd has gifted the screen with a new "punch"—laughter plus thrills.

"The power of the motion picture to hypnotize the emotions of the spectator and bend them at will," writes Harold Heffernan in the Detroit News, "was never more completely demonstrated than in Harold Lloyd's new seven-reel comedy, 'Safety Last.' For once the press agents appear to have been tongue-tied and handcuffed in attempting to describe the merits of a picture."

Referring to the same point, the Oregon Sunday Journal says: "No one will be able to question the fact that Harold Lloyd performs his own 'thrill stunts' in the seven-reel comedy, 'Safety Last' showing at the Majestic theatre. Even the closest observer of picture productions will not find a single double-exposure or uncover one scene in the entire seven reels that would tend to question the reality of the thrill stuff."

Under the head: "'Safety Last' Will Smash Reputations," the Greensboro (N. C.) Daily News says — "Reputations totter when they are struck by a thing like 'Safety Last.' To understand the joy of the thing it is necessary to see it. Last night it had hardened movie-goers literally laughing till they cried, laughing until their sides ached and they gasped for breath."

Betty Craig, writing in the Denver Post, says: "Harold Lloyd's latest comedy, 'Safety Last,' which opened its engagement at both the Rialto and the Princess on Sunday is unquestionably in a niche all by itself in the film hall of fame. To say that it is the biggest hit this energetic young comedian ever has made is putting it very mildly. There has never been anything like it on the screen. Although 'Safety Last' is described as a comedy—and it is a knockout from the standpoint of provoking laughter—it is more than anything else a hair-raising thriller. It is worth any amount of standing in line to get to see it."

"Girl of Golden West" Due Soon

David Belasco's Popular American Stage Play Due to Reach Screen Next Month

CAPPING a climax of a successful career which began with its presentation at the Belasco theatre in November, 1905, "The Girl of the Golden West," one of the classics of the American stage, will finally reach the public in photoplay form next month, when the long heralded Edwin Carewe production will be issued by First National Pictures. The progress of the picture, from the time it was first announced several months ago, has been closely watched by press and public.

"The Girl of the Golden West," from the pen of David Belasco, is regarded by students of the American drama as one of the greatest plays written in America.

In the title role is Sylvia Breamer, selected by Mr. Carewe after a thorough search of the industry's talent. The supporting cast includes J. Warren Kerrigan, who recently returned to the screen in a leading role in "The Covered Wagon"; Russell Simpson, noted character actor; Rosemary Theby, playing the part of a Mexican vamp; Wilfred Lucas, Hector Sarno, Nelson McDowell, Charles McHugh and Cecil Holland.

"The Girl of the Golden West" also has the distinction of being the first American play to be made into an opera. Under its original title it served as one of Caruso's greatest successes. In the picture Russell Simpson, as the Sheriff, has the role which Caruso interpreted on the operatic stage.

The filming of this picture was completed last week after three months of strenuous work, one of which was spent in the actual locale of the story filming the scenes of the famous gold rush district of California of the '49 period.

Mrs. Sinclair Lewis Praises "Brass"

An unsolicited testimonial for Warner Brothers' classic of the screen, "Brass," a Harry Rapf production, is reported to have been received from Mrs. Sinclair Lewis, wife of the author of "Main Street," which was recently completed at the Warner Coast studios.

In a brief but pointed letter, Mrs. Lewis, writing from Hartford, Conn., says: "Last night I watched 'Brass' with the critical eyes of the wife of the author of 'Main Street.' If the Warner Brothers' adaptation of my husband's novel is as understanding, as appealing, as human, as well cast and as genuinely entertaining as 'Brass,' I shall be delighted."

"Brass," directed by Sidney Franklin, is an adaptation of Charles G. Norris' novel featuring Monte Blue and Marie Prevost. The scenario was written by Julien Josephson. Other members of the cast include Harry Myers, Irene Rich, Frank Keenan, Helen Ferguson, Cyril Chadwick and Miss Du Pont.

UNIVERSAL DOES IT AGAIN!

"The Abysmal Brute"

Many Angles of Interest and Appeal Make This Universal-Jewel a Superior Box-Office Attraction

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

There are so many angles of interest in the Universal-Jewel production, "The Abysmal Brute," that it should appeal to almost every type of patron. Adapted from a story by the late Jack London, it has the vigor and dramatic value of this author's work. For the men there is the appeal of hardy manhood, of life in the open, and the atmosphere of the prize ring. But don't get the idea that it is a prize fight story only, for there is a pretty romance of the unspoiled chap from the hills who packs such a tremendous wallop in the ring that he is known as "The Abysmal Brute," but at the same time is so bashful that he runs away from all women, until the right girl comes along. Then, haltingly at first, but with all of the force of his nature when the time comes, he fights against all odds of class distinction and wins. There is the sweep of the great open spaces in the early scenes, beautiful scenic atmosphere, snappy and unusual comedy that is put across with a bang.

All of this has been emphasized and forcefully brought out by the excellent direction of Hobart Henley, by his usual painstaking attention to detail in rounding off his scenes. There is just enough of the prize ring to please those who like it and not enough to detract from the interest of those to whom the squared circle does not appeal, and these scenes are well handled, with good punches, literally as well as figuratively, and refreshing human comedy.

Added to all of these is the truly excellent work of Reginald Denny in the title role. Having achieved great success in the three "Leather Pushers" series of two-reelers, in which he essayed quite similar roles, he was an ideal selection for the hero of this feature. He looks and acts the part. His sincerity and naturalness add greatly to the role. His performance holds your interest tensely and he has your sympathy to such an extent that in the scenes at a formal dinner in the girl's home, where his uncouth manners cause amusement to some of the guests, you truly feel sorry for him.

Mabel Julienne Scott is well cast as the society girl who falls in love with the hero, not knowing he is a prize-fighter. Her turning from him when she learns this, and the final victory of her heart over the artificial restrictions of class distinction are convincingly handled. The remainder of the cast all do fine work.

It is a red-blooded story that starts off strong and keeps up a good pace, although there is a tendency to unnecessary footage in developing the detail of some of the scenes. Judicious cutting would speed up the society sequence, but even as it stands it is an excellent box-office attraction, and with many angles of exploitation and appeal, a showman's picture.

Spectacular Episodes in "The Master of Women"

Reginald Barker's genius for staging spectacular and thrilling episodes will find a new outlet in his forthcoming production, "The Master of Women" which will include several scenes of such massive proportions as to compare favorably with his recently released Metro photoplay, "Hearts Aflame."

A stampede of buffalo and the breaking up of an ice jam are two of the thrills planned by the director in converting to the screen G. B. Lancaster's famous novel. "The Master of Women," now being produced for Louis B. Mayer, will be released by Metro.

Through the co-operation of the Canadian government officials, Mr. Barker will stage the buffalo stampede in the Canadian National Park, at Wainwright, Alberta. A herd of 7,600 animals will participate in this spectacular episode, which is expected to furnish a thrill unique in photoplay history.

A strong cast will interpret the principal roles. Among the players are Earle Williams, Barbara La Marr. Renee Adoree, Wallace Beery, Joseph Swickard, Pat O'Malley, George Kuwa and Pat Harmon. The screen adaptation was prepared by Monte M. Katterjohn.

Philly Sees "Night Life in Hollywood" Premiere

Wednesday, April 18th, was the occasion of the premiere presentation of "Night Life in Hollywood" in the Pennsylvania territory, at which time the DeLuxe Film Corporation presented this Arrow attraction in association with the National Stomach Hospital, in the Grand Ballroom of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia.

Arrangements were under way for this affair for some time and tickets for all boxes and seats were sold far in advance of the showing, at ten dollars per ticket.

In connection with the presentation of the picture a number of well known stars appeared as the guests of Messrs. Neufeld and Luchese.

Coast Jurists Honor Charles Ray

Charles Ray received a high tribute recently when twenty-four judges of the Federal and California Superior courts assembled at his studios and gave him an engrossed testimonial. In this they thanked him for the invariably high character of his photoplays, and especially his selection of "The Courtship of Myles Standish" for his next picture.

The photograph shows Judge Benjamin F. Bledsoe, of the United States District Court, making the presentation, which took place on the deck of the Mayflower, which Mr. Ray built in the exact proportions of the original ship, for scenes in the production. Judge Bledsoe is flanked by a score of other judges and by George E. Cryer, mayor of Los Angeles. Behind the star is Mrs. Ray, who seems a bit abashed by the imposing mass of legal acumen about her.

"Where Pavement Ends" Praised

Rex Ingram's Production For Metro Pleases Critics at N. Y. Capitol

REX INGRAM'S production of "Where the Pavement Ends" for Metro brought to the Capitol, New York, one of the biggest weeks that theatre has ever known in its housing of big box office successes it, is claimed.

Praise was lavished upon it by Metropolitan motion picture critics. They were unanimous in calling it an example of the highest type of film art.

The Sun says this picture "is not only Rex Ingram's most artistic work since 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse,' but it makes every other South Sea island film look as if it had been sunk under an earthquake in the Pacific. . . . It tells a moving story simply and logically, with a light of beauty shining through."

The Tribune declares: "The sensuous beauty of the tropics is there and Rex Ingram has endowed each scene with a sort of breathless wonder. . . . It is such a story as one rarely sees in pictures. . . . The author . . . must have been proud of this cast. . . . The descent through the waterfalls is probably one of the most thrilling scenes ever screened."

"This picture," writes Robert E. Sherwood in The Herald, "has been expertly handled by Mr. Ingram, and is full of the eloquent touches which are so characteristic of his work."

The Mail says that "Where the Pavement Ends" breathes the wholesomeness and freshness of the outdoors, and declares that Rex Ingram is alone in his field. The cast, says this paper, is of high excellence.

E. V. Durling writes in The Globe that Mr. Ingram "catches the spirit of the islands in a way none of his many predecessors in attempting this type of picture has done."

Alice Terry receives a wealth of praise for her distinctive ability and striking beauty. Ramon Novarro also wins high commendation.

The other critics write of "Where the Pavement Ends" in the same tone of highest approval, their reviews being sprinkled with phrases such as, "quite different . . . thoroughly enjoyable . . . a shining example of what can be done in the films. . . . A treat is in store for you. . . . Ingram has made a wonderful picture again. . . . Superbly directed . . . a lovely, distinguished cinema play. . . . A co-operative attempt to do something a whole lot better than others are doing."

"Where the Pavement Ends" was adapted by Rex Ingram from John Russell's story. The photography is by John F. Seitz.

"Masters of Men" Is Acclaimed

Vitagraph Picturization of Morgan Robertson Novel Approved by Critics

EXHIBITORS and critics who have seen pre-release showings of "Masters of Men," the picturization of Morgan Robertson's novel of life before the mast and on board a United States man-of-war, by Vitagraph, are unanimous in acclaiming it one of the greatest sea stories ever screened, according to Vitagraph.

The cast headed by Earle Williams, Alice Calhoun, Cullen Landis, and Wanda Hawley was credited with fine acting, and as having been selected with rare discrimination.

Film Daily, said:

"Here is one with a genuine wallop for American audiences and if the patriotic atmosphere in this doesn't send them out with their blood tingling and their fervor for the Stars and Stripes increased a hundred-fold then the guess is all wrong."

From Harrison's Report is taken the following:

"If the word 'knock-out' had not, on account of constant use, lost its power of expression, it could be used to denote the exact quality of 'Masters of Men'; but such word will not do the picture justice now. Besides being interesting, appealing and thrilling, it is also refreshing, because different."

Motion Picture News said:

"Vivid and vital and rich in its patriotic glow is 'Masters of Men,' which is sponsored by Vitagraph—a picture which this company may well feel proud of since it carries all the qualities which mark success."

The Morning Telegraph critic said:

"It is the story of a two-fisted, red-blooded boy with a fine sense of honor, who grows into a regular he-man. He has an abundance of hard knocks, but splendid courage and a handy pair of fists bring him to a happy fade-out in the arms of his sweetheart."

"Empty Cradle" Rights Selling Fast

"The Empty Cradle," Burton King's production of Leota Morgan's novel, "Cheating Wives," featuring Mary Alden and Harry Morey, is rapidly being disposed of to various independent exchanges throughout the country, it is said. "The Empty Cradle" is being handled among its franchise holders by Truart Film Corporation, of which M. H. Hoffman is vice-president and general manager.

During the past week arrangement was consummated by Mr. Hoffman with Gene Marcus, general manager of The Twentieth Century Film Co., Philadelphia, whereby "The Empty Cradle" will be distributed by that independent exchange in the Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey territory.

Britain Exploits "Queen of Moulin Rouge"

"Queen of The Moulin Rouge," Pyramid's picture distributed by American Releasing, is receiving unusual exploitation throughout Great Britain where it is now being shown in the larger cities.

"Moulin Rouge" fancy dress balls are a favorite means of attracting attention to the picture, the most recent event of this kind being arranged in conjunction with the week's engagement of the picture at the Scala theatre, Glasgow.

The following excerpt from the Glasgow Evening News illustrated the manner in which the ball was carried out. "Miss Nettie Menzies, who was adjudged the best representative of the character played by Martha Mansfield, was duly crowned Queen and homage was paid her during the merry evening. The spacious ballroom was filled by 450 exuberant masqueraders, and was specially decorated, improvised 'red mills' being scattered here and there. A film was taken of the great gathering and it is to be shown all next week at the Scala theatre."

"Famous Mrs. Fair" is Highly Praised

"The Famous Mrs. Fair" reaches the highest level of motion picture accomplishment in the opinion of Carlton Miles who recently devoted a whole column in The Minneapolis Journal to lavish praise of this Fred Niblo production of James Forbes's play as a Metro-Louis B. Mayer photoplay.

Mr. Miles, after seeing the picture at a pre-view, wrote: "We believe 'The Famous Mrs. Fair' to be an important film. It revives our faith that something good is coming out of the welter of trash which we have been served on the screen. . . . It is an ambitious, sincere attempt to give the photoplay patron a better type of story, as well as a more intelligent viewpoint and it is the sort of picture for which we have been asking for several years. To our mind this photoplay represents as good a level as we have reached."

Complete Press Book on "You Are Guilty"

An unusually complete line of advertising and publicity accessories for the C. C. Burr feature "You Are Guilty" has been available for the exhibitor.

The large press sheet gives complete data regarding the all-star cast including James Kirkwood, Doris Kenyon, Mary Carr, Robert Tdeson, Russell Griffin and Edmund Breese. There are two columns devoted entirely to suggestions on putting the picture over and two columns on high lights to play up. A complete assortment of newspaper stories is also a part of the press sheet together with two full pages of exploitation ideas. These include every practical way in which "You Are Guilty" can be exploited, the various teaser campaigns, ballyhoos, contests, tie-ups, prologues, lobby displays, etc., being described in detail. Several novel and original methods of exploitation are introduced.

Women Laud "Alice Adams"

Indiana Federation Expresses Approval Upon Presentation at Convention

TWO thousand women, attending the annual convention in Indianapolis of the Indiana Federation of Women's Clubs and Parent-Teachers Associations, expressed enthusiastic approval when the Associated Exhibitors attraction, Florence Vidor in "Alice Adams," was presented as the entertainment feature of their program.

At each annual convention of these organizations one photoplay is screened, the choice being made by the Executive Council of Women's Clubs from a selected list of eligible offerings. One of its members, Mrs. David Ross, who also is an officer of the Indiana Board of Motion Pictures Indorsers, declared "Alice Adams" the best picture she had ever seen.

The enthusiasm when "Alice Adams" was screened before the clubwomen and delegates from the parent-teachers' organizations at the Claypool Hotel, April 5, was no less marked, and the women pledged themselves to spread "Alice Adams" propaganda throughout the State. This action was notably significant in view of the fact that Booth Tarkington, author of the prize-winning novel which Miss Vidor has picturized, is Indiana's favorite son, and a Hoosier State community is the locale of the story.

Yet a further indorsement was forthcoming when, following the screening, an address was made on "Screen Adaptations" with a discussion of the subject, in which many of the women participated. Naturally the screen adaptation of Mr. Tarkington's "Alice Adams" formed the theme of the discussion, and the opinion was unanimous that the transfer to the film had been made with such fidelity to the original as to make the photoplay virtually an illustrated edition of the novel.

"Bucking the Barrier" Praised

Trade Paper Reviewers Liberal in Praise of Dustin Farnum Vehicle

TRADE press commentators were liberal in their praise of the entertainment value of "Bucking the Barrier," the most recent vehicle of Dustin Farnum, which Fox Film Corporation released on April 1st.

Following are excerpts from the printed reviews in last week's issues of the trade publications:

Exhibitors' Herald: "A pleasing little romance with real atmosphere, good direction and several excellent performances. It is thoroughly sound entertainment and has much to recommend it in the way of technical details and an interesting love story. The plot is good and the action brisk."

Moving Picture World: "Dustin Farnum delves into the two extremes of the frozen North and London society life for the thrills in his new Fox picture. It offers variety, suspense, and pleasing backgrounds. It is a well-directed, entertaining feature for the average program."

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS comments favorably on the capable work of the cast, the exterior shots, the suspense and the snow scenes.

Exhibitors' Trade Review: "Dustin Farnum does some good work in this picture. Some of the snow scenes are particularly attractive and the lighting and direction are satisfactory."

Shipman Lives Up to Own Theory

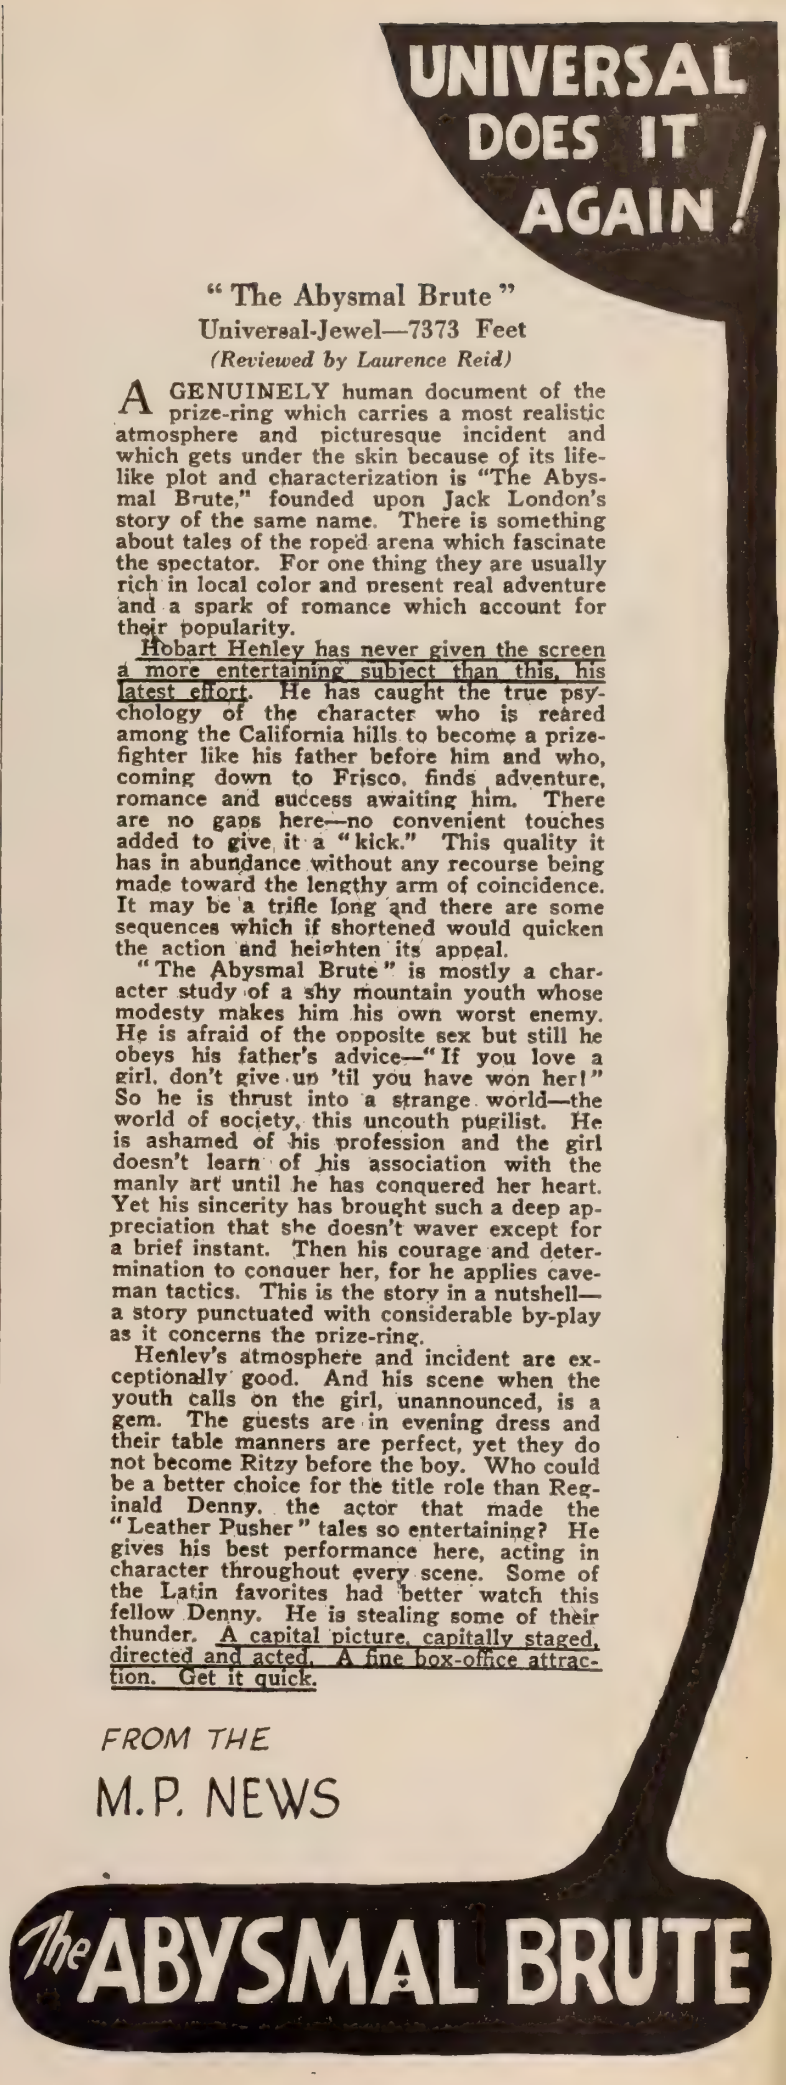
Three Productions Released by Hodkinson Made on Specified Locations

ERNEST SHIPMAN, producer for three film productions soon to be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has proven his theory that film stories should be made upon the exact locations as called for. Years ago Mr. Shipman came to the conclusion that the successful photoplay was the one which was shot at the place and locale called for by the story, eliminating all "fake" and studio scenery. He felt that this was the only way of injecting the true atmosphere into a photoplay and at the same time bringing well to the fore the many little local eccentricities that might be overlooked were the scenes "faked."

He put this to the test in his picturizations of Ralph Connor's famous books. Realizing that the value of Ralph Connor's stories lay in his conception of Canadian life, Mr. Shipman made plans to take all of his productions on the grounds. To prove his own belief Mr. Shipman took his company from New York up into the upper reaches of the Ottawa River where he filmed "The Man from Glengarry" recently released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"The Man From Glengarry," according to the critics and the public who have seen this production, presents every detail surrounding the thrilling experiences of the lumbermen.

The same thing can be found in Mr. Shipman's other two productions soon to be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. They are a picturization of Ralph Connor's "Glengarry Schooldays" and "The Rapids" by Alan Sullivan.



UNIVERSAL DOES IT AGAIN!
"The Abysmal Brute"
Universal-Jewel—7373 Feet
(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)
A GENUINELY human document of the prize-ring which carries a most realistic atmosphere and picturesque incident and which gets under the skin because of its life-like plot and characterization is "The Abysmal Brute," founded upon Jack London's story of the same name. There is something about tales of the roped arena which fascinate the spectator. For one thing they are usually rich in local color and present real adventure and a spark of romance which account for their popularity.
Hobart Henley has never given the screen a more entertaining subject than this, his latest effort. He has caught the true psychology of the character who is reared among the California hills to become a prize-fighter like his father before him and who, coming down to Frisco, finds adventure, romance and success awaiting him. There are no gaps here—no convenient touches added to give it a "kick." This quality it has in abundance without any recourse being made toward the lengthy arm of coincidence. It may be a trifle long and there are some sequences which if shortened would quicken the action and heighten its appeal.
"The Abysmal Brute" is mostly a character study of a shy mountain youth whose modesty makes him his own worst enemy. He is afraid of the opposite sex but still he obeys his father's advice—"If you love a girl, don't give up 'til you have won her!" So he is thrust into a strange world—the world of society, this uncouth pugilist. He is ashamed of his profession and the girl doesn't learn of his association with the manly art until he has conquered her heart. Yet his sincerity has brought such a deep appreciation that she doesn't waver except for a brief instant. Then his courage and determination to conquer her, for he applies cave-man tactics. This is the story in a nutshell—a story punctuated with considerable by-play as it concerns the prize-ring.
Henley's atmosphere and incident are exceptionally good. And his scene when the youth calls on the girl, unannounced, is a gem. The guests are in evening dress and their table manners are perfect, yet they do not become Ritzy before the boy. Who could be a better choice for the title role than Reginald Denny, the actor that made the "Leather Pusher" tales so entertaining? He gives his best performance here, acting in character throughout every scene. Some of the Latin favorites had better watch this fellow Denny. He is stealing some of their thunder. A capital picture, capitally staged, directed and acted. A fine box-office attraction. Get it quick.

Rome Dignitaries See "Four Horsemen"

PREMIER MUSSOLINI, members of his cabinet and the British and American ambassadors were among those present at the premiere performance in Italy of the Rex Ingram production, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" at the Costanzi theatre in Rome. The recent presentation of the Metro picture was the most remarkable event in the motion picture history of the city, the elaborate preparations and the distinguished assembly making it an event of great importance, it is said. The proceeds of the initial performance were awarded to those who had fallen in defense of Fascism in Italy.

Roy Chandler, who arranged the Italian presentation for Messrs. Chipman, Limited, took complete charge of the details of the showing, and carried them out in modern American style. The theatre was decorated inside and out with Italian and American flags. A double line of Fascisti troops with fixed bayonets were stationed in the street and in the lobby of the theatre, so that the members of the huge audience that jammed the playhouse passed between them when entering.

Spook Picture Improved with Altering

Reports from Chicago indicate that Louis Weadock of Hollywood, a picture doctor whose services have been utilized by Douglas Fairbanks, Jesse L. Lasky, Thomas H. Ince, Leah Baird and other producers, has performed a successful major operation upon the new spook picture, "The Little Girl Next Door." With Carmel Myers, Pauline Starke, Mitchell Lewis and James Morrison in the cast, Blair Coan produced this expose of spiritualism only to find that he had not obtained the sort of picture he wanted. He took the negative from Chicago to Hollywood to have Mr. Weadock work upon it.

Four weeks of doctoring by Weadock so improved "The Little Girl Next Door" that Coan, it is said, has been offered his choice of first run theatres in Chicago and also has sold the state rights in other sections of the country.

Michigan Is Sold on "Shopgirl"

The State of Michigan, one of the last territories on which final negotiations were pending, was closed this week on "Only a Shopgirl" and "Temptation," the current features on the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation series.

The deal was made with Standard Film Service of Detroit, and was personally completed by Joe Brandt, head of C. B. C.

Campaigns to launch both these features will be started at once throughout Michigan, Mr. Brandt announces.

Critics Like Jackie in "Daddy"

Child Star Highly Praised for His Ability to Bring Tears and Laughter

JACKIE COOGAN is at the peak of his career as a comedian and a dramatic actor in "Daddy," according to the screen critics of the New York newspapers, who reviewed this First National picture during its run at the Strand theatre last week. The screen's greatest child actor received homage from all for his ability to bring tears and laughter with equal ease.

E. V. Durling, in The Globe, gives the following opinion of the youthful star: "In 'Daddy,' Jackie Coogan completely establishes the fact that he is an actor of rare ability. To style him merely a cute and clever youngster any longer would be to do him a great injustice."

The Evening World stated: "In 'Daddy' he (Jackie) welds all his moods and offers us what, in our opinion, is one of his best characterizations. Whether you like the screen or not as a general rule, by all means see Jackie Coogan in 'Daddy.'"

Joseph Mulvaney, in the New York American, gives this description of Jackie's acting when he discovers his old friend, an aged violinist, is dead: "He passes his hand softly over the old musician's forehead, then glances around, puzzled a little, fearful a little. He cuddles beside the dead man and kisses him, and then abruptly realizes the truth. Jackie's face pales, his fists tighten and the little figure writhes in grief. He raises his face to the sky and lifts his arms in piteous appeal. A moment later anger follows supplication, and despair takes anger's place. The child that the crowded theatre was laughing at a minute before is transformed into a weeping, wailing crazed little animal tortured by sorrow."

The Evening Mail, stated that "this prodigy of the movies had his spectators alternately in tears and laughter."

"The results are excellent, whoever is responsible," wrote the New York Sun, "Jackie is really superb in 'Daddy.'"

"Never before," according to the Evening Telegram, "has the starlet made so much of a chance to reveal his powers of pathetic appeal and tragic fervor."

Critics See "Westbound Limited"

Reviewers at Special Showing of Emory Johnson's Railroad Thriller

OVER sixty screen critics from the trade papers, fan magazines and New York daily newspapers had their first glimpse of Emory Johnson's latest film thriller "Westbound Limited" this week, when as guests of the Film Booking Offices of America they were entertained at a special showing of the picture on Thursday afternoon in one of the ballrooms of the Astor Hotel. In addition to the newspapermen many of the leading exhibitors of the country were on hand to witness the showing of the big sister picture to "In the Name of the Law," and "The Third Alarm."

There can be no doubt in the minds of any that Mr. Johnson uses a keen judgment and a developed sense of showmanship in the selection of his subjects from the standpoint of public appeal. In the production, "In the Name of the Law," a police department tie-up was made that assured the success of the picture long before its exhibition, while the case of "The Third Alarm" was one of constant cooperation on the part of the various fire departments throughout the United States.

With the "Westbound Limited" the F. B. O. sees larger possibilities. Their prospects are based on the large number of railway employees.

Ralph Lewis and Ella Hall, both feature players of the fine picture take the principal roles in the new railroad thriller. Added to these two is Johnny Harron, brother of Bobby Harron. The picture deals with the life of a railway engineer and affects many a thriller in the operation of a giant western oil burner. The picture is of the melodramatic type and marks the return of one of the screen's old favorites, Claire McDowell.

Jackie Coogan Aids Sea Scouts of Chicago

The latest organization to enlist the services of Jackie Coogan is the Sea Scouts of Chicago, of which the young screen star is an honorary member. Jackie joined the association during his short stay in Chicago, on the return trip from New York to Hollywood.

Ernest H. Noyes, Vice Commodore of the Chicago Sea Scouts and chairman of their drive for funds, recently paid a brief visit to Los Angeles. While there, he visited the Metro Studios, where he found Jackie in the new bungalow set up for him on the studio grounds. Noyes told Jackie of the drive, and the new recruit asked his father to advance enough money on his ten-dollar-a-week salary to add to his present bank balance for a donation to the cause.

The result was a check for two hundred and fifty dollars for the Sea Scouts, signed by the famous Jackie himself.

"Long Live the King" is the first photoplay which Jackie will make under his new contract with Metro Pictures Corporation. A celebrated cast has been engaged to support him in filming this famous story by Mary Roberts Rinehart. It includes Vera Lewis, Alan Forrest, Rosemary Theby, Walt Whitman, Ruth Renick and Alan Hale. The scenario has been prepared by C. Gardner Sullivan, assisted by Eve Unsell.

Warners Will Produce Eighteen Specials

FOR the coming season the Warner Brothers plan to produce a series of eighteen "special" productions utilizing well-known stage plays and popular novels, according to an announcement by Harry M. Warner.. The proposed schedule it is claimed, will entail an approximate expenditure of at least $5,000,000. Production will be on the Coast.

Comprehensive plans are now under way at the Coast studios under the direct supervision of Sam and Jack Warner. According to Mr. Warner the studio on the West Coast has been enlarged and it now comprises nine and a half acres of ground.

Mr. Warner plans to leave for the Coast within the very near future in order to complete the production plans for 1923-24. While no definite announcement has been made, it is reliably reported that a number of production units, screen players and directors will enhance the proposed schedule.

Universal Forced to Enlarge Quarters

Extensive improvements have been made in the property department at Universal City, where nineteen companies are dependent upon one studio's facilities, not counting the outside firms that lease space there.

Under management of A. E. Rosenberg, the department has been considerably enlarged. "Props" to the value of twenty-five thousand dollars have been added to the stock and ten thousand spent on general improvements.

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the spectacle film starring Lon Chaney, following several other specials of unusual magnitude, made such demands upon the existing stock that enlargement and improvement were necessary.

"The Hero" Is Given High Praise

Reports received by the Al Lichtman Corporation from exhibitors who have played the Preferred Picture, "The Hero," indicate that this release is earning unanimous praise from the patrons and critics. When the play ran in New York last season it was promptly classified by metropolitan reviewers as exceptional and was chosen by Burns Mantle for his "Best Plays of 1922."

The picture version produced by B. P. Schulberg was singled out by the National Board of Review's Committee on Exceptional Photoplays and later was listed by Photoplay Magazine as the finest picture released during March. In addition to the story the work of the players who include Barbara La Marr, Gaston Glass, John Sainpolis, David Butler and Doris Pawn has invariably aroused praise.

Warners Close Foreign Contracts

Gus Schlesinger, Back from Long Tour, Enthusiastic Over Conditions Abroad

THE foreign market today, more than ever before, is eager to acquire the best American productions. They are willing to pay big prices for high class material—they are forging ahead as showmen—the theatres are running pictures for longer runs than heretofore and the European public is becoming accustomed to the prologue and its scenic investiture.

This, in substance, is the condition that prevails abroad, according to Gus S. Schlesinger, general manager of Warner Brothers foreign department, who recently returned from a six months' tour of the European continent. During this stay, Mr. Schlessinger successfully negotiated for the distribution of the Warner classics of the screen throughout the entire European continent. Most of the time was spent in London and Paris.

The future outlook of the foreign market, according to Mr. Schlesinger, was never better.

"The business methods of the foreign distributors are of the highest calibre," said Mr. Schlesinger. "There is no squabbling about the price of a good production. They are willing to pay for the real goods."

While abroad, Mr. Schlesinger closed not only the deals for the Warners, but also sold a number of pictures, the foreign rights of which were owned by the Warners. The six Warner pictures include "Rags to Riches," "Heroes of the Street," "The Beautiful and Damned," "Brass," "The Little Church Around the Corner" and "Main Street." These were purchased by F. B. O., of London, for the United Kingdom, which also took over "I Am the Law."

The six pictures were also sold to L. Gaumont, Barcelona, for Spain and Portgual; to Neiderlandische Bioscop for Holland; to John Olsen & Co., Copenhagen, for Norway, Sweden and Denmark; to Gaumont, Paris, for France, Switzerland and Belgium. "I Am the Law" to Neiderlandische Bioscop for Holland, in addition to Max Fleischer's "Out of the Inkwell," and Pat Sullivan's "Felix Cat Comics" series and twelve Monty Banks comedies.

Films Ekra, of Paris, bought twenty-three Banks comedies for France, Switzerland, Belgium, Italy, Spain and Portugal. Pathe Freres, London, bought thirty-six Felix cartoons for England; the Inkwell and Felix series to Olsen for Scandinavia; the 1923-24 "Inkwell" cartoons and "Your Best Friend," to World's Master Productions, for the United Kingdom.

Business Booming, Asserts Baum

Vice-President of Equity Pictures Is Impressed After Lengthy Trip

LOUIS BAUM, vice-president of Equity Pictures Corporation, returned to New York after a business trip of six weeks in which time he has covered practically every state in the Union and actually did cover every important film center. Although the nature of his trip was truly a sales campaign on Equity's latest "Special" production, "Has the World Gone Mad?" still Mr. Baum devoted considerable time to a survey of the motion picture field in general. Here are some of the cardinal facts that he relates as having been most prominent indications from his personal observations:

Business is booming in almost every state in the Union and especially in the steel territory of Pennsylvania, the coal mining districts of Illinois, Indiana and Kentucky, and in the farming districts of Minnesota, Kansas and Missouri.

Optimism has taken the place of pessimism and everywhere there are signs of better times coming and bigger business as the year progresses.

Exchange centers and exchangemen report a better demand for pictures of the better class, while mediocre productions are entirely neglected.

Easier monetary conditions in every part of the country and the willingness of the distributors to buy good product at equitable prices.

The influx of new concerns in every branch of the film business which will tend to make for keen competition, but at the same time create a wider field of discrimination between the companies turning out good products and the companies operating in "factory made pictures."

"I was really surprised at the vast improvement, plainly evident in the motion picture industry, all within the past six months," said Mr. Baum. "Just about six months ago, I made the same kind of a trip and at that time was rather depressed over the uncertain outlook. Not so now."

"Silas Marner" Aids Day Nursery

A day nursery, directed by the Child's Conservation League, was the beneficiary of a two days' showing of Associated Exhibitors' "Silas Marner" in the Oakland theatre, Marion, Ohio, last week. Marion is President Harding's home town, and his newspaper, in announcing the event, declared that the photoplay adapted from George Eliot's masterpiece had been selected because "it is an exceptionally strong and entertaining picture, certain to draw generous support to this worthy enterprise."

A thorough canvass of the city was made for the sale of tickets and the theatre was packed at every performance.

Almost simultaneously, a special showing of "Silas Marner" was given in the auditorium of the Springfield, Mass., High School

UNIVERSAL DOES IT AGAIN!

The Abysmal Brute

Universal-Jewel Production. Story by Jack London. Scenario by A. P. Younger. Cameraman, Charles Stumar. Directed by Hobart Henley. Length, 7373 feet.

We have absolute confidence that "The Abysmal Brute" will prove to be one of the best box office values, both for the exhibitor and the patron, that Universal has ever offered. This picture, from the story by Jack London, has everything in its favor to make it one of the most intense and thoroughly enjoyable screen productions that has been seen recently.

Points of Appeal.—Reginald Denny, the star of "The Leather Pushers" series, again scores as a decidedly capable hero in another prize fighting and prize winning picture. The story is replete with fast action and thrills, an occasional tug at the heart strings and a romance that will set all of the "sweet young things" atwitter. This does not necessarily mean that only women will enjoy this picture for it is equally a man's story and one that will be enjoyed by every class. There is a very decided grip that the picture takes on the spectator and completely holds the interest all the way through.

Cast. — Reginald Denny gives a clean and refreshing performance. Mabel Julienne Scott is pleasing as the society girl and she and the hero get over some love scenes that are hard to beat. There is quite a large supporting cast that includes several other well known names.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The photography is excellent and several artistic views of the surf are shown. The "society" interiors are well done and all other sets are equally well chosen. The director has handled the story skillfully and the results are thoroughly satisfying.

"Tents of Allah" a Hit in West

Edw. MacManus Film for Assoc. Exhibitors Well-Received by Reviewers

"THE TENTS OF ALLAH," produced by Edward MacManus for release by Associated Exhibitors, was favorably received by the Los Angeles critics during its engagement at Graumann's Million Dollar Theatre the week of April 2nd. The following excerpts are submitted in a statement from the home-office of Associated Exhibitors::

The Evening Herald said in the course of its review: "'The Tents of Allah' presents some distinctly new touches on the screen, Sahara atmosphere, and the art photography is superb. Mary Alden plays Culaid, the deserted wife and mother, with her usual artistry. The sincerity of her characterization work in the scenes where she pleads for the life of her son is marked with appealing human mother charm. Monte Blue gives a fascinating forceful interpretation of Chiddar Ben Ek, the noble desert hero."

The Examiner said: "There is something that suggests 'Madame Butterfly' with the child grown to manhood in 'The Tents of Allah.' Captain Charles A. Logue wrote and directed this exotic cinema piece, utilizing lots of real 'sets' and scenery, to say nothing of the sunlight of Porto Rico. The camera work is very good, in places it is excellent, and there is much that is commendable in the utilization of shadows in composition. Technically, 'The Tents of Allah' is an altogether acceptable photoplay.

"Monte Blue is a very good actor and it is difficult for him to fail to get a feeling of sincerity through the screen and into the hearts of his beholders. Mary Alden is convincing as his mother. Mary Alden is always convincing and always gives a capital performance. Charles Lane commands sympathy in a role that is very trying. Frank Currier shows himself the good 'trouper' he always was by playing two widely diverse roles."

Mabel Brundige Horton wrote in the Evening Express: "Monte Blue is a desert bandit chieftain-hero. Interestingly done because it is Monte Blue. Mary Alden's part is, as always, done appropriately. The photography is wonderful. Fried and O'Donnell have accomplished a beautiful artistry."

Hand Coloring Adds to "Enemies of Women"

Hand-color effects in "Enemies of Women," the Cosmopolitan production of Ibanez's story, at the Central theatre, are occasioning considerable comment for their beauty and story value.

For instance, the scenes depicting the remarkable sabre fight between Lionel Barrymore as Prince Lubimoff, and Paul Panzer as a Cossack owe a portion of their effectiveness to the flaring light thrown on the episode by the torches held by servants.

Again, in the war scenes, color has been splendidly employed.

"Lamp in Desert" Sold for Greater N. Y.

"The Lamp in the Desert," George H. Davis' picturization of Ethel M. Dell's novel of India, which the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is distributing, was sold this week for the Greater New York and Northern New Jersey territory.

The sale was made to the Capital Film Exchange of New York.

Both "The Vamp in the Desert" and "Passionate Friends," the picturization of the H. G. Wells novel are going well, according to Mr. Davis.

Hub Likes Metro Animal Picture

"Trailing African Wild Animals" Gives Thrills to Boston Crowds at Opening

THOUSANDS of persons were turned away from the doors of the huge Park theatre in Boston where the first public showing of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's photoplay, "Trailing African Wild Animals," was held last week, it is said. The sensational big game photoplay, released by Metro Pictures Corporation, proved a powerful magnet for the crowds which filled the playhouse continuously during the first day of its indefinite run. Photoplay critics of Boston have expressed the greatest enthusiasm for the film.

The phenomenal opening in the Hub city was due partially to the presence there of both Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, the celebrated explorers whose hazardous exploits are recorded in the film. At their suite in the Copley-Plaza, they told of their interesting expedition to the heart of British East Africa, of the dangers they encountered, and of the wild animals which they photographed in their native haunts.

Boston newspapers obtained special interviews with Mrs. Johnson, the charming young wife of the well known naturalist who accompanied him everywhere on the expedition. The Sunday Post, for example, devoted an entire page to an interview with the daring huntress, and published many pictures of her as she appeared in the African jungle.

The lavish amount of newspaper space awarded to "Trailing African Wild Animals" is recognition of its extraordinary popular appeal, as well as its standing as an authentic and highly commended record of wild animal life in British East Africa.

Such high authorities as Carl E. Akeley and Henry Fairfield Osborn of the American Museum of Natural History in New York have extended to Mr. Johnson their congratulations on his achievement, and have requested a print of his photoplay for reference purposes in the library of the museum. Its authenticity has been completely vouched for by many other competent authorities in the United States.

"Covered Wagon" Coast Hit

California Premiere at Grauman's Egyptian Brings Praise from Critics

JAMES CRUZE'S Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," had its California premiere at Sid Grauman's Egyptian theatre in Hollywood Tuesday evening, April 10. It was a brilliant affair, according to Los Angeles reports, and judging from the response of the public through the succeeding days, when standing room has been at a premium, the picture promises to break all West Coast records for length of run and gross receipts.

With the house completely sold out on the opening night at $2.50 a seat, the audience went wild with enthusiasm, applauding almost continuously, it is said.

The Los Angeles newspaper critics were no less enthusiastic and unanimous in their verdict on the picture than were those of New York. Edwin Schallert said in the Times: "Big and sweeping. It brings home as perhaps nothing else could something of that unflinching spirit and that determination which drives men westward to the sun."

Florence Lawrence, in the Examiner, said: "There is a rhythm of empire-building about the whole which is impelling. Let me assure you that this film is not merely a super-Western. Far from it. It is tangible evidence of the heights to which human nature may rise in searching for its ideals."

"As entertainment the photoplay reaches the apex of cinematic art. Never once is the person watching permitted to take his eye off the screen," said Guy Price in the Herald.

Pearl Rall in the Express: "It is worth all and more than the advance information vouchsafed. Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky and their associates are to be congratulated warmly and sincerely."

"For You, My Boy" Has Special Showing

"For You, My Boy," the William L. Roubert production being released by Rubicon Pictures on the independent market, was given a special showing for the Trade Press at the Simplex projection rooms last week.

A feature of this showing was that it was given with an orchestra, the full music score of the picture being played the same as it will be when the picture gets into the theatres. This score was especially prepared by Joseph Zivelli, who was present at the showing to direct the orchestra.

The manner in which "For You, My Boy," has been received by the various independent exchange managers is said to be extremely gratifying to the producers, who believe several deals now in the process of negotiation will be closed in the course of another week.

Max Cohen Has Timely Tut Picture

Max Cohen has what he considers one of the most timely pictures recently produced. It is "The Mystery of King Tut-ankh-Amen's Eighth Wife." Mr. Cohen claims the picture was actually in the making long before the public was interested in the explorations of Lord Carnarvon. Originally the picture was eight reels in length, but it has been cut to five, and is now ready for delivery.

President Sees "Covered Wagon"

Brilliant Audience Attends Private Showing to White House Dignitaries

BEFORE a brilliant audience James Cruze's Paramount production of "The Covered Wagon" was shown Saturday night in the East Room of the White House, marking the resumption of the White House social season, following the illness of Mrs. Harding.

In addition to the President and Mrs. Harding there were present members of the Supreme Court, the Cabinet, ranking officers of the Army and Navy, leading Senators and Representatives and leaders of Washington society together with their wives, to the number of about a hundred and fifty.

The showing was a reproduction of the presentation given the picture at the Criterion theatre in New York, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation having sent on an orchestra of twenty-five pieces from the Criterion under the direction of Josiah Zuro. The showing followed a message from the White House that the President was deeply interested in the picture and would like to see it as soon as possible.

The reception accorded "The Covered Wagon" in the White House was extremely enthusiastic, the applause starting with the dedication of the picture to Theodore Roosevelt and keeping up practically continuously throughout the entire ten reels.

Following the showing the President and Mrs. Harding held a reception for the representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Mr. Zuro and the members of his orchestra, both the President and Mrs. Harding expressing their warmest appreciation and enthusiasm for the picture, it is said.

On Sunday afternoon, through arrangements made by Charles E. McCarthy of Famous Players, the picture was shown in the Garrick theatre, Washington, to the members of the National Press Club, the famous organization of Washington correspondents. The Criterion presentation was again duplicated, and the picture enthusiastically received.

Arrangement for the showing was made by Paul Morgan.

At the White House the guests included Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, Secretary of the Navy Denby, Secretary of War Weeks, Albert D. Lasker, Chairman of the U. S. Shipping Board; Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, Theodore Roosevelt and Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, General John J. Pershing, Representative Mondell, Speaker of the House Gillette, Admiral Chester, Senator Edge, former Senator Frelinghuysen, Mr. and Mrs. Edward B. MacLean, and others prominent in Washington official and social life. Several of the guests at the White House also attended the National Press Club showing on Sunday afternoon, taking their families with them.

"Garrison's Finish" Is Praised

Reviewers On Los Angeles Newspapers Commend Jack Pickford's Latest

"'GARRISON'S FINISH' is a propitious vehicle for Jack Pickford's readvent to the screen," said the reviewer for the Los Angeles Examiner, when this Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release was shown at the California theatre, Los Angeles. "It is excellent screen entertainment. Pickford is handsome, graceful and altogether lovable, and does some first-class acting—sincere acting—that makes legitimate his place at the head of the cast. Madge Bellamy is delicious."

"There's plenty of action in Jack Pickford's newest picture, 'Garrison's Fnish,'" said the critic for the Record. "There are two horse races, an escape from a burning barn, a race with a train and a good rough-and-tumble fight."

"Jack Pickford staged a successful appearance in the photoplay, 'Garrison's Fnish,'" said the reviewer for the Express. "Action is a strong factor in this feature There also are many deft touches which add charm and illumination to the picture, and Mr. Pickford projects some, telling moments. Madge Bellamy is adorable."

"'Garrison's Finish' is, of course, a horse race story of the South," said the critic for the Times, "and those who came remained to cheer. This picture should prove to be Jack Pickford's start anew. It is full of the good old hokum, but Arthur Rossen has directed it in snappy fashion. Jack Pickford has much of the appeal of his sister Mary, and plays the part of the jockey in a way to win every bit of sympathy in your system. Madge Bellamy, beautiful as a spring morning, made much of a very charming role."

"Man from Glengarry" Tieup Effected

A CO-OPERATIVE tie-up has been made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation with Grosset & Dunlap, publishers, as regards the Ernest Shipman production "The Man From Glengarry," a Hodkinson feature from the novel of the same name by Ralph Connor. A special edition of the book will be gotten out by the publishers in which illustrations from the film story will be used. Also a special jacket in four colors will be printed and used on all of the books in this new edition.

"The Man from Glengarry" was directed by Henry McRae and features Warner P. Richmond, Anders Randolph, Pauline Garon and Marion Swayne.

UNIVERSAL DOES IT AGAIN!

What other Critics say!

Packs, what they call a wallop. The screen has few players of Denny's virility and clean-cut punch.—Chicago Daily Journal.

Sure-fire entertainment and will please everyone. Fine audience appeal and has plenty of exploitation angles. —The Film Daily.

This is an achievement. Action, pathos, some pretty outdoor scenery, a fine story all the way through—what more can one ask of a photoplay?—New York Morning Telegraph.

Rings true from beginning to end. It is Jack London's story, told in the straightforward convincing style of the author himself.—Chicago Herald and Examiner.

An excellent vehicle for this Universal star. The story starts out well and holds the attention right through to the final climax. There is humor, pathos and not a little drama. —Exhibitors Herald.

J. C. JESSEN'S PRODUCTION NOTES BY WIRE

Studio and Player Brevities

LITTLE STORIES ABOUT PEOPLE ON THE LOT

On the Goldwyn Lot

LEW CODY has been placed under contract as a member of the Goldwyn stock company. The contract becomes effective as soon as he has completed work on a subject in the East.

Pauline Starke and Charles Clarey have been selected to play the leading roles in "In the Palace of the King."

Bessie Love and Carmel Myers have been cast for the leading parts in "The Magic Skin," which Achievement Films is to make with George Baker wielding the megaphone.

Madeline Ruthvens' story, "The Rendezvous," has been purchased by Goldwyn. Josephine Lovett is writing the screen version.

Marshall Neilan's "The Eternal Three," of which "Micky" is author as well as producer, will be dedicated to the physicians of the world for their unselfish acts to benefit humanity. This subject is now being edited. The cast includes Hobart Bosworth, Claire Windsor, Raymond Griffith, Bessie Love, Helen Lynch, Tom Gallery, Maryon Aye, George Cooper, Alec Francis, and Charles West.

Rose Coghlan has been engaged by the Cosmopolitan Corporation to play the role of Marie de Medici in "Under the Red Robe," by Stanley Weyman, now in production under the direction of Alan Crosland.

Director Clarence Badger is directing the "Red Lights" company on crutches. A large wooden beam fell on a "Red Lights" set early in the week and struck one of his feet. The foot was severely wrenched and the ligament of one knee torn.

Erich von Stroheim has filmed the final junk yard scenes of "Greed," the director's own adaptation of the Frank Norris novel, "McTeague."

Santa Inyez canyon was shaken by an explosion when Lambert Hillyer, who is directing "The Spoilers" for Jesse D. Hampton, blew up the Midas mine for a flood sequence in the new film version of Rex Beach's Alaskan novel. The shock was felt for miles around. Director Hillyer expects to complete photography on "The Spoilers" in about a week.

An early selection for the cast to appear with Corinne Griffith in "Six Days," her first Goldwyn picture, is Claude King, a prominent English actor.

Clarence Jay Elmer has been appointed casting director for the Cosmopolitan Corporation, succeeding Michael Connelly.

At Universal City

Clarence L. Brown has been engaged to direct Priscilla Dean in Rita Weiman's play, "The Acquittal."

"Out of Luck," an original story by Director Edward Sedgwick, is the next vehicle selected for Hoot Gibson. The continuity is by George C. Hull.

"Where Is This West?" is the title of Jack Hoxie's next production for Universal.

Tom Santschi has been signed up for the heavy role in the new Harry Garson production, which presents Jack Kerrigan and Anna Q. Nilsson in the leading roles.

Jock Boyle's story, "The Daughter of Crooked Alley," has been purchased by Universal and is now being adapted for the screen by Adrian Johnson.

Walt Whitman has been added to the cast of "McGuire of the Mounted," starring William Desmond.

The first scenes for "A Lady of Quality" which is being produced by Hobart Henley will be shot this week. The star is Virginia Valli, and Milton Sills appears opposite.

Bert Roach will be featured in a series of one-reel comedies under the direction of William Watson.

Jack Dillon has begun the direction of "The Self-Made Wife," from an adaptation by Edward T. Lowe. The principals in the cast are Ethel Grey Terry, Crauford Kent, Virginia Ainsworth, and Dorothy Cummings.

Raymond Schrock, scenario editor, and King Baggot are preparing a special story to star Baby Peggy Montgomery. This subject will comprise seven or eight reels, according to present plans.

The Hoot Gibson subject originally titled "Blinkie" has been given a release title of "Pure Grit."

Edmond Mortimer has been signed to direct Herbert Rawlinson in a story written by Margaret Bryant, which bears the title "Thicker Than Water." The scenario is by Harvey Gates.

With First National Units

William Beaudine is engaged this week in making scenes for J. K. McDonald's First National production, "Penrod and Sam."

David H. Thompson, formerly production manager for Metro and Fox, is now a member of the staff of Richard Walton Tully unit of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., at the United studios.

Shooting was completed this week on Frank Borzage's "Children of Dust," adapted from the magazine story, "Terwilliger." Borzage's next will be "Dust in the Doorway."

Edwin Carewe left Los Angeles Sunday for Atlantic City to attend the First National convention. He is taking with him the completed print of "The Girl of the Golden West."

Constance Talmadge has gone to Yosemite Valley to film wonderful outdoor scenes for "Dulcy."

A big crowd sought admission at the United studios last week trying to see the spectacular ballroom scenes for Norma Talmadge's "Ashes of Vengeance," which are now being shot. Six hundred extras appear in the colorful costumes of the sixteenth century. Director Frank Lloyd announces the street scenes of St. Bartholomew's Eve Massacre will be filmed in the near future.

The filming of the laundry and studio scenes of "Trilby" were completed this week by Richard Walton Tully.

East and West with Fox

Tom Mix is completing production work on "Tempered Steel."

The last scenes are being made for "The Eleventh Hour," in which Shirley Mason and Charles Jones are being featured.

Dustin Farnum will start work next week on his new vehicle for Fox, the title of which has not as yet been chosen.

All preliminaries are now completed for actual shooting to begin on "Cameo Kirby," in which Jack Gilbert will be starred.

The next William Russell feature which William Fox will release will be "Boston Blackie," which was adapted from Jack Boyle's story, "The Water Cross." Scott Dunlap directed the picture.

A David Belasco play soon to go into production is "The Governor's Lady." It is understood Harry Millarde will wield the megaphone.

J. Gordon Edwards is working on a new production, an original story as yet without a title, that goes to the U. S. Navy for most of its thrills. Edmund Lowe is in the cast.

With Paramount Units

Cecil DeMille will begin the making of "The Ten Commandments" on May 1st. Five months will be taken on production work. A wardrobe department of one hundred persons are now busy on the making of costumes for the Egyptian and the Palestine episodes.

George Fitzmaurice has completed the filming of "The Cheat," starring Pola Negri.

Herbert Brenon is now in San Francisco making scenes for Betty Compson's new vehicle, "The Woman with Four Faces." Gladden James and Eulalie Jensen were added to the cast.

The George Melford company, including Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett, and Maurice Flynn, is at Bowlder Creek, Cal., making exteriors for "Salomy Jane." Waldemar Young made the adaptation.

In production for Famous Players-Lasky are the following subjects: "Fair Week," starring Walter Hiers; "Hollywood," with an all-star cast under the direction of Charles Maigne, and "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," which stars Gloria Swanson under the direction of Sam Wood.

Jack Cunningham has started work on the adaptation of Peter B. Kyne's novel, "The Light to Leeward," which will be Thomas Meighan's next Paramount picture. Irvin Willat will direct.

Around Metro Studios

Production work has been started on "Rouged Lips," in which Viola Dana will be starred under the direction of Howard Shaw. The complete cast includes Tom Moore, Nola Luxford, Sidney de Gray, Arline Pretty, Francis Powers, George Woodthorne, George K. Arthur. The subject is based on "Upstage," written by Rita Weiman.

Edward Sloman and company have left for Northern California, where they will spend days making exteriors for "The Eagle's Feather."

Hunt Stromberg is now preparing to produce a five-reel comedy in which Bull Montana will be starred.

Here and There

The Dinky Dean Productions has been organized to make a series featuring Baby Dinky Dean, who appeared with Charlie Chaplin in "The Pilgrim." Baby Dean is the son of Chuck Reisner. Albert Austin, who directed "Trouble" and "My Boy," in which Jackie Coogan was starred, has been engaged to direct this series.

Webster Campbell, who is to direct "The Bright Lights of New York," Bennie Zeidman's production, will, on the completion of this picture, direct the Corinne Griffith Productions on the return of Miss Griffith from the Coast, where she is now playing a prominent role in Goldwyn's "Six Days."

Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation of San Francisco has just completed the filming of two two-reel subjects from Peter B. Kyne stories, titled "Blind Goddess" and "Mr. Tinker's Conscience." Both these subjects were directed by Craig Hutchinson.

Wires received from Reginald Barger by Irving Thalberg, in charge of the Louis B. Mayer studios in the absence of Mr. Mayer, describe unusual success in shooting scenes of an ice jam at Banff for "The Master of Woman."

John M. Stahl has begun the filming of "The Wanters," the cast of which includes Marie Prevost, Norma Shearer, Lincoln Stedman, Gertrude Astor, Robert Ellis and Cyril Chadwick.

Director Richard Thomas, who is filming "Other Men's Money," has engaged Norvil McGregor as co-director.

Robert Frazer is to be featured in "The Desert Healer" by Cosmopolitan and upon the completion of this will start on a two-year contract with the Louis B. Mayer studios as a featured player.

Effects To Be Gained by Correct Application of Proper Lighting Equipment

By Lee S. Ferguson

AN addition to the presentation equipment of the Brooklyn Mark Strand was made last week by Hyman in the nature of a cyclorama curtain of silver cloth, a beautiful creation which was selected for not only its richness but because it takes color harmonies so readily. Adaptable to any color or combination of colors, the new cyclorama gives the spectator the impression that the curtain is of cloth the same color as the lights thrown upon it. This illusion allows the use of the curtain two or three times in one performance, but each time the audience thinks it is a different curtain.

This new silver curtain may also be used as a transparency, as it is possible to light it from behind and use it in place of a scrim or transparent drop. Such an addition is, therefore, valuable, and would no doubt prove beneficial to any theatre using it.

Uses for a Silver Cyclorama Curtain

The first use to which Hyman subjected the silver cyclorama, and the specialty through which it received its baptism of color, was as a background for Matilda Locust, pianist. The colors were: two pink box lamps from sides; light blue Mestrum flood from the booth; four spots focused on cyclorama from behind the center arch, two of them green and two magenta; blue footlights on the small stage; Kliegl light blue flood on orchestra; orange transparent windows at either side of the stage, and light blue flood on ceiling from two entrances. A white spot was on the pianist from the booth, marking a contrasting circle against the color combination which played upon the silver curtain, the whole giving a most pleasing effect.

The second use for the new cyclorama came the following week, during the run of "The Miracle Woman" (Mighty Lak' a Rose) the week of April 8. In addition to finding a place in a solo, with different lighting than was first used with it, the curtain was also worked in as part of a combination cycloramas of blue plush and silver cloth. In this way the silver curtain formed about one-third of the whole background, being sandwiched between two parts of the blue plush which formed two-thirds of the drop. The lights were played only on the silver curtain, with none on the blue. The arrangement was new, novel and unique, and very artistic. As the lighting was all from the side the ballet corps of the specialty did not cut in on the throw, thus there were no shadows or disconnected lighting.

With the multitude of uses to which the silver cyclorama may be put, and judging by the flying start it has received through the showmanship of Edward L. Hyman, this curtain is going to be a very worthy and valuable addition to the properties of the Brooklyn Mark Strand.

This department of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS has been presenting to its readers several articles on the lighting arrangement and design of layouts for prologue presentation.

The exhibitor will find it more and more essential that this phase of showmanship be thoroughly understood as the motion picture clientele is being educated to expect atmosphere with the picture. To secure a comprehensive understanding of modified lighting and stage presentations requires a great amount of experimental effort. Descriptions of the work of others who have obtained a practical working knowledge of these subjects serve as a basis from which exhibitors pioneering in these subjects may obtain ideas.

By the proper application of lighting and stage equipment unusuall yeffective results may be obtained with exceptionally small expenditures.

Throws Lighting from Sides and Overhead

In the matter of lighting, Hyman throws from the sides and overhead as much as possible, and very seldom from the front. The reason is obvious, and why it is not done by more showmen is a question that has puzzled many. The chance to do away with shadows should be jumped at, and the fact that the spectators are always puzzled by side and overhead lighting, not knowing from where the rays come, sustains interest in behalf of ingenuous showmanship.

For a specialty recently in which were three instrumentalists behind a huge picture frame, the frame being covered with scrim, all lighting used was from behind and overhead, giving a soft focus and soothing effect. Directly above each of the three artists was a baby spot focused directly downward. These spots were not more than three feet above the heads of the musicians, but were concealed by the moulding of the huge frame. Each spot had a different colored gelatin on it, one being light blue, one magenta and one orange. In using these the artists must keep their heads raised so the light gets a good play at the face to avoid shadows around the nose and mouth. Of course, the members of the orchestra were lighted from the booth by flood, but the rays did not strike the picture frame.

Silhouette numbers are another specialty in which Hyman excels. In using one he first makes sure the picture he wants to bring out in shadow has artistic lines. Grace and art are, in fact, the making of the silhouette, as the lighting is simple. It consists merely of throwing a flood directly from behind a white curtain. No front lights are used and all house lights that can be dispensed with are dimmed out.

Effective Lighting Through Means of Glass Trap

Another effective style of novelty lighting used by Hyman is by means of the glass trap, a glass-covered platform with the lights underneath, throwing straight up. The artist on this trap is picked out in high lights and shadows, and all other lights except those underneath are dimmed out. A recent use of this effect was with a costume number, and with three spots in the trap. The colors were magenta, orange and green, a combination that blended perfectly. In designing new stages it would be worth while to lay two or three glass traps into the stage floor, even with it, to be used at any time desired, either with or without the trap in the raised platform.

A beautiful costume number used during the run of "Brass" was Gavotte Amaryllis, with two dancers of the Louis XIII. period and a tenor of the same. A raised promenade ran along in front of a neutral blue drop, with steps leading down to the stage. There was a balustrade along the promenade, and lamps of the correct perod at the head of the steps on either side. The drop was a rich, solid blue and the balustrade, steps and bench were marble, pure white. Mestrum and Kleigl blue floods were on the orchestra, and the transparent windows were blue, as were four entrance spots focused on the ceiling. The artists were in amber. The costumes, being white with here and there a touch of blue and gold, were in striking harmony, and the number probably stands with any ever produced in point of artistry, richness. appeal and beauty.

Glossary of Photographic Technical Terms

General Information of Descriptive Optical Words and Phrases Commonly Employed

Extracts from "Motion Picture Photography" by Carl L. Gregory, published by New York Institute of Photgraphy

CHAPTER V

TECHNICAL terms used in photography are often puzzling to the amateur, particularly those terms which relate to the science of optics. The following glossary of optical terms has been prepared to give general information as to the descriptive words and phrases in ordinary use.

Equivalent focal length. Focal plane, is the plane in which a far distant object is imaged by the lens. The line drawn perpendicularly through the center of the lens is its Optical Axis; the point at which the Focal Plane intersects the Optical Axis, the Focal Point of the lens.

The Focal Length of a lens is the value upon which depends the size of the images produced by that lens. Its magnitude can be determined only by comparing the size of a given object with its image as formed by the lens. The distance of the object, unless very great, must also be considered.

For far distant objects the size of the image is in direct proportion to the focal length. A lens of 12-inch focal length will produce an image of a distant steeple twice as large as the image formed by a lens of a 6-inch focal length.

Back Focus is the distance from the focal point to the rear surface of the lens. In very thin lenses, this back focus is equal to the focal length. In lenses of considerable thickness and in combinations of lenses, the back focus cannot be relied upon as any indication of the value of the focal length. The focal length of such a lens is equal to the focal length of a thin lens, which gives an image equivalent in size to the one formed by the combination lens, hence the term Equivalent Focal Length.

In using short focus cinematographic lenses it is important to know both the back and the equivalent foci, since the construction of some makes of motion picture cameras is such that the revolving shutter has not been placed close enough to the aperture to admit a lens of very short back focus without interfering with the shutter blades.

The installation of a 35 mm. lens often demands considerable alteration in a cine camera, not only of the shutter, but of the front board as well, since the lens flange ordinarily used with lenses of longer focal length is apt to cut off the corners of the picture.

On account of the exaggerated perspective, lenses of extremely short focus are not recommended for use except where limited space prevents the use of a lens of sufficient focal length to give a normal perspective.

In the majority of photographic lenses the equivalent focal length is greater than the back focus, an exception being found in single meniscus or single concavo-convex combinations, which are practically never used as cine lenses where the back focus is the longer.

By measuring back from the focal point a distance equal to the equivalent focal length, we find a position of the so-called optical center of the lens, which is nearly always near the diaphragm.

Angle of view is the angle under which the diameter of the circular area covered sharply by the lens appears from the center of the lens. If the largest plate, which the lens covers sharply, is used, the angle of view is equal to the angle under which the diagnola of the plate appears from the center of the lens. The angle of view increases with the increase of the focus of the lens or the same size plate. Lenses for general purposes are calculated for an angle of about 60°. Lenses covering 75° to 100° are termed Wide Angle Lenses. Wide angle lenses have necessarily shorter foci than other lenses rated for the same plate.

As a motion picture is customarily viewed at a distance relatively greater than a still photo the angle of view averaging nearest normal is about 28°, using the base and not the diagonal of the picture as a basis for calculation. This is the angle subtended by a two-inch lens on the standard ¾ by 1 inch aperture or picture frame. Lenses of shorter focus than this are termed wide angle, although the angle of view is still not so great as that found in many still pictures which are taken with lenses which would be far from being considered wide angle for an ordinary photograph.

The circular area which is covered by the lens on the ground glass is called its image circle, and its diameter is expressed in linear measure (inches or centimeters).

Effective aperture is measured by the diameter of the beam of light admitted by the lens. The effective aperture is not, as often thought, equal to the diameter of the front lens, nor is it equal to the linear diameter of the diaphragm opening used. It equals the diameter of the diaphragm as it appears when observed through the front lens; therefore, the effective aperture cannot be found by unscrewing the front lens and measuring the actual diameter of the diaphragm. Only in the case of a landscape lens, or meniscus, where the diaphragm is placed in front of the lens, is the effective aperture expressed by the linear diameter of the diaphragm.

The actual diameter of the effective aperture may be obtained by placing a piece of developing paper against the glass of the front combination of the lens and exposing it through the lens. The diameter of the round black spot obtained by developing the paper is that of the effective aperture of the lens.

The effective aperture varies, of course, with the size of the diaphragm opening.

Relative aperture is a fraction which expresses the ratio of effective aperture to focal length; for instance, relative aperture of 1:6.3 means that the focal length is 6.3 times greater than the effective aperture. The denominator of the fraction, in this instance the figure 6.3, is called the F value. If the relative aperture is known, the effective aperture can be found by mulitplying the relative by the focus. For example: F:160; relative aperture=1:8, effective aperture=160 x1:8=20. The relative aperture is a term of greatest value and convenience in judging the time of exposure. All lenses of the same relative aperture, no matter what their focus may be, require the same exposure under the same conditions. An exception will be mentioned under the heading "Depth of Focus."

The exposure necessary for different relative apertures can be found easily because they are proportionate to the square of the F values. For instance, if two lenses are compared with the relative apertures 1:4 and 1:8 respectively, the squares of F values are 16 and 64 respectively, which means that the 1:8 requires four times as long exposure as the 1:4 lens, since 64/16=4. This, of course, holds true also in comparing the different stops.

Speed. The relative aperture is very commonly called the speed of the lens, although speeds of two lenses are not proportionate to their relative apertures, but to the squares of the aperatures. In other words, a lens with the speed of 1:4 is not twice as fast as a lens

Synopsis of Paper on Picture by Wireless for S. M. P. E. Convention

Mr. C. J. Francis Jenkins will read a paper on the transmission of photographs by radio, in which, following a brief history of attempts by others to send pictures by wire and wireless, he relates the invention of his prismatic ring, which proved to be the missing link in the operative assembly of easily obtainable scientific apparatus, making possible photographs by radio. He also explains the distant control whereby photographs are sent over an ordinary telephone to the broadcasting station; and incidents of the official Navy demonstration made last fall, witnessed by a number of high rank officers. Brief reference is made to the first long distance test of the Jenkins apparatus, between Washington and Philadelphia; the many difficulties under which the pictures were sent; and valuable lessons learned therefrom. Mr. Jenkins also explains that he will be sending motion pictures by radio in a very short time, probably before the convention opens, his only remaining unsolved problem being speed. "Celluloid movies" to "Radio Movies" in thirty years. It has been definitely determined that a demonstration will be made at the convention.

Synopsis of Dr. Crandell's Paper to be read on the subject—The Place of the Motion Picture in Education.

It is futile to ask any longer if the motion picture teaches. It is teaching daily in the theatres, it has its limitations, however, and even its defects. The real problem is in what subjects is it of value, at what stage is the teaching progress, and how applied. Related to this main problem are the questions: What are the ideal characteristics of a pedagogical film, how can the present meagre supply be increased and how can the demand be created, which would automatically bring about this increased supply?

The convention will be held May 7-8-9-10 at Atlantic City, N. J.

Architect—Thomas W. Lamb

Thomas W. Lamb, noted architect, selected American Seating Company Theatre Chairs for the Capitol Theatre of New York.

Comfort Assured for Capitol Theatre Patrons

PLEASURE seekers are comfort lovers, too. Knowing this full well, the builders of the new Capitol Theatre, New York City, made certain to provide their thousands of daily patrons with every known Theatre Chair comfort by contracting for American Seating Company Theatre Chairs throughout.

The beautiful chair selected, harmonizing perfectly with the color scheme of the theatre whole, offers among its notable elements of seating comfort a generous roominess both in width and depth, back well upholstered, arm rests correctly placed, smoothly operating and noiseless seat-hinges, mattress spring seat, a perfectly level placing with relation to the floor, serviceable hat holder, anchorage firm and unshakeable, no loose parts to annoy, and no sharp outjutting points to catch and tear the clothing. Every adjunct to the greatest possible comfort in theatre or auditorium seating has been incorporated in this unexcelled Theatre Chair.

Alternating Current Circuits

Lesson IV—Part I

Wave Forms

ALTERNATING currents, contrary to the belief of many people, are governed by the same laws which apply to direct currents. When dealing with instantaneous values there is, in fact, no difference between the two; but when dealing with values extending over a period of time, several modifications of the principles applying in the case of direct currents must be made.

An alternating current, as stated elsewhere, is one which flows first in one direction and then reverses and flows in the opposite direction. This operation is carried on repeatedly as long as the circuit is closed and the current flows. This simple explanation, however, should not be accepted too literally because there are many ways in which these reversals of current can be made. When speaking of alternating current or any other current for that matter, it should be remembered that a voltage is implied in each case. Current cannot exist in a circuit without the application of voltage to it. If voltage is applied to an open circuit, current will flow when the circuit is closed. For the moment, then, we will drop the word current and substitute that of voltage in place of it.

The ideal case of an alternating voltage would be one in which the voltage first acted steadily in one direction then abruptly reversed and acted steadily in the opposite direction. This is explained better by Fig. 28 which shows a voltage rising instantly to its maximum value, E, remaining constant for a certain time, and then reversing instantly to act in the opposite direction for the same period of time. The arrows point in the direction in which the voltage is acting. Plus and minus signs are also given each part of the curve in order to distinguish one from the other. Such a figure is called a curve or wave form of voltage. The same name is also applied to curves of current, power, etc.

Generation of Alternating Voltage.

In addition to being impossible to obtain, there are certain considerations which render such a wave form impracticable for common use. Alternating voltages are usually thought of as being of the form shown in Fig 29. In such a wave the voltage gradually rises to a maximum, then gradually decreases to zero, whereupon it reverses and goes through the same operation in the other direction.

The shape of any voltage curve is determined by the shape of the pole face of the generator. To the left of Fig. 29 is shown one conductor occupying seven different positions around the face of a magnetic pole which is revolving in the direction shown. It will be noticed that the tip of the pole face (F) is closer to the conductor than are the ends. In other words, the air gap between pole face and conductor is smaller than between any otherh two points. Hence the magnetic flux at this point will be densest while at both ends of the pole face the flux will dwindle off to nothing. Let us see what happens to the voltage as the pole face moves past the conductor.

When the conductor is in position (1) no lines of force are being cut and hence the voltage is zero. This corresponds with position (1) on the voltage curve to the right of the figure. In position (2) the conductor is cutting through a weak flux and hence a small voltage is generated as shown by (2) on the curve. In position (3) more flux is being cut and so the voltage is greater as shown by (3) on the curve. In position (4) however, the flux is densest and the voltage is here greater than at any other place. This is shown by (4) on the curve.

Now since one half of the pole face is exactly the same as the other half, the voltage will decrease in exactly the same manner as it increased, as the magnetic pole continues to move on past the conductor. Thus, on the curve, (5) will be equal to (3); (6) will be equal to (2) and (7) will be equal to (1) which is zero.

As the next pole begins to pass the conductor all the conditions will be the same with the exception that the direction of the flux will be reversed to the change in polarity. Hence the voltage will act the same as before only its direction will be reversed and it will now have a minus sign before it as shown in the figure. The third pole passing the conductor will have the same polarity as the first so the cycle will begin all over again.

As stated once before, the wave form of the voltage will be determined by the shape of the pole face. In practice, the wave forms of generators are seldom so regular as those just described and this branch of machine design forms an interesting study in itself.

Frequency

The word frequency is often used when referring to alternating currents. As a matter of fact, it is just as necessary to know the frequency of a piece of electrical machinery as it is to know its voltage, etc. Frequency refers to the number of alterations, or reversals, taking place in a certain time. Thus, in Fig. 30 (page 2090), one alternation is shown as being the time required for the voltage to start from zero, reach its greatest value and then decrease again to zero. A cycle is the time required for two such alternations, one in one direction and the other in the opposite. To the left of Fig. 30 is shown a voltage scale which is placed there merely for the purposes of illustration. The voltage in any case will depend upon the particular machine used.

Frequency may be measured in any of the following ways:

1. Alternations per second
2. Cycles per second
3. Periods per second (same as cycles)
4. Electrical revolutions per second (same as cycles).

The method commonly used is No. 2 (cycles per second). Another word for frequency which is not much used is periodicity. It means the same as cycles per second. The frequecies most used in this country today are 25 and 60 cycles. The first is used for long distance transmission of power and the second for local power and lighting circuits. The reason for this will be explained later.

The frequency of a particular generator depends primarily upon two things, the number of magnetic poles on the machine and the revolutions per second. Every machine must have at least two poles, one north and one south. In the case of a two-pole machine, each revolution therefore means one cycle. If the field poles revolve 60 times per second (3,600 R.P.M.), then the frequency is 60 cycles.

Suppose the machine has four poles? For every revolution per second each pair of poles represents one cycle so in order to determine the frequency we multiply the number of pairs of poles by the revolutions per second. Where the speed is measured in revolutions per minute, divide by 60, thus

Frequency

$$\text{cycles} = \frac{\text{number of poles}}{2} \times \frac{\text{R. P. M.}}{60}$$

$$= \frac{\text{P} \times \text{R. P. M.}}{120}$$

This relation gives rise to what is know as electrical revolution which is the distance from one north pole to the next nearest north pole measured in degrees. Since there are 360 degrees in every circle (revolution) this distance represents 360 electrical degrees. In Fig. 31, which shows this in detail the starting point was taken as half way between a north and south pole. At this point (zero degrees) the voltage in the conductor is zero and corresponds to the zero degree mark on Fig. 30. At the 90 degree position on Fig. 31 the voltage is a maximum as shown by the curve in Fig. 30. At 180 degrees it is again zero while at 270 degrees it is again a maximum but is now negative and 360 degrees (one electrical revolution) it is again zero and ready to start over again on a new plus wave. This represents one complete cycle. Instead of using degrees, time, measured in fractions of a second could also be used.

We can see from this that for any given frequency, the higher the speed the fewer will be the number of poles required while the lower the speed the greater will be the poles required. Since each pair of poles added to the machine increases its size and hence cost. it can readily be seen why slow speed machinery always costs more money than high speed machinery of the same power rating.

Other Kinds of Resistances

Some special kinds of resistances are (1) Contact Resistance; where the connection between two conductors is so loosely or poorly made that the area of contact is smaller than the end area of one of the conductors, the effect is to increase the resistance at that point. Connection should be soldered to increase the contact area. (2) Oxidation Resistance; this is due to the chemical action of oxygen combining with the copper forming a green or black coating on the conductor. This action is greatly facilitated by heat and so is commonly found on switch points due to arcing. This coating has a high resistance and hence should be scraped off before making a connection. In the case of a permanent connection solder should be used to protect the new connection from such oxidation.

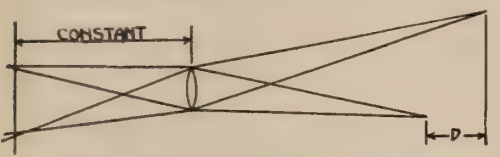
with the speed of 1:8, but four times so, as the comparison of the squares of their relative apertures 1/16 and 1/64 shows.

There are two methods of designating lens stops, viz: the so-called F System of the Royal Photographic Society, wherein the stop is expressed by fractions of the focal length, and the U. S. (Uniform System), in which every following stop requires a doubling of the exposure or represents half the speed of the foregoing, the exposure required with F:4 being taken as the unit.

Comparison between the F system and the U. S. (Uniform System) of Stops:

F. SYSTEM
F:4	F:4.5	F:5.6	F:6.3	F:8	F:11.3	F:16	F:22.6	F:32
U. S. SYSTEM
2	1.2	2	2.5	4	8	16	32	64

The above table gives the comparative stops in the two systems and shows at the same time the exposure values of the different stops in the F system. For instance, F:11.3 requires four times as long as F:5.6; and F:32, an exposure sixteen times longer than F:8, since 8/2=4 and 64/4=16.



D is the Depth of Field and is that distance between two planes within which all objects are rendered reasonably sharp on the ground glass. It varies directly as the f: value and inversely as the focal length

At first glance it would seem that the U. S. system would be the more convenient one to use since it gives the relative exposure direct, but in practice it is really just as simple to use the F system if it is well fixed in the mind that each succeeding F number as customarily marked on the lens barrel is half the speed of the preceding one. Wherever any calculation is involved the F number is the one used and a U. S. number must first be resolved to its F equivalent to obtain a result. The U. S. is becoming obsolete except on some of the simpler hand cameras with low grade lenses.

Depth of focus. Very closely connected with the speed of a lens is its depth of focus. All well-corrected lenses image only one plane of the object space sharply. The reason why a lens focused at a house images also with sufficient sharpness, a horse in front and a tree back of it, is that a slight racking out of focus will not cause an indistinctness great enough to be noticable to the eye. The range of sharpness forward and back of the object is called "depth of focus" or "depth of field." It depends on several factors, viz: the focal length of the lens, the aperture used (consequently its speed), the distance of the object, and the amount or lack of sharpness which seems permissible to the operator. Of these factors, focal length, aperture and distance are definite numerical values.

That the amount of indistinctness permissible on the picture is susceptible of numerical expression is easily seen from the following: If an object at a given distance is in sharp focus, the light issuing from a point of that object is converged to a point on the plate. Light issuing from a point in the original object will also be converged to a point, but not on the plate, the cone of light showing in either case a circular patch of light on the plate. This circle of light is known as the "circle of confusion." Its diameter can be used to express the amount of indistinctness existing in a picture. If the circle of confusion is not greater than 1/10 mm. or 1/250 inch, it would appear as a point to an eye 10 inches away, hence, an object no point of which is imaged by a circle larger than 1/10 mm. would appear sharp.

No matter what their type of construction may be, all lenses of the same equivalent foci and the same relative aperture require the same exposure—that is, have the same speed, other conditions being equal. They will have the same depth also.

The depth of focus decreases: 1, with increase of focal length; 2, with increase of relative aperture (speed); 3, with increasing nearness of object.

Of two lenses of equivalent foci, the one with the lower relative aperture (speed) has the greater depth of field. On the other hand, if the focal length of the lens is very short, a speed as high as F:4.5 will allow bringing every object from 10 feet to infinity to a sharp focus, while a studio lens of long focus and the same speed may not even image an object of the depth of a head sharply within the range of the length of a studio.

Speed, great focal length and depth of focus cannot be combined in the same lens. This is an unalterable law of optics. If speed be the most desirable quality, depth of focus must be sacrificed; if depth of focus, speed. This does not detract from the value of fast lenses, because with a given lens the depth of focus can be increased by diaphragming down the lens which means reduction of speed. If a short exposure demands the use of the lens wide open, one must not expect great depth of focus. Under ordinary conditions of light and distance, with fair judgment, and with lenses not too long in focus, these opposing qualities may be happily combined, so that lack of depth is hardly perceptible.

Some apparent exceptions may be stated, for instance, a lens which produces images of general "softness," i.e., a lens in which the aberrations are not corrected to the utmost perfection. Such lenses, which lack snap and brilliancy, may show greater depth of focus than a first-class lens. There is less difference between the "sharpest" focus and the image of objects forward and back of it, simply because the "sharpest" focus itself is not really sharp. Thus the statement that one lens has a greater depth of focus than others of the same aperture and focus, must be regarded as rather detrimental to the lens, for as stated above, depth of focus cannot be made subject to special correction.

Another case may be mentioned in which one lens may really have an advantage over another in regard to depth of focus. In some camera constructions correction of astigmatism is obtained at a great sacrifice of simplicity by employing an unusual number of lenses separated by air spaces. There is a certain loss of light by reflection on a lens surface and it is easily intelligible that the fewer reflecting surfaces in a lens, the smaller the loss of light. In some constructions the number of the lens surfaces runs as high as ten, while the Tessar contains only six. The consequence is that the lens with the greater number of reflecting surfaces requires a longer exposure than a lens of simple construction, although both may have the same relative aperture. Or to express it differently: the lens with the greater number of reflections requires an aperture of F:6.3 with a certain time of exposure, while the other lens will give a negative of equal density with its aperture stopped down to F:7.2 or F:7.5, which means a gain in depth of focus for the lens with the smaller number of reflecting surfaces.

Cinematograph lenses are usually made with the smallest number of reflecting surfaces consistent with the requisite correction. They are also slightly faster than larger lenses of equal aperture because their small size makes the glass to be traversed by the light much thinner. will build a $200,000 theatre and amusement

Hartford Syndicate To Build Theatre

As a result of a $6,000,000 realty transfer reported as nearing completion, Hartford, Conn., is expected to soon have a new and one of the most modern motion picture and vaudeville houses in the state, to be located on State Street, on the property at 22-42 State Street. The tract fronts 97 feet on State Street and extends back to Kinsley Street, where it fronts 176 feet. It is proposed to raze the rear buildings on State Street as well as the space on Kinsley Street. Although the plans for the theatre are reported to be definite, plans for the uses of certain other parts of the building are reported to be yet in the tentative stage. It is understood that tentative plans call for a big department store or a modern lunchroom, occupying the unused part of the ground floor. —Agard.

EASTMAN
POSITIVE FILM

The skill of the camera man must not be sacrificed in printing—Eastman Positive Film carries the quality of the negative through to the screen.

Eastman Film, both regular and tinted base—now available in nine colors, is identified throughout its length by the words "Eastman" "Kodak" stenciled in black letters in the transparent margin.
